Gc
979.4
G94hℓ
v.2
1359858

M. L.

GENEALOGY COLLECTION

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 1833 01148 4125

A HISTORY

OF

CALIFORNIA

AND AN

Extended History of Its Southern Coast Counties

ALSO

Containing Biographies of Well-Known Citizens of the Past and Present.

BY

J. M. GUINN, A. M.,

Secretary and Late President of the Historical Society of Southern California, and Member of the American Historical Association of Washington, D. C.

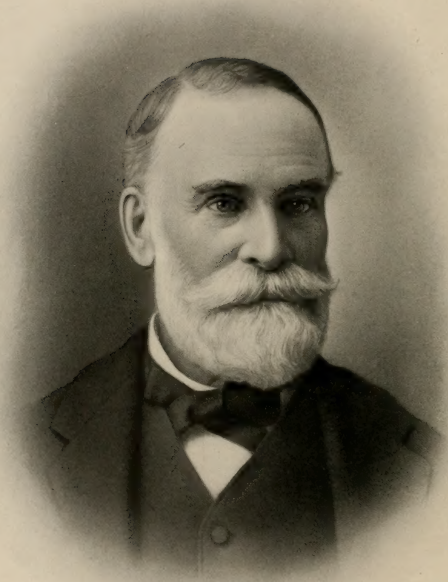
ILLUSTRATED.

COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOLUME II.

HISTORIC RECORD COMPANY
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
1907



THE PUBLIC LIBRARY OF

Copyright, 1907

by

HISTORIC RECORD COMPANY.

1359858

W. C. B. Richardson.

WILLIAM C. B. RICHARDSON. One of the best known and most honored residents of Tropico is the venerable William C. B. Richardson, who is distinguished both for his own life and work, and for the excellent ancestry from which he traces his descent, his family name occupying a prominent place in the annals of New England, its members being noted for their integrity and patriotism. A son of Hon. Elkanah Richardson, he was born in Swanzey, Cheshire county, N. H., October 28, 1815, of English ancestry. His paternal grandfather, Wyman Richardson, a resident of the Granite state, served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, taking an active part in many engagements.

Born, reared and educated in New Hampshire, Elkanah Richardson subsequently removed to Ohio, becoming a pioneer of that state. He was a surveyor by profession, and in the pursuit of his occupation became familiar with that section of the country in the early days of its history. A man of much talent, he became influential in financial, business and legal affairs, and for fourteen years he served as judge of the circuit court. His death occurred while he was in the prime of life, at the age of fifty-six years. He married Sophia Belding, who was born in New Hampshire, of thrifty Scotch ancestry, a sister of William C. Belding, who was killed in the war of 1812, and for whom the subject of this sketch was named.

Being taken by his parents to Ohio when a boy, William C. B. Richardson was educated in the common schools of Cuyahoga Falls, Summit county. Subsequently working with his father, he became proficient as a surveyor, which he followed for forty years in Cleveland. A straightforward, thorough-going business man, he met with eminent success in his undertakings, acquiring wealth and distinction, and though he has disposed of some of the property that he formerly held in that place he still owns three acres of valuable land, and a number of city lots. In municipal affairs he was active and prominent, and while a resident of Ohio, served for two terms as a member of the common council of Cleveland. For a few years he was also engaged in the coal business, being in partnership with his son, O. S. Richardson, who is now distinguished as the oldest-established coal merchant in Chicago, Ill. In 1868 Mr. Richardson came to Los Angeles county, and here purchased the St. Eulalia rancho of six hundred and seventy-one acres. A part of the property has been sold in city lots, but adjoining land has been purchased, and the estate as it stands today contains seven hundred acres, and is worth upwards of a quarter of a million dollars. About three hundred acres of this is in strawberries and the balance in general fruit, walnuts and produce. Although over ninety years of age, Mr. Richardson retains much of the mental and physical vigor of his earlier years, and works some every day. He has been prosperous as a general farmer and fruit grower, and delights in adding to the happiness, comfort and prosperity of those around him. When the electric line was put through this section he gave the right of way, one hundred feet wide, through his ranch.

In Akron, Ohio, in 1838, Mr. Richardson married Sarah Abbott, a daughter of John Abbott, who lived to the ripe old age of ninety-two years. Mrs. Richardson died in 1895, aged seventy-five years. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, four arrived at years of maturity, namely: Omar S., of Chicago; Elkanah W., of Tropico, Cal.; Herbert, also residing in Chicago, and Mrs. Sophia Bisbee, who died in Akron, Ohio. Mr. Richardson is a member of the Pioneers Society and the Historical Society of Los Angeles county. He is a Master Mason, being made a Mason in Summit county, Ohio.

PROF. W. OLIN LOWE. Prominent among the leading educators of San Diego county is Prof. W. Olin Lowe, principal of the Ramona high school, with which he has been connected in this capacity for eight years, outranking in length of service any other high school principal in the county. A man of broad and progressive views, cultured and talented, he is eminently qualified for his important work, and is meeting with almost phenomenal success. Possessing much force of character, and wise and judicious in his counsels, he exerts an influence for good in the community, and in the mental, social and moral development of the children under his supervision is an important factor. A son of John R. Lowe, he was born June 1, 1860, in Solano county, Cal., where his parents settled as pioneers.

A native of Indiana, John R. Lowe was reared to agricultural pursuits, and as a young man chose the occupation of his ancestors. In 1852 he came to California with the courageous pioneers of those days, and in the subsequent years became a landholder, and a very successful agriculturist and horticulturist, owning a good ranch and a valuable vineyard in Shasta county, where he spent the closing years of his life, dying there when sixty-four years of age. He was a stanch Republican in politics, and an active and consistent member of the United Brethren Church. He married Janet Root, who was born in Indiana, and is now living in Kern City, Cal. Of the children born of their union, four survive.

Going with his parents to Yolo county when six years old, W. Olin Lowe there completed the course of study in the grammar schools, and afterwards attended the San Joaquin Valley College, spending two years in the preparatory department and four years in collegiate work, taking the regular classical course, which included Greek and Latin. He subsequently taught school one year in Shasta county, and four and one-half years in Selma, Fresno county. Then, giving up teaching for awhile, Professor Lowe entered the ministry, for three years preaching for the United Brethren denomination. Accepting a position in Los Angeles in 1895, he taught most successfully for four years in the city schools. Coming from there to Ramona in 1899, he has since had charge of the high school, and in its management has won an enviable reputation as teacher, friend, counsellor and disciplinarian.

In 1887 Professor Lowe married Belle Limbaugh, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of F. M. Limbaugh, who came with his family to California in 1866, and settled at Rio Vista, Solano county. Four children have blessed the union of Professor and Mrs. Lowe, namely: Minnie Esther, born December 18, 1888; William Marion Reese, born December 26, 1890; Alma Genette, born July 5, 1893, and Frances Mae, born March 27, 1896. Politically the professor is a steadfast Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters; of the Fraternal Brotherhood, at Los Angeles, and of San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M. He is also a member of the Southern California School Masters Club and for two terms has been identified with the San Diego county board of education.

JOHN W. CUSHING. One of the enterprising and progressive citizens of Los Angeles county was the late John W. Cushing, who engaged as an agriculturist in Southern California for many years prior to his death, which occurred February 14, 1903. He was a native of Ireland, born in Belfast June 24, 1830, a son of Patrick Cushing, a builder in that city, and Mollie (Stewart) Cushing, a native of Belfast and a member of the same family to which A. T. Stewart of New York belonged. Reared to young manhood in Belfast J. W. Cushing received his education in the schools of that city, after which he made that place his home until 1848. In the last-named year he decided to immigrate to the western world and accordingly came to New York City, where he was employed for four years and during this time applied for his papers making him a citizen of this country. They were granted August 29, 1857, and delivered to him in San Francisco. In 1852, he came to California via the Nicaragua route, landing in San Francisco in April. For several years following his arrival in the state he was occupied in the mines, after which he returned to San Francisco and engaged in general contracting and teaming. In 1868 he removed to Humboldt county, Cal., and a year later made a trip to Southern California, where in the vicinity of Savannah, Los Angeles county, he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of the Dalton tract. The following year he located his family here, erecting a residence, barns and all necessary outbuildings, and thereafter engaged in grain and cattle raising. Later he added to his original purchase one hundred and eighty acres a half mile north of Savannah and a twenty acre tract adjoining the first piece, the entire property becoming known as the Primrose farm. He remained on this place up to the time of his death February 14, 1903. His remains were interred in the San Gabriel Cemetery, as he was a member of the old Mission Church at San Gabriel. In his political relations he was a Democrat, but was always stanch in his support of the Union.

In San Francisco, in St. Mary's Cathedral, October 20, 1861, Mr. Cushing was united in marriage by the Rev. Father Croak with Miss Mary Carr, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, and a daughter of John Carr. He was a general contractor who about 1850 located in Philadelphia, Pa., where his death eventually occurred, as did that of his wife, formerly Catherine Travis, also a native of Ireland. They were the parents of nine children, of whom four are now living, Mrs. Cushing being the only one in California. She came to San Francisco via the Isthmus of Panama in 1859 and two years later was married in that city. She is the mother of the following children; Mary Agnes, wife of Thomas Godfrey, of San Pedro; Elizabeth S. and Alice J., both of Los Angeles; Anna L., of Chicago; John F., who died at the age of seven years and three months; Patrick L., on the home ranch; Cecelia, of Los Angeles; Catherine, wife of Dr. C. W. Seeber, of Los Angeles; Polk L., on the home ranch; James, of Los Angeles; Joseph Emmet, on the ranch; Ileen, of Los Angeles; and Margaret S. In October, 1904, Mrs. Cushing removed to Los Angeles, where she now makes her home, being a member of the St. Vincent's Catholic Church, and a devoted worker for its interest.

CUSHING BROTHERS. Native sons of the state of California, Patrick and Emmet J. Cushing are engaged in the cultivation and development of property which bids fair to rank with the finest ranches of Los Angeles county. The eldest was born in this county January 31, 1876, and the latter April 25, 1881, both receiving their education through the medium of the public schools of El Monte, where they grew to manhood. Their father, John W. Cushing, a pioneer of California, was born in Belfast; Ireland, his education was received in the schools of his native city, after which, at the age of sixteen years he came to America and in New York City was employed for about four years. Subsequently he came to California and on the property which he owned, known as Primrose farm, his death occurred February 14, 1903.

Progressive and enterprising, the two brothers assumed the management of the old Cushing homestead, which consisted of one hundred and eighty acres located in the vicinity of El Monte, and here they are associated in the raising of stock, in which business they have been very successful. In 1904 Patrick Cushing was united in marriage with Miss Nellie Graney, a native of Portland, Ore., and they are the parents of one son, John Clifford. They are devout members of the Catholic Church. The brothers are Democratic in their national tendencies, although locally they can always be counted upon to uphold good government, regardless of party affilitions. Socially they occupy a high position among the ranchers of this section of Los Angeles, appreciated for their sterling worth as men and citizens.

SYLVESTER H. GARNER. A native Californian, Sylvester H. Garner was born in San Bernardino county, August 10, 1869, the youngest son of John Garner, a pioneer of the state, and one of the prominent men among the ranchers of Southern California. The elder man was born in Davidson county, N. C., May 1, 1820, a son of David Garner, who died at the remarkable age of one hundred and five years. He came to Hancock county, Ill., where he married Mary Ann O. Rawson, a native of Washington county, Ind.; they were members of the Church of Latter Day Saints and located in Nauvoo, Ill., where they made their home for five years, and upon the exodus of their people in 1846 Mr. Garner took his family to Council Bluffs, Iowa. Two years later he started westward once more and in Salt Lake City he made his home until 1851, engaging in farming, etc. When learning of the new doctrines which Brigham Young had introduced into the church since coming to Salt Lake City, such as polygamy and others, he became disgusted with the church in that place. Deciding to locate in California, he outfitted in 1851 and on March 1 started to cross the plains to San Bernardino with Dave Seelev, Capt. Jefferson Hunt and Andrew Lytle. There Mr. Garner purchased land and began farming, being the first man to plant alfalfa in Southern California and raise and thresh the seed, to start his ranch purchasing fifty pounds of seed at $1 per pound. He became prominent in the public life of the community, a settlement having been established by the men who came through with Mr. Garner, and during the years of his residence he was elected to many positions of trust and responsibility. For two terms he served as supervisor of San Bernardino county and was chairman of the board for several years, and was also school trustee for many years. He was a stanch adherent of Democratic principles. By virtue of his early residence in the state he was a member of the Pioneer Society of San Bernardino county. In 1874 he removed to Newport, where his death occurred in 1890, when nearly seventy years old. His remains were sent to San Bernardino and buried by the side of his wife, who had preceded him in 1880. His funeral was one of the largest ever held in San Bernardino, the large number attending being a silent evidence of the great regard and esteem in which he was held. There were thirteen children in the parental family, of whom six are still surviving.

Reared in Southern California, Sylvester H. Garner received his education in the public schools of Santa Ana, Orange county, where his parents located when he was a child in years. After completing his education he began farming for himself, at the age of twenty-one years going to Fresno, where he followed horticultural pursuits. He became the owner of twenty acres of land which he sold after five years and came to Los Angeles county and in the vicinity of Florence engaged in sugar beet culture, leasing and cultivating about three hundred and seventy-five acres of land belonging to the Nadeau and Cudahy estates. Finally giving up ranching he located in Los Angeles and engaged in the wholesale produce business, and after a time sold out and followed a grocery enterprise. Altogether he was in commercial enterprises in Los Angeles for five years. Finally disposing of his business interests he came to El Monte and in 1903 purchased his present property, which contained at that time fifty acres, although he has since disposed of a half of it and now has but twenty-five acres devoted to walnuts and alfalfa. He has made all the improvements himself, installing a pumping plant, etc., and bids fair to make a striking success of his enterprise.

June 29, 1898, Mr. Garner was united in marriage with Miss Cora Van Fleet, who was born in Dickinson county, Kans., in 1872; she was but ten years old when brought to California by her father, Nelson Van Fleet who for many years made his home in Downey, Cal., but is now living retired in Los Angeles. Mrs. Garner was one of eleven children, eight of whom are living in California. Previous to her marriage she was a teacher in the Los Nietos public school, having held the said position for seven consecutive years. Mr. and Mrs. Garner have one child, Sylvester H. Jr., who was born in Los Angeles City, February 11, 1903. Both himself and wife are members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

JOHN ROBERT PIERCY. Credit is due Mr. Piercy for the efforts he has made toward the upbuilding and development of the section of California in which he has made his home since 1895. He is a native of North Carolina, his birth having occurred in Murphy, Cherokee county, November 22, 1859; his grandfather, Stephen Piercy, was born in England and in young manhood immigrated to America and settled in North Carolina, his son, Wesley, the father of John R. also being a native of that state. The latter was a surveyor and was engaged in this work in North Carolina until his death. He was a citizen of prominence, helpful in the maintenance of law and order, and as a Master Mason was influential in fraternal circles. He married Martha Collins, whose birth and death occurred also in North Carolina.

Of the thirteen children born to his parents, of whom nine attained maturity and eight are now living, John Robert Piercy was sixth in order of birth. He was left an orphan at the age of ten years and two years later he went to Indiana where, in the vicinity of Terre Haute, he made his home with a brother, who was a farmer in that section. He remained in that location for four years when he decided to go further westward, and accordingly traveled through Iowa, North Dakota and Utah, engaging in farming and mining, the latter employment occupying his attention in Utah for eight years, working with the Maxfield Mining Company. It was in 1895 that he first came to California and in the vicinity of El Monte, Los Angeles county, he found employment on the ranch of George H. Peck. After one year he leased the ranch, which consisted of four hundred and eighty-three acres, and while he engaged in the raising of alfalfa and grain he undertook the improvement of the place by boring a well one hundred and twenty-seven feet deep and installing a steam engine, forty-horse power, with a capacity of one hundred and fifty inches. He had two hundred acres given over entirely to the cultivation of alfalfa. In 1902 he decided to invest in land and accordingly purchased fifty-four acres in the vicinity of El Monte, and immediately set it to walnuts, while he also engaged in general farming. Later he disposed of twenty-nine acres of the property, retaining twenty-five acres, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation and improvement, having erected a new residence in 1905. He was instrumental in the incorporation of what is known as the Peck Ranch Water Company, of which he is secretary and manager, and which irrigates one hundred and fifty-eight acres of land.

November 22, 1891, in North Carolina, Mr. Piercy was united in marriage with Miss Rillie Tatham, who was born in Cherokee county, that state. Her father, Benton Tatham, and grandfather, Thomas, were both natives of North Carolina, of English descent, the latter having served in the Mexican war, as did his brother, James Tatham. Farming had been the occupation of the family for generations and Benton Tatham was so engaged at the breaking out of the Civil war, in which he served faithfully. He married Arra Wright, born in Yancey county, N. C., a daughter of James Wright, a farmer of Scotch-Irish descent; she was the fifth in a family of ten children and is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Piercy are the parents of three children, namely: Robert, William and Murvel. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow, having been made a member of the order in Monrovia; politically he is a Republican on national issues, while locally he supports the man whom he considers best qualified for public duties.

MARK HUTCHCROFT. One of the successful citizens of the community in and about Bassett is Mark Hutchcroft, known and esteemed throughout this section as an upbuilder of the best interests of the general welfare. He is a native of Grant county, Wis., born January 27, 1859, the oldest son in a family of eight children, of whom three sons and four daughters are now living. His father, John Hutchcroft, was born in Yorkshire, England, where the name had flourished for generations. The grandfather, Edward Hutchcroft, brought his family to America and located in Grant county, Wis., where he engaged first as a miner and later as a farmer. After spending fifteen years in mining, John Hutchcroft followed farming and finally, in 1874, brought his family across the continent to Oregon, where they located in McMinnville. Later he purchased a farm in North Yamhill, Yamhill county, and resided there until his death, which occurred in 1897. He belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically was a stanch Republican. His wife, formerly Margaret Bell, was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, a daughter of Robert Bell, a merchant in Scotland, where he also died. They also were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mark Hutchcroft received his preliminary education in the public schools of Wisconsin and Oregon, and completed it in the Willamette University. He was reared on his father's farm, where he remained until attaining his majority. He then became dependent upon his own resources and with his brother began logging on the North Yamhill river, from the city of North Yamhill down to Oregon City and Portland. He was occupied thus for five years, when with his accumulated earnings he rented a place and began raising hops at North Yamhill, still in partnership with his brother. On account of his wife's health he sold out in May, 1895, and came to California, locating in Santa Monica and engaging with the Santa Monica Lumber Company. In 1897 he accepted a position as foreman of the Bassett ranch, and has held it ever since, now being superintendent of three hundred acres of this large property, and engaged in setting it to walnuts. He has purchased thirty acres of the ranch, which is devoted to walnuts and alfalfa, while his attention is given to general farming on the greater part of the place.

Mr. Hutchcroft was married in Oregon to Miss May Roberts, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of Henry Roberts, and they have two children, Grace and Gladys Belle. Mr. Hutchcroft has always take a prominent place in educational affairs wherever he has made his home, while in Oregon serving on the school board, and was also a member of the Bassett school board when their building was erected. He is a member of the Mountain View Presbyterian Church, in which he officiates as an elder, and politically upholds the principles of the Republican party.

HON. WILLIAM H. KELSO. For many generations the Kelso family was identified with the development of Pennsylvania and especially with the agricultural and coal-mining interests of Allegheny county. The original Scotch immigrant, George Kelso, who came to the United States in 1760, from the town of Kelso, Scotland, located in Bucks county, Pa., from there going to Cumberland, near McClure's Gap, and still later, in 1782, removing to Washington county. His son, John Kelso, served seven years, seven months and ten days in the Revolutionary war, and was one of the one hundred and twenty men who stormed Stony Point. During his service he was made orderly sergeant. The son of the latter and the grandson of the original founder of the name in America, Benjamin Kelso, was born in 1790, in Allegheny county, where he became the owner of coal lands, bank stock and other profitable holdings, representing about $30,000, which in those days was considered quite a fortune. Among the children of Benjamin was John B., a native of Allegheny county and a lifelong resident of that portion of Pennsylvania, where he died at sixty-five years. Included in his possessions was a tract of coal land, which in time became the inheritance of his only son, William H., the only daughter having died without heirs. In politics he affiliated with the Republican party from the organization of the party until his death, and always he maintained an active interest in party matters. Through his marriage to Mary Hall, a native of Allegheny county, he became connected with an old-established family of Pennsylvania, of remote Irish extraction. Her father, William Hall, was born in Allegheny county and after an active life as a farmer he died there aged about seventy-six years, his wife surviving him until ninety-six years of age. During the year 1886 Mrs. Mary Kelso came to the Pacific coast and afterward resided in California until her death in 1905, at eighty-two years of age. From childhood she had been identified with the United Presbyterian denomination, which was the church of her forefathers.

On the homestead in Allegheny county, Pa., William H. Kelso was born February 24, 1847, and there he passed the care-free days of boyhood. His education was commenced in neighboring schools and completed in the Dayton (Pa.) Academy, after which he remained with his father and grandfather. December 21, 1870, he was united in marriage with Miss Mina C. Craig, a native of Indiana county, Pa., and a member of an old eastern family. With his young wife he established a home on a farm and there he engaged in raising grain and feeding cattle. Meanwhile the oil industry had assumed gigantic proportions in Pennsylvania and its activities penetrated to the Kelso homestead, which proved to possess oil in paying quantities. In 1887 he rented the old homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, which he yet owns. Eight oil wells on the land produced two hundred thousand barrels of oil during the first year and three of them are still pumping. The wells were drilled principally in 1891-93, Mr. Kelso's share being one-sixth of the output. Upon renting the old home place in 1887 he came to California and purchased sixty acres near Inglewood, and also three blocks in the townsite of Inglewood, containing fifteen acres, which were laid out in town lots and blocks, including his home place, which is one of the most attractive in the town. Always interested in movements for the development of his home town, he has fostered worthy enterprises and was one of the founders of the Bank of Inglewood, in which he now owns stock. For ten years he has officiated as director of Occidental College and in other ways he has proved his keen interest in educational progress. In his family there are two daughters, Anna J. and Edith A., both of whom were given exceptional advantages; the older is married to Arthur J. McFadden, of Santa Ana, member of an honored family of this region, and they have one daughter, Mary; the younger daughter, Edith A., remains with her parents.

The religious connections of the family are with the Presbyterian Church, but other denominations have received from them active encouragement and financial aid. In fraternal relations Mr. Kelso holds membership with the Independent Order of Foresters. From boyhood he was reared to a faith in the Republican party and later studies of the political situation did not change his belief. Though always willing to assist friends who were candidates for office, he has never cared for such honors for himself, and the only position he has held came to him unsought. This was in November of 1902, when without an active campaign on his part he was elected to represent the seventieth district in the state assembly. During the session that followed he served on various committees of importance and represented his constituents with fidelity and intelligence, but at the expiration of his term he declined further official responsibilities and honors, and retired to the enjoyment of private life and the management of his important business and landed interests.

OLOF LARSON. The years included between 1880 and 1898 recall varied experiences on the part of Mr. Larson, all valuable in their way, but none more so than those brought to mind by the dates just mentioned, the former being the year of his advent in the New World, and the latter the year in which he located upon his present ranch in San Bernardino county, not far from the city of that name. A son of Lars Hanson and Kestein (Pierceson) Larson, he was born in Skone, Sweden, January 7, 1858, receiving an excellent education in the public schools of his native town. Native thrift and not necessity was the idea in mind when he took up agricultural pursuits upon leaving school, for his parents were well-to-do and no comfort had been denied him.

At the age of twenty-two years, in 1880, Mr. Larson carried out a desire which had taken a strong hold upon him, and in the spring of that year he was among the passengers who landed at Castle Garden. Going direct from New York to Lasalle county, Ill., he remained there five years, after which he returned to Sweden to visit his parents and friends. Three months of rest and inactivity made him anxious to resume business, and at the end of this time he returned to America, this time locating in Ottawa, Ill. In 1886 he sought the milder climate of California, locating at Craftonville, where he was employed in a hotel for about one and a half years. After working in a livery in Redlands for about a year he came to San Bernardino, but three months later returned to Redlands, where for four months he was in the employ of H. H. Sinclair. A desire to see and inform himself in regard to the northern coast induced him to go to Seattle, Wash., where he found employment with a company engaged in laying a cable road, doing construction work for about four months, when he went to Puget Sound, there acting as yardmaster in a lumber yard for one year. Still later he became tally keeper in loading grain on steamers, following this until returning to San Bernardino in 1892, from that year until 1898 working in a livery stable here. As has been previously intimated, it was during the latter year that he purchased and settled upon his present ranch of twenty acres, which has been his home ever since, and which he has transformed from wild land into one of the most productive ranches in the county. Realizing that the first essential for a successful ranch depended upon a sufficient water supply, he put in flumes for irrigation, having in the meantime set out orange trees and planted grape vines. The result of his continued efforts to make his ranch a success has been all that could be desired by the most sanguine, and much credit is due him for what he has accomplished.

In San Bernardino, March 2, 1888, Mr. Larson and Kerstine Swenson were united in marriage. A native of Sweden, Mrs. Larson was born in Skone, July 21, 1865, the daughter of Swen Hanson and Ulrika (Rosengren) Swenson. When twenty-one years of age she came to the United States with her brother and located in Ottawa, Ill., coming to California the following year and settling in San Bernardino. Five children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Larson, of whom we mention the following: Ivan Ulrik, born January 9, 1890, and Frances Estella, born December 31, 1891, are both at home with their parents; the next child, Algene Henrietta, was born April 16, 1894, in Sweden, where Mrs. Larson had gone on a visit; the daughter did not long survive the journey to the United States, dying two days after her arrival, August 6, 1894; the other children are Algina Kerstina, born June 5, 1899, and Norman Stanley, born August 10, 1902.

F. L. Johnson

The family attend the Swedish Lutheran Church at San Bernardino, of which the parents are members. Politically Mr. Larson is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, having joined the order in San Bernardino in 1897.

CASSIUS C. JOHNSON. Few more consistent, practical or well-balanced careers have contributed to the development of Pomona and Claremont than that of the late C. C. Johnson, whose death, September 3, 1906, was mourned by the citizens of both towns as that of a personal friend. His remains were interred in the cemetery at Pomona, in which town so many years of his active and useful life had been passed.

Indiana was Mr. Johnson's native state, and he was born in Greencastle April 1, 1854, one of the younger children in a family of ten born to his parents, Dickson and Nancy (Sewell) Johnson, both of the latter being natives of Kentucky. Among the early settlers in Indiana who had crossed over the Ohio river from Kentucky was Dickson Johnson, who settled down as a farmer in that new country, but he was evidently not satisfied with the country for a permanent location, and some time after the birth of his son C. C. he removed to Vinton, Iowa, near which city he purchased a large farm. It was there that his earth life came to a close, leaving to mourn his loss a widow and a large family of children. The mother passed away some years later in Willow Lake, S. Dak. As he was a mere child when the family removed from Indiana to Iowa C. C. Johnson was reared almost entirely in the latter state, attending first the public school of Vinton and later Vinton Academy. Although reared on a farm he had no taste for farming himself, and as soon as his school days were over he secured a position in a dry-goods store in Vinton with the idea of learning the business. When one has definite ideas of a line of business which he wishes to follow and with persistency applies himself to its mastery the victory is half won, and thus it was with Mr. Johnson, for in a short time he was enabled to start in the dry-goods business on his own account. The failure of his health, however, brought about a change in his plans and after disposing of his interests in Iowa he came to California in 1881. The following year he purchased a ranch of thirty acres on the corner of San Bernardino and Towne avenues. For about four years he raised sheep and grain on his property and then subdivided the ranch into one and four acre tracts, also opening Towne avenue. In the mean time he had been employed in the weighing department of the Southern Pacific road for about one year.

In 1895 Mr. Johnson removed to a foothill ranch east of San Antonio, comprising several hundred acres. He gave this up, however, in the fall of 1900 and removed to Claremont, in order that his children could attend Pomona College. After locating here he engaged in the real-estate business, and among other transactions with which his name was associated was the laying out of a forty-acre tract on North Harvard avenue, which he sold off as Johnson's addition to Claremont, and he also laid out another forty-acre tract adjoining known as College avenue addition. This business is still being carried on under the name of C. C. Johnson & Co. In 1902 he erected the fine residence now occupied by the family, located on North Harvard avenue. Far from being self-centered and interested in his own private affairs only, Mr. Johnson was on the other hand broad minded and generous. He was a director in the Citizens' Light and Water Company, was the organizer of the Co-operative Water Company, which was located on his ranch, also assisted in the organization of the Claremont Lumber Company, the Citizens' State Bank and the Claremont Inn Company, of which latter he was president. For many years he had served efficiently as school trustee of Claremont and also served as selectman.

In Vinton, Iowa, May 19, 1880, C. C. Johnson was married to Miss Louise Moore, who was born in Durand, Ill., the daughter of Hubbard Moore. From Vermont, his native state, Mr. Moore set out with the '49ers for the gold region, but he did not remain long in the west at that time. Later he removed to Durand, Ill., and established himself in the dry-goods business, which he followed until removing to Vinton, Iowa, there following the builder's trade. Removing from the middle west in 1881 he came to California and the same year purchased a ranch adjoining Pomona, upon which he lived the remainder of his life, and in addition to its management he also carried on contracting to some extent. Mrs. Moore, who before her marriage was Katherine Peck, was born in Massachusetts and now resides with her daughter, Mrs. Johnson. Five children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson: Albert, who is engaged in the electrical business in Covina; James, who is with the Claremont Lumber Company; Clarence; Emma, deceased; and Katherine. Politically Mr. Johnson was a strong Republican, and in his church affiliations was an active member of the Congregational Church, of which at one time he was a trustee. Thoroughly devoted to the interests of this part of California, he was one of those citizens whose coming from the east meant so much to the development and growth of the state.

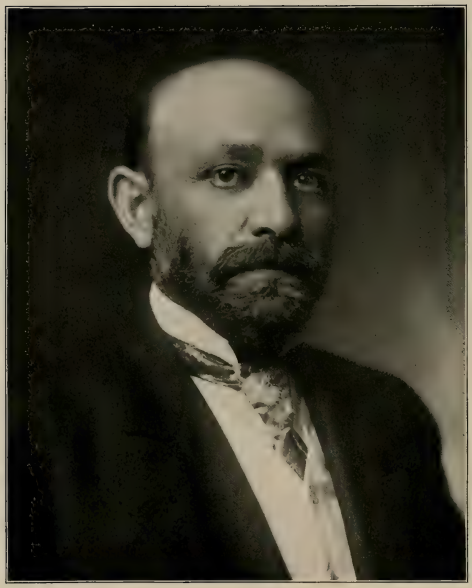
JOHN H. BREEDLOVE. Coming to San Diego county nearly a quarter of a century ago, John H. Breedlove has been an active and able assistant in developing and advancing its industrial and business prosperity. He is pleasantly located near Valley Center, and is one of the substantial men of his community, owning a large and well-cultivated ranch, and being especially interested in dairying. A man of unbounded energy and enterprise, he has accumulated his property by hard labor and the exercise of the good judgment and sound sense with which nature generously endowed him, and at the same time he has cultivated to a marked degree those inherent virtues and habits that make him a valued citizen and a true man in every relation of life. A son of William Breedlove, he was born December 26, 1846, in Webster county, Mo., where he received a common school education.



A native of Tennessee, William Breedlove remained in his early home until after his marriage with Susan Haggard. Migrating then to the extreme western frontier, he lived for many years in Missouri, clearing from the wilderness a good farm in Webster county, where he became owner of about eight hundred acres of land. In the later years of his life he started with his family for the Pacific coast, but while crossing the plains his good wife was taken ill and died. He continued the journey to California, but after a brief stay returned to Missouri, and there spent the remainder of his life. To him and his wife seven children were born.

Brought up on the homestead, and well drilled in farming and stock-raising from his boyhood, John H. Breedlove became well fitted for the independent calling which he is now following so successfully. As a young man, however, he thought to find some more congenial occupation, and with that end in view went in the spring of 1864 to Montana, where he worked for awhile in the mines. Not finding much profit in his labors he went back to his native state, where he resumed ranching for a time. Subsequently he went first to Kansas, then to Texas, where he lived four years, working at the carpenter's trade in Wood county. Returning home, he assisted his father on the farm from 1874 until 1876, when he came to California, locating in Butte county, where he followed farming two years. Coming from there to San Diego county in 1878, he took up a homestead claim on which he resided five years. In 1883 he located near Valley Center, buying his present ranch of six hundred and sixty acres, and in its improvement has met with unquestioned success, it being one of the best and most attractive home estates to be found in this section of the state. He pays much attention to dairying, for a number of years milking from fifty to seventy cows daily, and carries on general farming to a considerable extent, raising all of the hay and grain used on the farm.

In Missouri, in 1875, Mr. Breedlove married Edith A. Rogers, a native of that state, and into their home four children have been born, namely: Roy E., of Los Angeles, a dealer in real estate; Lillian, also dealing in real estate in Los Angeles; Grace, at home; and Carl. Although not very active in politics, Mr. Breedlove keeps himself well informed upon current events, and uniformly supports the Republican ticket. Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Breedlove are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

EDWARD H. STAGG, of Los Angeles is a man who, although retired from active service on account of ill health, still takes a prominent interest in public affairs, and his thirty years of intimate connection with railroad work while filling important positions gives him an insight into the live questions of the day, which is of recognized value. He was born in Jackson county, Mo., November 8, 1853, one of a family of seven children, five of whom are still living. His father, Rev. Isaac M. Stagg, was a native of New Jersey and when a young man learned the tailor's trade at Hartford, Conn. From there he removed to Laporte, Ind., took a theological course, was ordained as a minister and accepted in the Methodist Conference, after which he removed to Logansport, Ind., and continued in the ministry twenty-four years. His death at East St. Louis, Ill., removed a man who was greatly revered by all who knew him. The mother was in maidenhood Marial Thomas, and a native of New York. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and an active worker in religious circles. Her death occurred in 1891 at Albuquerque, N. Mex.

E. H. Stagg received a common school education and immediately after his school days were over he became an apprentice at the cigarmaker's trade. In 1872 he began his career as a railroad man, entering the service of the Illinois Central as a clerk and was promoted successively to baggage master and conductor. Later he became connected with the Union Pacific Railway Company, filling the position of chief bill clerk at Kansas City, Mo., and when he left that position it was to become chief clerk to the terminal agent of the Denver & Rio Grande in the southwestern part of Colorado. From there he went to Oregon as chief clerk in the auditor's office, was soon promoted to the position of traveling auditor, and in 1897 became chief claim clerk of the Atlantic & Pacific. In 1898 he was made auditor of the Randsburg Railway Company, which position he filled for about a year, when he was appointed to the position of general freight and passenger agent of the same company, and before he retired from that company in 1904 had attained the office of general manager. Mr. Stagg built the Ludlow Southern Railroad and served as general manager and treasurer of the company before his retirement from active work on account of impaired health. He still owns large business interests and is at present a stockholder and director of the Highland Park Bank. In politics he has always been an active member of the Republican party.

M. Alexander Schultz M.D.

Fraternally Mr. Stagg is a Royal Arch Mason and is identified with Signet Chapter No. 57, F. & A. M., and is Past Grand Secretary of New Mexico jurisdiction of Odd Fellows. He was married to Miss Louise Vaughn, a native of Windsor, Ontario, and has a family of three children, all of whom are living in California. They are: Mrs. Nellie A. Black, Mrs. Jessie Norton, and Mrs. Sarah E. McMillan. Mrs. Stagg is a member of and active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In everything he has undertaken Mr. Stagg has met with great success and has amassed a considerable fortune.

M. ALEXANDER SCHUTZ, A. B., M. D. A resident of California since 1891, Dr. Schutz has been an eye-witness to the remarkable development of the southern part of the state and has himself been an active participant in the growth and progress of Long Beach, where he has made his home for the greater part of this time. He is a native of Russia, having been born at Odessa on the Black Sea, March 2, 1864, the descendant of a family conspicuous in the affairs of that country, an uncle now serving as physician to the Royal family. After receiving a primary education in the private schools in the portion of the country where he made his home, he entered college and after eight years graduated with the degree of A. B. and prepared to take up the study of medicine, which he had chosen for his life work. He had intended to pursue this study with his uncle, but his plans were changed by political ideas imbibed through a careful and thoughtful review of the situation in Russia. He became a Liberalist and before his plans were completed was placed under suspicion and practically deprived of his liberty. For the sake of the broader freedom to be found on this side of the water he decided to come to America, and upon his arrival became a student in New York, taking up the study of medicine. His health becoming impaired he gave up his studies and came to California to recuperate, completing the course in the Southern California Medical College, and receiving the degree of M. D. in 1899. In the meantime, in 1894, he had located in Long Beach and established a sanitarium for the treatment of chronic and nervous diseases, erecting the buildings and fitting them out with every modern appliance. Later he enlarged the property and the first building which was erected is now used for an office. He conducted the work successfully and at the same time took a broad interest in the material upbuilding of his adopted city, putting up the first Liberal hall in Long Beach, where free speech could be made. In 1901 he built the Riviera hotel, the largest of its kind in the city, consisting of eighty rooms and all modernly equipped for the accommodation of the best class of tourists. He was also the organizer of the Improvement Society of Long Beach and established the first bath in the place, and along many lines has given his best efforts for the beautifying and upbuilding of the city. In 1905 he organized the International Home for children, his object being to protect the homeless and friendless children of all nationalities and place them in an environment calculated to enable them to develop the best in their lives. They are taught not only the principle of universal love and given the best physical and intellectual training, but are also instructed in useful trades and occupations and taught to become self-supporting. The home, which is located near Signal Hill, built by the doctor and improved each year, is to be dedicated to them in perpetuity, to be free from indebtedness and thereby insuring them the best opportunity to develop the highest type of manhood and womanhood. This is the plan of Dr. Schutz, to be fulfilled at his demise, his possessions to be given to the support of the home.

In Long Beach Dr. Schutz was united in marriage with Pearl Kelly, a daughter of Rev. Isaac Kelly, and a native of Iowa, from which state she removed to California in 1895. They are the parents of a son and daughter, Ahura and Emeth, both natives of this city. Mrs. Schutz is identified with her husband in his philanthropic work and gives him her heartiest support and encouragement. In the midst of his other labors the doctor is the editor of the Southern California Journal of Health, of which about a thousand numbers are published each month, and he has also traveled and lectured on Russia very extensively. In his practice in the sanitarium he makes a specialty of electricity and X-ray and is accomplishing much that is bringing him prominently before the public. The doctor is not a man of one idea, unless it be said—and truly—that all his actions are founded upon the ruling motive of his life, to be a benefit to humanity, for he is broad and philanthropic, a man of letters and scholarly attainments; and a true Socialist in all the comprehensiveness of the term, freely giving of his time and means in the furtherance of his ideas, which mean a broader and better future for the coming generation.

FRANCIS CHERRILL HANNON. A native son of the state, Francis Cherrill Hannon was born in San Jose, March 6, 1867, the son of an honored pioneer. Jeremiah C. Hannon was born in London, England, December 2, 1828, a son of David Hannon, who married Martha Cherrill. The grandfather brought his family to America and located near Zanesville, Ohio, where he died in 1854. Jeremiah C. Hannon engaged as a farmer in Ohio until 1860, when he came by the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco and for a time followed mining in California and Nevada. Later, in San Francisco, he was married and in 1863 purchased a ranch near San Jose and farmed there for six years, coming at the last-named date to Southern California, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres one mile north of El Monte. This was wild land, which he began at once to improve, continuing his labors until 1904, when he retired from active cares and located at San Gabriel, where he is now residing. In addition to his quarter section of land previously mentioned he owns seven hundred acres in Beaumont, Cal. He is prominent in public affairs, having served for many years as county supervisor on the Democratic ticket. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Carr, was born in County Donegal, Ireland, and she is also living, at the age of sixty-nine years. They became the parents of seven children, of whom six attained maturity, and are now living.

The eldest in his father's family, Francis Cherrill Hannon, was brought to this section in infancy, his education being received through the medium of the public schools. At the age of eighteen years he went to Los Angeles and entered the employ of the Hellman-Haas Company, wholesale grocers, remaining with them for some time, beginning at the bottom of the business and working up until he was placed in charge of the shipping office. At the age of twenty-one years he was appointed gauger of the United States revenue service in the southern district of California, serving under Asa Ellis for three years. At the close of his term he was appointed deputy sheriff of Los Angeles county under Sheriff Gibson, and after serving one term was made chief deputy in the street department of the city of Los Angeles. His term expired two years later, when he engaged in general contracting throughout Southern California, taking street and railroad contracts for ten years. In 1904 he decided to take up agricultural life and accordingly leased the ranch which he now occupies, consisting of one hundred and thirty-five acres, where he has since dug two wells ninety feet deep each, and installed a thirty-horse power gasoline engine, with a capacity of one hundred inches. He gives his time to the raising of vegetables and berries for the wholesale markets, ten acres devoted to the small fruit, forty acres to vineyard and the remainder given over to vegetables.

In Los Angeles Mr. Hannon was united in marriage with Miss Frankie Crowley, a native of Nevada county, Cal., and born of this union are two children, Ynez and Margaret. Politically Mr. Hannon is a stanch Democrat and at one time was a member of the Democratic city central committee of Los Angeles. He is a man of many splendid qualities of character, which he has displayed throughout his residence in Southern California, and as a man and citizen has won the respect and esteem of all who know him.

JAMES B. CARROLL. Among the extensive, practical and progressive agriculturists of San Diego county, James B. Carroll, of Escondido, owner of a large and valuable ranch, holds a position of importance and influence. An active, capable business man, possessing a clear judgment and amply endowed with those qualities which constitute an honorable citizen, he is highly esteemed throughout the community, and takes genuine interest in the advancement of its prosperity and in the improvement of its moral, educational and social status. He is the son of the late Cornelius Carroll. The latter and his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Egan, were both born in Ireland, and there spent their earlier lives. After their marriage they moved to the United States and were among the pioneer settlers of Wisconsin, and also lived for several years in Minnesota. From there they removed to Oregon, where Mr. Carroll followed the occupation of engineer and merchant. Later he came with his family to San Diego county, Cal., and for a time farmed land in Mission Valley. Subsequently he located near Escondido, purchasing the place now farmed and occupied by his son, James B., and here successfully carried on his independent occupation until his death in 1885. His good wife survived him, passing away on the home ranch in 1898. Eight children were born of their union, four of whom are living, while four have passed to the world beyond.

James B. Carroll was born in Salem, Ore., but most of his life has been spent in San Diego county. After finishing his education in the San Diego public school he turned his attention to the pursuit of agriculture and assisted his father in the management of the ranch, which the latter had purchased about four miles from Escondido. He now has about eight hundred acres of fine valley land, and is extensively engaged in raising stock and grain, being one of the largest and most successful ranchers in this section of the county.

Living with Mr. Carroll on the parental homestead are his three sisters, namely: Mrs. Hollan, Honora J., and Theresa Carroll. Honora J. Carroll has been a teacher, and was principal of the North Salem and North San Diego public schools, and has also taught music. Mr. Carroll is greatly interested in the welfare of town and county, voting irrespective of party in local issues, but in national politics supporting the straight Democratic ticket. Fraternally he is a member of San Diego Lodge, Ancient Order of Hibernians.

BENJAMIN SOULARD VIRDEN. The identification of the Virden family with American development dates from the year 1620, when one of that name immigrated to this country from Holland and settled in the vicinity of Dover, Del. The original house occupied and owned by the family is still standing, a veritable landmark of the far distant past. Later generations remained in Delaware and wielded considerable influence in their localities. The lineage descends from Samuel Virden, a man of wealth and high standing, to his son, Peter, a native of Delaware, but during early manhood a planter near Jackson, Miss., and a staff officer in the Civil war. At the close of that struggle he established his family in Philadelphia, Pa., and engaged in business in that city, but ultimately returned to Delaware, where in 1900 he passed away at his Dover home. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Emma Clocey, was born in Pennsylvania of French descent and was connected with the Soulard family of St. Louis.

Seven children, all but one of whom are living, comprised the family of Peter and Emma Virden. One of the sons, Edwin, carries on a drug business at Santa Paula, Cal., and is a leading citizen of that town. Another son, Benjamin Soulard, was born at Jackson, Miss., March 7, 1866, and as a boy lived in Philadelphia and Dover, and attended the Wilmington Academy in Dover. From youth he has been familiar with the drug business, his first experience being gained with W. C. A. Loder, on Sixteenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia. After one year as a student in the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy he went to Savannah and to other points in the south, where for several years he was employed as a drug clerk. On his return to Philadelphia he opened a drug store on Twenty-third and Pine streets, but disposed of the business after one year.

On coming to California in 1888 Mr. Virden engaged as a clerk for his brother at Santa Paula, but soon went to Ventura, where he remained for two years in a drug store. During 1892 he embarked in the drug business for himself at Saticoy and for some years he continued in that town. At the time of the founding of Oxnard he came to the new town and rented a lot containing a cabin of most primitive appearance. In that building he started the first drug store in the place. Subsequently he replaced the original building with one of brick, 25x60 feet in dimensions, and conveniently arranged for the conduct of his drug business. His attractive residence in Oxnard is presided over by his wife (a native of Ventura county, and formerly Josephine Kelley) and its pleasures are enhanced by the presence of their children, Hazel C., Ruth M., and Benjamin S., Jr.

The movement which resulted in the incorporation of Oxnard had in Mr. Virden a stanch supporter and one appreciative of the benefits accruing therefrom. At all times he has favored measures for the development of the city's resources and the introduction of modern improvements conducive to the comfort and health of the citizens. Since 1902 he has officiated as clerk of the board of school trustees and meanwhile has been a stanch friend of all plans for educational development and for the elevation of the system of public schools. The Citizens Club, an organization highly beneficial to the town, numbers him among its directors. Strongly Democratic in his sympathies, he has aided his party by working as a member of the county central committee and by acting as a delegate to the state convention. After coming to the coast he was made a Mason in Hueneme Lodge and later identified himself with Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M. Beginning as a Royal Arch Mason in the Ventura Chapter, he later became a charter member of Oxnard Chapter No. 86, of which he acts as high priest. In addition he has become associated with Ventura Commandery, K. T., and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles, and also belongs to the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias.

CLAUS A. JOHNSON. Many generations of the Johnson family followed agricultural pursuits in Sweden, where, on a farm near Boras, Elsborslaen, occurred the birth of the gentleman whose name introduces this article and who for some years or until his death, followed the occupation of a contracting mason at San Diego. His parents, John and Sophia (Anderson) Johnson, left their native land when somewhat advanced in years and came to the United States, settling at San Diego, where the father died in April, 1905; the mother still makes her home in this city. Their only child, Claus A., was born April 25, 1861, received a public-school education in Sweden, and at the age of fourteen years entered upon an apprenticeship to the general mercantile business in his home town. April 25, 1881, on the twentieth anniversary of his birth, he landed in New York City after an uneventful voyage across the ocean. From New York he proceeded west as far as Illinois, where for more than a year he was employed in the factory of the Illinois Steel Company at Joliet, Will county. On leaving that place he was apprenticed to the mason's trade in Joliet, but within a few months removed to Chicago, where he completed the trade. In 1886 he began to take contracts for mason work and in time became extensively interested in the erection of large structures.

Overwork in the interests of his occupation undermined Mr. Johnson's health and for that reason he relinquished his work in Chicago, after which he removed to California and traveled throughout the southern part of the state until he was able to take up active work once more. Securing land ten miles east of San Diego in Spring valley he planted citrus and deciduous fruit trees and improved a valuable orchard of nineteen acres. The house on the place was erected by him, and other improvements are also the result of his handiwork. In order to secure water for domestic purposes and for irrigation he piped a conduit from the mountains, this giving him the very finest quality of water and greatly enhancing the value of his orchard. In 1899 he commenced to take contracts for stone and mason work in San Diego, and thereafter made San Diego his home and business headquarters. Among his important contracts was that for all of the brick work at Fort Rosecrans, and he also had the contracts for the Pickwick theatre, the American National Bank building and the Fox-Heller block.

While living in Joliet Mr. Johnson married Miss Clara Johnson, a native of Sweden. They became the parents of seven children, namely: Frank, who was associated with his father, in contracting; Clara and Ellen, who are now studying nursing in the Battle Creek Sanitarium; Fannie, Richard, Ida and Adelena, who are at home. For several years Mr. Johnson served as a school trustee in the Spring valley district while he was making his home on his fruit farm. His political views were somewhat different from those expressed by the bulk of the American voters and brought him into sympathy with the Socialists. After coming to San Diego he identified himself with the Chamber of Commerce, while fraternally he belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Upon the organization, June 30, 1904, of the Scandinavian Society of San Diego (in the founding of which he was actively interested) he was chosen the first secretary of the body and at the expiration of the term was honored with the office of president, which he filled acceptably up to the time of his death.

MRS. SARAH BLAIR SCOTT. For many years a resident of Oceanside, Mrs. Sarah Blair Scott is well known throughout the community in which she resides, and has the sincere respect and esteem of her neighbors and friends, who have ever found her a kind, genial, helpful companion, always ready to aid the needy and cheer the afflicted. A daughter of William Blair, she was born in Ireland, of honored Scotch ancestry.

William Blair was born and brought up in Scotland, being reared to farming pursuits. He removed to Ireland when a young man, and from there immigrated with his family to the United States, settling in Maryland, on the banks of the Chesapeake Bay, near Baltimore, where he resided until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Hester Moore, spent her entire life in Ireland, dying in early womanhood. Of their six children, three are living, Sarah, the special subject of this sketch, being the fifth child in order of birth. Three of the sons served in the Civil war, William B., of San Jacinto, Cal., serving in an Illinois regiment; Thomas, living in Chapin, Ill., also serving in an Illinois regiment; while John, who enlisted in an Illinois regiment, was killed while in service.

But three years of age when she came with her father and the family to Maryland, Sarah Blair lived there a few years, and then went to Springfield, Ill., where she completed her education in the public schools. In December, 1877, she married Frederick Woodruff, a native of Louisville, Ky., and they began life together in Tracy, Minn., where Mr. Woodruff was first engaged in farming, and afterwards in business pursuits. Coming to California in 1890, he was engaged in the butcher business at Oceanside until his death, in 1892. In 1894 Mrs. Woodruff married for her second husband Levi L. Scott, who was a soldier in the Civil war. In 1891 Mr. Scott removed from Iowa to San Diego county, locating in Oceanside, where he opened a barber shop, which he conducted successfully until his death, in 1901. He was an industrious, enterprising man, well liked and highly esteemed, and belonged to the Masonic order. Mrs. Scott has lived retired since the death of Mr. Scott, having a cozy home on Second street. She is a woman of strong personality, and is a firm believer in the tenets of the Christian Church.

W H Freer

WILLIAM H. FREER. No more prominent family than that established in California by William H. Freer holds rank among the representative citizens of Los Angeles county, the name being especially well known and esteemed in El Monte and vicinity. The pioneer, William H. Freer, was a native of the middle west states, his birth having occurred on the little Miami river in Ohio, February 5, 1814. He was a son of Jonathan Freer, who was born in North Carolina and became a pioneer settler of Ohio, where with his wife, formerly Hannah Swords, of Virginia, he engaged in farming. He finally removed to Randolph county, Ind., and thence to Missouri, locating in Atchison county, where his death eventually occurred. His wife survived him for many years, her death occurring in California. William H. Freer engaged as a farmer in Atchinson county, Mo., in which state he was married and in 1849 came across the plains to California with his family, consisting of his wife, three children, his mother, two sisters and two brothers, one of the brothers dying en route. They traveled by ox-teams via the Truckee route and were five months making the journey, traveling continuously from May to October. Their first winter was spent on the Stanislaus river in San Joaquin county, where Mr. Freer engaged in making saddle trees. In the spring of 1850 he located in Santa Clara county at Berryessa, and on Penetentia creek, three miles from San Jose, purchased a small farm and began work as a farmer and horticulturist. In 1851 he tried mining for a time, but not caring for the life he soon returned to his ranch and as time passed continued to add to his first purchase until he owned one hundred and seventy-five acres. In the meantime, in 1869, he had made a trip to Southern California and purchased three hundred and twenty acres of the old Dalton tract. In 1875 he decided to locate here permanently and accordingly brought his family to the property, one and a half miles north of El Monte, the land lying on the banks of the San Gabriel river and being exceedingly fertile. He improved the ranch by the erection of a fine residence, barns and outbuildings, good fences, and the setting out of fruit, walnuts, etc. Later he purchased three hundred and seventeen acres of the old Tibbett place, paying $5,000 and selling it during the boom of 1887 for $72,000. He was a very successful business man, combining good judgment with decision of character, which enabled him to see and take advantage of the many golden opportunities presented in the early days of the state. His death occurred February 16, 1902, removing from the community a citizen highly esteemed and one whose place could never be filled.

In Grundy county, Mo., November 25, 1840, Mr. Freer was united in marriage with Zerelda Stucker, who was born in Indiana, March 15, 1824, a daughter of John and Susanna Stucker, natives of Woodford county, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Freer became the parents of the following children: Alexander, who died in Los Angeles county in 1870; James B., a resident of El Monte; Ellen, who died in infancy in Missouri; Matilda; Jonathan Perry, who died in 1861; John H., residing at Arcadia; Martin, located on the old home place; Hannah, who became Mrs. Dobbins and died in Tehachapi; Thomas, a resident of El Monte; Delilah, Mrs. Lowry, who died in the home in 1887; Mary L., wife of Thomas Stucker, of Los Angeles; Julia, who died in Santa Clara county when one year old; and Jackson, and Lee both of El Monte.

JOHN WESLEY SMITH. Distinguished for his bravery, courage and coolness on the field of battle, John W. Smith, of Fernando, won for himself an honorable record as a soldier during the Civil war, and is now just as faithfully performing all the duties devolving upon him as a public-spirited, enterprising citizen. A native of Maryland, he was born February 5, 1839, in Baltimore, where he lived until fourteen years old, obtaining his education in the city schools.

Removing then to Illinois, he followed farming until 1862, when he enlisted, at Peoria, in Company B, Eighty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Sharpshooters, which was assigned to the Third Brigade, Second Division, Fourteenth Army Corps. Subsequently he took part in thirty-six battles and in numerous skirmishes, being at first with the Army of the Cumberland, and later marching with Sherman to the Sea. The last battle in which he participated was that of Bentonville, N. C. He took part in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C., where his division was awarded the first premium. He was fortunate in war, receiving no wounds of consequence, although while crossing Shepard's Run, after the battle at Missionary Ridge, he was injured in the right hip and for a time was confined to the hospital. He was also under the care of a physician for some days on account of being sunstruck.

Having been mustered out of service at the close of the war, Mr. Smith returned to Illinois, where he continued in his agricultural work until 1888, being quite successful. Coming then to Fernando, Cal., he purchased a lot in the village and erected a dwelling house, which he occupied until the erection of his present residence, when he sold it at an advantage. Mr. Smith delights in an active life, and is now kept busily employed in setting out and pruning fruit trees, an occupation in which he is an adept.

While a resident of Illinois Mr. Smith married Delia Sitzer, and they are the parents of five children. Sheridan M., of Fernando, married Bertha Hoyt, and they have four children, Lyle, Clifford and Clinton (twins) and Floyd; Grace E., Mrs. Niblock, of Los Angeles, has one child, Nina; and Frank M., Ida C. and Ernest T., are all deceased.

JEAN TILLAT. Born in the Pyrenees mountains, in France, December 25, 1869, Jean Tillat was the son of Joseph and Marie (Hauquet) Tillat, both natives of the same place, where they passed their entire lives. They had one son and one daughter, Jean being the younger child. He was reared on his father's farm and alternated his home duties with attending the common schools. He remained at home until he was twenty years old, when, in 1889, he came to America, crossed the continent and located in Los Angeles. He was qualified only for farming at that time and shortly after his arrival secured employment on a farm in the vicinity of Santa Monica, beginning at the bottom and patiently working his way round by round to a better position. He engaged in general farming and the sheep business for some time, when he went to Arizona and there accepted a position as commissary on a large sheep ranch in the northern part of the territory. After five years he returned to California and was located for a time in Los Angeles. With his accumulated means he decided to engage independently in sheep raising and accordingly purchased a band of sheep in Arizona and brought them to California and herded them in Los Angeles county. For four years he continued at this work in partnership with Anton Barth, of Los Angeles, after which they sold out and dissolved partnership.

In 1906 Mr. Tillat bought his present ranch of twenty acres near Arcadia, known as a part of the Sierra Vista tract, and began its improvement and cultivation, erecting a comfortable home, barns and outbuildings. He was married in Los Angeles to Miss Catherine Martinez, who was also born in the Pyrenees and they have one daughter, Mary Louise. Mr. Tillat belongs to the French Benevolent Society of Los Angeles. Politically he is a stanch adherent of Republican principles. He is liberal and enterprising and held in high esteem by all who know him.

CLEASON AMBLER. For a radius of many miles surrounding the village of Mesa Grande the name given above is well known, for not only is Mr. Ambler postmaster of the village and clerk of the county, but as proprietor of a general store in Mesa Grande he has won many friends and well-wishers by his courteous treatment and straightforward business dealings. He is a son of E. P. and Mary A. (Willingmeyer) Ambler, both natives of Pennsylvania, their home now being in St. Louis, Mo., where the father is engaged in installing steam and hot-water heating plants.

Among the six children that were born to his parents Cleason Ambler was the eldest, and was born in Belleville, St. Clair county, Ill., July 21, 1873. Scholastic privileges were not lacking in his boyhood years, and be it said to his credit that he made the most of his opportunities. He first attended the public schools of St. Louis, was later graduated from the high school, and still later took a three-year course in the manual training school of that city. For a short time after leaving school he held a clerkship in the same city, but subsequently for two years assisted his father in his business. After attaining his majority he determined to strike out in the world on his own account and the year 1895 witnessed his arrival in California. Mining and prospecting claimed his attion for the first two or three years, after which he was interested in the cattle business in Yuma, Ariz., for a time. Going from there to Granite, Mont., he secured employment with the Granite Bi-Metallic Company, and during the three years of his association with the company gave excellent satisfaction as foreman of the works.

In the meantime Mr. Ambler has established domestic ties by his marriage with Carrie B. Stone in 1899. Locating with his family in San Diego in 1901, Mr. Ambler purchased the stock and good-will from one of the merchants of the town, and three months later added to his first purchase by buying out another store. Upon selling out his interests in San Diego two years later he came to Mesa Grande and in May, 1903, purchased the general merchandise store of which he is now the proprietor. Contrary to his father's political belief Mr. Ambler is a Democrat, and takes considerable interest in all matters that affect the public welfare. While a resident of St. Louis Mr. Ambler became a member of the Baptist Church, and he still adheres to the faith of that body of believers. His wife, however, is a member of the Christian Church, holding membership in the church of that denomination in San Diego. Several fraternal associations claim Mr. Ambler's membership, prominent among being the Elks and Masons.

ANTHONY CLARENCE RECHE, JR. There are many fine ranches in San Diego county that as regards productions and improvements will compare favorably with any other in this part of the state. A large number of these places are owned by men comparatively young in years, who started in the world with but little more capital than an unlimited amount of energy and perseverance, and who are succeeding to an eminent degree in their agricultural labors. Prominent among this number is Anthony C. Reche, Jr., whose father, Anthony C. Reche, Sr., was a pioneer of this place, and gave to Fallbrook its present name. He is a native and to the manner born, his birth having occurred June 24, 1873, on a farm not far distant from the one that he now occupies.

Born January 31, 1833, in Montreal, Canada, Anthony C. Reche, Sr., was taken by his parents, in 1835, to Rochester, N. Y., where he was reared and educated. He there learned the trades of carpenter and millwright, and in February, 1854, started by the way of the Isthmus for the Pacific coast. Locating at Santa Clara, he followed his trade in that vicinity for two years, and was afterwards employed in mining in Calaveras and Mariposa counties, in the latter place also putting up quartz mills. Going to Visalia, Tulare county, in 1858, he there followed his trade about three years, erecting sawmills and flour mills. The following year he was similarly engaged in San Jose, from there going, in 1862, to San Bernardino, where he operated a general store for twelve months. Removing thence to Temecula, he ranched for a year, and then removed to El Monte, Los Angeles county, where he worked at his trade for a few years, in the mean time going back to Temecula to build a large mill, finally settling there in 1868, and living there a year. Returning to this country in 1869, he opened a general store, keeping miner's supplies, at Pala, where he remained a year. Locating in the old town of Fallbrook in 1870, he took up land, and for six years was employed in farming. Migrating then to San Bernardino, he was for fifteen years a resident of that place, but in 1891 he returned to Fallbrook, and here resided until his death, May 27, 1898. He was a Democrat in politics, a man of many fine qualities of heart and mind, and a member of the Catholic Church.

February 22, 1861, at Visalia, Cal., Anthony C. Reche, Sr., married Menora C. Cayton, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of Alexander S. and Elizabeth (Droullard) Cayton. Mr. Cayton died in November, 1849, in California, and his widow subsequently married for her second husband Dr. R. Matthews. In 1854 Dr. Matthews and family came by ox-teams to California, and was the first white man to settle in Visalia. Mrs. Matthews, now a bright and active woman of eighty-three years, is still living. Ten children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Reche, Sr., namely: Vital C., of Ocean Park; Anthony B., born in 1864, and living only one month; Angenora L., wife of J. H. Maag, of Los Angeles; Helene H., wife of C. S. Wilson, of Big Pine, Inyo county; Charles L., of Banning; Anthony C., Jr., the subject of this sketch; Flora L., the first white girl born in Fallbrook, and who became the wife of W. H. Buchanan, of Redondo; Bernie E., born in San Bernardino, and now living with his brother Anthony, with whom he is in partnership; Eugenia M., wife of F. W. Roberti, of Seattle, Wash.; and Alma B., wife of L. Fields, of Redondo. Mrs. Reche and her mother, Mrs. Matthews, are living near Fallbrook, where they are held in high esteem and respect.

But three years old when the family removed to San Bernardino, Anthony C. Reche, Jr., obtained a practical education in the common schools of that town, and subsequently was for two years track walker for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Removing then to Fallbrook, where he has the distinction of being the first child born of white parents in the place, he worked by the month until 1901. Starting then as a rancher on his own account, he is now, in partnership with his brother, carrying on general farming with exceptionally satisfactory results, having seven hundred acres of land on the St. Margaret ranch. Progressive and enterprising, he has proved himself a thorough master of his calling, and as a young man of integrity and honor is fully entitled to the high position which he holds in the estimation of the community.

In 1903 Mr. Reche married Mamie Freeman, a daughter of Jonas Freeman, of whom a brief biographical sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume, and they have one child, a daughter named Julia Catherine. Fraternally Mr. Reche is a member of Fallbrook Lodge No. 339, I. O. O. F.

DAVID CRISE, M. D. The initial period of the agricultural development of America found the Greise family immigrating from Germany to cast in their fortunes with those of other pioneers, and several successive generations lived and labored upon Pennsylvania farms. Among the children of George Greise, a farmer of Fayette county, Pa., was a son, George W., who was born and reared upon the farm in that county, and he it was who changed the spelling of the family name from its original form to the mode in present use. During the '70s he removed to Ohio, but after the death of his wife, Rachel, he returned to Pennsylvania and there spent his last years in retirement. His wife was a daughter of Daniel Stough, a pioneer farmer of Westmoreland county, Pa., and of German ancestry. Both families were identified with the Lutheran Church, their ancestors in the old country having been among those who followed Luther in the Reformation.

Upon the old homestead in Westmoreland county, Pa., David Crise was born May 23, 1846, being a son of George W. and Rachel Crise. At an early age he proved himself an apt and diligent pupil in local schools, where he advanced so rapidly in his studies that it was decided to educate him for a profession. In accordance with his preferences he was sent to the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in March, 1872, with the degree of M. D. Opening an office at Mendon, Pa., he gained his first professional experience in that town, whence a year later he removed to Washington county, in the same state, and after four years became a practitioner of Beach City, Stark county, Ohio, where he built up a growing practice during the ten years of his residence in the town. In July, 1888, he came to California and opened an office at Escondido, where now he has the distinction of being, in point of years of practice, the oldest physician in the town, and one of the oldest in the county of San Diego. Through membership in the County, State and American Medical Associations, and through the careful perusal of medical journals, he keeps in touch with every advance made in the profession, and is a constant student of therapeutics. In addition to possessing the advantages derived from years of practical experience in the profession, he possesses undoubted ability in the diagnosis of intricate diseases and in the treatment of the same, which qualities, coupled with his humanitarian principles and genial sympathy, eminently adapt him to fill a high place in the local medical field. While he has made a specialty of the diseases of women and has been unusually successful in that line, his knowledge of medicine is broad and varied, and is not limited to any one department of materia medica.

The marriage of Dr. Crise took place in Pennsylvania June 27, 1872, and united him with Lucetta Null, who was born and reared in that state. Five children were born of their union. The eldest, Vivi Anna, is the widow of Henry Haliday and resides in Escondido. The second-born, Lola E., married H. W. Cleave of Los Angeles. The eldest son, Bruce L., was graduated from the Escondido high school in 1898 and from the medical department of the University of Southern California in 1903, after which he spent one year as an interne in the Sacramento city hospital, and then became associated with his father in the practice of medicine and surgery, with a specialty of the latter branch of the profession; his wife was a Miss Davies of Sacramento. The two remaining sons of the family are David R., a well driller in Escondido, and Harry N., a graduate of the Redlands school. The family are identified with the Congregational Church and are contributors to all movements for the religious, moral and educational advancement of their community.

FRANCIS P. BROOKS. A host of friends have witnessed the efforts of Francis P. Brooks in his development and cultivation of a ranch in the vicinity of Norwalk and have appreciated his industry, energy and perseverance, which have contributed no little toward his success. Mr. Brooks is a native of Nebraska, his birth having occurred in Butler county, September 6, 1877. His parents, Noah and Esther (Shuggart) Brooks, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of Illinois, located as pioneers in Nebraska, where they made their home for some years In the fall of 1901 they came to California and Mr. Brooks now owns a ranch of thirty acres in the vicinity of his son's ranch. He is a Republican in politics and active in the advancement of the principles he endorses, although he has never cared for official recognition. He is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church. Of their three children all are living in California.

Thomas J. England.

Francis P. Brooks was educated in the common schools of Nebraska and also spent one year in the Lincoln State Normal, after which he returned home and engaged in farming with his father. At twenty years of age he became dependent upon his own resources and after farming in the middle west for two years came to California in 1901. Subsequently he traveled all over the state, locating for a time in Mendocino, Humboldt county, and for one year carried on a ranch in Dinuba, Tulare county. About four years ago he came to Norwalk and the first year purchased his present property, which consists of ten acres located one and one-half miles southeast of town, which he has since improved and cultivated. He also leases about eighty acres, devoted to the raising of grain. He is likewise interested in team contracting, holding a contract at the present writing for the hauling of pipe for the Murphy Oil Company.

Mr. Brooks' marriage occurred in 1898 and united him with Miss Edna Curtis, a native of Nebraska, and a daughter of Charles Curtis, whose death occurred in Santa Ana, Cal. They have two children, Oris and Hazel. Mr. Brooks is a Republican in politics and in religion belongs to the Seventh Day Adventist Church.

MAJOR THOMAS Y. ENGLAND. Although never a permanent resident of Redlands, no man was more interested in its development and upbuilding than the late Major Thomas Y. England, who since he first became interested in California gave his time and attention to the beautifying of his winter home, known as Prospect Park and open to the public as one of the show places of the city. Mr. England was born in Wilmington, Del., May 28, 1837, a son of James England, of Quaker ancestry and English origin. The father engaged as a leather merchant and manufacturer of Philadelphia. During the Civil war Thomas Y. England served in the First Regiment Delaware Infantry, first as quartermaster, later as first lieutenant, and was then made commissary of subsistence on the staffs of Generals Hancock, Meade and Wilson, with the rank of captain, but when he resigned was given the rank of major. After leaving high school he became associated with his father and they succeeded in building up a large and lucrative business, in fact, one of the largest concerns in the world of its character, it being incorporated under the name of England, Walton & Co., and he served as its president until his death. Since that time the business has continued with Mr. Walton as president. Mr. England became an habitual visitor to Southern California and finally began the improvement of what is known as Prospect Park, a magnificent orange grove and park of sixty acres, which is one of the sightly places in a city of beauty and magnificent improvements. Major England and his son J. W. were interested in bringing water into Redlands and were unusually active in this line during the dry years, when it was thought impossible to save the orchards. For many years he served as president of the South Mountain Water Company, and was also president of the Orange Growers' Association. Fraternally he was a Mason, and in his home in Philadelphia was associated with the Grand Army of the Republic and Loyal Legion. He refused a commission in the Regular army after the close of the war in order to devote his entire time and attention to his business. In politics he was a stanch advocate of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party; in religion he was a member of the Baptist Church.

The death of Major England occurred January 2, 1906; he left a widow formerly Miss E. Clarissa Combs, a native of New Jersey, born near Woodbury, and whom he married October 17, 1862. Her father, Thomas Combs, was also born in New Jersey of English descent, and there engaged as a farmer until his retirement, since which time he made his home in Philadelphia. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and a much esteemed and respected citizen. His wife was formerly Anna Haines, a native of Philadelphia, and a daughter of Joseph Haines, a builder by occupation. Mrs. England became the mother of the following children: James William, a prominent horticulturist who makes his home in Redlands; Martha E., wife of Charles S. Walton, president of the England, Walton & Co. manufacturing interests; and Clarissa E., wife of Edwin A. Landell Jr., a leather merchant of Philadelphia. Mrs. England is a member of the Baptist Church and a generous contributor to all its charities. To her much of the credit is due for the development of Prospect Park, for she was able to give even more time than her husband because of his business interests which demanded his attention. She has been very liberal in all movements tending toward the general welfare of the community and is always counted upon to further the best interests of the city. She spends her summers in her home in Philadelphia and her winters in the sweet sunny land of Southern California.

GEORGE W. GRIFFITHS. Since 1850 George W. Griffiths has been a resident of California and no citizen has been more interested in the development of the country and its advancement among the sister states of the nation. He was a lad of ten years when he came west, his birth having occurred in Detroit, Mich., August 18, 1840. His father, Charles Griffiths was born in Wales, and in young manhood went to London, thence to America and after locating in the middle west engaged in steamboating on the lakes between Buffalo and Detroit. He was also similarly employed on the Mississippi river between St. Louis and New Orleans, becoming captain of a steamer and later part owner, continuing in this occupation about twenty years. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California, with two comrades, Caleb Gosling, of Napa county, Cal., and George Hughes, of San Francisco, making the journey in ninety days with an express wagon and six mules. Their plan was to have a dinner at four o'clock in the afternoon and then continue the journey to a good camping place for the night, and thus lie down to sleep without the necessity of drawing attention to their camp by a fire. This undoubtedly saved them much trouble from the Indians. After his arrival in San Francisco Mr. Griffiths with Governor Burnett built the first stern wheel steamer that crossed the bay. Later he went to Sacramento and engaged in the hotel business, there meeting with a success which brought him large returns, prices at that day being one dollar per meal. Later he farmed and then followed mining in Nevada. Returning to San Francisco he made that place his home until his death. Fraternally he was a Mason and an Odd Fellow and prominent in both organizations. Politically he was a stanch Republican. His wife was formerly Mary Ann Whitfield, a native of England, born in the vicinity of London; her father, Walter Whitfield, settled in Michigan, near Detroit, where he purchased land and farmed until his death. Mrs. Griffiths followed her husband to California in 1850, via the Isthmus of Panama, with her son, George W., of this review, and daughter, Mary E., now Mrs. Marshall, of Santa Rosa. A son, William L., born later is now a merchant in Suisun, Cal. Mrs. Griffiths died in San Francisco.

The trip to California remains a vivid recollection in the memory of George W. Griffiths, the steamer trip to the east side of the isthmus, the mule-back ride across, and thence to San Francisco by the old sidewheeler. His education was received principally in the public schools of Sacramento, he being later sent east via Nicaragua to Burlington College, New Jersey, entering as junior and graduating therefrom at a later date. He then took up the study of medicine under the instruction of his uncle in Detroit, Mich., Dr. Bradie, with whom he remained a year, then returning to California via the Isthmus of Panama. Upon his return to the state he engaged in farming in Solano county, Cal., later in Southern California and then in Humboldt county. About 1886 he returned to Southern California and located in Orange county where he farmed several thousand acres of land at one time, he and his sons together farming more acres than any other individual in Southern California. Dr. Griffiths was always progressive in his ideas and the latest methods and improvements found him an ardent advocate, and their farming apparatus was always of the latest make and most modern that could be obtained.

About 1904 Dr. Griffiths retired from active cares and made his home in San Francisco until the great earthquake of 1906, when in the fall of that year he came to Los Angeles and is now associated with the real estate and oil land firm of Griffiths, Fackenthall & Griffiths, located at No. 131 East Fifth street, in the King Edward building. He was married in Marin county, Cal., to Miss Elizabeth Moore, who was born in Michigan and died in Orange county, Cal., leaving five children, namely: Mary Catherine, Mrs. Dowler, of San Francisco; Charles Edwin, of Bakersfield; George W. Jr., a contractor in Covina; William L., a partner with his father and also a large farmer near Covina; and Walter B., a farmer near Napa, Cal. Dr. Griffiths has been a member of the Episcopal Church for forty years, his wife having also been a member of that denomination. Politically he is a stanch Republican and gives his support to the advancement of the principles he endorses.

PATRICIO ONTIVEROS. The oldest of the thirteen children of that noble Spanish pioneer, Juan Pacifico Ontiveros, Patricio Ontiveros, over whose head has passed eighty years, is physically strong, mentally alert and temperamentally happy. While no two people attain longevity from an observance of the same rules of life, there is reason to believe that calm and temperate people have the first claim on borrowed time, and are the greatest strategists in outwitting the biblical injunction of the threescore years and ten. This is emphasized in the life of Mr. Ontiveros, whose principal activities have centered around the ranch upon which he has lived for half a century, and of which he at present owns two hundred and twenty acres. This ranch has as its principal resources grain and beans. Its environment has taken on the character of the owner, is substantial in equipment, conservative in tendency, and uneventful in its routine. It is one of the landmarks of the community, and seems to have always taught its lessons of thrift, industry and wise conservatism.

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Ontiveros comes from a wealthy and distinguished family of California, he was unable to attend school during his childhood on account of their scarcity. He was born March 17, 1826, in Los Angeles county, where his father was sole proprietor of nine thousand acres of land. In 1856, the year of the family removal from Los Angeles to Santa Barbara county, Mr. Ontiveros married a native daughter of the former county, Serrano Leonor, a representative also of an old and prominent Spanish family. Mrs. Ontiveros died in 1898, at the age of fifty-eight, having become the mother of fourteen children, of whom four died in infancy. Those who reached maturity are as follows: Delphina, who became the wife of Geronimo Carranza; Rosa, deceased, formerly the wife of Feliz Carranza; Sarah, the wife of Miguel Carranza; Natalia, single; Charles, who married Virginia Gonzales and has six children; Thomas, who married Paulina Gonzales; and Pablo, Zoilo, Napoleon and Leandro, the four last mentioned unmarried. The wives of Charles and Thomas Ontiveros, who were in maidenhood Virginia and Paulina Gonzales, are members of a very prominent pioneer Spanish family of Santa Barbara county.

Though never active in politics, Mr. Ontiveros has faithfully adhered to the principles and issues of the Republican party. In religion he is a Catholic and liberally supports the church of that denomination at Sisquoc. The breeding and culture of generations of Spaniards are reflected in the manners of Mr. Ontiveros, and he bears an enviable reputation in the business, social and religious departments of his home community.

JOHN N. TURRENTINE. In tracing the genealogy of this prominent citizen of Escondido we find that his ancestors were identified with the colonial history of our country and bore an active part in the early wars. The maternal grandfather, Capt. James Harris, who was an officer in the war of 1812, descended in direct line from John Harris, the founder of the city of Harrisburg, the capital of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather, Major Samuel Turrentine, who was also an officer in the war of 1812, gained his first experience in military tactics while serving in the first struggle with England, and his faithful service in that campaign led to his selection as an officer when war was again declared with the same country about thirty-five years later. About the time of the second war he removed to Tennessee and there remained until his death some years later. The Harris and Turrentine families were both stanch allies of the Whig party during its existence and both proved their loyalty to the stars and stripes in times of peace and war.

Among the children of Major Turrentine was Rev. Wilson Turrentine, a native of North Carolina, who married Elvira Harris, and remained for many years a resident of Tennessee. When death came to terminate his activities, December 17, 1899, he was then ninety-four years of age; his wife had passed away at seventy-six years, and her father lived to be within four years of a full century. John N., the subject of this review, was born November 2, 1845, and in boyhood the advantages of a private school and a course in Lookout College were given the lad, who early showed signs of a fine mind and aptitude for study. These qualities, combined with religious fervor, led him to enter the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, attached to the Central Tennessee conference, under which he labored in assignments in that region.

Coming to Califorina in 1885, Mr. Turrentine first settled in Tulare county and in the fall of 1886 was chosen pastor of the Visalia Methodist Episcopal Church. After two years he removed to Escondido and during the following year he officiated as pastor of the church of his denomination at this point, to which he yet remains a generous contributor. For three terms he held the office of city clerk, and during the first administration of President McKinley he was appointed postmaster, which position he now fills with efficiency and fidelity. The bond agitation, which for some years demanded considerable attention from the taxpayers of Escondido, received due attention on his part, and on the occasion of the burning of the bonds, September 9, 1905, he was chosen orator of the day. Ever since casting his first presidential vote for General Grant he has been a firm adherent of the Republican party and always supports its principles with his ballot. While living in Tennessee he became a member of the Shelbyville Lodge of Chosen Friends in 1866, and his interest in that organization remains unabated. In addition he has been a leading Mason in Consuelo Lodge No. 325, F. & A. M., of which he has officiated as secretary since the organization, with the exception of one term, during which he held the office of master.

The marriage of Mr. Turrentine was solemnized January 2, 1873, and united him with Mary E. Robinson, daughter of W. T. Robinson, of Tennessee. Captain Robinson was a man of large talents, exceptional attainments and attractive personality and was beloved wherever known. Descended from a family that sent soldiers to the war of 1812, it was natural that he and three of his brothers should be loyal to the government, and he not only enlisted in the Federal army at the opening of the Civil war, but also he raised a company of volunteers and was chosen their captain. The talents which made him successful in war contributed to his prominence in times of peace. As a member of the state legislature and the state senate he represented his constituents with honor and dignity, and as judge of Dekalb county he proved himself learned in the law and impartial in its administration. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Turrentine consists of four children, namely: Edgar E., cashier of the Escondido Savings Bank; Lucy Harris, at home; Howard B., a clerk in the postoffice; and Lawrence, a student in the Escondido high school.

HENRY E. McNEALY. The purchase of the quarter section of land on which he now engages in farming was consummated by Mr. McNealy in 1892, but it was not until ten years later that he removed to the tract and commenced to improve the land. Since coming to the ranch, which is advantageously situated in the San Marcos valley, he has fenced the land and made other needed improvements. Though no longer under the necessity of constant labor, he is happiest when busy and so continues at the head of his ranch in spite of being the possessor of means that would permit of his retirement. Since thirteen years of age he has earned his livelihood and ever since then he has been an indefatigable worker, yet he bears well the burden of his seventy-three years, and a stranger would judge him to be on the sunny side of sixty-five years.

A native of Licking county, Ohio, born October 13, 1832, Henry E. McNealy was only eleven months old when death deprived him of a mother's affectionate oversight. His father, Jeremiah, was born in Virginia, but removed to Ohio at an early age and eventually settled in Indiana, where he died. All through his life he was a tiller of the soil, but a series of misfortunes befell him, which obliged his son, Henry E., to take up the burden of self-support at an age when otherwise he would have been in school. For a time he worked as a farm hand and later he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed as a journeyman in Indiana, Illinois and Missouri. During the spring of 1859 he joined a party of emigrants bound for California and after a journey of six months with ox-teams and wagons he landed in Butte valley, where he engaged in mining, but met with no special success. Later he had charge of a pack-train from Oroville and Chico, Butte county, to Susanville, Lassen county. Removing to Marysville in 1865 he engaged in the trucking business for two years, and then went into the mountain country, opened a meat market at Susanville, and for four years carried on a butcher's business. The next place to which he removed was Santa Barbara county, where he engaged in the grocery business at Lompoc for seven years. Afterward he was placed in charge of the wharf at Gaviota, and remained there until 1902, when he removed to his ranch in San Diego county.

The first marriage of Mr. McNealy took place at Oroville, Cal., in September, 1865, and united him with Mirah Emmons, who was born in New York and died at Gaviota, Cal., in 1887, leaving five children, viz.: Edward, Amy, Howard, Ralph and Mark. In 1891 in Santa Barbara county occurred the marriage of Mr. McNealy to Miss Rachel Valenzuela, who was born in that county, being a member of a pioneer Spanish family of that locality. Seven children were born of this union, namely: Owen, Helen, George, Kenneth, Eva, Carl and Ethel. Mrs. McNealy is a sincere member of the Catholic Church and is rearing her family in that faith. Ever since attaining his majority Mr. McNealy has voted the Republican ticket, but he has never been active in public affairs, nor has he desired to participate in the responsibilities of official positions, yet in a quiet, unostentatious way he discharges the duties incumbent upon him as a citizen and a public-spirited man.

JAMES CHARLES WALLACE. Very early in the colonial history of America representatives of the Wallace family immigrated from Scotland and settled along the Atlantic coast, where, in the development of a new country, they displayed the fortitude and constancy characteristic of their ancestors amid the trials besetting them in their home land. The genealogical records show that some of the family lived in Pennsylvania and other branches in Maryland, whence removal was made to Ohio in the early settlement of the latter state. James C. Wallace, Sr. who was a native of Ohio, became a pioneer farmer of Perry county in the vicinity of Somerset, and remained there until an attack of typhoid fever terminated his career at fifty-two years of age. When a young man he had married Sarah Plummer, who was born in Ohio of a Quaker family, but did not affiliate with the Society of Friends, having identification with the Baptist Church. Surviving her husband for many years, she attained the great age of one hundred and two years.

Arthur P. Fenn

In the family of James C. Wallace, Sr., there was a son who bore the father's name and who was born in Perry county, Ohio, September 29, 1835. At the age of four years he was orphaned by his father's death while yet too young to realize the nature of his bereavement and the extent of his loss. It therefore became necessary for him to begin to earn his own livelihood at an age when most children are in school and free from responsibilities. When he was thirteen years of age he left his mother's home and went to Zanesville and from there proceeded by steamboat to New Orleans, thence traveling east as far as Florida, where for two years he was employed at Jacksonville in the grafting of orange trees. The failure of his health caused him to return to Ohio and after a short sojourn at Delaware, that state, he returned to Jacksonville with health restored. A few months later he removed to Crab Orchard Springs, Ky., and subsequently learned the jeweler's trade at Lancaster, Garrard county, following the same for three years in Kentucky. During the winters he engaged in hunting and fishing through the south. Eventually settling at Oxford, Miss., he carried on mercantile pursuits for fourteen years and met with a gratifying degree of success until the outbreak of the Civil war caused the loss of his plantation and other properties. Later he was employed for a year as proctor of the Mississippi State University and held other positions in the south, but in 1870 returned to Ohio to visit his mother, whom he had not seen for twenty-one years.

The war having crippled his chances for success in the south, Mr. Wallace came to California, landing from the steamer at San Pedro, whence he proceeded eastward a few miles and became connected with B. D. Wilson as foreman of a large ranch. After a year there he went to Los Angeles and worked at the jeweler's trade for a year. Meanwhile he purchased five acres of his present homestead, paying $500 for the same. At that time the only building between Los Angeles and his property was an adobe stage station and he is now the oldest settler of this locality. After putting up a small house he turned his attention to the nursery business and meantime continued at his trade. The second year he added five acres to his ranch and in 1892 purchased twenty-three acres adjoining, all of which he still owns, and in addition he has leased other lands in order to secure the needed acreage for the management of his extensive citrus fruit nursery. His first naval trees he ordered from Australia and he budded the first orange trees in California. At this writing he has fifteen acres of oranges in bearing. The balance of the property is utilized for nursery purposes.

After settling in the south Mr. Wallace met Miss Martha Wilson, who was born and reared at Oxford, Miss., and they were united in marriage May 22, 1861. Seven children were born of their union, namely: Glencoe; J. Wiley, who has sixteen acres of coffee and rubber land in Mexico and also owns mining interests in that country; George A., who assists his father in the nursery business and relieves him of its many responsibilities; Benjamin, who practices dentistry in Mexico; Martha, Mrs. Kennedy, whose husband is connected with the Los Angeles Lighting and Power Company; Stella, Mrs. Reynolds, whose husband is a dentist residing in Pasadena; and Walter, who resides with his parents, and is a practicing dentist in Los Angeles. In political faith Mr. Wallace is a Democrat.

ARTHUR P. FERL. A prominent citizen in the material upbuilding of San Pedro, Los Angeles county, is Arthur P. Ferl, who has been a resident of this city since December, 1904. He was born in Detroit, Mich., September 7, 1865, the fifth in a family of six children. His father, Peter Henry Ferl, was a native of England, who located in Detroit, Mich., and was engaged in mercantile business until his death. He married Margaret McDonnell, a native of the north of Ireland.

An orphan at seven, Arthur P. Ferl was reared in the home of his older brothers and sister, receiving his education in the public schools until he was thirteen, when he was apprenticed to learn the trade of printer. When nineteen years of age he left home and located in Denver, Colo., where he formed a partnership with O. L. Smith the same year, the firm being known as Smith & Ferl, printers and publishers, which, in the course of a few years, became one of the largest institutions in the western country. In 1890 Mr. Ferl sold all his interests in Denver and located in Salt Lake City, where he engaged in the real estate and mining business until 1896, when, having received an appointment in the government service, he went to Washington, D. C., where he began the study of law at the National Law School, after which he took a course in art at the Corcoran Art Gallery. In February, 1902, he was sent to the Philippines on detached service, staying in the islands two years. In November, 1904, he resigned from the government service and came to Southern California and in December located in San Pedro, engaging in the real estate business. Mr. Ferl has three children, Ronald J., Emily M. and Arthur Bayly.

Fraternally Mr. Ferl is a Mason, being a member of Harmony Lodge No. 17, F. & A. M., of Washington, D. C. Politically he is a Republican, and is active in his efforts to advance the principles he endorses. In the public affairs of the city he has taken a place of prominence, being one of the organizers of the Chamber of Commerce and its president in 1906. He is president of the Pacific Manufacturing & Supply Association, chairman of the board of directors of the Harbor City Savings Bank and is identified with many other enterprises in the rapidly growing city of San Pedro.

CHARLES MASON. The identification of Charles Mason with the business interests of San Pedro has brought to him a personal success as well as winning for him a place of importance among the representative citizens of his home town. He is now acting as superintendent of the San Pedro Water Company, with which he has been connected since its organization, and is bringing to the discharge of his duties the ability and energy which have distinguished his career thus far, and which bid fair to place him among the successful men of this section. Although not a native son of California Mr. Mason is a westerner by birth, having been born in Florence, Pinal county, Ariz., January 31, 1881. His father, A. Mason, was a native of Bethel, Me., and with a brother, Charles, crossed the plains in an early day and from California went later to Arizona, and in the vicinity of Florence Charles Mason was one of the discoverers of the Silver King mine, of which A. Mason served as superintendent for eight years. Later he engaged in prospecting and mining with headquarters in Los Angeles, and remaining so occupied until his death, which occurred August 10, 1892. He was a man of energy and ability and the descendant of patriotic ancestry, his grandfather having served valiantly in the Revolutionary war. Fraternally he was a Knight Templar Mason. He is survived by his wife, formerly Mercedes Robles, who was born in Sonora, Mexico, and she now makes her home in Los Angeles. She is the mother of four children, namely: Mercedes, wife of M. Borquez, of Los Angeles; Charles, the personal subject of this review; Guadaloupe, wife of Bruce Cass, of Ramona, Indian Territory; and Moses, associated with the firm of Cass & Smurr, of Los Angeles.

Charles Mason was reared to young manhood in Los Angeles, receiving his preliminary education in the public schools of that place, after which he entered St. Vincent's College. Upon the completion of the course in that institution he was graduated with honors, when he became a student in the Southern California Business College. Upon leaving school he became associated with Hulse, Bradford & Co., as salesman, and continued with them for some time, when he became connected with the Sunset Telephone and Telegraph Company. Upon the organization of the Home Telephone Company he accepted a position on switch-board work and remained with them until 1903, when he resigned, and coming to San Pedro engaged as bookkeeper for the Seaside Water Company. He remained with them until their disorganization, when he became superintendent of the new company, that of the San Pedro Water Company. This company supplies water to both San Pedro and Wilmington, its source of supply being from the pumps at the latter place, while at San Pedro they have a reservoir with a capacity of two million, five hundred thousand gallons, located on a knoll one hundred and fifty feet above the city and with a sixty-five pound pressure. They have six miles of water mains, from which they supply thirteen hundred consumers, and are constantly extending the lines to meet the needs of the rapidly growing city.

Mr. Mason was married in Los Angeles to Nellie Marie Sessler, a native of Ohio. In his fraternal relations Mr. Mason is a member of the Elks lodge at San Pedro, in which he is chaplain. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and takes an active and helpful interest in all that pertains to the growth and progress of the place.

WILLIAM L. RAMEY. One of the flourishing industries of San Diego county is the Escondido Lumber, Hay and Grain Company, proprietors of the Escondido roller and feed mills, wholesale dealers in grain, hay, rolled barley, etc., retail dealers in lumber, brick and cement, and owners of warehouses at Escondido, San Marcos and Buena. The president of the company, William L. Ramey, was also its organizer. Under the orginial form of organization the company engaged exclusively in the lumber business, but later articles of incorporation were secured and the business was enlarged by the introduction of milling, hay, grain, etc., since which time there has been a steady and gratifying growth. In addition to the management of the office and yards, Mr. Ramey is vice-president of the Escondido Savings Bank and the Bank of Escondido, and is also the owner of a ranch of one hundred and eighty-five acres near town, on which grain is raised, and shipments are made from the lemon and orange groves to eastern markets.

1359858

Wesley Warfield

A native of Champaign county, Ohio, Mr. Ramey was born December 10, 1845, being a son of William and Frances (Neff) Ramey, the former born in Virginia of French lineage, the latter born in Pennsylvania. The maternal grandfather, Daniel Neff, was a soldier in the Revolution and the war of 1812, and the great-grandfather, Jacob Neff, served in the first struggle with England. Lieutenant-Governor Jacob Neff is a cousin of Mrs. Frances Ramey. About 1829 William and Frances Ramey went to Ohio on their wedding journey and became pioneers of that state. After a number of years they moved to Hancock county, Ill., where Mr. Ramey became the owner of farm lands and stock and acquired what was in those days considered a competency. At his death in 1892 he was eighty-two years of age; his wife passed away in 1887, when seventy-eight years old.

By embarking in the grocery business William L. Ramey became a business man at twenty-two years of age, and later he carried on general merchandising in Clayton, Ill., but after three years he removed to Ferris, a village on the Quincy branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in Hancock county, and there he carried on a mercantile store for four years. On account of poor health he came to California in 1874 and settled in San Francisco, where he was with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for six years as their city collector and manager of their city wharf. On fully regaining his health he returned to the east on a vacation, but decided to remain, so forwarded his resignation to the railroad officials. For a time he carried on a grain business at Clarinda, Iowa, besides which he had charge of the grain elevators at other stations on the Humeston & Shenandoah Railroad. After a year the railroad company offered him special inducements to take charge of various stations, including Andover, Blythedale, Ridgeway, Bethany, New Hampton, Albany and Darlington, and he bought grain at all of these places. Owing to a shortage in the crops, his work was unusually difficult and trying. About 1884 he disposed of his interests in Iowa and removed to Madison, Neb., where he engaged in the hardware business and became a stockholder in the First National Bank of Madison upon its organization.

Owing to the failure of his wife's health Mr. Ramey decided to remove to California, and in 1891 he came to this state in company with A. W. Wohlford, now the president of the Bank of Escondido and a stockholder in the Escondido Lumber, Hay & Grain Company, he and Mr. Ramey owning the majority of the stock in both enterprises. Their settlement in Escondido has proved most helpful to the business interests of the town, for they are men of high honor, exceptional character, irreproachable integrity, living up to their obligations and expecting others to do the same. Not a little of the recent development of the town may be attributed to their foresight, intelligence and enterprise, and they have been promoters of every measure for the upbuilding of local interests.

The first marriage of Mr. Ramey took place at Cartage, Ill., October 10, 1872, and united him with Miss Helena Freas, who was born in that state and died in California in September, 1892. In the fall of 1894 he married Mrs. Florence Stevenson, by whom he has a daughter, Florence, now a student in the Escondido schools. By her former marriage Mrs. Ramey has two sons, namely: Lloyd Stevenson, cashier of the Bank of Escondido; and Frank Stevenson, manager of the supply department of the Sunset Telephone Company at Los Angeles. While living in Hancock county, Ill., Mr. Ramey was made a Mason in 1872 in the Carthage lodge, and afterward was raised to the chapter and commandery degrees; both in Illinois and at Madison, Neb., he was an officer in the lodge and active in its work. Politically he votes the Republican ticket and is intelligently conversant with public affairs. With his family he holds membership in the Escondido Congregational Church.

WESLEY HASKELL. The family represented by this enterprising business man came to the United States in an early period and settled in New England, where his father, Rev. C. L. Haskell, a man of fine mental attainment and extended influence, long served as pastor in Methodist Episcopal churches in the state of Maine and rose to a position of eminence in his denomination.

The son, Wesley, was born at East Boothbay, Me. He is known to be a self-made man of culture and refinement, having educated himself in the eastern schools and at Boston University, where he acquired a broad and liberal education. He was ordained to the ministry of the Congregational denomination and has held pastorates in Providence, R. I., and in Peoria and Rockford, Ill., in each of which places he ministered to large and influential congregations. Upon leaving the central states in 1902 he came to California where for a brief period he preached in San Francisco and Oakland, and afterward acted as pastor of the First Unitarian Church of Los Angeles. On account of failing health, and by the advice of his physician he gave up the ministry and entered upon business affairs. It is a matter of remark among his acquaintances that he is possessed of unusual ability as a business man and the result of his shrewd management and keen foresight is evidenced in the present growing condition of his enterprises.

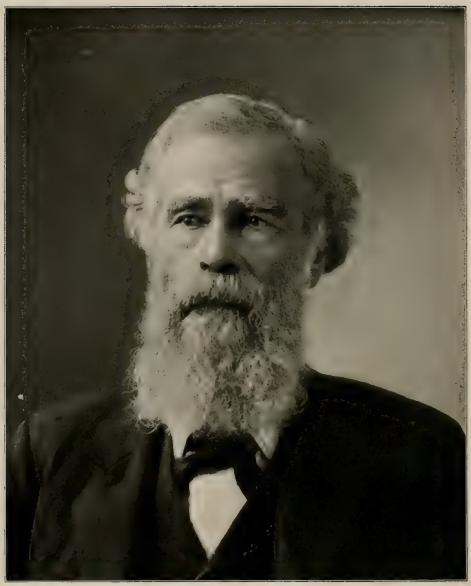
The Ocean Park Milling and Manufacturing Company, a consolidation of Groesbeck & Ritchie and the Ocean Park Planing Mill Company, of which Mr. Haskell is the president, is located at Ocean Park. This establishment is one of the largest manufacturing concerns of its kind on the coast. The plant is equipped with machinery of the most modern and approved patterns; its equipment, indeed, being surpassed by perhaps no mill in all of Southern California. This concern makes a specialty of fine furniture of every description and mill work in all its branches.



Mr. Haskell is also interested in insurance. He is the supreme treasurer of the Commoners of America, a fraternal beneficial order with headquarters at Los Angeles, chartered under the laws of the state of California for the mutual benefit of its members and their beneficiaries. This order has surpassed in growth since its organization anything known in the history of fraternal insurance in the United States.

No citizen of Southern California possesses a firmer faith in its future than does Mr. Haskell, and he proves his faith by his continued connection with its business interests. No section of the country has interested him to such a degree as this, and on the other hand no business man has had its interests more at heart. In every community citizens of intelligence, broad culture, liberal views, keen sagacity and wise forethought are valued acquisitions, and he has proved to be such in his social and business relations. In national politics he votes with the Republicans, but in local matters he considers national problems to be of less importance than the selection of men of high honor and accepted standing for such positions as are in the gift of the citizens. The Masonic fraternity numbers him among its warm supporters, and in addition he is affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

GEORGE ELLO CROSS. In 1885 George Ello Cross came to California with his parents and since that time has been a resident of this section of the state, now being located in the vicinity of Puente and engaged in general farming and the wholesale hay and grain business. He was born in Cape Vincent, Jefferson county, N. Y., August 6, 1874; his father, George Cross, was born in Chaumont, N. Y., and engaged as a farmer. His death occurred in 1877. His paternal grandfather was born in New England, of Scotch descent. His mother was in maidenhood Harriet Canfield McPherson, also a native of Jefferson county, and the daughter of William McPherson, who was born in New Hampshire of Scotch descent, and became a farmer in New York. She still survives and makes her home in Puente. She has four children, namely: John, of Los Angeles; Jennie D., wife of Thomas R. Greene, deputy postmaster of Puente; William M., the Southern Pacific agent at Lemon, and George Ello.

When eleven years old the family removed to Orange county, Cal., where two brothers of the mother resided, Robert and Steven McPherson, and in that place Mr. Cross attended the public schools and later completed his education in Los Angeles. At fifteen years he took up the study of telegraphy and after completing it accepted a position as operator for the Southern Pacific Railroad, and in 1892 was transferred to Puente in a like capacity, remaining there for four years. For a time thereafter he was located at Tracy, Wesley and Oakville, spending two years at the three places. Later he became agent at Duarte for two years, was then located at Bassett for a like period, when, in 1902, he resigned to engage in the hay and grain business in Puente. He has since become interested in the Puente Warehouse Company, and is serving at the present writing as secretary and manager of the enterprise. For storage of grain they have the Buck warehouse, a building 200x50 in dimensions with a capacity of forty-five thousand sacks, and located on the Southern Pacific Railroad. He has also interested himself successfully in the raising of grain and alfalfa, having sixty acres of alfalfa and about two hundred and thirty-five acres devoted to grain, besides which he also raises some stock. He owns a residence in Puente which is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Josephine Rowland, a native of Puente, and the daughter of Albert Rowland, a well-known pioneer of California, who died in 1891. They have two children, Cecelia and Albert.

In 1904 Mr. Cross was appointed postmaster of Puente and at that time he purchased and remodeled the building which is now utilized for the postoffice. He is a Republican politically and takes an active interest in advancing the principles he endorses. He is prominent fraternally, having been made a Mason in Lexington Lodge No. 104, of El Monte, and both himself and wife are members of the Order of Eastern Star, No. 172, also of El Monte. Mr. Cross also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America of Lemon, and the Fraternal Brotherhood of Puente. He has always taken a keen interest in all educational affairs and is now a member of the board of trustees of the Hudson district, and is serving at the present writing as clerk.

G. H. Burke

JOSEPH H. BURKE. Intimately associated with the pioneer days of the state of California, Joseph H. Burke survived the perils and privations of that historic time and lives to witness and participate in the development of resources which has made it one of the first states not only of the west, but of the entire Union. He is now a useful citizen of Rivera, Los Angeles county, in which section of the state he has spent the greater part of his time since coming west in 1853, although at different times being located at other points for brief sojourns. Mr. Burke is a native of Tennessee, his birth having occurred in Roane county, April 14, 1831; his father, Milton Burke, in manhood a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and also a physician, was a native of Virginia, as was also his mother, in maidenhood Phoebe Hartley. His paternal grandfather, John Burke, also of Virginia, married a daughter of Nathaniel Osborn, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and in the war of 1812, taking part in the battle of New Orleans at the close of that conflict. He had thirteen wounds and received a pension for each wound. He lived to the unusual age of one hundred and thirteen years and six months, witnessing the days of colonial development, the statehood growth and progress, and the shadow that preceded the struggle that almost rent our fair land asunder.

When he was nine years old Joseph H. Burke was taken to Pulaski county, Mo., by his parents, and there they spent the ensuing four years, after the death of the mother returning to Tennessee, and later to Camden county, Mo., where the father passed the remainder of his life, dying at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. At the age of fifteen years Joseph H. Burke set out in life for himself, becoming dependent upon his own resources; he went first to Huntsville, Ala., where he worked on a cotton plantation, and later in Arkansas learned the trade of wagonmaker and blacksmith. Subsequently for a year and a half he worked at his trade in Little Rock, Ark., after which he went to Fort Smith, same state, and there purchased an interest in a wagon and blacksmith shop, and with his partner conducted the same successfully for a year and a half. Stricken with typhoid fever about this time, he found on recovery that his partner had taken advantage of him and he therefore decided to withdraw his interests from the concern. Attracted to the Pacific coast, in the fall of 1852 he went to New Orleans and there boarded a steamer for Galveston and Matagorda Bay, and from the latter point traveled by stage to San Antonio, Tex., where, the following year, he joined the George Wentworth party, composed of seventy-seven men, and one of the most completely equipped trains that crossed the plains in that year. Every man was well armed, carrying a rifle and six-shooter and a large supply of ammunition; they had ten big wagons, two hundred and eighty mules, and sixteen hundred Texas steers, and George Wentworth brought with him a span of horses which he later sold in San Francisco for $2,000.

The company disbanded in Los Angeles, where Mr. Burke found employment in David Anderson's shop, receiving $32 a day. After five months he joined a party of six to mine gold at Santa Anita, on what is now a part of "Lucky" Baldwin's ranch, but this proving a failure he entered into partnership with a Mr. Hulett, one of General Walker's comrades, of Sonora raid fame, and with him started by boat from Wilmington to San Francisco. Being detained at Santa Barbara they fell in with a party of travelers, a member of whom was Professor Trask, the state geologist, and Mr. Hulett, being an educated man, joined the company as assistant geologist at a salary of $150 per month. Left without a partner Mr. Burke joined a party of three government wagons on their way to Fort Tejon, where he became their wheelwright, and later conducted a mercantile establishment in that location. Not meeting with the desired success in this line, he returned to Los Angeles and located a wheelwright business on Main street, where the German-American Savings Bank now stands, purchasing a lot with one hundred and fifty feet on Main and thirty feet on First street, for the sum of $95. Later he sold this for $500. About this time (1862) he was offered the site of the Nadeau hotel for $420, but did not buy. He carried on his shop successfully for a few years, in the meantime becoming the owner of one hundred and thirty-five feet on the west side of Main street, in the center of the block, between Third and Fourth streets; in 1864 he traded this to ex-governor John D. Downey for two hundred and fifty acres of land at Downey. He established his home there and for the ensuing twenty-one years engaged in the cultivation and improvement of his property, carrying on general farming and also planting a walnut orchard, which has brought him large financial returns with the passing years. His money accumulated rapidly and he soon loaned it out at as high a rate of interest as two per cent a month. Through his marriage with Miss Mary Hunter, in 1855, he had five children, and desiring to give them landed property, he decided to purchase more land, and accordingly bought the old Barton place at Rivera, consisting of one hundred and ninety acres. Five acres of this ranch was devoted to a vineyard, and the first year he owned it each acre of the vineyard netted him $200. This induced him to set out one hundred and seventy-five acres on his two ranches to vineyard, and the immense operations called for the building of a winery on the property. For some years he engaged extensively in the manufacture of wine, but after his vines were destroyed he planted walnuts and oranges. The greater part of his land he has now divided among his children, who are, named in order of birth: Frank, of Downey; Henry, who died leaving two children, a daughter, now deceased, and Pascal, who lives with his mother at Garvanza; Osburn, who lives a half mile south of Rivera; Kizzy, wife of Arthur White, of Rivera; and Ulila, wife of John Shade, near Rivera.

Mr. Burke's wife was born in Greene county, Ill., a daughter of Jesse and Keziah (Brown) Hunter, the former of whom was captain of a volunteer company in the Mexican war, and accompanied Generals Stevenson and Cook overland to acquire possession of California, and with the united forces of Commodore Stockton succeeded in taking Los Angeles. Captain Hunter was later appointed Indian agent but resigned, and driving a herd of cattle to northern California, engaged in the stock business. His family, consisting of wife and five children, came west in 1849 and settled in Sacramento, Cal., where their home remained for three years, when, in 1852, they removed to Los Angeles. In this city occurred the death of Captain Hunter in 1877, after having acquired possession of a large amount of land, owning a part of the Verdugo ranch, and having altogether thirty-seven hundred acres. His wife also died on the home ranch. They were the parents of the following named children: William, deceased; Asa, Mary, Jesse, Samuel, Martha and Elizabeth.

Throughout his entire life Mr. Burke has maintained a strong interest in all public questions, and although Democratic in his political allegiance he is above all else a patriotic and loyal citizen, and can always be counted upon to further any plan for the advancement of the general welfare. A man of unusual ability, he has steadily risen to a position of financial independence, acquiring large properties and at the same time building up for himself an honored place in the citizenship of whatever community he has made his home. Early in his youth he showed signs of mechanical and inventive ability, engaging at the age of seventeen years with a partner in the turning and calking of flat boats, and through an invention of a new process for this work Mr. Burke was paid the large sum of $10 per day. His personal characteristics, in youth and in manhood, have been such as to win for him a wide and lasting friendship throughout not only his home section, but the entire state, and give him a place among the representative citizens of the pioneer days of California.

CHARLES C. BROWN. As city engineer of Redlands Charles C. Brown has acquired a popularity and prominence which place him among the representative citizens of this section of Southern California. He was born in New Brunswick, near Woodstock, December 16, 1859, a son of Charles Brown, a native of the same locality and a pilot on the St. John's river until his death, at the age of forty-seven years. He was the descendant of English ancestry, and married into an old Massachusetts family, his wife being Lizzie Hovey; she survived her husband and is now living in Norwalk, Cal., at the age of seventy-four years, retaining her health and faculties. They had two children, Sanford, residing in Norwalk, and Charles C., of this review.

When five years old Charles C. Brown was taken by his parents to Hodgdon, Me., attended its public schools and later became a student in Holton Academy, at Holton, Me., from which institution he was graduated in 1882. Entering Colby University he took a four years' course and graduated therefrom with the degree of A. B. in 1886. He then came to California and in Los Angeles county entered the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad in the survey corps and on the San Jacinto line worked on the coast line to San Diego. In 1887 he was engaged in surveying in Whittier and vicinity, laying out the town of Studebaker and several additions to Whittier. He also worked as a general surveyor and civil engineer on irrigating canals, and spent one year at Randsburg as assayer and surveyor. During this time he made his home at Norwalk, Los Angeles county. Returning to Whittier he installed the Whittier water works, planning and building their present water system. In 1900 he came to Redlands in the interests of the Yucaipe Land & Water Company, planning and building their system to Crafton and East Redlands, which adds to their water supply an increase of two hundred and fifty inches. In 1902 he located in Redlands, having purchased two years previous a ranch where he had set out an orange grove and installed an irrigation system. He is now the owner of a ranch of two hundred acres of land with seventy acres under the pipe line, and forty acres are in oranges and some in alfalfa. He was appointed city engineer of Redlands in February, 1905.

In Los Angeles Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Miss Amelia E. Shrake, a native of Indianapolis, Ind. They are members of the First Baptist Church of Redlands, and politically Mr. Brown is a stanch advocate of Republican principles. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Whittier and is now a member of Redlands Lodge No. 300, F. & A. M., and is also identified with the Foresters. He is a member of the Board of Trade of Redlands and interested in the development and advancement of the city's welfare.

ALMER HUNT. The tract of land which has been under the supervision of Mr. Hunt for some years and which he is operating with a gratifying degree of success comprises two hundred and fifteen acres lying near Downey. When he came to California at the age of about twenty-eight years he secured employment for some months with a hay press at Hynes and then became a laborer on a ranch. After a month in that capacity he was made foreman and now rents the same place, of which he has one hundred acres in alfalfa and makes a specialty of the milk industry. On the ranch there are sixty milch cows with twenty-two head of young cattle, and the milk from the dairy is handled by the Alpine Farm & Dairy Company. An abundance of water is provided by four wells operated by two pumping plants. In addition to the dairy industry, he is also interested in the breeding of fine horses, owning some of the finest breeds to be found in the state. On Maplewood stock ranch, as his place is known, may be seen the following: Leland Rex 34546, a handsome bay of eleven hundred and eighty pounds; Ventura, a dapple gray Percheron, of nineteen hundred and seventy-five pounds; Black Louie, a black Belgian stallion of fourteen hundred pounds; Richwood, a black Silkwood pacer, weight twelve hundred pounds; and Grover, the latter a large Spanish jack, weight nine hundred and seventy-five pounds.

In the southern part of Ingham county, Mich., Almer Hunt was born October 19, 1875, being a son of J. H. and Mary J. (Barnum) Hunt, natives respectively of Michigan and New York, and both now deceased. Throughout all of his active life the father followed the trade of a millwright. There were in the family a son and two daughters, the latter both living in Michigan. The former, whose name introduces this sketch, was given such advantages as the common schools of Ingham county afforded and at an early age became self-supporting through his work in the lumber woods. Not only did he have charge of a lumber camp in Clare county, Mich., but in addition for three years he owned a camp of his own. On disposing of his interests in Michigan he came to California in 1902 and has since been busily engaged in farm activities in Los Angeles county.

The marriage of Mr. Hunt took place in Michigan February 25, 1900, and united him with Emma A. Lent, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of C. A. and Sarah A. (Gore) Lent, natives of Pennsylvania and for many years farmers of Michigan. Eventually Mr. Lent brought his family to California and settled in the southern part of the state. At this writing he is employed as foreman of a borax company in Death valley. In his family there were five children, Mrs. Hunt being the oldest. To the information gleaned from text-books during her school years she has added the culture derived from careful reading of the best literature, and has further broadened and deepened her life by the element of religion, being a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. To her only child, Albert J., both she and Mr. Hunt are giving all the opportunities within their power in order that he may be trained for a useful manhood. While Mr. Hunt has never been active in politics he is none the less pronounced in his views and favors the Republican platform in national questions. During his residence in Michigan he was an active member of the Tent of the Maccabees and also holds connection with the Modern Woodmen of America.

AUGUST ALBERT GOETTING. A liberal, enterprising citizen, August Albert Goetting is prominent among the upbuilders of Riverside and San Bernardino counties, having been engaged as an agriculturist in this section since 1891. He was born in Gallipolis, Gallia county, Ohio, March 2, 1862, the third in a family of six sons and three daughters born to his parents, August and Frederika (Hess) Goetting. They were both natives of Germany, where they were married, immigrating to America when Mr. Goetting was but twenty-four years old. Locating in Ohio, he cleared and improved a hundred and sixty-acre farm, on which he and his wife are now living, he being seventy-five and she seventy-three years old. In religion they are members of the Lutheran Church.

August Albert Goetting was the eldest son in the family and was reared on the paternal farm in Ohio, receiving his education in the public schools. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he went to Franklin county and secured employment on a farm, as that was the work in which he had early been trained. In 1889 he came to California and in Los Angeles entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, as a carpenter in the bridge and building department. He was located between Fresno and Reno, Nev., for two years, when he returned to Southern California and in San Timoteo cañon, near El Casco, established an apiary. This enterprise he continued successfully until 1895, when he rented the old C. W. Gower place and continued the management of an apiary and general farming. In October, 1906, he purchased his present farm, which consists of one hundred and sixty acres, well improved and highly cultivated, general farming and an apiary of two hundred stands occupying his attention. He has been very successful in his work and is esteemed among the farmers of this section both for his ability as an agriculturist, as well as personal qualities of character, his liberality and enterprise placing him high in the citizenship of El Casco.

August 14, 1898, Mr. Goetting was married to Miss Annie J. Singleton, a native of this section and a daughter of William Singleton. In his fraternal relations Mr. Goetting is a member of the Odd Fellows lodge of Redlands and politically he is a stanch adherent of Democratic principles. He is a member of the California Bee Keepers' Association, in which he takes an active and helpful interest.

LOUIS SENTOUS. One of the upbuilders of Los Angeles and a man of energy and enterprise, is Louis Sentous, who is also a member of a family whose name is prominent in various avenues of business activity. As the name would indicate he is of French parentage, his birth having occurred in Haute-Garonne, France, July 28, 1839. His parents were Francisco and Marie (Rouillon) Sentous, whose entire lives were spent in their native country, where the father engaged as a prosperous farmer and stockman. Louis Sentous was reared on the paternal farm to the age of sixteen years, when he decided to follow the example of his elder brother, John, who in 1852 had emigrated to America and located in California. Accordingly December 29, 1855, he took passage at Havre on the sailer Gutre, which made the passage to San Francisco via Cape Horn. They encountered the most severe storms at the Horn and made only sixty miles in sixty-two days, everyone even to the ship's officers having given up hope of the boat weathering the storm. The added length of the voyage caused them to run out of provisions and they were compelled to sacrifice all the livestock on board, even to the dogs, which were killed and eaten. However, they passed safely through these trying times and on July 16, 1856, they reached San Francisco, after a voyage of seven months and nineteen days.

Mr. Sentous at once made his way to the mines of Calaveras county, where he engaged in placer mining and after making several hundred dollars he came to Los Angeles, which city he reached October 29, 1859. The rains had come early that fall and he found the hills and valleys green and the verdure of the mountains presented a beautiful sight, on the trip from San Pedro to Los Angeles, noting grass eighteen inches high. Some of the party in their rapture declared they would never leave such a beautiful country. The first year in Southern California was spent by Mr. Sentous in working for B. Revierra, who had a dairy in the Pueblo de los Angeles, which then numbered about twenty-five hundred people, the most southerly business place of any kind being an old brewery and a small store at Third and Main streets. About a year after coming to this section Mr. Sentous was thrown from a horse and seriously sprained his leg. He was sent to the French hospital at San Francisco, where the surgeon said he would have to amputate the limb. Mr. Sentous refused to undergo the operation and declared he would take his chances of recovering as he was. Two months later he was able to leave the hospital and from San Francisco he went to the mines in Calaveras county, from there to Columbia and then to Sonoratown, Tuolumne county, where he purchased a farm, cleared and improved it and engaged in the dairy business. Disposing of this interest in 1866 he returned to Los Angeles and in the vicinity of the city engaged in the stock business, ranging his cattle in the San Fernando valley. In 1868 he drove his herd of cattle to San Francisco and sold them and the following year bought a band of cattle, six hundred and eighty in number, from a man who had just brought them from Texas, and after disposing of them in the San Francisco markets he concluded to make a visit to his home in France. He accordingly made the journey over the railroad which had just been completed, thence taking passage on a steamer from New York City and arriving safely in his old home in France. He remained there for a little more than a year, and while there married Miss Bernadotte Laserra, and with his bride returned to Los Angeles in 1870.

He again began the cattle business, purchasing a ranch on the Tehachapi, and three years later, in addition to this enterprise, he became interested with two of his brothers, P. Marie and

Louis Brunais

Alphonse Sentous, in the establishment and maintenance of a meat market in Los Angeles, but the two brothers sold to their other brothers, Vincente and Exupere. They were first located on Aliso and Los Angeles streets, and remained so engaged until 1896, when they sold out and dissolved partnership, and Louis Sentous having previously established a wholesale butcher business and meat market at No. 6 North Main street, purchased the site and later put up the Sentous block, which extends from Main to San Fernando streets. Later he incorporated the Sentous Packing Company with Ed C. Conet, his son-in-law, of which enterprise Mr. Sentous was president and manager for some years. Their business was conducted in the Sentous block, where they had three stores 55x110 feet in dimensions. During this time he was also largely interested in the raising of stock on his Puente ranch, which consists of eighteen hundred acres of land well watered and susceptible of irrigation because of this. The purchase before the property was divided among the brothers amounted to fifty-three hundred and twenty acres. In 1905 he sold his interest in the Sentous Packing Company and since that period has given his time entirely to the raising of cattle and horses on his well-improved ranch. Besides the interests named Mr. Sentous was identified with other enterprises in the city of Los Angeles, having erected a business house at the corner of Buena Vista and Bellevue, which he later sold to the Pacific Electric Railway, and built a business house on Castelar street, which he owns in connection with the Sentous block.

Mr. Sentous built a fine residence at No. 1802 Toberman street, which is now the home of the family. To himself and wife have been born three children, namely: Jules, who is a prominent Mason; Mary Louise, Mrs. Conet, of Ventura; and Narcisse, Mrs. Garner of Los Angeles. Mr. Sentous is a stanch Republican in his political affiliations, and although never desirous of official recognition personally gives his best efforts to advance the principles he endorses. He is an honored member of the French Benevolent Society of Los Angeles. Liberal and progressive in spirit he has won for himself a place of prominence among the representative citizens who hold him in high esteem for his splendid qualities of mind and heart.

LOUIS BRENNEIS. Numbered among the pioneer business men of Oxnard is Louis Brenneis, proprietor of the blacksmith, carriage and implement works that since its establishment in 1899 has been operated under his name. The building which he occupies and which was erected under his supervision stands on the plaza, covering a floor space of 100x140 feet, and is equipped with all the modern and scientific improvements, including a gas engine of eight-horse power, an electric dynamo of ten-horse power, three fires with power blowers and a Killifer power hammer. In addition to blacksmithing and machine work for several years he engaged in the hardware and agricultural implement business, but eventually sold the stock, and since then has given his attention to practical and scientific horse-shoeing, and the manufacture and repair of wagons, carriages and farming implements.

By birth and ancestry Mr. Brenneis is of the German race, and his parents, Louis and Elizabeth (Bilz) Brenneis, were natives and lifelong residents of Heidelberg, Baden. For many years the father filled the office of auditor, but eventually he retired from office and a few years later he passed away, since which time the mother has continued at the old homestead. All of their eight children are still living, Louis being the second in order of birth, and he was born at Heidelberg August 31, 1868. As a boy he attended a gymnasium in Heidelberg, but left school at the age of fourteen. In 1883 he came to the United States and secured employment in New York City. After eighteen months in the metropolis he proceeded west as far as Kansas, where he remained during one winter at Manhattan. In the spring of 1887 he went to Pleasanton, Alameda county, Cal., where he became an apprentice to the trade of blacksmith and horseshoer under his uncle, J. A. Bilz. On the completion of his apprenticeship three years later he began to work in the employ of J. H. Dutcher at Livermore, Alameda county, where he remained for five years.

After having followed his trade at Fresno for two years Mr. Brenneis removed to Newhall, and in February, 1898, came to Oxnard as an employe on the construction of the American Beet Sugar factory. A year later he embarked in the business which he now conducts and which through his energy and industry has taken rank among the leading enterprises of its kind in the county. After coming to Oxnard he was united in marriage with Miss Sophia Reiman, who was born in Germany and at the age of five years came to California with her father, Moritz, and other members of the family. Born of their union are six children, Annie, Mary, Joseph, Charles, Sophia and Moritz. The religious connections of the family are with the Santa Clara Catholic Church, while fraternally Mr. Brenneis affiliates with the Knights of Columbus. Ever since becoming a citizen of the United States he has been stanch in his allegiance to the Democratic party, has kept posted concerning political affairs and at one time served as a member of the county central committee of his party. Through the building up of a successful business he has promoted his own prosperity and at the same time has been a factor in the material development and commercial growth of Oxnard, where he holds a place among the enterprising and progressive citizens.

LOUIS MAX SCHALLERT. The ancestral lineage of the Schallert family is lost amid the traditions of Austria, where many generations lived and labored and died. The founder of the race in America was Lawrence M. Schallert, a man of broad education and many talents, who left his native Tyrol for the greater opportunities of the new world, and resided first in New York City and later in St. Louis, being engaged in editorial work with prominent newspapers. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Creocentia Neyer, was like himself a descendant of an old Tyrolese family, and was born in the little village of Feldkirch nestling in a valley beneath the shadow of rugged mountains, near the borders of Germany and Switzerland. Since the death of her husband, which occurred in East St. Louis, she has made her home in the Missouri city across the Mississippi.

The eldest in a family of whom two now survive, Louis Max Schallert was born February 25, 1861, during the residence of his parents in New York City. As a boy he attended private schools in St. Louis. When only twelve years of age he began to learn the lumber business and gradually acquired a thorough practical knowledge of the occupation. In early life he was successively employed as foreman in the yellow pine departments of the John J. Ganahl Co., and Knapp, Stout & Co., also as superintendent of the St. Charles (Mo.) Car Company. Coming to California in 1888 he secured a position as clerk with the Pacific Pine Lumber Company at San Francisco, and in 1890 removed to Los Angeles, where he entered the employ of the Citizens' Ice Company and was soon promoted to be their assistant superintendent. When the ownership of the business passed into different hands, he entered into other activities. For eighteen months he conducted a grocery on the corner of Glowner and Twenty-third streets, and afterward for eight years carried on a coffee and tea store at No. 207 East Pico street.

About this time Mr. Schallert bought property in Hollywood where he now resides. His first purchase in this beautiful suburb consisted of real estate on Prospect and Cohing avenues, where he built three stores in a block and two stores comprising the Schallert block, 55x100 feet in dimensions. Since then he has erected his family residence in Hollywood and improved other vacant property in the same place. Shortly after the organization of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California in 1902 he became connected with the new enterprise, in which now he is an active member, and for the same period he has been engaged as a lumber surveyor in Redondo. In addition to property investments he has bought stock in the Hollywood National Bank and also in the Citizens' Savings Bank of Hollywood. The Hollywood Board of Trade also numbers him among its members and promoters.

The marriage of Mr. Schallert took place in St. Louis and united him with Miss Louisa Phiel, a native of Missouri. They are the parents of two children, Eugene Joseph and Isabella Marie. The family are identified with the Church of the Blessed Sacrament at Hollywood and contribute to its maintenance, as well as to other worthy movements. In politics Mr. Schallert votes for the men best qualified for public office and exercises considerable freedom in his ballot, supporting men rather than party, and measures rather than platforms. Various fraternities include him among their members, among these being the Knights of Columbus at Los Angeles, the German St. Joseph Society of Los Angeles, the Fraternal Brotherhood and the Knights of the Maccabees.

HARRY W. GRISWOLD. Many of the older residents and business men of Fernando remember with pleasure the late Harry W. Griswold, who for a number of years was intimately identified with the highest and best interests of this section of Los Angeles county, and a brief sketch of his life will be gladly welcomed by the readers of this volume. A man of sterling character and worth, energetic and progressive, he was active in promoting the industrial and material prosperity of the community in which he resided, and in business, political and social circles was prominent and popular.

The earlier years of Mr. Griswold were spent in Niagara county, N. Y., where as a young man he was engaged in the railroad business. Coming to the Pacific coast in 1877, he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, first in Los Angeles, and then in Fernando, being station agent here for a short time. Deciding to change his occupation, he entered upon a mercantile career, at the death of his brother-in-law, the late Hon. A. B. Moffitt, buying his interest in the store with which he was connected. As a general merchant Mr. Griswold was very successful, his fair and upright dealings with all, and his systematic and honorable business methods, winning him a large and lucrative trade. He became widely and favorably known, and carried on a substantial business until his death, which occurred December 18, 1887, when he was but thirty-three years of age. He was very active, and in addition to attending to his store was at the time of his death serving as postmaster, agent for the Wells-Fargo Express Company, and as justice of the peace, keeping at all times busily employed, and besides these public positions was financial trustee of the Maclay Theological College.

In 1879 Mr. Griswold married Mary Maclay, daughter of the late Hon. Charles Maclay, and their only child died in infancy. Mrs. Griswold still resides in Fernando, where she has a beautiful home, over which she presides with a gracious hospitality. Public-spirited and generous, Mrs. Griswold is a woman of strong personality, highly esteemed throughout the community, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which she is an active worker.

ELKANAH W. RICHARDSON. Prominent among the solid business men of Los Angeles county is Elkanah W. Richardson, a wide-awake representative of the agricultural and horticultural interests of Tropico. He is widely and favorably known as a cultured and genial man, an able, skillful and progressive farmer, and is highly esteemed throughout the community in which he resides. A son of William C. B. Richardson, of whom a sketch may be found on another page of this volume, he was born, November 6, 1849, in Cleveland, Ohio, where he acquired his early education, attending the schools and a business college.

After leaving school, Elkanah W. Richardson went to Chicago, where for several years he was book-keeper for his brother, O. S. Richardson, an extensive coal dealer, who is still in business in that city. Coming by way of Cape Horn as a sailor to California in 1871, he arrived in San Francisco on September 11, and immediately came to Los Angeles to look after property that his father had previously purchased. A month later he returned to Illinois, and at Salt Lake City met refugees fleeing from the big fire that nearly devastated Chicago, rendering so many homeless, and destroyed millions of dollars worth of property. Two months later, he went back to Cleveland, and for a year assisted his father in surveying in that city and its suburbs. In June, 1873, he again visited Los Angeles, and on December 1 of that year he assumed charge of his father's ranch, becoming superintendent, a position that he filled most creditably for many years. In 1881 he embarked in the dairy business, and built up an extensive and lucrative trade, in which he was successfully employed for a score of years. Since 1901 Mr. Richardson has devoted his time and energies to carrying on his father's varied interests principally, although he occasionally does some surveying in the town and county.

In Los Angeles, Cal., in 1887, Mr. Richardson married Ella Weekley, and into their household five children have been born, namely: Eulalia, a graduate of the Glendale high school and now a student in Stanford; William McKinley; Omar Burt; Paul Eddy; and John Everett. Fraternally Mr. Richardson is a prominent member of Glendale Lodge No. 388, I. O. O. F., in which he has passed all the chairs and is a member of the Encampment and the Rebekahs. He is a man of unquestioned business ability and judgment, as is shown by his management of his father's estate, the Santa Eulalia rancho, which at that time of its purchase, in 1868, contained six hundred and seventy-one acres of land. William C. B. Richardson paid $2500 for the tract, which lies between the Dreyfus and Glassell tracts and the Los Angeles river. For the first few years after taking charge of the ranch or until 1880, Mr. Richardson raised sheep on it and then converted it into a diary farm, subsequently devoting it to deciduous fruits and strawberries, each change being for his pecuniary advantage. When the Pacific Electric Railroad was put through he subdivided forty acres into lots 50x100 feet, and worth from $400 to $700 each. A part of these lots have already been sold. With the one hundred acres more recently purchased it makes a valuable estate of seven hundred acres. Ever since its organization Mr. Richardson has been a trustee of the Glendale union high school. He is a member of the Glendale Valley Club and the Pioneers Society of Los Angeles county.

GEORGE JACOB BUEHN. Ranching has occupied the attention of Mr. Buehn since he came to the vicinity of Norwalk, Los Angeles county, about 1878, and with this enterprise he has more recently combined that of wine manufacture, having a vineyard of forty acres and turning out twenty-five thousand gallons of wine each year from his own grapes. He was born in Baden, Germany, July 21, 1848, a son of Christian and Eva (Sebastian) Buehn, both natives of the Fatherland, where they are now living at an advanced age. Of their family two sons and two daughters are in California.

G. J. Buehn was educated in the public schools of his native land and later learned wine making and became thoroughly familiar with market gardening. He came to America at the age of nineteen years and located in California, from San Francisco going to Oregon, where he engaged in the dairy business for eleven years. For three years of this time he lived in East Portland and eight years in Morrow county, owning in the latter section a fine ranch of eighty acres and engaging in the stock business. He came to Los Angeles county to visit two sisters and they prevailed upon him to locate here permanently. Accordingly, in 1879, he purchased his present property, which consists of sixty acres, of which forty acres are in wine grapes; the entire property was wild and uncultivated land at that time and to Mr. Buehn is due the credit for having developed one of the fine ranches of this section. He set out trees, built house, barn, winery and all necessary outbuildings, fences, etc., and has added not only to the value of his own property, but enhanced that of the ranches about him.

May 8, 1880, Mr. Buehn married Miss Mary Feldman, a native of Germany, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Minnie, Louisa, George, Louis and Elsie. Both himself and wife are members of the German Lutheran Church. Politically he is a Republican, and in fraternal matters belongs to the Fraternal Aid, was an Odd Fellow in Oregon, and also carries old-line insurance. He is progressive and enterprising and esteemed in the citizenship of Los Angeles county.

PETER L. LOPEZ. Among the best known and most active residents of Fernando is Peter L. Lopez, an energetic, capable business man, possessing keen judgment and marked executive ability. He was born June 28, 1867, in Los Angeles valley, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, Valentine Lopez, whose birth occurred sixty years ago, and of his grandfather, whose name was Peter Lopez. The Lopez family was one of the first to settle in this section of Los Angeles county, taking up grants of land from the Spanish government, and many of the descendants of the original emigrants are still living here, honored and respected citizens.

After leaving the public schools of Fernando, Peter L. Lopez was for a year a student in the college then located here. The ensuing five years he assisted his father on the home ranch, and then for two years had the contract for carrying the mails from Fernando to Simi, Ventura county. When but twenty-three years of age he was elected constable of Fernando township, an office in which he served most acceptably for three terms of four years each. Resigning then, he spent a year of leisure, enjoying a well-earned vacation free from business cares. In 1905 he resumed his public duties, accepting the appointment of road superintendent or overseer, an office which keeps him busily employed, it being the hardest road district in the entire county. Under his personal supervision he has one hundred and fifty-seven miles of road and two mountain ranges to cross, and the question of keeping these public thoroughfares in a satisfactory condition for travel is often a difficult one to solve. He is a man of good business capacity, and by dint of industry and wise judgment has acquired considerable property, owning several village lots in Fernando and one of the best residences in the community, having erected it in 1900.

April 8, 1894, Mr. Lopez married Lottie Williams, and they have one child, a daughter named Bertha. Fraternally Mr. Lopez is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, belonging to the Los Angeles Lodge.

LEGENE SAGE BARNES. One of the successful real-estate dealers of Long Beach is L. S. Barnes, who, although a resident of this city only since 1904, has built up for himself a secure position among her business men. Locating in the city in the year mentioned above, he engaged in handling real estate, being at that time associated with W. W. Bryan, later purchasing the latter's interest and continuing alone until January, 1906, when, with two others, he established the business now known as L. S. Barnes & Co., located at No. 121 West Ocean avenue, where they conduct a real-estate enterprise of considerable magnitude.

Legene Sage Barnes was born in Wilber, Saline county, Neb., August 7, 1875, the second in a family of seven children, four of whom are living, he being the only one in California. His father, Thomas H. Barnes, was a native of Ohio, his birth having occurred in the vicinity of Columbus, where the family fortunes had been located by Samuel, the paternal grandfather. The latter ran a steamer on the Ohio river for many years, eventually removing to Nebraska and becoming a pioneer of Wilber, where his death occured at an advanced age. He was a man of strong character and patriotism, and at the call of the Union in '61 he enlisted in an Ohio regiment and gave faithful service to the cause. Thomas H. Barnes was also a pioneer of Nebraska, through his connection with the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company (for which he secured right of way through the state from Omaha to Denver) being a potent factor in the upbuilding of this section of the country. He located the greater number of towns in western Nebraska and eastern Colorado, and at the present writing owns valuable properties in the first-named state. At one time he located in Oregon and in Salem built the electric railroad, which covers a distance of twenty-five miles in the city and its vicinity, and also platted Englewood, an addition to Salem, and was otherwise instrumental in the advancement of that city. Later he returned to Nebraska, and has since made his home in Alliance, where he engages in the handling of landed properties. Inheriting the sterling characteristics of his forefathers, he takes a keen interest in all matters pertaining to the general welfare and gives his efforts freely to the promotion of public enterprises. A Democrat in politics, he is prominent in the councils of his party, and fraternally he is a Mason. His wife, formerly Rose Harris, a native of Youngstown, Ohio, is also living.

Chas. H. Hoge

The early education of L. S. Barnes was received through an attendance of the public and high schools of Salem, Ore., his graduation taking place in 1892. Returning to Nebraska with his parents he attended a commercial college at Hastings. Previous to this he had studied telegraphy, and about this time accepted the position of operator for the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company at Hastings; later he acted in the same capacity at David City, Neb. In 1895 he went to Salt Lake City, Utah, for the Rio Grande & Western Railroad and as conductor ran between Salt Lake City and Park City that state. Later he was conductor on a passenger train out of Milford, Utah, which position he resigned to engage in mining in Utah and later in Montana. He was successful in this enterprise, discovering and opening several mines that brought large financial returns, among which was the Coobartal which was the last disposed of.

Mr. Barnes' first trip to California was made in December, 1895, his decision to locate here permanently being made in 1904, when he came to Long Beach, as previously stated. He has met with unusual success in his business enterprises, acquiring financial returns, and has gained a high position among the business men of the city. In addition to the business enterprise already mentioned he is interested in the Long Beach Realty Investment Company, and the Moore Foster Investment Company, serving as treasurer in the last-named organization.

In Raton, N. Mex., Mr. Barnes was united in marriage with Miss Grace Dinsmore, a native of Kansas, who had resided for some years in Salem, Ore. They are the parents of two children, Willa and Legene S., Jr. Mr. Barnes takes a lively interest in social and fraternal affairs of Long Beach, being a member of the Cosmopolitan Club and Chamber of Commerce, and is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and Knights of Pythias. He is a man of broad information, in touch with current events, and a citizen upon whom the public honor may safely rest.

CHARLES H. HOGE. Through his association with the real-estate interests of Long Beach, Charles H. Hoge is making himself a factor in the material upbuilding and growth of the city. He is a native of Hunt county, Tex., and was born October 31, 1866, a son of John C. Hoge. The latter was a native of Missouri, whence he removed to Texas at the close of the Civil war, and became a farmer in Hunt county and later in the vicinity of Blanco, where he is now residing. His wife, whom he married in Texas, was formerly Mattie King, a native of Illinois, and born of this union were six sons and four daughters, of whom Charles H. Hoge is the eldest. He was reared to young manhood in Texas, where he attended the common schools in pursuit of an education and engaged with his father in farming. In March, 1891, he left his native state and located in the northern part of Arizona, remaining in that location until fall, when he came to California. In Redlands, his first location, he engaged in the real estate business with a partner, the firm being known as Dike & Hoge. Together they subdivided the Oliver Grove addition of twenty-nine acres, and also subdivided other tracts during the eight years in which they continued business.

Disposing of his interests in that section Mr. Hoge located in the city of Los Angeles and as a member of the real-estate firm of Hoge & Gaylord laid out the Echo Park tract. In the spring of 1904 he came to Long Beach and here became a partner in the firm of Todd, Windham & Hoge, who laid out the Pacific Home tract of twenty-eight acres, and also handled the one hundred acres comprised in the Long Beach Park tract, along the Ocean front, which tract was opened to the public in 1905. In the fall of 1905 the firm of Todd, Windham & Hoge raised the money for the first payment on the eight hundred acres now being improved as Long Beach Harbor, and assisted in the organization of the Dock & Terminal Company, and the firms of Todd & Windham and C. H. Hoge & Co. have the exclusive holding of all of that property. This has been the means of more than doubling the values of real-estate in Long Beach. With others Mr. Hoge organized the Dominguez Investment Company to subdivide the Dominguez Harbor Tract of two hundred acres on the north side of Anaheim Road, running from Long Beach to Wilmington. Mr. Hoge is now doing a general real-estate business independently, under the firm name of C. H. Hoge & Co.

Mr. Hoge is identified fraternally with the Order of Pendo, and in his political convictions is a Democrat on national issues, while locally he reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

CAPT. ELMER O. LUTZ. The excellent harbor at San Diego and the large number of tourists visiting the city every year render yachting one of the most satisfactory sources of recreation and pleasure. Recognizing this fact, Captain Lutz has devoted his attention to the development of a business catering to the wants of strangers as well as town people. As the proprietor of the Star boathouse, at the foot of H street, he has built up a business unique in character and interesting in details. His pleasure wharf is commodious and at the end he has his row boats, sail boats and launches, including the Dolphin, forty-seven and one-half feet; the Urania, forty-five feet, and the Dolly, twenty-six feet. A special feature of the business is his Tuesday and Thursday excursions of the Dolphin, which carries the guests past Roseville, La Playa, the quarantine station, the fortifications at Fort Rosecrans and the government jetty.

The Lutz family comes from Pennsylvania, whence the captain's grandfather removed to Circleville, Ohio, and settled among the pioneer farmers on the Scioto river. After the family removed to the farm near Circleville, Louis Lutz was born there and after he had attained man's estate he devoted himself to agricultural pursuits in the same locality. In 1871 he removed to Kansas and settled in Emporia, where he opened a hardware and agricultural implement store, conducting the business for a period of twelve years. At the expiration of that time he closed out his interests in Emporia and removed to New Mexico, where he acquired large tracts of land in San Miguel county near Las Vegas, and there he remained until his death at sixty-eight years of age. His wife, who was born at Circleville, Ohio, and died in New Mexico, bore the maiden name of Susan Hittler, her father, Jacob, having been a farmer in the vicinity of Circleville.

Six children formed the family of Louis Lutz and three are still living. Elmer O., who was second in order of birth, was born on the home farm near Circleville, Ohio, February 19, 1866, and was a boy of five years when the family settled in Emporia, Kans., where he secured a public school education. During 1882 he accompanied the family to New Mexico, where his father had purchased the Osage Sutton grant of sixty-nine thousand six hundred and forty acres of land situated one hundred and ten miles southeast of Las Vegas. The ranch had forty-two miles of fence, all of which was of four wires. Assisted by other members of the family, the father conducted a cattle business which was incorporated under the title of the L. L. Cattle Company, with the father as president and Elmer O., manager and treasurer. A specialty was made of full-blooded Hereford cattle, of which they had a large number of fine specimens. At times they had as many as four thousand head of cattle on the ranch, all of which bore their brand of L L L.

Owing to considerable trouble with rheumatism, which only a change of occupation and climate could benefit, Elmer O. Lutz left New Mexico in 1897 and removed to San Diego, where he has since made his home. However, it was not until three years later that he disposed of his interests in New Mexico, all of the land and cattle being then sold. In 1898 he established a boathouse at the foot of D street and opened the business which he has since conducted with energy, judgment and originality. However, since beginning in the business he has disposed of his first property to the Corinthian Yacht Club and has purchased the property at the foot of H street. He is identified with the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, also the San Diego Yacht Club. His home is a comfortable residence in the city, presided over by his wife, formerly Miss E. May Addington, a native of Iowa. In politics he gives his influence and ballot toward the principles of the Republican party, of which he is a pronounced supporter.

C. O. ANDERSON is making extensive improvements at Glenoak ranch, erecting thereon a beautiful mission style house which is being fitted with all modern improvements, including an acetylene gas plant, and a telephone, his ambition being to make it one of the most comfortable and attractive homes in that section of the state. The land is devoted to the growing of fruit and grain, the conduct of these operations being in the hands of a manager. The ranch has an independent irrigation plant with gasoline engine to furnish power for the centrifugal pump, which has a capacity of seventy-five gallons per minute.

Mr. Anderson was born September 26, 1857, in Sweden, in which country he received his early education. When fourteen years of age he came to the United States, going directly to Chicago. Later he removed to Rock Island and engaged in the manufacture of shoes, remaining there some time. After disposing of his interests there he entered mercantile enterprises in Des Moines and Davenport, Iowa. In 1887 he came to San Diego, Cal., and secured employment in a retail shoe house, remaining eight and one-half years with F. T. Wright & Co., after which he became manager of the shoe department in Marston's department store. Severing his connection with this firm after three and a half years of valuable service to his employer he next accepted a position as traveling salesman for the firm of Utz & Dunn of Rochester, N. Y., the field given him being California, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands, a position which he has filled for the past seven years.

Mrs. Anderson is a native of Illinois and was for many years a school teacher in the public schools of California. Fraternally Mr. Anderson is a member of the Woodman lodge, the Knights of Pythias, and holds membership in the Traveling Men's Protective Association of Utica, N. Y. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He is one of the best posted shoe men in the country and is personally popular with all who enjoy his acquaintance. He is well-read, well-traveled, and takes an interest in all matters of importance to the public welfare.

CAPT. SAMUEL WYLIE McNAB. A man of keen insight and a good judge of human nature, Capt. Samuel Wylie McNab is an efficient executive officer under appointment by the sheriff of San Bernardino county. He is of Scotch descent, and the sturdy elements of character found in the men of that nationality are a part of his inheritance from his early ancestors. His grandfather, Henry McNab, was a weaver in Philadelphia, later removed to Pittsburg, and finally became a pioneer of the state of Iowa. His son, James, was born in Philadelphia, became a farmer near Pittsburg, and moved in succession to Galena, Ill., where he was engaged in lead mining, Dubuque, Iowa, and later settled in Jackson county of that state, near Maquoketa, where he operated a farm until his retirement from active business and now resides with his son in San Bernardino, having reached the advanced age of eighty years. He is a Republican in political faith, which party also receives the support of Captain McNab. The mother, who was Mary Hogg before her marriage, was a native of Pennsylvania and died when her son was but four years of age.

The birth of Mr. McNab occurred December 18, 1868, at Canes Ford, near Maquoketa, Iowa, and the first twelve years of his life were spent on the farm. He then went to Maquoketa and attended the public school for a short time. A year later he began to learn the printer's trade in Sharon, Pa., and after working in the Eagle office for some time returned to his native state and again attended school at Maquoketa. His education being completed he journeyed through various parts of the United States, in 1887 coming to San Francisco, where he was engaged on the city papers there for a season, then came to Los Angeles and worked on the old Tribune-Herald. In 1890 he returned to Iowa and farmed for three years, after which he again took up his trade in the Maquoketa Record office. But one who has once lived in California is never quite satisfied away from her alluring attractions and 1895 found Captain McNab again a resident of San Bernardino county. In a short time he was engaged as foreman of the Riverside Enterprise, and a year later accepted a similar position on the San Bernardino Sun. Retaining this position until January, 1903, he resigned at that time to accept the appointment as a deputy under the county sheriff and has since given his entire time to his official duties. In fraternal circles Captain McNab affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America, is a member of Kaaba Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Davenport, Iowa; was made a Mason at Maquoketa in Helion Lodge No. 36, A. F. & A. M., and now belongs to San Bernardino Lodge No. 348; was a member of Bath-kol Chapter No. 94, R. A. M., at Maquoketa, of which he is past high priest, and now belongs to Keystone Chapter No. 56, at San Bernardino; was formerly a member of Tancred Commandery No. 40 at Maquoketa, of which he is past recorder, and is now a member of San Bernardino Commandery No. 23 and San Bernardino Lodge No. 856, B. P. O. E. He has been a member of Company K, Seventh Regiment of National Guard of California since 1898, in 1902 was elected lieutenant of the company and in 1905 was elected and commissioned captain. He is also a member of the Board of Trade at San Bernardino and takes an active interest in all matters tending toward the development of that section of the state.

WILLIAM PAPSON. As a pioneer William Papson is remembered among the early settlers of California and his name held in the highest esteem by all who ever knew him. He was born in Hillsdale, N. Y., in 1831, his father having emigrated from his home in England and located in New York. Reared to young manhood in his native state and educated in the public schools, he was well equipped for the battle of life, and in 1852, at the age of twenty-one years, he outfitted with ox-teams and crossed the plains to California. He came safely through the hardships and dangers of the trip, and upon his arrival in the state he followed the example of the great majority of the settlers of the west and engaged in mining. He was first located in Plumas county, where he continued for a time, but having been trained to an agricultural life he soon became interested in this pursuit and decided to purchase a farm. He settled near San Jose and engaged in general farming and fruit raising and there, March 8, 1865, he married Miss Matilda Freer. She was born in Atchison county, Mo., a daughter of William H. Freer, who brought his family across the plains in 1849. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Papson continued to farm in that section for the period of three years, when they removed to San Felipe and followed ranching for seven years. Returning to Santa Clara county they again engaged in farming in the vicinity of Berryessa and after three years removed to Los Gatos and made that place their home for seven years. They were principally occupied during this time in horticulture, in which they were very successful. Removing to Lake county in 1888 Mr. Papson purchased a ranch near Upper Lake and engaged extensively in the raising of stock, grain and hay. He also owned one hundred and thirty-four acres on the banks of Lula lake, where his death occurred July 12, 1897. He was a citizen of worth and works, interested in the movements of the day, and always ready to lend his aid in matters of public import. He was a Republican in politics but never cared for official recognition. Fraternally he was made a Mason in San Jose Lodge No. 10, F. & A. M.

Mr. and Mrs. Papson were the parents of one son, George W., who has charge of the home place in Lake county. After the death of her husband Mrs. Papson remained in Lake county until January, 1900, when she located on the old home place near Savannah, and is now residing with her mother on the old Freer homestead in the vicinity of El Monte, Los Angeles county.

VICENTE LUGO. A man of modest, unassuming character, honest and upright in his dealings, Vicente Lugo, living near Santa Monica, is a fine representative of the early Spanish families who were so prominent in the settlement of Southern California. A native Californian, he was born, January 19, 1865, in Los Angeles, which was also the birthplace of his father, the late Francisco Lugo. His grandfather, Antonio Lugo, was born and reared in Spain. When a young man he immigrated to California, and during his day was one of the leading business men of Los Angeles, owning large herds of cattle and horses, and accumulating much wealth. He married Antonio Rondon in California.

A life-long resident of Los Angeles, Francisco Lugo became owner of several thousand acres of land that his father bought from the Mexican government, it being a part of the San Bernardino grant. He was not actively engaged in agricultural pursuits himself, but hired men to run his ranch, a large portion of which he lost prior to his death, which occurred at his home in Los Angeles, at the age of sixty-five years. He married Vicente Machado, who was born in Santa Barbara, and died at the age of sixty-five years, in Los Angeles. Both she and her husband were members of the Catholic Church.

Vicente Lugo, with his sister, Francisca Lugo, inherited from his mother's estate thirteen acres of valuable land, part of the grant known as La Ballona rancho, lying one mile north of Venice, where they are now living, their home being pleasantly located, on a corner lot, on the Short Line Electric Railway. Mr. and Miss Lugo have recently sold twelve acres of their ranch, receiving $1,000 per acre for it, retaining for themselves the home lot, on which their residence is located. Politically Mr. Lugo is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally is a member of the Foresters of America.

EDWARD C. D. VAN ORNAM. The first representative of the Van Ornam family in the United States was Great-grandfather Van Ornam, who, as may be surmised from the surname, was a native of Holland. Bringing with him all the sturdy qualities for which the Dutch as a nation are noted, he settled in New York state and reared his family amid the trying conditions which always prevail in a new country. A grandson of this immigrant and the father of our subject, Daniel D. Van Ornam, was born in Willsboro, N. Y., where in his early manhood years he followed his trade of mason and builder. From there he later went to Buffalo, that state, and still later to Massachusetts, in both of which places he continued to work at his trade. Some time before his death he removed to the middle west, settling in Davenport, Iowa, and later in Cedar county, that state, where he died when in his fifty-seventh year. As his wife he had chosen Harriet F. Ross, who was born in Massachusetts, the daughter of Peter Ross, the latter born in New York state of English descent. In the latter's family was another daughter, Olive, who became the wife of Mr. Burbank, by whom she has one son, Luther Burbank, who is known the world over as the Wizard of Horticulture. Mrs. Harriet F. Van Ornam survived her husband many years, and passed away at the home of her son Edward in Long Beach September 4, 1906, when she was in her ninety-fifth year. For many years she had been a member of the Methodist Church, and throughout her life she exemplified the teachings of the Christian religion.

R. J. Hough

Of the ten children born to Daniel D. and Harriet F. (Ross) Van Ornam only two are now living, Edward C. D. and Ferris B., both of Long Beach. Edward C. D. was born in Champlain, N. Y., August 8, 1836, and was reared in Buffalo until six years old, when the family removed to Massachusetts, settling in Worcester. He attended the public schools of that city for a time, but later returned to Buffalo, where he was a pupil in the public schools. By the time he had reached his sixteenth year he had settled upon definite plans for his future career in the business world. From his father he learned the brick-mason's and builder's trade, and in 1854, when the family removed to Davenport, Iowa, he worked side by side with his father in the execution of the many and important contracts which came to them. Among them may be mentioned the Cook & Sargent's marble block, the Episcopal Church of Davenport, besides numerous fine residences. After he followed his trade continuously for about twenty years he made a change in both occupation and location, in 1870 removing to Cass county, Iowa, where he purchased wild land and started out as a farmer and stock-raiser. His specialty, however, was the raising of fine stock, consisting principally of high-grade Short-horn Durham cattle. During the eleven years which he carried on stock-raising in Cass county he was fairly successful, but a desire to resume his trade caused him to dispose of his interests there and remove to Lewis, that county. In that city and Omaha, Neb., whither he later removed, he carried on contracting until 1887, during the winter of that year coming to California and visiting many cities in various parts of the state, Long Beach being among the number. He returned to Iowa in the following spring and again took up his trade, but the middle states seemed less attractive than formerly and he determined to transfer his interests to the west. Coming to Long Beach in 1893 he at once began to take contracts for building and during the twelve years following erected many of the finest buildings in this city. He has erected a number of residences on his own account and later sold them. Since 1905 he has not been in active business and is now living retired in the enjoyment of the competency accumulated through many years of continued activity.

In Durant, Cedar county, Iowa, Mr. Van Ornam married Ann M. Doolittle, born in Wallingford, Conn., her father being Chester Doolittle, well known in that state, where his death occurred. Mrs. Van Ornam died in 1890, in Lewis, Iowa. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Van Ornam, as follows: Hattie M., the wife of Fred W. Snell, of Buena Park, Cal.; Luther L., who died in early childhood; Bertha F., Mrs. John B. Steen, of Long Beach; William W., also of this city; Edward E., who died when in his twenty-fourth year; Chester D., manager of the San Pedro Lumber Company at Huntington Beach; and Ralph R., who is in the employ of the Nofzinger Lumber Company, Los Angeles. In his church affiliations Mr. Van Ornam is a Presbyterian, and politically he is a Republican.

JOHN J. HOUGH. The supervision of the roads of Long Beach district have been in the charge of Mr. Hough for a considerable period and under his direct personal oversight as foreman and superintendent the work has been maintained at a high standard of excellence, his success in the department being proved by his retention in the office at the solicitation of the people of the district. Mr. Hough is a representative of an eastern family, his parents, George and Hester Anna (Tiffany) Hough, having been born, reared and married in New York state, but becoming early settlers of Illinois, where the mother died in 1865. At that time John J. was scarcely four years of age, he having been born in Kane county, Ill., November 7, 1861. For a long period the father continued to make his home in Illinois. Twenty years after the death of his wife he came to California and settled at Garden Grove, Orange county, where he remained in retirement from active cares until his death in 1893, at seventy-five years of age.

Little of special importance occurred to mark the years of Mr. Hough's youth. Educated in common schools, he was fitted for active participation in life's duties and responsibilities and was qualified to discharge his obligations as a citizen. In young manhood he chose agriculture as his vocation and for some years tilled the soil of an Illinois farm. When he came to California in 1878 he bought land near Santa Ana and for some years conducted general ranch pursuits, but finally disposed of his holdings and removed to Long Beach in 1893. On the corner of Orange and Seventh streets he established his home, surrounding which he owned five acres which he utilized for a market garden. For a short time he engaged in truck farming, but soon the rise in property values made his place too high-priced to retain for such purposes, and he afterward sold three acres at a gratifying advance on the original cost. In 1896 he was appointed road superintendent of Long Beach district, which position he has since satisfactorily filled.

While living in Orange county, Mr. Hough was married at Garden Grove, June 30, 1886, being united with Miss Alice Sturgess, a native of England, and, like himself, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which faith they are training their three children, Sadie, Vanoni and Clinton. Though not a partisan in political ideas and not narrow in his views, Mr. Hough is firm in his adherence to the Republican party and gives its principles his constant support. The only fraternal organization to which thus far he has given allegiance is the Masonic order, in which he holds membership with Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M., and maintains a warm interest in its work, upholding its lofty principles of the brotherhood of man and aiding in its frequent charities.

HARRY M. WILLARD. By means of extended travels through much of the region west of the Mississippi river Mr. Willard has gained a comprehensive idea of this portion of the United States, and his experience, based upon habits of close observation as he followed his occupation in different towns, convinced him that few cities surpass San Diego in scenic beauty and equable climate. During 1897 he traveled south from Utah as far as the City of Mexico, where he had planned to settle and engage in the building business, but he was not satisfied with the surroundings, so returned to the States and visited San Diego on a tour of inspection, the result being that he removed hither and established himself as a contractor and builder.

On a farm near Burlington, Iowa, Harry M. Willard was born May 19, 1858, being third in order of birth among five children and the only one to settle in California. His parents, Samuel G. and Eliza J. (Lansdale) Willard, were natives of Ohio and the latter died in Iowa. The former crossed the plains to California in 1849 and tried his luck in the northern mines for three years, after which he returned to the east, purchased raw land in Iowa, improved a valuable farm, and now, at the age of eighty-five years, continues to reside at the old homestead in retirement from agricultural labors. On the home farm the early years in the life of Harry M. Willard were uneventfully passed. In addition to common school advantages he had the privilege of studying in Denmark academy, and thus acquired a better education than many farm boys of that day.

On starting out for himself to earn his own livelihood in the world, Harry M. Willard went to Kansas about 1880 and became interested in the insurance business at Topeka. His first visit to the Pacific coast was made in 1886, when he bought a team and wagon and traveled overland to Oregon, thence to California. It was thus possible for him to inspect the country much more closely than if the trip had been made via railroad. When he reached Santa Barbara he began to work at the carpenter's trade, remaining in that town for a year. Afterward he made brief sojourns in Pasadena and Los Angeles, where he followed carpentering. On his return to Iowa in 1889 he gave his attention entirely to the building business, but in 1890 again followed the tide of immigration westward, this time settling at Salt Lake City and engaging in contracting and building with considerable success. Perhaps his most important work there was the superintending of the erection of the building utilized as a courthouse and city hall, which cost $4,000,000 and represented a substantial and unique style of architecture. Since coming to San Diego in 1897 he and his brother-in-law, under the firm name of Willard & Neely, have had the contracts for numerous residences and flats, and St. Joseph's sanitarium, also many buildings at Homestead, Point Loma and Pacific Beach. His residence, at No. 1701 Second street, was erected by himself and he has also built other houses to be sold as opportunity offers. On the organization of the Master Builders' Association he became a charter member and at this writing holds the office of treasurer.

The marriage of Mr. Willard took place at Burlington, Iowa, and united him with Miss Eva Neely, a sister of William T. Neely, and an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mention of her family appears in the sketch of her brother elsewhere in this volume. The Democratic party receives the ballot of Mr. Willard at both local and general elections. In fraternal relations he is identified with Silver Gate Lodge No. 296, F. & A. M., in which he was made a Mason, and is also associated with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

MORITZ TREPTE. A skilled mechanic, energetic and progressive, Moritz Trepte is actively identified with the industrial prosperity of San Diego, and as a carpenter and contractor has been an important factor in the upbuilding of the city. He is widely known as a man of sterling integrity, his business dealings being characterized by fairness and honesty, and he is everywhere esteemed and respected. He was born December 5, 1864, in the kingdom of Saxony, Germany, and in that land of industry and thrift was well trained in those habits and virtues that should make him a desirable citizen of any country. His parents, Carl and Christine (Gurgen) Trepte, were life-long residents of Germany, the father, who was a miller by trade, dying in 1871.

M. J. Laurent

The youngest of a family of nine children, Moritz Trepte is the only member of the parental household in America. Brought up in Saxony, he received a common school education, and in early life, under the instruction of his grandfather, Gottlieb Gurgen, learned the miller's trade, which he followed until becoming of age. Eager to try his fortunes in the United States, the mecca of every boy of ambition, he immigrated to this country in 1886, going directly to Milwaukee, Wis., where for two years he worked at the carpenter's trade. Coming to California in 1888, he followed his trade in San Francisco until 1895, when he made a trip to Southern California. Being very much impressed and pleased with San Diego and its surroundings, he decided to settle here permanently. Forming a partnership with Herman Stroele, he engaged in contracting and building under the firm name of Stroele & Trepte, continuing thus until 1900, when he bought his partner out. Since that time Mr. Trepte has carried on the business alone and in the filling of his many contracts has erected some fine business houses and many handsome residences. In 1905 he built his own attractive residence at No. 155 Twentieth street.

In San Francisco, Cal., Mr. Trepte married Christine Treusch, a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and they are the parents of three children, Walter, Alvin and Carl. Mr. Trepte is a member of the Master Carpenters' Association of San Diego, and an active worker in the organization. Politically he is a Socialist. Fraternally he belongs to the Woodmen of the World; Turn Verein, of which he is ex-president; to the Sons of Herman, and to the Knights and Ladies of Security. Religiously he is true to the faith in which he was reared, being a Lutheran.

MARTIN JULIUS LAURENT. For more than one-quarter of a century Mr. Laurent was intimately identified with the development of Ventura county. Measured by the history of the far-distant ages of the past, twenty-five years represent but a brief epoch, but it is a long time gauged by the present standards of progress and activity. Not until years after he had settled on a farm in the Santa Clara valley of the south did the nearby town of Oxnard spring into existence. At that time transportation facilities were few and unsatisfactory. Modern farming tools had not been brought to their present state of development; indeed, the larger part of those now used were but a nebula in the inventor's brain. School and church advantages were meagre. Men had before them the arduous task of subduing an unknown soil and ascertaining to what products it was best adapted; hence there was little leisure for recreation, yet it was in those days that the charm of gracious hospitality shone at its brightest and the kindly deeds in another's interests were of common occurrence.

In the settlement and development of California almost every nationality was represented. Mr. Laurent represented the French race, being a descendant of a long line of ancestry identified with the history of France. His father, Nicholas, who was a native of that country, became a merchant tailor in Louisville, Ky., but later took up farming pursuits among the pioneers of Leavenworth county, Kans., and eventually moved to Douglas county, where he died at Lawrence. Loyal in devotion to his adopted country, he offered his services to the Union during the Civil war and served as a member of a Kansas regiment. His wife, Ursul, also died in Lawrence. The eldest child and only son among their three children was Martin Julius, who was born in Louisville, Ky., March 14, 1842, and in early boyhood accompanied the family to Kansas, there attending the public schools. Practically the first employment which he secured was that of clerk for an uncle at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and later he engaged in the mercantile business for himself in Missouri for two years.

The marriage of Mr. Laurent was solemnized at Lawrence, Kans., February 23, 1871, and united him with Miss Annette Petit, who was born in the department of Haute-Saone in the eastern part of France near the German border and also in close proximity to the mountains separating France from Switzerland. Her father, Jean Baptiste Petit, for years was a farmer in that region, but in 1853 he brought the family to the United States and settled in Clearfield county, Pa., there engaging in farm pursuits and also in lumbering. The year that marked the close of the Civil war saw him a pioneer of Douglas county, Kans., where he engaged in farming near a hamlet then known as Blackjack. During 1875 he came to California and settled in the Santa Clara valley of the south, where he died in 1894, at the age of eighty-four years. A number of years before leaving France he married Miss Elizabeth Catherine Carame, daughter of Louis Carame, a manufacturer of agricultural implements in France. Her death occurred in Kansas in 1870, when she was sixty-one years of age. Five children comprised their family, namely: Mrs. Harriet Roussey, a resident of Oxnard, Cal.; Margaret, who died in Pennsylvania in early girlhood; Annette, Mrs. Laurent, of Oxnard; Frank and Justin, both of whom cultivate farms near Oxnard.

For a short time after his marriage Mr. Laurent followed farming and the mercantile business in Kansas, but in 1874 he removed to California and settled in the Santa Clara valley, renting land near the present site of Oxnard. Both he and his wife were pleased with the climate and the surroundings, and therefore they soon decided to become property owners. At first they bought only a small strip of land, but by the purchase of adjacent tracts they acquired a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, on which they erected a substantial and commodious ranch house. He was among the first to adopt modern implements suitable for caring for the different crops raised, and always took pride in his fine stock. About 1889 they rented the ranch and removed to Los Angeles, but soon returned to Ventura county and bought lots in Oxnard, where they erected an attractive and elegant residence. In the midst of these pleasant surroundings which his wise labors had rendered possible Mr. Laurent passed his last days and here he died February 14, 1902, when lacking one month of sixty years of age. The Santa Clara Catholic Church, of which he had been a liberal and earnest member, had charge of the ceremonies connected with his funeral, while citizens in general, irrespective of religious affiliations, were as one in their tributes of respect to his memory and appreciation of his worth. Since his death Mrs. Laurent has rented the ranch to tenants ,who have the land under cultivation to beans and beets, and maintain its reputation as one of the finest farms of its size in the entire state. Like her husband, she has been interested in public questions and has believed in Democratic principles throughout all of her life. Like him, too, she is earnest in her allegiance to the Santa Clara Church. The congregation has been benefited by her generous offerings and the various church societies have felt the influence of her helpful work and executive ability.

M. BLANCHE BOLTON, M. D. Not to men alone is due the credit for the rapid development, progress and upbuilding of this western state, for in nearly all avenues since the pioneer days the wives, daughters and sisters of these courageous men have proven themselves equally courageous and self-sacrificing. Along medical lines a successful exponent is named in the person of M. Blanche Bolton, M. D., well and widely known in San Pedro, Los Angeles county, where she has been engaged in the practice of her profession since 1899. She is a native daughter of the state, born in San Francisco one of five children in the family of her parents, J. J. and Mary A. (Swayze) Bolton, both of whom are living and are now residents of San Gabriel. The father, a native of England, was brought to Toronto, Canada, by his parents and there grew to manhood. He became a farmer in that section, where he remained until 1873, in which year he located in San Francisco. Later he followed general farming in Dixon, Solano county, Cal., until his removal to San Gabriel. His wife is a native of Montreal, Canada. One son, Becher Bolton, is practicing medicine in Napa, Cal., and another son, Manzanito Bolton, is also a physician, being located at Johnsville, Cal. William makes his home in San Gabriel, and Agnes is at home with her parents.

M. Blanche Bolton was born in San Francisco, Cal., receiving her preliminary education in the public and high schools of that place. In 1894 she became a student in the California Medical College, graduating from that institution in 1897 with the degree of M. D., after which she spent one year in Guadalajara, Mexico, beginning the practice of her profession with her uncle, Dr. Winfield Swayze. In 1899 she came to San Pedro, and since that date has engaged in a general practice of medicine and surgery and has built up an extensive and lucrative patronage throughout this section. She is a member of the Los Angeles Medical Society, the Southern California Eclectic Medical Society, and the State Eclectic Medical Society. She is prominent as a member of the Rebekahs, in which she is past officer.

HAMILTON M. SQUIRES. Many years have come and gone since Mr. Squires established his home on a ranch in San Diego county, and now for a quarter of a century he has remained on the same homestead, busily engaged in raising general farm products and in breeding registered stock as fine as the locality can boast. In addition to his own tract of nine hundred acres he superintends nineteen hundred acres owned by his wife, so that their united possessions represent a large valuation and entail considerable responsibility upon the proprietor. The home place is situated three miles south of Vista and bears improvements showing the owners to possess thrift, energy and ample means.

Few men are more deeply interested in the history and progress of California than Mr. Squires, and perhaps this fact by some may be attributed to the coincidence of his birth, September 7, 1850, occurring just two days before California was admitted as a state into the Union. His earliest recollections are connected with pioneer days in the west, and a few of these memories are more thrilling than pleasant, notably his recollection, with the vividness of an event happening yesterday, of the shooting of Sheriff "Billy" Getman in Los Angeles by an insane man, William Jenkins of the San Gabriel valley being shot in the leg at the same time. On another occasion his father was a member of the vigilance committee of Los Angeles that dealt with Juan Flores, the murderer of Sheriff Barton.

W. H. Auld

At the age of seventeen years E. W., father of H. M. Squires, removed from his native Kentucky to Missouri, and in 1847 there married Louisa Smith, a native of Ohio. Two years later the young couple started for California in a wagon drawn by oxen. After a long journey they arrived at Fort Lassen, where he engaged in the butchering business and sold meat to the miners. In 1850 they left that locality and traveled via wagon to Santa Clara county. During the progress of this journey, while they were encamped in tents in Grass valley, a son was born whom they named Hamilton M. Four years were spent in Santa Clara county and then they removed to Los Angeles county, settling at El Monte, two miles from the San Gabriel Mission. In 1858 they moved from there to the Temple grant about six miles south of the city of Los Angeles, and on a farm in that vicinity they spent many busy years. In the fall of 1870 they moved to a farm near Santa Ana, and in 1874 they established their home at Olive, Orange county; there the death of the father occurred March 18, 1906, the mother passing away October 22 of the same year. Their happy married life had covered a period of about sixty years. In sunshine and in shadow they labored together, and an honored old age rewarded their well-spent years. Twelve children comprised their family, and all but one of these attained mature years, ten still living in California.

As an assistant to his father, Hamilton M. Squires early gained a comprehensive knowledge of agriculture and when he came to his present ranch in 1881 he was well qualified to conduct a farm systematically and profitably. While devoting himself closely to the management of his land he still finds leisure to participate in local affairs and for nine consecutive years served as school trustee. Politically he favors the Democratic party, but maintains an independent attitude in local elections. In September of 1897 he married Miss Mary Emma Kelly, who was born at Deadwood, Placer county, Cal., and is a woman of refinement and culture, a devoted member of the Christian Church, and a loving mother to her two children, Ida Belle and John Hamilton. The family of which she is a member (mention of whom is made in the sketch of her sister, Mrs. Minnie Borden, on another page) came to California in an early day and settled among the pioneers of upper San Diego county, where ever since they have been prominent citizens.

WILLIAM H. AULD. One of the most extensive ranchmen in Alamos valley is William H. Auld, who is a member of one of the oldest pioneer families in this section. He operates a thirteen hundred acre ranch, half of which he owns, and is engaged in raising horses and the growing of wheat crops, the latter necessitating the use of a combined harvester. He was born July 2, 1855, in Amador county, Cal., the son of George and Caroline D. (Hodges) Auld, both of whom died in Riverside county, the former July 30, 1901, at the age of eighty-three years, and the latter in 1889, being then sixty-seven years old.

George Auld was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, July 20, 1818, his father, John, having been a native of Scotland. He received his education at the place of his birth, and in the same locality engaged, as a young man, in the general merchandise business. After his marriage, which occurred in the early '50s, he came to California and located in Amador county, from there going to Santa Clara county, and finally, in 1880, he removed to Alamos valley, where he took up land from the government, becoming one of the first settlers here. He built the first house and barns of the place and otherwise improved it, and as time passed increased his holdings by purchase from the railroads until he had acquired the present ranch, which embraces about fourteen hundred acres. Five hundred acres of the land is devoted to farming purposes, the remainder being in pasture. During his life Mr. Auld served on the school board, and from March 3, 1899, until the time of his death filled the office of postmaster at Auld. Four of his five children are still living and have homes in this locality. Eliza F. was educated in Santa Clara county, where she taught school for a time, later engaged in that occupation in Riverside county for five years, and is now housekeeper for her brothers, Henry and Charles, who live on and operate the home place. The last-named son is a member of the Republican county central committee, is a deputy county clerk, and also clerk of the Alamos school district. Miss Auld is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. George F. died at the age of twenty-two years.

William H. Auld received a common-school education in Santa Clara county and came to this locality with his father in 1880. His marriage, which occurred here in 1902, united him with Emily D. Higgins, a native of Missouri, and they have become the parents of two children, Alma C. and George H. Mr. Auld is one of the most substantial and highly respected men of this community and takes an active interest in all matters tending to improve and develop his part of the state.

JAMES MILLIGAN. Occupying a conspicuous position among the agriculturists of Ventura county who have worked their way forward from poverty to independence and through hardships to success, mention should be made of James Milligan, the owner of a finely improved ranch lying three-fourths of a mile south of Oxnard. The farm is valuable by reason of its remarkable fertility as well as its substantial improvements. At the time of purchasing in 1899, Mr. Milligan paid $265 an acre for sixty-three acres and at once devoted the soil to the raising of beans and beets. By subsequent purchase he has increased the ranch to its present dimensions of one hundred and seven acres, all under the plow and lying in one body. An abundance of water is furnished by means of an artesian well with a pumping plant, and with the best of facilities for irrigation it has been possible for the owner to raise as much as twenty-five tons of sugar beets per acre. The cost of bringing the crop to a condition for marketing is far greater than would be supposed by those unfamiliar with the business. At present prices for labor and seed, the cost may be estimated as follows: $2 per acre for seed; $2 per acre for hoeing and cultivating; $2.50 for plowing; $5 for thinning the plants; $10 for loading the crop; and $6 for hauling, a total of $27.50, so that it costs little less than $30 per acre to raise beets and deliver them.

During the ninteenth century John and Jane (Campbell) Milliken, natives of county Antrim, Ireland, immigrated to the United States and settled near Ogdensburg, N. Y., in Lishon township, St. Lawrence county, where the father engaged in farming until his death at sixty-five years, and the mother also died at that place. Both were descended from Scotch ancestors who fled to Ireland during the era of religious persecutions. Their two sons, James and William C. (twins), changed the family name for convenience to Milligan. They were born near Ogdensburg, N. Y., June 29, 1856, and William C. died at Worcester, Mass. James was reared on the home farm and received common-school educational advantages. During April of 1880 he came west as far as Nevada, where he spent one year at Reno. From there he came to California and settled in Ventura county. Being entirely without means, he was obliged to work for wages, and for a few years was employed as a farm hand, rising in time to be foreman of the Dixie Thompson ranch, where he remained for seven years in the successful management of the estate. With the savings of that period he bought thirty-six acres two miles northwest of the present site of Oxnard and began to engage in raising beans, but later he sold the land in order to purchase the larger ranch he now owns. When it is remembered that he came to Ventura county practically penniless and now owns a property valued at many thousands of dollars, it will he conceded that this county offers many opportunities to men of energy, determination and industrious habits.

After coming to Ventura county Mr. Milligan met and married Miss Elizabeth Hutchins, who was born near Des Moines, Iowa, received a fair education, and is a lady of gentle disposition, earnestly devoted to her family and to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she is a faithful member. Their family consists of six children, namely: Estella, Ralph, James, William, Robert and John. While Mr. Milligan has been too deeply engrossed in agricultural affairs to permit of activity in politics, yet he always has kept posted concerning issues before the nation and has given his steadfast allegiance to the Republican party, at one time serving as a member of its county central committee. The only fraternal organization to which he belongs is the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, his membership being with the lodge at Oxnard.

DR. ROBERT W. BROWN is one of the respected and highly esteemed physicians in the Santa Maria valley and is recognized as a man thoroughly well posted in all matters pertaining to his profession; in the short time that he has been practicing in this community he has built up an extensive practice. His fine home in Santa Maria is one of the most comfortable in the village. Dr. Brown was born in London, England, January 27, 1862. His father, Samuel Brown, who was a merchant, died at the age of fifty-two years in his native land, while the mother, who was Miss Jane Palmer before her marriage, and also a native of England, lived to be sixty-five years old. There were eleven children born to this family, seven of whom are still living, the doctor being the only member of the family in California. The mother was a communicant of the Episcopal Church and the son holds a membership in the same denomination.

Dr. Brown received his early education in a private school in London, where he prepared for his collegiate course. Then he went to Canada and entered the Manitoba Medical College at Winnipeg, later taking the examination at the University of Manitoba in the same city. In his studies he pursued a general line in medicine and surgery and later received his degree of Doctor of Medicine. From Canada he came to the United States, in 1893, locating at Glenwood, Wis., where he remained for five years practicing his profession. From there he removed to Nipomo, Cal., where he followed a general practice of medicine until 1905, when he came to Santa Maria. In 1894 his marriage to Miss Anna L. Kidd, a native of Ireland, occurred, and to them have been born two children, Roy and Lucile. Mrs. Brown is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which she is an active worker. Fraternally Dr. Brown affiliates with the Masonic order at Santa Maria and is a member of the Independent Order of Red Men of this place.

ARISTIDES E. STOKES. Years ago, ere white men had discovered the possibilities of the Ramona valley and ere any attempt had been made at permanent settlement or improvement, there came to this region Adolphus Stokes, a native of Los Angeles and a young man eager to acquire large tracts for his stock interests. A tour of inspection convinced him that abundant pasturage could here be obtained for his large herds, and accordingly he bought such properties as were for sale, gradually increasing his possessions until he held the title to seventeen thousand seven hundred and sixty acres in the valley. Upon the land he put up a cabin of adobe and established himself as the first white settler in the valley, taking up the difficult task of improving a homestead remote from human habitation and destitute of means of transportation to the markets. As people began to be attracted to the country he sold off some of his estate, retaining perhaps one-fourth of the entire grant, and at his death, February 21, 1897, at the age of fifty-three years, he left to his children about fifteen hundred acres of the original tract. He built three houses on different parts of his property and conducted the first stage line between Julian and San Diego.

While living in Los Angeles Adolphus Stokes met and married Dolores Olvera, a young Spanish girl, who was born and reared in that city, and who was a member of an old family of Southern California. Her death occurred January 6, 1896, when she was forty-nine years of age. Seven children were born of their union, namely: Concepcion, wife of Ernest S. Howe, mentioned elsewhere in this volume; Aristides E.; Flora, of San Diego; Camilla, who married C. R. Anguisola, of San Diego; Esperanza, wife of William O. Marr, of Coronado; Esther, who died at twenty-two years of age, and Ysabella, wife of Robert Green, of Escondido.

During the residence of the family in Los Angeles Aristides E. Stokes was born February 9, 1872. In early childhood he came to the Ramona valley and here he attended the public schools. Later he was sent to Santa Clara College in order that he might have advantages impossible in the home locality, but ill health prevented him from completing the course and obliged him to relinquish his studies entirely. Upon regaining his strength he entered actively upon agricultural pursuits and carried on a partnership with his father in the raising of stock. After the death of his father he acquired independent interests and now owns a ranch of about two hundred acres near the village of Ramona, where he keeps about fifteen milch cows as well as other stock and carries on grain and stock farming. The neat house on the ranch reflects the tastes and orderly spirit characteristic of Mrs. Stokes, who was formerly Miss Emma J. Libby, being a daughter of an honored pioneer, B. F. Libby, mentioned on another page of this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Stokes were married at San Luis Rey February 14, 1901, and are the parents of four sons, Benjamin Franklin, Edward C., Charles Raymond and Harold L. The family are of the Catholic faith and have their membership in the San Diego church of that denomination. Politically Mr. Stokes favors Democratic principles and always votes for the men and measures of the party. Though not caring for office himself, he has several times consented to serve as school trustee and has filled the office with efficiency and an earnest desire to advance local educational interests. The only fraternal organization with which he has membership is the Ancient Order of Foresters at Ramona, Court No. 8520, in which he has been an active worker for a number of years and to whose charities he is a contributor.

CARROLL E. BORDEN. The family of which this enterprising agriculturist is a leading representative came to San Diego county in an early day and has since given to their adopted locality men and women of high principles of honor, substantial worth and unflagging energy, citizens of inestimable value in the permanent development of the community, and contributors to educational, religious and philanthropic movements. Extended mention of the family appears on another page of this volume, in the sketch of Mrs. Minnie L. Borden, mother of Carroll E. Borden, and an honored resident of the county.

The entire life of Carroll E. Borden thus far has been passed within the limits of his native county of San Diego, where he was born at San Marcos May 13, 1884, and where he received a fair education in the schools of Carlsbad. While still a mere lad he gained a comprehensive knowledge of agriculture as applied to the soil and climate of his home county, hence he was qualified to engage successfully in farm pursuits when, in 1903, he left the parental roof and started out to make his own way in the world. Removing to a tract of five hundred acres in the vicinity of Vista, he erected a farm house, substantial barn and other buildings, and has since given his attention to the maintenance of a high class of improvements on the farm. The raising of grain has been his specialty and the entire tract is under cultivation to cereals.

To his country home Mr. Borden brought a wife in 1905, his marriage occurring on the 7th of June of that year and uniting him with Miss Leonore Beller, daughter of Alexander Beller, a well-known citizen of Carlsbad. In their religious views Mr. and Mrs. Borden support the doctrines of the Christian Church and are contributors to its missionary movements and local charities. The Fraternal Brotherhood numbers Mr. Borden among its members and his interest in its work has been constant. Appreciating the evil wrought by the indiscriminate sale of intoxicating liquors, he has taken a firm stand against saloons and has given his sympathy and co-operation to the prohibition cause. These views he carries into the political field and gives his ballot to Prohibition candidates whenever that party puts a ticket before the voters of his locality.

RICHARD O. HUNT. It has been the good fortune of Mr. Hunt to succeed beyond his expectations in the California enterprises in which he has been interested since his arrival in this state over thirty years ago, and few have more readily adapted themselves to western opportunities for advancement, nor can it be said that his youth held more than ordinary inducements to try to make the best of himself in the environments in which he found himself thrown. Born in Maine April 24, 1832, he was educated in the common schools of his native state and there also learned the trade of carriage making, following this in Worcester, Mass., for some years before removing to Chicago, Ill., in 1853. After spending about three years in the latter city he went for a short time to Racine, Wis., then to Austin, Minn., following his trade with varied success in these different states and cities. December 24, 1863, he enlisted as second lieutenant in Company B, Second Minnesota Cavalry, under General Sulley, and with his regiment went through the Dakotas, participating in several severe battles with Indians. The following November he was promoted to first lieutenant and served until December 1, 1865, when he was mustered out, having given his country two years of efficient service.

Coming to California in 1872, Mr. Hunt opened up a carriage shop in Santa Barbara which is still in operation under the firm name of Hunt's Son & Schuster, his son Charles L., having this business under his supervision. About three years after coming to this state he purchased nearly a thousand acres of land in the Conejo valley, Ventura county, which he rented out for nearly ten years, but being unable to procure or keep satisfactory tenants, he moved upon the ranch himself in 1887, and since that time has made his home here continuously. The greater portion of his land is devoted to raising grain and stock, and a dairy of thirty-five cows. Nearly all of the butter produced from his dairy, averaging about one hundred pounds a week, is sold in Ventura. He has recently erected a large silo upon his ranch 16x31 feet, and fitted it out with modern machinery.

The marriage of Mr. Hunt was solemnized in Chicago, Ill., in 1854, and united him to Mary J. Brown, a native of Oxford, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt have eight children, namely; Walter L., who is in the grocery business in Santa Barbara; Charles L., managing the carriage business founded by his father in Santa Barbara; D. Frank, formerly business manager of the Morning Press of Santa Barbara, but now postmaster of Santa Barbara; Lorin E., a professor at the University of California at Berkeley; Hamlet R., who has a fruit farm at Niles, Cal.; Albert W., a farmer on the home ranch; H. F., who is a blacksmith at Pasadena; and Alice F., the wife of Edward Hunt of Berkeley. Fraternally, Mr. Hunt is a member of Ventura Lodge, F. & A. M., also of the Royal Arch Masons. He is also an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic of Ventura. Ever since coming to his ranch in 1887 he has been a familiar figure in the neighborhood, and his kindly nature and general interest in his surroundings have won him many true friends among those who, like himself, are appreciators of the land resources of this very productive portion of the state. Mrs. Hunt is an estimable woman and shares in the popularity and regard of her husband, fine and deserving traits of character in both having contributed towards making this feeling general among their friends and acquaintances.

Daniel W. J. Murphy

FATHER DANIEL WEBSTER MURPHY. The interests of the Catholic Church in Hollywood are zealously guarded by Rev. Father Murphy, who has had charge of the parish at this place since January 12, 1904.

A native of County Cork, Ireland, born January 12, 1876, he was brought to the United States when a child of four years and was reared and trained in Cambridge, Mass. His initial school training received in the east was continued in Redlands, Cal., whither he came at the age of fourteen years. All of his schooling and training thus far had been with the object of preparing himself for the priesthood, and for the purpose of receiving his credentials he went to Baltimore, Md., in 1894. Cardinal James Gibbons conferred the solemn rites of priesthood upon him in 1899. Thereafter he was first appointed assistant to the Cathedral at Los Angeles, Cal., where he served almost four years. Hollywood at that time was attended from the Old Mission of Los Angeles.

The arrival of Rev. Thomas J. Conaty in the southern diocese, as bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, resulted in transferring Father Murphy to the parish at Hollywood, which has been his sole charge since January, 1904. Mass was first celebrated in this parish May 3, 1769, by the founder of all the California missions, Father Junipero Sera, and upon this date also was celebrated the Holy Wood of the Cross, hence the name of Holywood, or Hollywood, the name which was afterward given to the place by the wife of John L. Beveridge, of this place. When Father Murphy took charge of the parish it numbered only fourteen adult parishioners, and in about three years the membership has increased to seven hundred, including among the number many of the leading citizens in the surrounding country. The neighboring towns of Colgrove, Sherman and Prospect Park are included in the Hollywood parish. During 1905-06 Father Murphy built the church at St. Victor, at a cost of $10.000, this being the gift of Victor Ponet, the Belgian consul at Los Angeles. He also erected the present church edifice soon after his removal to this parish, purchasing one and a half acres of ground upon which the church was later erected at a cost of $29,200.

Closely associated with the parish at Hollywood is the Immaculate Heart College, which was founded by the sisters of the Immaculate Heart, under the auspices of Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Conaty. The site of the college is one of the most beautiful spots to be found in this part of the state, in the midst of undulating foothills. The building is a brick and concrete structure of late mission type, erected at a cost of $160,000, surrounded by fourteen acres of land. The college is in charge of Mother Superior Mary Magdalene, and sixty-five sisters. Instruction in the college is divided into three main departments, high school, college, and department of music, art and dramatic art. Besides giving instruction to both resident and day pupils, ladies are here trained for the sisterhood.

Not only has Father Murphy been an important factor in the religious life of Hollywood, but his influence has also been felt with equal force in the secular affairs of the town and surrounding country. As a member of the board of trade he has taken a special interest in the work of street improvement, his efforts along this line being productive of much good. The cause of temperance is another matter which lies close to his heart, and his influence among the young of his parish and elsewhere in this direction is widespread and deep. Father Murphy is one of the charter members of Hollywood Club and is chaplain of the Knights of Columbus, of Los Angeles, the largest body of laymen in that city. During their general convention in June, 1905, they presented the church with a beautiful stained glass window representing the landing of Columbus and the first Catholic service in America, October 12, 1492. Father Murphy's parents, John S. and Nora (Mahoney) Murphy, also natives of County Cork, are still living, making their home in Redlands, Cal. An uncle of John S. Murphy, Daniel Murphy, of Hobarttown, New Zealand, is the oldest archbishop of the Catholic church in the world.

G. G. BUNDY. Ere the present prosperity of Southern California had taken definite form except in the visions of sanguine and optimistic citizens, Nathan Bundy, a native of Ohio, sought a field of employment in this part of the country and identified himself with the region which his son, G. G., has regarded as his lifelong home. For a brief period during his early manhood Nathan Bundy had been a resident of Iowa and from there he returned to Ohio to choose a helpmate, his wife being Harriet Smith, a member of a pioneer family of Ohio and a native of that state. Accompanied by his wife he returned to Iowa and there followed the painter's trade. Meanwhile he heard much concerning California and was induced by flattering reports to remove to the Pacific coast, a decision he has had no reason to regret. April 30, 1876, he arrived at Santa Monica, which then was an insignificant hamlet on the beach, whose attractions as yet had not drawn hither a large population of resorters and health-seekers. In addition to engaging at his trade he became interested in the buying and selling of real estate and enjoyed considerable profits during the progress of the boom. After having made Santa Monica his home for more than twenty years, in 1898 he removed to Los Angeles and now resides at No. 1766 West Twenty-fourth street, on the corner of Congress street.

During the residence of the family at Ames, Story county, Iowa, G. G. Bundy was born March 21, 1873, and he was three years of age at the time of coming to California. Primarily educated in the Santa Monica grammar school, he had the supplementary advantage of attendance at the high school of that city, graduating with the class of 1895, the first to receive diplomas from that institution. After leaving school he took up the oil business, which he followed for six years, and then turned his attention to the management of his livery business, the Santa Monica stables, and to the buying and selling of real estate, in which he has met with encouraging success. In politics he always gives his allegiance to the Republican party and takes a warm interest in matters pertaining to municipal and state welfare. The young lady whom he selected as his wife was Miss Adele A. Smith, who was born and educated in San Francisco, but came to Santa Monica in girlhood and was living here at the time of their marriage. Two children, a daughter and son, bless their union. The family occupy a distinctive position in local society and number a host of friends among the people of their home town.

NATHANIEL McCLAIN, a pioneer rancher of Los Angeles county, is a citizen who stands high in the esteem of all who know him, both for his personal qualities of character and his business ability. He was born in Utah September 29, 1856, a son of Francis McClain; the latter was a native of Kentucky, who emigrated in young manhood, crossing the plains to Nevada in 1850, and engaging in the mines of that section. He met with considerable success in his efforts and acquired independence. Later he went to Utah and passed many years, finally locating again in Nevada, where he spent the ensuing seven years. At that time he was engaged in teaming to the mines. Finally locating in Los Angeles county he engaged in farming and stock-raising until his death, which occurred in 1881, at the age of forty-eight years. He was a man of energy and ability and accumulated a property of one hundred and sixty acres which was divided among his children. Politically he was an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party and gave every effort toward the advancement of these interests. While a resident of Utah he took part in many Indian wars, being a resident of the state at the time of the Mountain Meadow massacre. His wife was formerly Lovina Green, a native of Illinois, whose death occurred in 1900, at the age of fifty-six years. Both himself and wife are members of the Latter Day Saints Church.

One of the family of nine children, all of whom are living in Los Angeles save one son who is now deceased, Nathaniel McClain spent the years of his boyhood in various locations, among them Nevada and Oregon and California, coming to Los Angeles in 1869 and here completing his education in a private institution. At the age of twenty years he began ranching for himself, following his early training along this line. He has made a success of his work, accumulating considerable means and at the same time building up for himself a place of esteem among his fellow-citizens. In 1877 he established home ties through his marriage with Miss Martha Vick, a native of California and the stepdaughter of James S. Hart, who came to California in an early day and who is still living at the age of seventy-seven years. Mrs. Elizabeth Hart, the mother of Mrs. McClain, is also an old pioneer of the state. With her parents she started from St. Joseph, Mo., in 1849, traveling by ox-train, but both her parents died before reaching their destination. Arriving in the state early in the spring of 1850, Mrs. McClain thereafter made her home in Sacramento. She is still living, at the age of seventy years on the homestead in Green Meadows, surrounded by her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Her experiences in California during the gold-seeking times make her an interesting conversationalist.

After his marriage Mr. McClain located upon an eighty-acre tract belonging to his father-in-law, where he is still living, also owning at the present writing twenty acres on Manchester avenue, all of which is devoted to the raising of grain. Mr. and Mrs. McClain became the parents of seven children, as follows: Irena L., Viola L., James N., Arline C., Leona N., Inez N. and Evelyn N. The second daughter, Viola L., became the wife of A. G. Williams, and at her death February 9, 1906, at the age of twenty-three years, left three children, Arville Guy, Evelyn Viola and James Wesley. Since the death of their mother these children have made their home with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. McClain. The youngest child James Wesley, survived his mother seven months, passing away September 2, 1906, at two years of age. The only son of Mr. and Mrs. McClain, James N., married Miss Martha Barnhill, who is a talented musician, and they are the proud parents of one daughter. Nathaniel McClain belongs to the Fraternal Aid Association of Los Angeles, and politically he is a stanch Democrat. His religious belief conforms with the doctrines of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, though he is not an active member of that body, while his wife's views coincide with the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church, although not an active member of the Church.

GEORGE W. WISEMAN. Ever since coming to the state in 1893 Mr. Wiseman has been associated in business with his brother, Haldon R., and since 1904 they have owned and managed the principal book and stationery store in Sawtelle. The father, Abner Wiseman, was a native of Kentucky, born in Estill county, March 7, 1845, and was therefore about sixteen years old at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war. His youthful spirit needed no urging to prompt him to enlist, and before long his name was enrolled in the Eighth Kentucky Infantry. After a faithful service extending over four years and six months he met with a severe accident resulting from the overturning of an ammunition wagon. This unfitted him for further service, and indeed it was ten years before he recovered from the effects of the injury sufficiently to resume business. Purchasing eighty acres of land in Estill county, Ky., he carried on farming there for about ten years, at the end of this time removing to Dent county, Md., for two years engaging in the iron works there, burning wood for charcoal. For a short time he was engaged in the same business in Oswego, Ore., going from there to Walla Walla, Wash., where for twelve years he carried on agricultural pursuits. Advancing years, however, made it advisable for him to discontinue active duties and in 1894 he sold out his interest in Washington and entered the soldier's home at Santa Monica. While on furlough he visits his sons in Sawtelle. Politically he is a Republican. The Woodmen of the World number him among their members, as do also the comrades of the John A. Martin Grand Army post at Sawtelle. Mrs. Wiseman was before her marriage Mary Ellen Obney, and she, too, was born in Estill county, Ky., December 28, 1847. By her marriage with Mr. Wiseman six children were born, as follows: Sophie Anna, who died in Walla Walla, Wash., in 1894; George W., our subject; Martha J., Mrs. J. R. Armstrong; Joel S., who married Anna Shurtz; Haldon R., who is in partnership with his brother in Sawtelle, and Thomas B., who married Alice Fletcher.

George W. Wiseman was next to the oldest of the family and was born in Estill county, Ky., February 17, 1870. When the family located in Washington he was still a young lad and in the schools of Walla Walla he gained his first knowledge of books. This training he later supplemented by a business course, which he soon put into practice by establishing himself in the grain business, following this for a number of years. After conducting a farm in that state for two years he came to Los Angeles county, and in Santa Monica established a dairy business with his brother, Haldon R., and in an incredibly short time they found themselves in possession of one of the largest dairy industries in this part of Los Angeles county. The same spirit which prompted their father to lay aside his farm implements and enter the service of his country at the time of the Civil war led the brothers to dispose of their flourishing business and enlist in the Spanish-American war. During their three years service they were in several skirmishes and one engagement, but unlike their father they escaped injury. It was after the return from the war that they came to Sawtelle and bought out the book store of which they are now the proprietors, and their success in the years in which they have been residents here prove them to be men of push and perseverance and well worthy the success which has followed their efforts. Politically they are defenders of Republican principles. George W. Wiseman is interested in fraternal matters to some extent, holding membership in the Odd Fellows order and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

DAVID BRUCE. As one of the progressive ranchmen of Arroyo Grande, David Bruce is an earnest advocate of every enterprise that tends toward the upbuilding of his community. A fine gentleman, successful, careful and conscientious in all of his business transactions, it goes without saying that he is well thought of by everyone with whom he comes in contact. His ranch comprises forty-two acres of as fertile land as there is in the valley, and it is devoted to a variety of crops, including dewberries, beans and lemons. The family residence is a commodious structure, and the entire property is up-to-date and in excellent condition.

Mr. Bruce is a native of Ireland, born May 10, 1860, and there he received the most of his education. At the age of sixteen years, in 1876, he immigrated to Canada, and engaged in farming there for six years before coming to California in 1882. His father before him was a farmer in Ireland and the lessons of careful industry and attention to details which the father instilled in the minds of his sons was a part of Mr. Bruce's education. This was supplemented with the adoption of the most up-to-date methods of ranching in this country, and from the time of his arrival in California in 1882 he has met with great success in all of his undertakings. He first settled at Stockton, in San Joaquin county, and ranched there for four years, when, in 1886, he removed to Marine, where for two years he had charge of a large dairy ranch of twenty-two hundred acres. From there he went to Cholame and engaged in ranching and grain farming for sixteen years, having acquired title to three hundred and twenty acres, which he sold when he came to Arroyo Grande and purchased the place upon which he now resides with his family. In 1904 Mr. Bruce married Emily Boxall, who immigrated to this country from her native country, England, and to them has been born one child, John Lester Bruce.

Politically Mr. Bruce is a strong supporter of the principles embodied in the platform of the Republican party, and takes an active interest in all matters affecting the community, state and country in which he lives. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which they support with their means and their labors and in all things they fill an important place in the life of Arroyo Grande. As to his antecedents, both parents of Mr. Bruce were natives of Ireland, the father, James Bruce, having died there at the age of seventy-seven years, and the mother, Mary (Crawford) Bruce, lived to be one year older than her husband. The family consisted of six children, all of whom now live in Ireland except two, Joseph Bruce, a resident of Mendocino county, Cal., and David Bruce, the subject of this sketch.

WILLIAM HARVEY HOWELL. One and a half miles west of Lemon, and not far from the Fairview school house, lies the sixty-five acre ranch owned and supervised by Mr. Howell. A combination of circumstances makes this without question one of the richest and most productive ranches in this part of Los Angeles county, its rich black loam taking first rank among its superior advantages. Thirty acres of the tract are in walnuts, twenty in alfalfa (although this latter tract is being replaced with walnuts), and the remainder is in grapes and deciduous fruits, the whole being irrigated by a pumping plant.

The earliest ancestor of the Howell family of whom we have any definite information is the grandfather, James Howell, who was born in Illinois but early in life settled as a pioneer farmer in the adjoining state of Iowa. There he followed the peaceful life of the agriculturist throughout the remainder of his life and reared a family to lives of usefulness. Among his children was G. W. Howell, who was born in White Oak, Mahaska county, Iowa, and now makes his home on a farm in the same locality. His wife, formerly Martha Cox, was also a native of White Oak, Iowa, her father, Isaac Cox, settling in that commonwealth during the early history of its settlement. three children, all sons, were born to this worthy couple, William H. being the eldest of the number. He was born September 1, 1873, on the parental homestead in Iowa and was partially reared in that state, but the removal of his parents to Kansas in 1885 brought him one step nearer to the west and the scene of his present labors. First in Washington, Kans., and later in Osborne, that state, he attended the public schools, and it was during the family's residence in that state that the home was saddened by the death of the mother.

When twenty years of age, in 1893, William H. Howell struck out for himself, his decision to come to California being influenced no doubt from the fact that an uncle, James Staples, an old forty-niner, was living in this state. Going to Dutch Flat, where his relative lived, he remained there a short time and then went to Truckee, where for six months he was in the employ of the Truckee Lumber Company. From Nevada county he came to the southern part of the state in 1895, first to Los Angeles and then to Pomona, in the latter place following the cement business for a time. Going back to Los Angeles, he held a position with a cold storage company for a short time, and the following year, 1896, came to Lemon and settled upon a rented ranch. Two years later he purchased his present ranch of sixty-five acres in close proximity to Lemon. A pumping plant on the ranch not only supplies an abundance of water for his own use, but he is enabled to irrigate neighboring ranches also. Everything about the ranch bears the stamp of the owner's personality, the residence, barns, fences and other appointments being kept in perfect repair.

In Spadra Mr. Howell was married to Miss Grace Collins, who was born in Santa Ana, the daughter of D. H. Collins, of Spadra, of whom more may be learned by referring to his sketch, which is given elsewhere in this volume. Two children have brightened the home life of Mr. and Mrs. Howell, Burl and Hazel. Mrs. Howell is a member of the Christian Church of Pomona, toward the support of which Mr. Howell contributes, this also being true of all worthy causes that are brought before his notice. He is a school trustee of the Fairview district, and is secretary and a director of the Walnut Fruit Growers' Association of Walnut. The only fraternal organization which claims Mr. Howell's membership is the Modern Woodmen of America, belonging to the Camp at Lemon.

S. Heller

SAMUEL HELLER. Comparatively brief as was the duration of Mr. Heller's life, within the narrow limits of the years allotted to him he accomplished much for the advancement of his personal interests and the upbuilding of his home city. Always public-spirited and active in promoting the educational and commercial development of Long Beach, he was intimately associated with various movements tending toward the permanent welfare of the town. At the time of his demise he was officiating for the second term as president of the school board, during which service he had been an influential factor in advancing the interests of the public schools and had championed with especial earnestness the plan of building all schoolhouses two stories in height, besides favoring many other ideas looking toward the development of the schools.

A native of New York City, born July 24, 1863, Mr. Heller was a son of Bernard and Lena (Freud) Heller, natives of Austria, who came to America in early life and settled in New York City, where the father engaged in the retail furniture business. After the death of his wife he left New York City and during 1883 settled in Ohio, taking up the insurance business in Toledo, where he still makes his home. Of the four sons and four daughters comprising the family Samuel was the eldest son. His education was begun in the public schools of New York City and completed in a business college in Michigan, where he settled in 1884. After leaving college he took up the business of cigar-manufacturing and later conducted a department store at St. Johns. On disposing of his interests in Michigan he came to California in 1899 and settled in Long Beach, where he became interested in the buying and selling of real estate. In 1901 he laid out the Heller and Hayes tract of twenty acres, and also added to the city the Rose tract of seven and one-half acres.

When the project was first formulated for the organization of the American National Bank of Long Beach Mr. Heller became an enthusiastic advocate of the plan and assisted in the founding of the institution, in which he afterward officiated as a director. In addition he was a director of the First National Bank, a director of the Long Beach Building and Loan Association and a director of the Long Beach Hospital Association, all of which institutions, along the different lines of their usefulness, have proved of inestimable value to the permanent growth of the town While working with keen foresight and shrewd discrimination for the advancement of his personal interests and the well-being of the city, he found leisure to participate in fraternal activities and also to keep in touch with local and national political affairs, in which he supported Republican principles. While living in Michigan he was a leading member of the Tent of the Maccabees at St. Johns, Clinton county, also the lodge and encampment, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in the same town. The Modern Woodmen of America numbered him among their working members, as did also the Masonic fraternity, in which he affiliated with Long Beach Lodge, F. & A. M., Long Beach Chapter, R. A. M., Long Beach Commandery, K. T., Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles, and the Order of the Eastern Star, at Long Beach, in which he officiated as past patron, his widow also being a member of the latter order. When he passed away, July 28, 1905, it was felt that one of the leading men of Long Beach had been lost to the town, and in his departure the activities in which he had participated suffered an irreparable loss. The estate which he left is administered by his wife, who continues to reside at the home place, No. 707 Cedar avenue, having with her the three children of the family, Anna, Merrill J. and Lillian E. Mrs Heller was born in Austria and bore the maiden name of Rosa Heinman; at an early age she came to the United States and settled at Harrison, Mich., where she remained until after her marriage. Since his death his widow has carried out the plans he had made in the building of the Cosmopolitan Club building and the laying out of the Willow Park tract of Long Beach.

JAMES M. WOODS. An industrious, thriving, and well-to-do agriculturist near the town of Escondido, James M. Woods is proprietor of a fine homestead in Woods' valley, which was named in honor of his father, Goolsby Woods, an honored pioneer of this section of San Diego county. His ranch, in regard to its appointments, compares favorably with any in the locality, its neat and orderly appearance manifesting to the most casual observer the thrift and care of the owner, and bearing testimony to his industry and good management. A native born son of California, his birth occurred January 18, 1868, in Yolo county, where he lived until ten years of age.

A native of Missouri, Goolsby Woods married the widow L. I. Belshe, also a native of that state. They migrated across the plains by wagon and ox teams in '49 to California, where Mr. Woods engaged in mining. After living in Sonoma county for a time they moved to Yolo county, bought a ranch, and after operating it finally sold out on account of his wife's health and in 1878 moved to San Diego county. Here he continued farming until his death, which occurred on his ranch August 16, 1897, at the age of seventy-three. Five of his children survive him. This part of the country was so thinly settled when he came here that he did not deem it worth while to throw his time away on so small a public office as justice of peace or constable. He was a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Christian Church.

Coming with his parents to San Diego county in 1878, James M. Woods was educated in the district schools, and from early boyhood assisted his father in the various labors incidental to pioneer farm life, attaining wisdom in agricultural lore. When ready to begin work for himself he selected the vocation with which he was most familiar, buying eighty acres of land near Escondido, and has since been actively and satisfactorily employed in general ranching. He raises grain and hay to some extent, but makes a specialty of raising poultry and of dairying, selling chickens, milk and butter in the town, and receiving for his products the highest market price.

November 11, 1891, James M. Woods married Annie C. Jacoby, who was born in Burlington, Iowa, August 14, 1873, and came to California in 1883. They are the parents of four children, namely: Susie, Orpha, Ellis and Inez. Politically Mr. Woods is a steadfast Democrat, but has never aspired to public office.

LAWRENCE A. CREELMAN. A pioneer resident, prominent business man, and member of the San Diego city council is Lawrence A. Creelman, who has been active in the development and upbuilding of this city for more than twenty years past. He was born May 4, 1853, in Richibucto, Kent county, New Brunswick, of Scotch parentage, the families on both sides of the house having been old settlers in Canada. The projenitors on the paternal side came from the north of Ireland to Nova Scotia, where James R. Creelman was born. He was a tanner by trade and musician by profession and taught all of his life. In 1866 he removed with his family to Collingwood, Ontario, later returning to New Brunswick, and his death occurred in Pointe du Chêne. His wife, in maidenhood Isabella Patterson, was born in Pictou, Nova Scotia, and died in Ontario. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. There were fourteen children in the family, and one son, W. F. W., enlisted in a Tennessee regiment during the Spanish war, his death occurring later in the Philippine Islands.

It was in the common schools of New Brunswick and the Collingwood Collegiate Institute that Lawrence A. Creelman received his education, and when his school days were over he learned the tanner's trade in Collingwood, following it for ten years in Ontario. He then came to the United States and was employed at the carpenter's trade, bridge and construction work successively by the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railroad and the Northern Pacific, spending two years on the Yellowstone division of the latter. Returning to Ontario he resumed work at tanning for eighteen months, and in 1884 worked on bridges for the Canadian Pacific in British Columbia. The following year he came to California, spent one year in the redwoods of Mendocino county and a like period on a ranch in Yuba county, in 1887 locating permanently in San Diego. The succeeding fifteen years he was occupied as a conductor on the street railways of this city, in 1902 giving up that work to engage in business for himself, and has ever since been proprietor of the Model bath house here. The cement plunge is 50x60 feet in dimensions and is filled with sea water, which is heated to the proper degree for comfortable bathing, and there are also twenty-five tubs with fresh water, each room being fitted with shower appliances. The bath house is the largest and oldest established in the city, and is located at the foot of Sixth street.

Fraternally Mr. Creelman was made a Mason in 1892, in Silver Gate Lodge No. 296, F. & A. M., of which he is past master; has attained the thirty-second degree in the Consistory; belongs to the Order of Eastern Star; was made an Odd Fellow in San Diego Lodge No. 153, I. O. O. F., and has served in the capacity of noble grand; belongs to the Encampment, in which he has passed all the offices; holds membership in the Rebekah lodge, and also in the Independent Order of Foresters. He was married in San Diego to Miss May Chittenden, a native of Illinois, their union being blessed in the birth of two children, James and Charles. Mrs. Creelman is a member of the Christian Church. She affiliates with a number of fraternal orders, is a member, and was for several years treasurer, of Southern Star Chapter No. 96, O. E. S.; and held the same office in Silver Gate Rebekah Lodge No. 141 for a long period. Politically Mr. Creelman is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and in 1903 he was elected as councilman from the sixth ward of San Diego, a flattering endorsement of his services in the governing body having been accorded him in 1905 by a re-election to the office. He is a member of the Union League Club and in every matter of social and civic interest to the community in which he lives lends a hearty and enthusiastic support.

GUSTAV BRELIN. Not a few of the men prominent in varied departments of the building business in San Diego have come from the far distant domain of Scandinavia, and among these may be mentioned Gustav Brelin, who has been a resident of Southern California since 1887 and of San Diego since 1890. Born in Dalsland, Sweden, April 8, 1864, he was the eldest among four children, three of whom are still living. His father, Andrew, was a native of the same locality and owned and operated the homestead known as Brene, but in 1872 he crossed the ocean to America, settling at Ashtabula, Ohio, where he remained until death. The wife and mother, Breta Kalin, was a native of the same locality in Sweden and a member of an old family of agriculturists.

While still quite young in years Gustav Brelin saw his father depart for the new world, and in 1879 he joined him in Ashtabula, Ohio, where he studied English in the common schools. In 1881 he secured a position on a lake vessel and for two years led the life of a sailor, but in 1884 abandoned that occupation, went to St. Paul, Minn., and began an apprenticeship to the plasterer's trade. On the expiration of his time he worked as a journeyman. In 1887 he came to California, located in Los Angeles and took contracts for plastering, remaining there until 1890, when he removed to San Diego. For three years he followed journeyman work in this city and then began to take contracts, in which line he continues to the present time, the firm of Brelin & Walker being one of the largest of its kind in the place. Since forming the connection with his present partner in 1894 he has built up a large trade and has been employed to take charge of much of the plastering in business structures and residences. Among their contracts may be mentioned those for the Keating and Granger blocks, the Sefton block, St. Joseph's Sanitarium, and Pickwick theater, as well as various important contracts in Coronado, National City, Lajolla and Pacific Beach. During the busy season employment is furnished to eighteen workmen, through whose labor the partners are aided in filling their contracts with promptness and accuracy.

The marriage of Mr. Brelin and Miss Carrie Anderson, a native of Ostrejotland, was solemnized in Los Angeles, and has been blessed by the birth of three sons, Hilding, Ebbe and Gustav. The family occupy their new and modern residence on the corner of University and Richmond streets. After coming to San Diego Mr. Brelin was made a Mason in Silver Gate Lodge, F. & A. M., also identified himself with the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, the Cabrillo Club, the Master Builders' Association, and the Scandinavian Society, of which latter he is a charter member. During 1884 he was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at St. Paul, and now holds membership with the lodge of the order in San Diego. Although interested and active in these various organizations, his attention is devoted principally to the details of his business and he is justly proud of the reputation acquired by his firm for reliable and honest workmanship.

PHILIP HANF. Among the residents of Cajon, San Bernardino county, Philip Hanf is well known, as for ten years he has supplied the general wants of the public and has also accommodated travelers. His genial manners and upright business methods have gained for him a large circle of friends, both in business and social connections.

A native of Germany, Philip Hanf was born in Bavaria November 4, 1857, his parents also being natives of the Fatherland. Educated in the good schools for which Germany is noted, Mr. Hanf lost no time in preparing himself for the business world as soon as his school days were over, thus displaying an ambitious spirit which is bound to bring success. Besides learning the baker's trade he also learned the butcher's trade, and it was with this preparation that he set foot on American soil in 1883. His first six years in this country were spent in New York City, but as is almost always the case with those who seek our shores he finally gravitated toward the west. Going to Washington he there resumed work at his trades, which he followed continuously for six years, after which he went to Los Angeles and spent one year. With the experience of thirteen years in this country to his credit he came to Cajon Pass in 1896 and purchased forty acres of land, to which he later added a like amount, taking up the latter from the government. At the time he removed to his new purchase there was little in the way of appearance to encourage its cultivation, for the land was wild and entirely covered with brush. Nothing daunted, however, he cleared it and set out fruit trees, which he has tended and cared for until he now has a fine orchard, comprising about one hundred and seventy-five trees, which include plums, peaches, cherries and apples. Before his orchard was in bearing condition he opened a general store upon his ranch, erecting the building at the time he built the family residence. He keeps on hand a choice supply of groceries and provisions of all kinds, besides dry goods, and also has accommodation for the traveling public. It is his intention to enlarge his orchard by setting out about three thousand more trees, besides grape vines, and in the future devote his time almost exclusively to the management of his ranch.

In New York City, September 28, 1884, the year following his immigration to the United States, Mr. Hanf was married to Fannie Moochcan, who was born in Saxony, Germany, and came to the United States when twenty-four years of age. She has borne her husband four children, one of whom, George, died when fifteen months old. The eldest child, Joseph, is a resident of Seattle, Wash.; Gussie is now at home, having recently graduated from the Los Angeles Business College, and Andrew is also at home.

JAMES HARRISON CLARK, M. D. Numbered among the more prominent, influential and esteemed residents of Valley Center is J. H. Clark, M. D., who is actively identified with the best and highest interests of this locality, being a prosperous agriculturist and a well known physician. He has, generally speaking, been successful through life, and giving his best efforts to whatever he has attempted has attained a fine position, professionally, socially and financially, among his fellow-men. A man of keen intelligence, excellent judgment and sound sense, his advice and counsel are often sought, and invariably taken. He is generous and kind-hearted, doing good whenever opportunity occurs, and freely giving professional aid and comfort to the poor and needy. A son of Robert Clark, he was born, December 3, 1841, in Cooper county, Mo., where he grew to man's estate.

Born and brought up in Kentucky, Robert Clark was employed in both agricultural and mechanical pursuits during the greater part of his life. Becoming a pioneer of Missouri, he settled in Cooper county, where from the forest-covered land he cleared and improved a homestead, on which he was busily employed until his death, in 1852. He was a man of some prominence in the community in which he settled, and an active Whig in his political affiliations. He married Rhoda Fox, also a native of Kentucky; she survived him, dying in Missouri in 1859. She was a woman of Christian character, and a consistent member of the Baptist church.

Brought up on the home farm, James H. Clark laid a substantial foundation for his future education in the common schools of Cooper county. As a boy he showed a natural aptitude for study, and his education was subsequently advanced by an attendance at the Kemper Select school and at a preparatory college. With two friends, Mr. Clark came with mule teams across the plains in 1864, having an enjoyable trip. Locating in Yuba City, he taught school there for two years. He was in the meantime appointed superintendent of the Sutter county schools, and having filled out the unexpired term of Dr. E. B. Dunwell, was elected to the same office, and served in all about seven years. During this time Mr. Clark read medicine, and was also employed in the drug business. In July, 1870, he entered Toland Medical College, San Francisco, and after completing the first year's course, in October, 1871, became a student in Bellevue Hospital Medical College, at New York City, graduating from that institution with the degree of M. D. in March, 1872. Returning to Yuba City he was there engaged in the practice of his profession for two years. In 1874, his health failing, he went to Colusa county, locating at Leesville, where he sold goods and practiced medicine for four years. Settling near Los Angeles in 1878, he with others purchased portions of three grants of land at Azusa, but the investment proved disastrous. The ensuing four years he was engaged in ranching at Norwalk, Los Angeles county, and also followed his profession to some extent. Coming to San Diego county in 1885, the doctor purchased his present ranch of two hundred and forty acres, lying near Valley Center, and has now one of the best and most productive grain, stock and poultry farms in this part of the country. He has continued his labors here as a practitioner, and is known far and wide as an able and skilful physician. Politically his sympathies are with the Socialists and for three terms, while a resident of Sutter county, he served as deputy county clerk. Fraternally he is a member of Enterprise Lodge No. 70, F. & A. M., of Yuba City and religiously he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

In the spring of 1872, in Missouri, Dr. Clark married Mattie A. Robinson, who was born in that state, a daughter of Col. L. W. Robinson, who was very influential in the affairs of his state, having served as representative to the state legislature and as state senator. Of the union of Dr. and Mrs. Clark seven children have been born, namely, Ida De Wilson of Escondido; William Robinson; Mary Rhoda, a teacher in the public schools; Hallie Lewis; James Harrison; and Horace L. and Martha Amanda, twins.

T J Moffett

THOMAS JEFFERSON MOFFETT. A well-to-do agriculturist of Los Angeles County, and an extensive and successful apiarist, Thomas J. Moffett is prosperously engaged in his congenial occupation on one of the most pleasant homesteads in the vicinity of Sherman. His ranch contains one hundred and sixty acres of land, a large part of which is under cultivation, and with its comfortable and convenient set of farm buildings is attractive to the passer-by, giving visible evidence of the enterprise and thrift of the owner. A son of James S. Moffett, he was born, July 4, 1840 in Pope county, Ark., near Dover.

Born and reared in Tennessee, James S. Moffett migrated from there to Arkansas about 1832, taking up land, and being employed as a tiller of the soil until the breaking out of the Mexican war. When that was declared he offered his services to his country, and being made captain of Company A, Arkansas Mounted Rifles, commanded by Colonel Yale, served until his death in San Antonio, Tex., where he received a soldier's burial. He married Eupha Hamilton, who was born in Tennessee, of excellent New England stock, some of her ancestors having crossed the Atlantic in the Mayflower. She remained in Arkansas until 1852, when she came across the plains in an ox-team train to California, bringing her seven children with her. Locating in Ione, Amador county, she lived there until marrying again, when she came with her husband to Los Angeles, in which city she made her home until her death, at the age of seventy-two years.

A wide-awake, active little hustler of twelve years when he came with the family to California, Thomas J. Moffett worked for about a year as a farm hand, and then, although but thirteen years old, began placer mining on his own account. He was subsequently variously employed in Amador county, working in the mines, hotel or saw-mill until 1857, when as a result of the Frazer river excitement, he went there and prospected for one season. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1868, he rented land in this vicinity for two or three years, and in its management met with encouraging success. Purchasing then one hundred and sixty acres or railroad land, he improved the ranch on which he has since lived, and in addition to carrying it on in an able manner has several seasons rented large tracts of near-by land in order that he might enlarge his agricultural operations. He is very practical, seizing every offered opportunity for advancing his interests, and besides carrying on general farming in a scientific manner, has made a specialty of bee raising, having at times had as many as two hundred and twenty stands, although at the present time his apiary contains but fifty stands.

January 29, 1887, Mr. Moffett married Annie G. Cottle, who was born in Missouri, and came with her parents to California at an early day. Politically Mr. Moffett supports the principles of the Democratic party by voice and vote although in local affairs he is extremely liberal.

AMBROSE WALSH. Closely identified with the agricultural interests of San Diego county is Ambrose Walsh, who is pleasantly situated in Valley Center, where he is profitably engaged in general farming, managing his affairs with ability and success. A resident of California since nine years of age, he is the son of one of those brave and hardy pioneers who dauntlessly pushed his way into a wild, uncultivated country, and has left behind him a record for steadiness of purpose and persistent industry of which his descendants may well be proud. He is a twin brother of Austin Walsh, in whose sketch, which appears on another page of this volume, may be found a brief personal history of his parents.

Born January 29, 1845, in Atchison county, Mo., Ambrose Walsh lived there until nine years of age. In 1854 he came with the family to the Pacific coast, crossing the plains with ox teams, having a long and dangerous trip. The Indians, who for centuries had held the intervening country, were not pleased with the approach of the pale-faced strangers, and harassed the travelers in many ways, stealing their cattle when opportunity offered, even going so far as to massacre, at Mountain Meadow, the train immediately preceding them. Arriving in California, the Walsh family settled in Contra Costa county, where Ambrose, in common with the other children, received such education as was afforded by the district schools. In 1868, the family removed to San Diego county, locating in Mission Valley. Six years later, in 1874, the son Ambrose, starting in life for himself, took up a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres at Valley Center, where he has since resided. From the wild land he has improved a valuable ranch, his energetic and judicious toil being well rewarded, his farm being one of the best in its improvements and appointments of any in the vicinity, bearing visible evidence of his agricultural skill and wise management.

In 1883 Mr. Walsh married Hannah Shelby, a native of California, and they are the parents of two children, Lawrence, a farmer, who married Clara Borden, a native of this state and daughter of Jefferson S. Borden; and Mary, residing in San Diego. Politically Mr. Walsh is a firm supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and for six years has served as school trustee. Religiously he is a member of the Catholic church at Escondido.

REV. W. E. JACOB. Should any writer of future years give to the Episcopal Church a complete record of the growth and progress of that denomination in Southern California prominent mention would be made of the life and pioneer service of Rev. W. E. Jacob, who since 1885 has been identified with the spiritual upbuilding of San Diego county and meanwhile has accomplished much in behalf of the permanent religious and moral development of this part of the state. Thoroughly American in sentiment and patriotic spirit, he is nevertheless a citizen of our country by adoption only, and was born in Queens county, Ireland, April 27, 1843, the son of a physician and the grandson of a physician, both of whom were men of exceptional mental attainments and of high standing in their profession. Among the eighteen children comprising the family of Dr. John and Charlotte Jacob he was the fifteenth in order of birth and received a thorough classical education, auspiciously commenced in Dublin schools, and afterward prosecuted in the schools of England and France. Before leaving Ireland for the United States he married Miss Jane Rebecca, daughter of Rev. Samuel Madden, a clergyman in the Church of England. The only child of their union is a daughter, Rebecca Charlotte, who is now the wife of Douglas Garden of South Oceanside.

Coming to the United States in 1875, after a sojourn of a brief period in New York City, Rev. Mr. Jacob removed to Nebraska and in Omaha, that state, he was ordained to the Episcopal ministry in an impressive ceremony conducted by Bishop Clarkson. When he came to California in 1885 he established his headquarters at Encinitas, San Diego county, from which point he traveled throughout the entire county and into neighboring districts in the interests of the Episcopal Church. Not only did he hold the first services ever held by the denomination in Encinitas, but he did the same elsewhere. Some of his charges were twenty-five miles distant from his home, but his eagerness to preach the Gospel and establish missions overcame his bodily fatigue, and he was ever ready to respond to an appeal by those who were remote from churches. The congregations at Del Mar, Encinitas, Merle, Carlsbad, Oceanside, Escondido, Fallbrook, San Luis Rey and Murietta were established and organized under his supervision, and the first services in each town were held by him, after which he remained in charge until the missions were able to engage a pastor independently. It was his custom to visit each congregation once in two weeks, and in order to facilitate this work he kept a stable of six horses. To this day he is a lover of good horses and now has one of the finest to be found in all San Diego county. The majority of professional men allow themselves a hobby as a relaxation from the responsibilities of their life work, and his hobby has been a love for horses: few are better judges than he of a fine animal, and at a glance he detects weak points or good qualities that might remain unnoticed by a less careful observer.

For a time after 1897 Rev. Mr. Jacob had charge of the Episcopal Church at San Pedro and his wife assisted as superintendent of the Sunday-school and leader of the choir. In addition he founded a mission at Terminal Island and established the cause at Long Beach, whose substantial edifice of the present day is the result of the pioneer work rendered by Mr. Jacob some years ago. Indeed, too much praise cannot be given Mr. Jacob for his services in behalf of his church. All through Southern California his name is known and honored among the members of the Episcopal Church, and there are many who will testify that the present standing of the church in this region is largely due to his unremitting, self-sacrificing and judicious labors at a time when such work was most needed. Active as in the past, he now ministers to the congregations at Carlsbad, Merle and San Luis Rey, making his home in South Oceanside.

HIRAM MUSSELMAN. Among the intelligent and prosperous agriculturists of Compton is Hiram Musselman, widely and favorably known throughout this section of Los Angeles county as an upright, honest man, of sterling worth, and a worthy representative of the earlier settlers of this vicinity. He was born, August 27, 1832, in Pennsylvania, where he was reared and educated, attending first the common schools, and afterwards taking a part of a college course of study. His parents, Elias and Susan (Messenger) Musselman, were both born in Pennsylvania, and both died in Illinois, the father in 1859, and the mother in 1862. They were people of high moral standing, and consistent members of the Lutheran Church.

E. M. Lease

In his earlier life Hiram Musselman engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native state, meeting with success in his labors. Going from there to Chicago, Ill., he engaged in the furniture business for a few years, and then moved to Fairfield, Kans., where he changed his occupation, becoming a stock raiser and dealer. Coming to Compton, Cal., in the fall of 1883, he purchased a ranch of ten acres, and at once began its improvement. He devotes a part of his land to the raising of alfalfa a part to the raising of fruit of different kinds, and in addition he makes a specialty of raising chickens, as a poultry farmer being quite successful.

In Chicago, Ill., in 1864, Mr. Musselman married Julia Wheeler, who was born in Wisconsin, a daughter of Silas P. and Julia A. Wheeler, the former dying in New York, and the latter in Wisconsin. Mrs. Musselman died on the home ranch, in Compton, Cal., in 1891, leaving three children, namely: Charles W., living at home; Amy, wife of Robert Harper, and living near Downey, Los Angeles county; and Carrie E., living at home. Politically Mr. Musselman is identified with the Republican party, and religiously he is a Congregationalist.

EDMUND MORRIS PEASE, M. D. In 1634, six years after the founding of Salem, there came to this young settlement among other immigrants of Puritan temper, a certain John Pease. He was the first of his family in the new world, and eight generations have been marked by his courageous faith, unswerving loyalty to truth and devotion to God, qualities which peculiarly characterized Dr. Edmund Morris Pease in his life of service to God and men.

Descended from the John Pease of Salem through the following line of descent are: John, David, Benjamin, Job, Job, Asa, Asa and Edmund Morris. Dr. Pease was born in Granby, Hampshire county, Mass., December 6, 1828. After studying in the common schools of that place he went to Williston Seminary, in East Hampton, to prepare for higher training. This he later took in Amherst College, from which he graduated with the degree of A. B., in 1854. Three years later the degree of A. M., was conferred upon him by his Alma Mater. After graduation he became a teacher, first instructing for a period of two years in a boys' school in Baltimore, and then serving as tutor for one year in Amherst. He gave up teaching however in order to prepare himself for the medical profession, with a view to becoming a medical missionary, and in 1862 he graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University. At this same time he pursued a course at the Union Theological Seminary, from which he also graduated.

No sooner had Dr. Pease finished his training than came the call for volunteers in the Civil war, and he immediately offered his services. He was appointed assistant surgeon in the Sixteenth Connecticut Regiment. One year later, October 27, 1863, he was given the position of surgeon, with the rank of Major, in the famous regiment known as the Ninth United States Colored Troops. His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and was the first to enter Richmond when that city was taken. When peace had been declared, he was sent to Texas and was chief medical officer of the Department of the Rio Grande. Later he was ordered to Louisiana, where he remained until the latter part of 1866, when he was honorably discharged at Baltimore.

Dr. Pease then entered upon professional life and practiced medicine for five years in New York, and for six in Springfield, Mass. In the latter place he met Miss Harriet A. Sturtevant, a native of Westport, Essex county, N. Y., to whom he was married in Bordentown, N. J., April 25, 1877.

In early life having decided to devote his energies to the cause of missions, Dr. Pease went immediately after his marriage to the Marshall Islands as a medical missionary. He located on Ebon, where a church and school had already been established by former missionaries. After two years of labor he transferred the school to Kusari, one of the Caroline Islands, and made it an effective training school for native workers. During Dr. Pease' eighteen years of service as teacher, preacher and medical missionary twelve churches were added to an original three, ten native pastors were ordained to the ministry, and thirteen unordained native teachers were installed in the Islands. After having acquired a mastery of the language, which by the way, is totally different from the Polynesian, Dr. Pease began immediately to translate the New Testament and revise the Gospels and Acts already in the native tongue. As the result of his untiring labors his translation of the New Testament and the Psalms has been in use for several years. He also compiled a dictionary of the language and some educational books and added many songs to the hymn and tune book already in the Marshall Island dialect.

While in the Islands two children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Pease, Edmund Morris, Jr., and Francis Sturtevant. In order to educate his sons Dr. Pease came with his family in 1894 to the United States. After spending several months in the East, he located near Pomona College, in Claremont, Cal., where he lived until his death.

During his residence in Claremont Dr. Pease identified himself with all the best interests of the town, aiding in every way the upbuilding of the college, community and church. He was a Mason and was also identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. Although far from the scene of his missionary labors, Dr. Pease spent the last twelve years of his life translating the Old Testament into the Marshall Island language. It was his desire that the entire Bible should be in the hands of the natives, and this wish of his heart would have been fulfilled had he been spared for an additional year of labor. At the age of seventy-eight, while still vigorous in mind and body, Dr. Pease was seized with the sudden illness which caused his death. On November 28, 1906, he passed away at his home in Claremont. A man of heroic mold, fearless and devoted to God's service, Dr. Pease ranks as one of the great men of the missionary world.

ELI JACKSON YOKAM. The fifth of a family of nine children of George and Sarah (Wilson) Yokam, Eli J. Yokam was born in Knox county, Ohio, December 25, 1835. Three years later the family moved to Franklin county where the boy grew up to manhood on his father's farm. His early school advantages were limited to a few months each year in the old log schoolhouse, with slab benches. His two older brothers having enlisted in the war with Mexico, he became the mainstay on the farm, and at seventeen years of age had charge of the two hundred and twenty-acre farm. Supplementing his meager school opportunities with study at home he fitted himself for teaching, and taught a number of terms. On attaining his majority he rented land of his father, which he tilled on shares and spent the proceeds in obtaining an education. After graduating from Duff's Commercial College at Columbus he spent two years in Antioch College, and in the Ohio Wesleyan University.

Soon after quitting school Mr. Yokam rather accidentally embarked in the newspaper business as joint proprietor and editor of the Westerville Banner, Westerville, the seat of Otterbein University, is a good type of college town. Determining to master the details of the business the new partner by the end of the first year had charge of the job department, and had formed the habit of setting up at the printer's case much of his local and editorial matter without committing it to writing. After over four years of successful management, during three years of which he was sole proprietor and editor, Mr. Yokam sold the paper and plant, and immediately entered the employ of the publishers of the Ohio Statesman, the time-honored Democratic journal at the state capital, in charge of its advertising business. Fifteen months later he accepted a flattering offer from the publishers of the Columbus Dispatch, a wide-awake young daily, owned by J. H. Putman, private secretary to the governor, and Dr. Doren, founder and superintendent of the state institution for the feeble-minded. During his connection with the Dispatch he served in the several capacities of bookkeeper, advertising man and local writer.

Upon a change of ownership of the Dispatch Mr. Yokam resigned his position and purchased the Columbus Sunday Herald. The Herald had been founded some three years before by Gen. Thomas Ewing for his son "Thom," who had strong journalistic aspirations, but the young proprietor had failed to place it on a self-supporting basis. Taking editorial and business charge Mr. Yokam enlarged the paper to a thirty-six column folio, the largest published in the city, and arranged to send it out on the Sunday morning trains and have it delivered by special carriers in the towns forty miles out from the city. The circulation and business rapidly increased several hundred per cent, every issue showing a large net profit. The double duties assumed involved active labor sixteen hours a day on an average. At the end of two years of this strenuous life, yielding to the importunities of would-be purchasers, Mr. Yokam sold the Herald in 1876 for several times the purchase price, and engaged in other lines of business.

The following year Mr. Yokam went to Illinois, and in 1880 he, in connection with others, published a history of Peoria county, a quarto volume of nine hundred pages, he being the literary editor. In 1882 he purchased an interest in the Springfield Evening Post, an infantile journal in its swadling clothes, and took editorial charge. The Post had three old-established dailies as competitors in a city of twenty-five thousand, and while it reached a daily circulation of nearly two thousand copies (second largest in the city), it could not obtain the Associated Press franchise; and failing to reach a paying basis Mr. Yokam severed his connection with it. He soon after took the position of general agent for a large New York publishing house, with headquarters in Chicago. At the end of three years of successful business he resigned, leaving the city May 1, 1888, for California under a two-year contract with a history publishing firm of that city to engage in historical work. Before the expiration of that engagement he purchased the land in Highland which he transformed from a rough barley field into a fine orange grove and handsome home which he and his amiable wife now occupy.

A. Hatfield

At the time of Morgan's raid in Ohio during the Civil war, Mr. Yokam, being a member of a militia company, was called out for a brief campaign as a member of the One Hundred Thirty-third Regiment of Ohio National Guard, unhitching from the mowing machine to obey the summons of Colonel Innes.

Since settling in Highland Mr. Yokam has taken an active interest in matters of local public concern. He was three times elected president of the Highland Horticultural Club. He was the originator of the Highland Orange Growers' Association, which was organized in his residence, and has served in the capacity of director, secretary, vice-president and president of that organization. He is serving his second year as president of the Highland Library Club, and his fourth year as president of the San Bernardino County Ohio Society. Though chiefly occupied in cultivating his fine orange and lemon grove, Mr. Yokam has contributed an occasional article for the public press upon historical and other subjects of general interest, and has written numerous papers on various topics to be read before public gatherings.

Mr. Yokam was first united in marriage with Miss Lucretia J. Hyde, October 16, 1861. On the 28th of January, 1870, she passed away, leaving two children, Frank W. and Harriet L., both still living. September 27, 1882, he married Mrs. Frances E. Loring, who is still the chief factor in his happy home life.

ABRAHAM HATFIELD. Noteworthy among the representative pioneers of Ramona and its vicinity is Abraham Hatfield, who holds a well-deserved position among the sturdy, energetic and successful agriculturists who thoroughly understand the vocation which they follow, and are enabled to carry it on with pleasure and profit. He is a native of Missouri, and was born July 6, 1840. His father, Charles Hatfield, born in Kentucky, married Catherine Dale, a native of Virginia, and subsequently moved to Missouri, taking up land from the government, and from the unbroken forest clearing and improving a homestead. There he and his faithful helpmate spent their remaining days, both dying in the prime of life, the father passing away at the age of forty-seven years, and the mother when forty-three years old. They were people of Christian character and worth, and faithful members of the Baptist Church.

One of a family of nine children, Abraham Hatfield, in common with his brothers and sisters, was brought up on the home farm, obtaining a limited education. Soon after the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in Company A, Sixteenth Texas Cavalry, in which he served three and one-half years, when he was captured, and took the oath of allegiance. Going to Montana in 1865, he was for a number of years successfully engaged in placer mining. In 1870 he came to Southern California, and after living for a short time in the old city of San Diego settled as a farmer near Julian, buying three hundred and twenty acres of land, on which he put a number of improvements. Disposing of that ranch he took up a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres, and by dint of persevering labor and good management has since improved the valuable farm on which he now resides. He has erected a substantial set of farm buildings, set out fruit trees and planted a vineyard, and as a general farmer is exceedingly prosperous, his specialty being the raising of grain and stock. He is also interested in gold and gem mines in San Diego county.

December 7, 1876, Mr. Hatfield married Sarah M. Casner, who was born in Alabama September 13, 1837, and they are the parents of two children. Margaret Irene and Charles M., both of whom are at home. Politically Mr. Hatfield is not affiliated with any party, but votes according to the dictates of his conscience, casting his ballot for the men best qualified in his judgment to serve the interests of the people. Religiously he is a valued member of the Baptist Church.

WALTER CARTER. One of the many capable and industrious agriculturists of Los Angeles county is Walter Carter, who is prosperously engaged in his free and independent occupation in Wiseburn. His ranch is pleasantly located, and with its comfortable and convenient set of buildings, and their neat and tasteful surroundings, invariably attracts the attention of the passer by. A son of George C. Carter, he was born, January 20, 1864, in Virginia, but was reared and educated in Missouri.

A native of old Virginia, George C. Carter removed to Missouri in the early '70s, having previously served as a soldier in the Mexican war. When the Civil war broke out he was made captain of a company and served under General Price in Missouri. He took an active part in several engagements, and received two flesh wounds while in battle, one bullet striking him in the right shoulder, and another striking the right arm and practically paralyzing it. Returning to Virginia at the close of the war, he established a tobacco factory, but not succeeding particularly well in operating it, he sold out. Going then to Missouri, he bought land and improved a good farm, which he managed as long as he was able, and on which he is now living, retired from active pursuits. He married Mary E. Henry, who died in 1870. She was a true helpmeet to him, and a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She bore him seven children, three of whom are still living.

Brought up on the home farm, Walter Carter was educated in the public schools of Troy, Mo. At the age of eighteen years he began the battle of life on his own account. Starting westward, he came to the Pacific coast, and at Los Angeles secured work as a fireman on the Southern Pacific Railroad, subsequently being promoted to the position of engineer. Leaving the railway, he was for awhile engaged in freighting on the desert, driving a mule team. Locating then at Hyde Park, Los Angeles county, he worked awhile for Captain Clark, and then went to Del Rey, where he took charge of the dredger, operating it until the company gave up work. Desirous of settling permanently, he came then to Los Angeles county, and in the Wiseburn district rented land and embarked in agricultural pursuits. Encouraged by his good success, he subsequently purchased land, buying one ranch of three hundred and sixty acres, and another containing sixty-seven acres, on which he has his house and buildings. His improvements are of a substantial character, and as a farmer he is exceedingly prosperous. He has also other interests connected with mining, and in this business reaps quite an income.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter are the parents of two children, Le Roy and Sylvia. Politically Mr. Carter is identified with the Democratic party.

BEN E. PATCHETT is a native son, his birth having occurred near San Miguel, Cal., October 15, 1871, one of the four children comprising the parental family. His parents were among the early pioneers of the state, the father, John A. Patchett, having crossed the plains in an emigrant party in 1860, and his mother, who was Amanda Carpenter before her marriage, having come to California by the isthmus in the same year. Both were natives of the state of Iowa. The mother resides at Pismo, while the father died in 1903, at the age of sixty-two years. During his lifetime he was a strong adherent of the Republican party.

The early education of Mr. Patchett was received in the public schools of San Luis Obispo county and was supplemented by a commercial course at Heald's Business College of San Francisco. He began his independent business career in the San Joaquin valley, where he engaged in the stock business for seven years and soon acquired valuable property. In 1903 he removed to Arroyo Grande, where he is now residing, and owns one of the finest and best improved ranches in this section of the state, comprising four hundred and sixty acres of ground, three hundred and fifty of which are devoted to the growing of crops, the rest being pasture land. His beans yield a large harvest of sixteen sacks per acre, conclusively proving the fertility of the soil. The Logan Oil Company well is also located on this farm. In politics Mr. Patchett is a strong Republican and earnest supporter of the tenets advocated in the platform of that party, and he takes an active interest in the business, social, political and religious life of the community. He was married in 1897 to Miss Sarah Bower, a native of Iowa, and to them have been born three children: Edwin, Ernest and Stewart.

CHARLES I. MASON. Occupying a position of prominence among the foremost business men of Compton is Charles I. Mason, of the firm of Mason Brothers, hardware dealers and plumbers, having their main store in this town, and a branch establishment in Gardena. Enterprising, progressive and practical in his views, he is actively assisting in promoting the growth and industrial prosperity of his adopted city, and in its upbuilding is playing an important part. He was born in Derby, England, October 9, 1865. His father, Isaac Mason, born in England in 1835, married Mary Smith, also of English birth, and they became the parents of the following children: Mary Louise; G. Harold, in partnership with Charles I.; Alice Gertrude; J. William, of Los Angeles, an employe in the postoffice; and Charles I., the special subject of this sketch.

By years of study in the common and high schools, and by subsequently taking a college extension course, Charles I. Mason acquired an excellent education, which was further advanced by the study of mechanical engineering at South Kensington. On finishing this course he worked as an engineer for three years, and then took up the study of plumbing in a thorough manner, becoming proficient in the trade. His health failing, he came to California in 1888, hoping in this genial climate to regain his former physical vigor. Locating in Compton, he purchased seventeen acres of land, and for about seven years was engaged in raising fruit and alfalfa. The ensuing two years he worked as a plumber, and in a bicycle establishment in Los Angeles. Returning then to Compton, in partnership with his brother G. Harold, he bought a harware and plumbing establishment, and they have since built up an extensive and lucrative business in this line, in the busy season employing about a dozen men. Under their present firm name, Mason Brothers, Mr. Mason and his partner have opened a branch store in Gardena, where they are succeeding beyond their expectations, their patronage being large and remunerative. Recently they erected one of the finest business buildings in Compton, and are now prepared to fill all orders promptly and satisfactorily.

In 1896 Mr. Mason married Mary Whaley, who was born in California, a daughter of the late Dr. Francis Whaley, who came to this state as a pioneer more than thirty years ago, and until his death, in August, 1904, was engaged in the practice of medicine. Mr. and Mrs. Mason have three children, namely: Lawrence H., Helen M. and Charles Ronald. In his political views Mr. Mason is a Prohibitionist, and religiously he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was one of the organizers and is a director of the Compton Water Company.

CUTHBERT GULLY. To the energy and enterprise of her young business and professional men Long Beach owes much to her phenomenal growth and development, and in the furthering of this general prosperity Cuthbert Gully, a successful and practical civil engineer, has contributed a generous share. Descended as he is from generations of prominent Englishmen, it is but natural that he should display the same strong qualities of character which gave to them leading positions in their country. His grandfather, John Gully, a native of Bristol, England, was a successful business man, a large land owner, interested in coal mining and a breeder of fine horses, having won the Derby one year. As a public man he exercised his talents in parliament having been a member from York for two terms.

Captain Henry Lawrence, the father of Cuthbert Gully, was a commander in the English navy and at the time of his resignation at the age of twenty-seven years, was the youngest commander in service. After his retirement from military life he engaged in the practice of civil engineering in England for a time, then came to America and continued to work in Florida. Later he removed to the province of Quebec, Canada, and bought a farm on Lake Memphremagog, for a number of years dividing his time between this property and coal mines in England which he owned. In 1889 the family returned to England and the parents reside in Southsea. Mr. Gully's mother, who was in maidenhood, Henrietta Wallace, is a native of London and traces her lineage back to Sir William Wallace on her paternal side and through her mother claims Robert Emmett as an ancestor.

A member of a family of nine children, Cuthbert Gully was born in 1878, at Lake Memphremagog, Quebec, Canada. He acquired his education in England at St. George's College, and later studied civil engineering under his father. In 1894 he came to California, locating at Riverside, and as civil engineer entered the office of the San Jacinto Land Company under W. E. Pedly, a position which he retained for six years. For two years thereafter he was interested in horticultural pursuits, specializing on orange growing. Disposing of his ranch he was for eighteen months employed as assistant superintendent of construction with the Riverside Power Company, resigning this to accept a position in Los Angeles with E. T. Wright as civil engineer and surveyor. Six months later, in 1904, he came to Long Beach and continued the practice of his profession independently, laying out Willow Park and Long Beach Boulevard tracts. He is now engaged on the Long Beach Reclamation District work in reclaiming about three thousand acres of land.

The marriage of Mr. Gully occurred in Long Beach, uniting him with Edna Sovereign, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of one child, Edna Adalza. Mr. Gully is an active member of the Episcopal Church and fraternally was made a Mason in Temescal Lodge No. 314 F. & A. M., in Corona. Politically he is an advocate of Republican principles, and as a public-spirited citizen who is interested in the best development of the city he is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

JOHN KEYES MORRISON. An industrious, progressive and well-to-do agriculturist of Los Angeles county, John Keyes Morrison, living retired near Compton, has improved a fine homestead, which in its appointments compares favorably with any in the locality. With its substantial buildings and well-cultivated fields, it gives proof to the most casual observer of the thrift and care of the owner, and shows conclusively that he has a thorough understanding of the business in which he has engaged, and that in its management he has exercised excellent judgment. A son of William Morrison, he was born, May 5, 1835, in Philadelphia, Pa., of Scotch-Irish ancestry.

William Morrison was born and reared in Ireland, but when a young man immigrated to America, locating in Pennsylvania, where he married Elizabeth Keyes, who came from Ireland to the United States with her parents when she was a young girl. She died in Philadelphia, Pa., leaving two children, of whom John Keyes, the subject of this sketch, was an infant three months old. After locating in Illinois the father subsequently married again, and by his second union had a family of four children. The remainder of his life was spent in Illinois, where he carried on farming until his death. He was a man of deep religious convictions, and a member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church.

Coming with his father and grandfather as far west as Illinois when a young lad, John Keyes Morrison remained at home until after attaining his majority, receiving a practical common-school education, and a fine training in the numerous branches of agriculture. When ready to settle in life he purchased land in Washington county, Ill., not far from the parental homestead, and was for several years there successfully engaged in tilling the soil. In 1874 he removed with his family to California, settling near Compton, where he at once bought thirty acres of the land included in his present ranch. A large part of his original purchase he devoted to the cultivation of fruits of all kinds, a branch of agriculture which proved exceedingly remunerative. By purchase he has added seventy acres of adjoining land to his ranch, and here he lives retired with his family. Since his retirement his son John W. has taken the active care of the ranch, upon which he raises large crops of grain and fruit.

In 1859, in Nashville, Washington county, Ill., Mr. Morrison married Letitia L. Loughery, who was born in County Derry, Ireland, and came to America in 1846. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Morrison six children have been born, namely: Anna D., wife of Prof. A. J. McClatchie, of Montobello, Cal., and the mother of one child; John W., who has charge of the ranch; Lillie, in Los Angeles; Alonzo T., of Calabasas, who married Harriet Parker, by whom he has two children, a son and a daughter; Lorenzo L., who married Alice Arthur and has two daughters; and Margaret Letitia, living at home.

LEON LEHMAN. Throughout the length and breadth of Ventura county the people are familiar with the rapid growth and exceptional popularity of the department store conducted by Lehman Bros., at Oxnard. Under the present firm title the founder of the business, Leon Lehman, associated with his three brothers, Matthew, Edmond and Paul, has gained a reputation for reliability of business dealings and success in mercantile affairs. The department store owned and operated by the firm has its headquarters in a building 55x100 feet in dimension, but in addition there is a two-story brick warehouse 25x100 feet, and a warehouse on Saviers road 40x80 feet, all of the buildings being utilized for the storage of goods or for their display in the interests of customers. As Oxnard itself has had a rapid growth in importance and prestige, so this business enterprise has developed rapidly from an unimportant size to proportions rivalling those of the large cities.

Near the historic city of Strasburg, France, and in the province of Alsace, now a part of the German empire, Leon Lehman was born February 6, 1861, being a son of Moise and Estella Lehman, natives of the same province and members of old families there. The father was a merchant and real estate dealer during all of his active years and until shortly before his death. All of the seven children are now in America and in 1893 Leon returned to Europe and brought to the United States his widowed mother, in order that she might spend her last days with her children, of whom he was the eldest. He received an excellent education in college, and afterward served an apprenticeship to the dry goods trade in Paris, where he had the advantage of studying under some of the most successful merchants of the continent. At the expiration of two years he came to the United States, proceeded direct to California, and settled in Hueneme, where in October, 1878, he entered the employ of Wolff & Levy as a clerk. Intelligence, skill and executive ability enabled him in 1886 to buy an interest with Mr. Wolff, who had succeeded to the business of Wolff & Levy, at which time the title was changed to Wolff & Lehman. For the better accommodation of the stock of goods the firm erected a brick building.

On the dissolution of the partnership a new association was entered into and the firm of Lehman & Waterman was organized with W. M. Waterman as a junior member. In addition to carrying a stock of general merchandise they embarked in the grain business, and continued together until January, 1906, when the junior partner's interest was purchased by the senior member. The firm erected a frame building and started the first store in Oxnard in 1898, but later the building became too small for the growing trade, and the present substantial structure was erected on the adjoining lot. In the incorporation of Oxnard Mr. Lehman was an active factor and ever since then he has officiated as treasurer of the city. At this writing he holds office as president of the Citizens Club, an organization composed of Oxnard's leading citizens, banded together to promote the welfare of the town. On the organization of the Oxnard Masonic Club he became one of its charter members and has officiated as its treasurer for some time. Since coming to Oxnard he has erected a substantial residence on the corner of D and Second streets. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in Santa Barbara and the Masonic fraternity, having been made a Mason in Hueneme Lodge, of which he is past master, and the first one to be taken into that lodge, while at this writing he holds membership with Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., also with the Royal Arch Chapter. Ever since becoming a citizen of the United States and of voting age, he has given his allegiance to the Republican party. A man of unusual business ability, he superintends with care and keen intelligence the stores at Oxnard and Hueneme owned by the firm and built up to their present dimensions largely through his persevering energy. In the growth of Oxnard his contribution as a progressive merchant and public spirited man has been of the greatest importance.

Presley T. Hubbert

PRESLEY T. HUBBERT. Bound to the beautiful valley of San Luis Rey by the ties of years of identification with its agricultural interests, Mr. Hubbert has for the region a feeling of affection deeper and more abiding than for any other spot of earth's broad domain. To the people of the valley his name is significant of all that is manly and noble in character, pure and lofty in friendship, and genial and companionable in temperament. As a pioneer he bore a part in the development of the resources of the valley and as a citizen he contributed his quota to movements for the public welfare. To know him is to admire him for the possession of the qualities of mind and heart unusually attractive and deep and also for the possession of a sagacious judgment that gives weight to his counsel and permanent value to his advice.

Of southern family and birth, Mr. Hubbert is a son of Matthew and Elizabeth S. (Thornton) Hubbert, natives respectively of Tennessee and Georgia. The father, who was a farmer and cattle-raiser, came to California in 1869 and settled at Julian, but the following year removed to the San Luis Rey valley, where he entered land from the government. At the time of his death in 1886 he was seventy-six years of age, while his wife, who lived to be eighty-five, passed away in 1903. They were the parents of fifteen children and ten of these are yet living. Presley T., who was born in Attala county, Miss., November 27, 1846, was eight years of age when the family removed to Texas, and his education (which was limited to the common school studies) was received principally in that state. For a time he worked as a cowboy and during ten months of the war period he was employed in the department furnishing beef to the Confederate army. Meanwhile his father had become interested in the cattle business and had his range on the present site of Roswell in New Mexico, remaining there for four years, and the son aided in the business by driving herds of cattle to and from the range. In the pursuit of this work he crossed the plains ten times. When his father closed out the cattle business and removed to California he returned to Texas, and from there came to the coast country in 1872, journeying via steamer from Galveston to New Orleans, thence by rail to St. Louis, from there on the railroad to Denver, Salt Lake and San Francisco, thence to San Diego, and from there via stage to Julian, where he became interested in mining.

After a year in California Mr. Hubbert returned to Texas for his mother, brothers and sisters, who came back with him to San Diego county. In August, 1873, he closed out his mining interests and came to the San Luis Rey valley, where he purchased a quarter section of land from his father and later entered one hundred and twenty acres from the government, on which property he has since engaged in ranching and stock-raising. In 1878 he was united in marriage with Mrs. Helen M. (Adams) Hubbert, a native of Texas, and a daughter of California pioneers of 1867, who settled in the Hope school district in San Diego county. They are the parents of the following children: Louis C., now in Mexico; Victoria E., who is on the home ranch; Jennie E. and Bavard T., who are attending school in Los Angeles; Nannie B., a student in the San Luis Rey schools, and Edgar T., at home. The family attend the Christian Church, with which Mrs. Hubbert is identified and to which Mr. Hubbert has been a generous contributor. Politically a Democrat, reared in the faith of that party and pronounced in his allegiance to its principles, he is yet liberal and non-partisan, and in voting considers the character of the candidate and his qualifications for office rather than his political views. Always interested in educational matters, he has served efficiently as school trustee and has contributed materially to the advancement of the local schools.

JOHN P. VARBLE. The reputation acquired by J. P. Varble as a rancher of Los Angeles county has been won entirely by his own efforts, having brought to bear in his work an intelligent and conscientious thought which has resulted in the accomplishment of his aims and purposes. He is located near El Monte, where he settled in 1903. He is a native of Franklin county, Ark., and was born January 23, 1865; his father, Alexander Varble, was a native of North Carolina, while his mother, formerly Margaret Houston, was born in Arkansas. The father died in 1880, and the mother is still surviving and making her home in Modesto, Stanislaus county, at the age of sixty-three years, still active and taking an interest in the work of the Christian Church, of which she is a member. The father was a Democrat politically and prominent in the affairs of his adopted state.

J. P. Varble was the eldest of ten children born to his parents and in Franklin county he received his education in the public schools. He came to California in 1891, after having engaged as a farmer in his native state, and upon his arrival here located in Stanislaus county, where he remained for three years. He then came to Los Angeles county and engaged in ranching, in 1903 locating on his present property, which consists of one hundred and ten acres, devoted to the raising of alfalfa, which yields eight tons per acre. He owns seventeen acres of fine land which he intends to plant to strawberries and walnuts. He was married in 1886 to Miss Callie Owen, a native of Arkansas, and four children were born to this union, Oma, Truman, Ruth and Valda. Mr. Varble is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a stanch adherent of the Democratic principles and both himself and wife are members of the Christian Church.

A. L. MATTHEWS. Twenty years ago A. L. Matthews came to California and located at Wildomar, purchasing land upon which he is now raising hay and grain. He was born August 21, 1845, in Chemung county, N. Y., the son of Isaac and Ann (Manning) Matthews, the former being a native of New York and the latter born in England. The Matthews family is one that has been identified with the history of the United States for several generations, the grandfather, Kortwright Matthews, having been an officer in the Black Hawk war and took an active part in the battle fought at Horseheads, N. Y. The father was educated in New York and became a Methodist Episcopal minister, having charges at various points, including Big Flats, Reaser Hill and Pine Valley. His death occurred in New York in 1889, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. The mother died in 1859, when she was fifty-nine years old.

Reared in an intellectual and refined atmosphere, A. L. Matthews in boyhood attended the public schools, later studying for a time at Starkey Seminary. In October, 1863, he demonstrated his patriotism by enlisting in Company E, Fourteenth Regiment of New York Heavy Artillery, and was injured by the explosion of a shell at Fort Hamilton, the wound having troubled him ever since. On account of his disability he was discharged at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., and in 1868 located in Nevada, Story county, Iowa, where he engaged in ranching until 1872. He then removed to Hiawatha, Brown county, Kans., remaining there for two years, when he located in Spring Hill, Johnson county, that state, and bought a farm upon which he lived until 1875. His next move was to Arkansas valley, Kans., there filing upon a homestead claim upon which he resided until 1886, when he removed to California. Locating at Wildomar, he bought ten acres of land, improved it, and engaged in ranching. Besides this he also owns a quarter section of farming land in Kansas.

June 21, 1902, Mr. Matthews received the appointment as postmaster of Wildomar, and on August 15 of the same year secured the position of station agent for the Santa Fé at that point. At about the same time he also became proprietor of the general store which he now owns. He has been clerk of the school board for twelve years, and for the past eight years has been deputy county clerk. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and religiously belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is also a member of the Riverside post of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Matthews' marriage in Hutchinson, Kans., October 24, 1877, united him with Miss Mary H. Allison, a native of Illinois, they becoming the parents of two children, Anna and Anson Leo, both of whom died in infancy. As a progressive and enterprising citizen Mr. Matthews takes a leading place in his community, in which he is held in the highest respect and esteem by all.

CHARLES J. MURPHY. A native son of California, and the representative of one of its early pioneer families, Charles J. Murphy is well deserving of mention in a work of this character. A well-known resident of the thriving little village of Oxnard, he is actively identified with its mercantile interests, holding an excellent position among the energetic and thorough going business men who have attained success through their own tact, good judgment and perseverance. Establishing himself here as a member of the firm of Murphy & Weill nearly two years ago, he has since built up a lucrative trade, dealing principally in groceries and men's furnishing goods. A son of the late Thomas Murphy, he was born, April 17, 1874, in San Francisco, where he was reared and educated.

Leaving his home in the east when a young man, Thomas Murphy followed the march of civilization westward, coming across the plains with ox-teams ere the thought of construction a transcontinental railway had been conceived. With his brother pioneers he labored with pickaxe and shovel, and as a miner met with encouraging success. On retiring from that occupation he located in San Francisco, where he resided until his death. He married Mary Flanagan, who survives him, and is now living in Alameda. She bore him eight children, three of whom are living, Charles J. being the second child.

Having completed the studies of the public schools of San Francisco, Charles J. Murphy was graduated from a commercial college, and soon after that event began the battle of life for himself. Locating in Hueneme in 1896, he obtained a position as clerk in the store of Lehman & Waterman, and while there obtained an excellent knowledge of mercantile pursuits. When the firm removed to Oxnard Mr. Murphy came also, and for some time thereafter had charge of its hardware department. Resigning his clerkship in November, 1904, he, in partnership with Mr. Weill, started in business for himself, opening a store on Fifth street, in the Maulhardt building. Stocking his establishment with a fine assortment of groceries, both staple and fancy, and opening a men's furnishing goods department, he has since built up a most satisfactory business, his patronage being large and remunerative.

November 15, 1905, in Oxnard, Mr. Murphy married Katherine Wilson, who was born in Hueneme, a daughter of U. S. Wilson, now a residence of Oxnard. Politically Mr. Murphy is a stanch Democrat, and fraternally he is a member of Santa Barbara Lodge No. 613, B. P. O. E., and of Oxnard Lodge No. 750, K. of C.

MORGAN R. WATKINS. Conspicuous among the California pioneers who have so ably assisted in developing both the mining and agricultural resources of this state is Morgan R. Watkins, a prosperous farmer, living near Mesa Grande. His ranch is under a good state of cultivation and well improved, the buildings being of a neat and substantial character, betokening the thrift and wise management of the owner. Like many others of our most respected and successful citizens, he was born and reared in a foreign land, his birth having occurred, December 26, 1845, in South Wales. His parents, David and Elizabeth (Rosser) Watkins, were life-long residents of Wales, where the father was a well-known carpenter and contractor. They were people of stanch integrity, highly esteemed for their many excellent qualities of mind and heart, and were faithful members of the Independent Congregational Church. They reared a family of five children, all of whom left their native country when ready to settle in life, locating in America. One son, David F. Watkins, was for thirty-three years a missionary in Mexico and later was similarly engaged in South America. Another son, Rev. Thomas R. Watkins, was a leader of the Labor Union in Pennsylvania.

Immigrating to the United States in 1865, Morgan R. Watkins spent a short time in New York City, and then went to Pennsylvania, where he followed the trade he had learned in Wales, working in the mines as an underground carpenter. From there, having in the mean time visited his old home and friends in Wales, Mr. Watkins came to the Pacific coast, arriving in San Francisco in 1868. Resuming his former work, he was a foreman in the mines for a number of years, being thus employed in Plumas, Butte and Nevada and Placer counties. His health failing he went first to Mendocino, then to San Diego, and thence to Mexico, where for about a year he had charge of a mine. Returning to San Diego county he purchased his present ranch which is advantageously located near Mesa Grande, and has since been actively and successfully engaged in general farming, including stock raising. He pays some attention to the raising of fruit, having a productive apple orchard, which yields him excellent harvests. He has met with good success in his agricultural labors, and as a man and a citizen is held in high respect throughout the community, his integrity and other sterling qualities being everywhere recognized.

In 1872 Mr. Watkins married Mary Brier, who was born in Santa Cruz, Cal. One year prior to her marriage she taught school and for twelve years afterwards she taught an Indian school. Her father, Rev. James Brier, was born October 14, 1814, in Dayton, Ohio, of Scotch and French ancestry. In 1839 he married Juliet Wells, a woman of great strength of character and much force of will. Several years later Mr. Brier accompanied by his wife and three small children, started across the plains, Mrs. Brier being the only woman in the company of Jay Hawkers. After spending six weeks in Salt Lake City the party were forced to push onward to California under Mormon guides, who deserted them upon arriving at Death Valley. They suffered untold privations, and twenty-eight of the band died of starvation. The survivors burned their wagons for fuel and in the weeks that followed their only food consisted of the hides of cattle. Locating in Los Angeles Mr. Brier became active in his ministerial labors, and founded the first Methodist Episcopal Church established in that town. During his later years he removed to San Joaquin county and made his home there until his death, in 1897. He was very active in political affairs, and as a stanch supporter of the Republican party stumped the state for Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Blaine and Harrison, acquiring a wide reputation as a gifted orator, and being aptly called "The Old Man Eloquent." His wife survived him, and is still living, being an active woman of ninety-three years. She bore him six children, four of whom survive.

Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Watkins two children have been born, namely: Arthur S., who has a fine ranch of five hundred acres adjoining his father's farm, and Juliet. Politically Mr. Watkins is a Socialist. Religiously he is a Congregationalist, and Mrs. Watkins is an Episcopalian.

GASTON JEAN GILLY. As a general merchant Gaston J. Gilly is located in Puente and carrying on a business enterprise in partnership with J. Faure, the firm name being Gilly & Faure. Mr. Gilly is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in San Francisco January 20, 1867. His father, Joseph Gilly, was a native of Haute-Marne, France, and a tailor by trade. He came to America in 1866, crossing the Isthmus of Panama, thence by steamer to San Francisco, where he engaged as a merchant tailor. In 1883 he located in Los Angeles, where he followed his trade until his death, which occurred January 12, 1905, at the age of sixty-three years. His wife died in San Francisco in 1873. The parental family comprise four children, all of whom are living, the eldest being Gaston Jean Gilly. He was taken to France in 1877 and there educated in the public schools, after which, in 1883, he returned to San Francisco and engaged as a compositor on the Courier, a French publication. Six months after his father's removal to Los Angeles he also went there and immediately took up the study of bookkeeping in a night school. In the meantime he continued in a job printing office, working for a Mr. McBride, later was employed on the old Los Angeles Evening Express, then on the Herald, and finally on the Los Angeles Progress, a French publication. He remained with this last named paper for three years, a part of the time as its manager. He then quit the newspaper business and entered the employ of G. L. Mesnager & Co., as traveling salesman, his territory being Southern California. Four years later he gave up this work and engaged as a clerk in Los Angeles and vicinity, until September, 1898, when, in partnership with J. Faure, he established the Puente store, where they now carry a full line of general merchandise while they also are large shippers of produce. The building which they occupy was put up by them in 1898. Mr. Gilly is a member of the French Benevolent Society of Los Angeles, and politically is a stanch advocate of Republican principles.

ULRIC T. COOK. The future of California, as of any commonwealth, is based upon its young men, to whose enterprise, judgment and intelligence the prosperity of the country during the present century will be due, and from whose activity of mind and body will result movements of inestimable value to the people. There are in San Diego county a large number of young men of unusual capability, resourcefulness and discrimination, and among them mention may be made of Ulric T. Cook, who is engaged in the raising of grain and stock in the Sutherland valley and on Smith mountain and also owns an apiary of fifty colonies of bees. Not a little of his prosperous outlook is due to the fact that he has the encouragement and active co-operation of his father, a practical farmer of long experience, and still identified with the agricultural development of this county, where he and his son are farming upon an extensive scale.

Los Angeles county is Mr. Cook's native locality and May 22, 1879, the date of his birth. His parents, George and Hannah (Strong) Cook, were natives respectively of Texas and Arkansas, and during the year 1868 became residents of Los Angeles county, Cal., having previously met and married in San Diego county. The family settled on Smith mountain when Ulric was yet a small child and he attended the common schools in that district. Upon starting out to earn his livelihood he formed a partnership with his father and they now own three hundred and twenty acres in Sutherland valley. The old homestead on Smith mountain has been sold, but the father now rents the place and continues to reside there, giving his attention to its management and the care of his stock, while the son is living on their farm in the Sutherland valley. Both are stanch Democrats in political views. At this writing the father holds office as deputy sheriff and the son is serving with efficiency in the position of school trustee. Before removing from Smith mountain Mr. Cook there married, February 7, 1899, Miss Annie L. Frye, a native of California, having been born near Santa Ana, and by the union they have four children, Ella May, Ethel Edith, Marian Ray and Lucile.

H. P. Sloane

CAPT. HAMPTON P. SLOANE. The founder of the Sloane family in America came to this country from the north of Ireland and descended from ancestors driven from Scotland at the time of the religious persecutions. The original immigrant, John Sloane, married Mary Scarborough and settled in Maryland, where their son, James, was born November 18, 1793. Two years later the family crossed the mountains into Kentucky and settled in the primitive wilds of Bourbon county. From there in the spring of 1810 they removed to Ohio and settled in Highland county, twenty-five miles north of the river of the same name, in the midst of a dense forest, where the most arduous application was necessary in order to clear and improve a farm. The family consisted of Lydia, Jane, James, Rachel, Abigail, Martha and John. The eldest son was a young man when the call came for recruits to serve in the war of 1812 and he enlisted in Captain Wisby's Company, attached to Colonel Keyes' Regiment. The raw recruits shouldered their flint-lock guns and marched on foot to Sandusky, Ohio, where they arrived about the time of the surrender of the British troops. Their services being no longer needed they were honorably discharged and returned home.

The first marriage of James Sloane was solemnized in 1819 and united him with Miss Lacy Bell, who was a daughter of John and Mary Bell of Brown county. Two children were born of their union, namely: Eliza, April 28, 1820; and John, who was born June 10, 1821, and died August 20, 1822, the death of the wife and mother occurring October 18, 1822. The second marriage of Mr. Sloane took place in August, 1823, and united him with Miss Nancy J. Pangborn, who was born in Kentucky August 10, 1803, and removed to Brown county, Ohio, at the age of sixteen years, accompanying her parents, Hampton and Margaret Pangborn. She was a twin sister of John L. Pangborn, and these two with their elder brother, Samuel, formed the family. Always an apt scholar, she developed a reasoning brain and bright mind, and was always eager to help forward movements for the upbuilding of the race. In the early days of the temperance movement, when it was unpopular with many, she espoused the cause, as she did also the anti-slavery movement. At the opening of the Civil war she gave her sons her benediction as they entered the Union army. For more than sixty years she was an earnest Christian and during the last twenty-five years of her life she held membership with the Congregational Church. Her husband, also, after having been long a Methodist, united with the Congregational Church after the close of the Civil war and continued in that denomination as long as he lived. Of their union the following children were born: Hampton P., whose name introduces this narrative and who was born in Highland county, Ohio, May 10, 1824; Marinda B., October 24, 1825; Margaret, July 4, 1827; Samuel P., July 17, 1829; Joseph, born April 23, 1832, and deceased in infancy; Jane, born May 7, 1833; Sarah Annie, March 22, 1835; Lacy Lucky, May 12, 1838; Martha Elizabeth, January 26, 1841; and Quincy Adams, September 17, 1843. All of the children were born and reared on the Highland county farm and it was the privilege of their parents to see them all (excepting Joseph) educated and settled in life, all honoring their parents by lives of virtue and uprightness.

After a continuous residence of forty years in Ohio James Sloane removed to Illinois and settled in Rockford, where his eldest son had gone the preceding year. In 1864 he removed to Cedar Falls, Iowa, but the rigorous winters of that latitude caused him in 1868 to remove to Missouri, where he settled at Windsor, Henry county. In 1877 he went to Sedalia to be nearer his children, several of whom lived in or near that city. August 21, 1873, he and his wife celebrated their golden wedding and on that auspicious occasion they were the recipients of the congratulations of their children and their many friends. In life they were companions for sixty-two years; in death they were not long divided. His death occurred at Sedalia, Mo., October 24, 1885, and she passed away April 19, 1886. The funeral services of both were conducted by Rev. J. G. Bailey, an old friend of the family, and the bodies of both rest side by side in the beautiful cemetery adjoining Sedalia.

The eldest son of this honored couple was Hampton P. Sloane, justice of the peace and an influential citizen of Ramona, San Diego county, Cal. Educated in the common schools and Hillsboro Academy in Ohio, he took up agriculture as his chosen occupation and remained in Ohio until 1850, when he spent a short time in St. Paul and Minneapolis during the period that Governor Ramsey was the executive head of the then territory. Later he removed to Illinois, which then had only forty miles of railroad in the entire state. Settling near Rockford he engaged in farm pursuits and acted as assistant editor of the farmer's department of the Rockford Register, also took a prominent part in establishing the Winnebago County Agricultural Society, one of the first organizations of the kind in the state. Of this he served as president for two years. August 18, 1862, he assisted in raising Company C, Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, of which he was chosen captain and with which he proceeded from Camp Fuller to Louisville, Ky. After taking part in the battles of Perryville and Stone river he fell ill with typhoid fever while the army was at winter quarters on the Stone river, and his illness was of a nature so serious as to oblige him to resign his commission. Returning home he spent some months in regaining his health and in 1864 removed to Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he engaged in agricultural and horticultural pursuits. During the year 1867 he removed to the vicinity of Sedalia, Mo., and bought a tract of land in Johnson county. The Civil war had left the locality in a disrupted state and there was much need of conservative citizenship in order to bring order out of chaos. School had been closed and school districts disbanded, and the county court appointed him school director with the difficult task of re-establishing the schools and restoring them to usefulness. In this work he was signally successful.

The county court in 1868 appointed Captain Sloane justice of the peace. While filling the office he gave the right of franchise to sixty Confederate soldiers and at the office where they registered three clerks were stationed to aid them in the enforcing of their rights, these clerks being provided with weapons. In 1874 he took a four-year contract to convey the United States mail from Lamar to Carthage, Mo., and for this purpose he had a line of stages and six horses, which enabled him to make the round trip daily. At the expiration of his contract in 1878 he became reporter and assistant editor of the Carthage Banner, with which he was connected for four years. In 1884 he removed to Washington county, Ark., and took up a soldier's homestead, which he improved and on which he planted an orchard of varied fruits. Selling out the farm in 1890 he came to California and settled in the Sweetwater valley, but five years later he removed to Ramona and bought a ranch near town which he has since sold. Since 1901 he has held office as justice of the peace and also he has been more or less identified with local real-estate transfers. Following in the example of his parents, he ever has been loyal to the cause of Christianity and has been steadfast in his allegiance to the Congregational Church. From the organization of the Republican party to the present time he has been a loyal supporter of its principles and a contributor to its local successes. He cast his first presidential vote for Martin Van Buren in 1848. Fraternally he holds membership with the Grand Army of the Republic at San Diego.

The first marriage of Captain Sloane was solemnized in Ohio in 1848 and united him with Adeline Grandgirard, who was born in France and died in Illinois in 1856 at the age of twenty-six years. Three children were born of their union, namely: John, who died in California in 1889, at the age of forty years; Charles, who died in infancy; and William A., member of the law firm of Luce, Sloane & Luce of San Diego and justice of the police court at San Diego. After the death of his first wife Captain Sloane was married in Illinois to Delia Gripen, a native of New York state. They became the parents of nine children of whom seven are living, namely: Charles, who is engaged in the real-estate business in San Diego; Ada, wife of Louis Kunkler of Missouri; Samuel, living at Dehesa, San Diego county, Cal.; Lydia, wife of Joseph Stockton, a resident of Ramona; James, whose home is near Prescott, Ariz.; Nannie, Mrs. A. H. Sheldon, of El Cajon; and Bessie, whose husband, Charles A. Merritt, has charge of the electric light and power plant at Santa Barbara.

ERNEST A. PETTIJOHN. The growth of a city depends upon its leading men. When they are of stable character, energetic in business, strong principled and clean in private life there need be no fear of the stability, strength, and influence of the municipality. And when a city is so fortunate as to have had a man of this character and one who possessed the true public spirit as its municipal head for a long period of years that city is bound, as time passes, to continue to reflect the qualities borne into it and bequeathed to it by that head. The city of Colton, San Bernardino county, has been thus fortunate in the person of the late Ernest A. Pettijohn, who not only filled its mayor's chair for fourteen years, but at the same time occupied other influential positions in its official circles and was most active in every movement for the development and progress of the community.

The Pettijohn family was among the oldest pioneers of Illinois and the homestead in Schuyler county which came to them by a grant from President Monroe is still owned by their descendants. It was on this homestead that Ernest A. Pettijohn was born December 3, 1861. When he was but five years of age his parents removed to Missouri, and there the son received his early education and attended Drury College at Springfield. His ambition from early boyhood had been to go west, and accordingly, after his school work was completed he started out, locating first in Mexico, where he engaged in mining, and later continuing operations in Arizona, meeting with success at both places. In 1887 he came with his mother and sister Mary (now Mrs. Frederic W. Wessel to Colton. Mrs. Wessel is now the only surviving member of the Pettijohn family, the mother's death having occurred at Colton about three years ago. The first years while in Colton Mr. Pettijohn was engaged in the shoe business and subsequently until the time of his death was occupied as an orange grower. In 1896 he was married to Miss Ada Robinson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. DeVillo Robinson, well known residents of Colton. They became the parents of four children, of whom one son and one daughter now survive.

Public affairs and politics always received a large share of Mr. Pettijohn's interests and he was for a number of years president of the local Republican club, a member of the county central committee, and in 1904 he was the presiding officer of the Republican county convention. He was a charter member of the Colton fire department, served as a member of the board of city trustees for sixteen years, and was president of that body the greater part of the time. His fellow citizens were desirous of heaping further honors upon him, but he refused to become a candidate for the state assembly at their urging, and also declined to longer occupy a place on the board of trustees. He was devoted to his home and family and an active worker in the Presbyterian Church of Colton, contributing liberally to its support and that of every charitable cause which he believed worthy. Fraternally he was a member of Ashlar Lodge No. 306, F. & A. M., at Colton, and of the Foresters. Personally his character was without blemish and the motto which governed his life is found in that beautiful admonition in Thanatopsis:

"So live that when thy summons come to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon; but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

His death, which occurred March 29, 1906, removed a faithful public servant, an upright citizen, and a tireless worker for the good of his city.

CHARLES F. ALLEN. As an inventive genius Charles F. Allen, the lighthouse keeper at Point Hueneme, Cal., has to his credit many important inventions which have been of great value in simplifying numerous mechanical processes in different lines of work. He was born October 7, 1867, near Cleveland, Ohio, of English-American parentage. His father, Charles D. Allen, was born in England and located with his parents near Cleveland, Ohio, when eight years of age. For some years he was engaged in the lumber and buggy supply business there, later settling near Garrettsville, same state, where he became a farmer, and is still living at the age of seventy-two years. He did military service in the Civil war, serving six months with an Ohio regiment as contract teamster for the war department. The mother, who was Martha D. Bond before her marriage, was a native of Ohio. Her grandfather was one of the founders of Cleveland, he having erected the second log cabin there. Mrs. Allen died when her son Charles F. was a child of eighteen months. There were two children, but he is the only one now living. His boyhood days were spent on his father farm near Garrettsville, where he received his education in the district and high schools. When seventeen years old he went to Akron and apprenticed himself to Webster, Camp & Lane, manufacturers of mining, hoisting and pottery machinery, and spent two years and nine months with them learning the machinist's trade.

In 1887 Mr. Allen came to California and located in San Diego, following his trade there for a time, and later in Los Angeles and Fresno. In the latter city he was machinist for the Fresno Canal Company for fifteen months, having charge of the installation of all of their mining machinery for the Providence and Richmond mine, which they owned. He also constructed the cells for the Fresno jail, which was then in course of construction. After the completion of this work he went to San Francisco, where he was employed as machinist by the Central Alaska Company, by R. T. Ward at the Horse Fly mines and by the Sutter Street Railway Company, remaining with each about one year. In 1892 he entered the United States lighthouse service, his first position being assistant keeper at the Humbolt lighthouse, remaining at that place until 1894, when he was appointed keeper at Point Hueneme. Under his management this lighthouse has been improved and now has a flashlight, as well as being fitted with an electrical telltale appliance that times the machinery and tells if it stops. In adopting this invention of Mr. Allen's, which costs only $16, the government is using it to replace one which cost about $250, and in addition to the saving in cost it is considered a much superior attachment. Among other mechanical improvements which Mr. Allen has invented and patented are a beet plow, a steam turbine, an ore crusher, an amalgamator, a concentrator, an improved drive well, improvements on driving gears, for automobiles, a water wheel superior to others in use, a new steel-clad pneumatic automobile tire, and improvements on bicycles and automobiles, as well as numberless other smaller inventions. He is always at work on some mechanical contrivance to facilitate the running of labor-saving machinery.

In his home life Mr. Allen is fortunate, his marriage uniting him with Miss Anna H. Francis, a native of San Francisco and the daughter of Capt. Samuel Francis. The latter, who came to California in 1849, was for many years in the lighthouse service and was keeper of the United States government supply station at Goat Island at the time of his death. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are the parents of two daughters, May and Melba. Fraternally Mr. Allen affiliates with Hueneme Camp, M. W. A., and has served in the capacity of clerk ever since its organization five years ago. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows Lodge at Oxnard. The devotion of Mr. Allen to his official duties and the mechanical work in which he is so intensely interested does not prevent him from being an active participant in matters of public interest and he is an influential citizen of the community in which he resides, wherein he is held in the highest respect and esteem.

ALEXANDER DALLAS. The fact that Mr. Dallas retains but an indistinct recollection of his birthplace, the Island of Islay, in the highlands of Scotland, is due to his departure from that home in early childhood and his removal across the ocean to the new world. While retaining but a fleeting memory of the country, he displays in his character and rugged personality the sturdy traits for which the Scotch race is noted the world over, and a stranger would not hesitate in classing him among the natives of the land of the heather. However, the greater part of his life has been passed in the United States, whither he came with his parents, William and Rachel (McTaggart) Dallas, natives of Scotland. Born in the highlands on the ancestral homestead January 8, 1836, he was six years of age when the family settled in Greene county, Ala., his father embarking in the growing of cotton and owning twenty negro slaves. There the mother died in 1848, at the age of thirty-five years, and the father in 1862, when sixty years of age.

The private schools of Alabama furnished Alexander Dallas with fair educational advantages, and the years of youth passed uneventfully in study and recreation. The year that marked the change from youth to manhood was 1856, when he was twenty, for at that time he bade farewell to family and friends and started out to seek his own livelihood. With three friends, the eldest of whom was twenty-five, while he was the youngest, he started on horseback for the far west. With the aid of pack-mules he crossed the desert and the plains, and finally arrived in Los Angeles via Salt Lake at the close of an uneventful trip completed in only three months from the time of starting. Shortly after his arrival he mined on the Frazer river, but his first important work was that of cutting pile in the San Fernando canyon to be used in building the first wharf at San Pedro. On completing that work he bought six team of oxen and made a contract with the government (which General Hancock represented) to haul freight from San Pedro to Fort Tejon, in which employment he continued for three years.

On leaving the government service Mr. Dallas engaged in farming, rented land at El Monte. Three years later he bought a tract forming a portion of San Antonio ranch, which was one of the first cut and sold in small holdings. The land was situated eight miles east of Los Angeles and there he continued for eight years. On selling the property he removed to Arizona and engaged in freighting to the mines for six years. On his return to California he settled in Los Angeles and for ten years engaged in grading streets, a work of great importance and one in which he proved himself trustworthy and capable. The year 1890 found him in Redlands, where he secured employment in making reservoirs for the Domestic Water Company, and at the same time he did grading for the Bear Valley Water Company. When he had completed the grading he sold the teams. The next venture in which he became interested was the making of ditches in Moreno valley for the Bear Valley Company, in whose employ he had charge of digging and filling with pipe lines fifty miles of ditches. When that contract had been filled he opened a general store at Moreno and also for ten years held the office of postmaster. Since selling the store in November, 1905, he has lived retired from business cares. Included in his possessions are ten town lots in Moreno, his home town, as well as forty acres of farm land in the vicinity.

The marriage of Mr. Dallas was solemnized at El Monte, this state, in 1861, and united him with Jane Whiteman, a native of Texas, who died in 1881, at the age of forty years. Five children were born of their union, namely: James, who is engaged in the printing business in Los Angeles; Annie, who married George Williams and lives in Shasta county, Cal.; Peter A., who conducts a general store at Redlands Junction; Raymond, living in San Bernardino county, and Louis, whom death removed from the family circle at the age of three years. In political views Mr. Dallas has been a stanch believer in Democratic principles ever since boyhood; reared in the south, he imbibed the southern spirit and a strong faith in its institutions. As a rule he has declined offices, but he made an exception since coming to Riverside county, and for four years filled the position of justice of the peace, in which office he proved himself familiar with the law and an impartial exponent of its teachings.

Benjamin B. Higgins

BENJAMIN B. HIGGINS. For upwards of thirty years a resident of San Diego county, Benjamin B. Higgins, of Bonsall, is noted as one of its most valued citizens, resolute, energetic and enterprising, and one who has made his mark in the building up of the township in which he resides, both socially and financially. He is engaged in general agriculture, to which he devotes his whole attention, and is meeting with unbounded success in his undertakings. A native of Oregon, he was born in Polk county, August 27, 1856, a son of the late Hiram Higgins.

Born in Illinois, Hiram Higgins was brought up on a farm, and when old enough to start in life embarked in agricultural pursuits. He subsequently resided for a few years in Missouri, and while there traded extensively in Mexico. Crossing the plains with ox teams in 1849, he arrived in California after a long and dangerous trip, and for awhile tried mining. He subsequently went to Polk county, Ore., where he cleared a ranch from the wild land, upon which he made his home until locating once more in California. Having purchased land near Compton he located upon it in 1867 and continued in his chosen occupation. About 1875 he entered the land now included in the present home ranch of his son Benjamin, and established an apiary, which he managed successfully for some years. He married Malinda Derben, a native of Missouri, and of the eleven children, seven sons and four daughters, born of their union, ten are living, the oldest child being now sixty years of age. Both parents united with the Christian Church when young, and the mother, who resides in Compton, in one of its most faithful and consistent adherents.

When four years of age Benjamin B. Higgins came with the family to Southern California, and for about seven years lived in Los Angeles, where he laid the foundation for his future education. In 1867 the family removed to Compton, where he attended the graded schools, completing the full course of instruction. Coming with his father to Bonsall in 1875 he assisted him in starting an apiary, and for many years carried on an extensive business in bee farming, having on an average about one hundred and fifty colonies of bees, one season this number being increased to four hundred colonies. In 1889 Mr. Higgins bought from his father this ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, and has since devoted himself to general farming, including the raising of grain, beans, wainuts and peaches. He raises good crops, and as an agriculturist is exceedingly prosperous, fortune smiling on all of his ventures. He also has a French Percheron stallion for breeding purposes.

In 1879 Mr. Higgins married Laura Combs, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Alfred A., of Bonsall; Frances, wife of Augustus Culp, of Oceanside; Lizzie, wife of Charles Trotter, of Oceanside; Elon, living at home; Benjamin, at home, and Mary, at home. In 1903 Mr. Higgins was again married, Sadie Kitching becoming his wife. Politically Mr. Higgins is identified with the Democratic party, and although not an aspirant for public office has long served as school trustee, for fifteen years being clerk of the board. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JAMES BROWN WATSON. Situated at the foot of the San Bernardino mountains, six and one-half miles from the city of that name and along the route of Highland free delivery No. 2, may be seen the well-improved homestead owned and occupied by Mr. Watson, and brought by him to its present high state of improvement since he acquired the land by purchase in 1893. Immediately after buying the property he built a residence and barn and established his home on the tract. At that time the land was in its wild state, no attempt having been made at improvement, but under his energetic labors a transformation soon was effected. Owing to the adaptability of the soil to fruit, he has made horticulture his specialty. Shortly after coming here he planted seed of various fruits, and now has one of the finest orchards in the locality. The thirteen acres are in navel oranges, lemons and grape fruit, as well as deciduous trees of the best varieties. Through using great care with the trees, some of which have their original tops and some have been budded twice, he has made his grove one of the most productive in the vicinity and the fruit finds a ready sale at the highest market prices.

During the early years of his life Mr. Watson was a resident of Missouri, born in Ray county, July 31, 1859, his parents being James and Rebecca (Ragan) Watson, natives of Kentucky and England. Educated in common schools, the knowledge he now possesses has been acquired by close observation and careful reading rather than from early training in school. On starting out to earn his own way in the world he took up agricultural pursuits and continued to reside in Missouri until he was twenty-one years of age. On leaving that portion of the country he came to California, landing at Riverside in September, 1880, and securing employment in that town, where soon he acquired a practical knowledge of orange culture. In the spring of 1888 he removed from Riverside to Highland district, where since he has made his home and engaged in fruit-raising with energy and gratifying success.

In all of his work Mr. Watson has been aided by the co-operation of his amiable wife, who was Elsie R. Hill, a native of Des Moines county, Iowa, and a daughter of William and Mary (Banta) Hill. Their home is brightened by the presence of three children, Viola, James Roy and M. Adele, who are attractive and promising children, and to whom will be given the best educational advantages the district affords. Two daughters have been taken from the home by death. Mary Rebecca was two years of age when she passed from earth June 9, 1899, and Lois was three years and five months old when the home was bereaved of her presence on Christmas day of 1904. Among their neighbors Mr. and Mrs. Watson are esteemed for the qualities of mind and heart that have won them friends in large numbers and given them a high social standing in the community.

JOSIAH ALKIRE. The life which this narrative sketches began on Christmas Day of 1818, in Williamsport, Ohio, and closed at Kenoak, in Pomona, Cal., February 4, 1895. Between these two dates is the epitome of a career that was busy, useful and successful. Wherever duty called him he performed well his part, and the prosperity that came to him was directly attributable to his wise judgment and tireless activity. With a record of over forty years to his credit as a wholesale merchant in St. Louis, Mo., he came to Pomona in 1890 and settled down on a part of the famous old Palomares rancho, upon which was located the old adobe house erected by Tomas Palomares in 1840 for a family residence. It served the purpose for which it was originally built and later became the welcome half-way house for travelers, this in the early days being the principal hotel between San Bernardino and Los Angeles. Another incident worthy of note in connection with this historic relic of other days is the fact that the first school in Pomona valley was held in the east room and was taught by C. B. Towner. When Mr. Alkire took possession of the property in 1890 he reset the orchard to navel oranges and laid out the grounds into a beautiful park. The old adobe house was remodelled and replastered and put in excellent repair throughout, and today Kenoak, as the homestead is called, stands as a model of comfort and completeness.

Josiah Alkire was a son of Rev. George Alkire, a minister in the Christian denomination. Up to the year 1840 he filled pulpits in various parts of Ohio, but in that year removed to central Illinois, where during the remainder of his life he went about doing good and fulfilling his mission as a minister of the Gospel. In all of his work he had the sympathy and co-operation of his wife, who was in maidenhood Katie Rush. In the primitive schools that prevailed in Ohio prior to 1840 Josiah Alkire gained such knowledge as the equally primitive teachers were able to furnish, but notwithstanding the difficulties under which he labored he made the most of his meagre opportunities and laid by a larger fund of information than the less ambitious students. In 1849 he set out for the gold fields of California. The records do not state with what success he met as a miner, but it is known that he returned east soon afterward and that he made a similar trip across the plains three years later, in 1852. In the fall of that year, however, he returned east as far as St. Louis, Mo., where he established himself in the wholesale grocery business. From unpretentious beginnings the business grew and prospered with the passing of years, until he commanded a trade that extended over a wide radius, shipping goods to points along the Mississippi, Illinois, Missouri and Red rivers. He became an important factor in the business circles of St. Louis, where he had gained a record for uprightness and integrity, and his removal to the west in 1890 was deeply deplored. It was not until three years later, however, that he finally disposed of his business in St. Louis and thus severed connections which had been sustained with mutual pleasure and profit to himself and his home city for over forty years. Purchasing thirteen acres of the Palomares rancho near

Josiah W. Hudson

Pomona and adjoining Genesha Park, he remodeled and improved the adobe residence and set the orchard to navel oranges exclusively, making the homestead one of the most delightful and restful spots in this part of Southern California. Mr. Alkire was not long spared to enjoy his new home, however, for his death occurred amid the surroundings which he had learned to love February 4, 1895.

Near Pleasant Plains, Sangamon county, Ill., in 1864, Josiah Alkire formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Lydia Tomlin, the daughter of Almarine and Rhoda (Smith) Tomlin. During young womanhood Mrs. Alkire attended the Illinois Woman's College at Jacksonville, from which institution she was graduated. Two sons blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Alkire, Frank, who is a shoe merchant in Phoenix, Ariz., and George, who is engaged in the cattle business in the same place.

JOSIAH W. HUDSON. The agriculturists of Los Angeles county have had in J. W. Hudson one of their most prominent and successful citizens, his enterprises in this section of Southern California extending over a period of a considerable number of years. He is a native of New York, where his birth occurred in Oswego, February 18, 1844; his father, J. W. Hudson, was born and reared in Boston, Mass., the representative of a distinguished family of that state, and he there learned the trade of cooper, which he followed until his death, which took place in Ohio in 1894. His wife was formerly Sarah E. Wells, of Welsh ancestry, her birth occurring in Connecticut and her death in Ohio in 1892. They were the parents of the following children: Amarette, Amos, Lottie, Mary, Susan, Sarah, and Josiah W., of this review; of this family all are living except Amos and Lottie.

Josiah W. Hudson was reared in his native state, receiving his education in the public schools up to the age of fourteen years, when he became dependent upon his own resources. After leaving home he drifted further west and in Iowa secured employment in Allamakee county. At the first tap of the drum in 1861, however, every thought but that for his country's need was put aside and he immediately enlisted for the three months' service. The quota of men being obtained, he was not needed, but nothing daunted nor satisfied that he would not be needed in the future, he then enlisted in Company K, Fifth Regiment Iowa Infantry, for three years, and participated in many of the most important engagements of that historic struggle. He was in the battle of Iuka, Corinth, siege of Vicksburg, Champion Hill, and after the surrender of Vicksburg because of disability he was transferred to Company C, Fourth United States Veteran Reserves, and in this he served faithfully until his honorable discharge in 1864.

Returning to civic life Mr. Hudson was located in Peoria, Ill., and from that point in the spring of 1865 joined a party for the overland trip to the Pacific coast. He drove an ox-team across the plains to Virginia City via Salt Lake City, and the following year he drove oxen to Montana. His first employment in the west was as a miner, with other prospectors going to the Big Horn mountains, returning via Salt Lake City and afterward engaging in a venture in southern Utah. In the meantime he had come to Southern California and in the year 1867 he began spending his winters in Los Angeles county, while during the summers he engaged in mining in Montana, Idaho, Utah and Colorado. He met with success in his work, not because he never lost, but because he never let misfortune daunt him, but went perseveringly to the task again, and in the main was successful in his efforts.

In November, 1879, Mr. Hudson was united in marriage with Miss Victoria R. Rowland, the youngest daughter of John Rowland, one of the earliest pioneers of Southern California, who with a partner secured a grant of many thousand acres of land, a large part of which afterward passed to his children. His marriage in an early day united him with a lovely daughter of a Spanish settler. Subsequently Mr. Rowland was married to Mrs. Gray and their daughter became the wife of Mr. Hudson.

Mr. Hudson has over two thousand acres of fine land, upon which is the old Rowland homestead, the first brick house built in Southern California. The bricks were burned on the old farm, the house being erected by Mr. Rowland in 1855. This extensive acreage is used principally for grain and grazing purposes, one of Mr. Hudson's interests being in the raising of horses. He has been very successful in this effort and has acquired a position among the citizens of the section who hold him in high esteem for the ability, energy and industry he has displayed in the management of his property. Progressive in every sense of the word, and liberal with his large means, no citizen is more depended upon to further important movements in the growth and development of this section. When the Salt Lake Railway were putting their line through the country he donated two acres of land for what is now known as Hudson Station. Mr. Hudson has been an interested witness in the development of the country as well as an active participant, he being the man to sink the first artesian well in Los Angeles county, and in many other ways assisted materially in the upbuilding of the community in which he makes his home.

Mr. and Mrs. Hudson are the parents of three children, namely: Rowland, Lillian and Josiah W., Jr. Fraternally Mr. Hudson is connected with Pentalpha Lodge No. 202, F. & A. M., in Los Angeles, and politically he is Independent. He is a member of the Pioneers Society of Los Angeles County. He has always taken a special interest in educational affairs of the community and his school district, organized in 1888, was named Hudson district in his honor. Mr. Hudson merits the position of esteem and respect he holds in the community, having won it by the qualities of manhood he has displayed during his long residence in Southern California. He is accounted a helpful and practical citizen, a generous and loyal friend, and a man who seeks always to advance every influence toward the betterment of the moral life of those about him.

MOSES ATWOOD FLINT. Shortly after his removal to California in May, 1898, Mr. Flint bought ten acres of improved land (planted to vines, olives and citrus fruit) which formed the nucleus of his present property. Since then he has added to his holdings and now owns twenty-five acres. The cottage has been enlarged and other improvements made as the needs of the family demanded or their inclination directed. The barn which still is in use was built by the Mormons who years ago took up the land from the government.

The family of which Mr. Flint is an honored representative comes from New England ancestry, and he was born in Vermont, but passed the years of youth principally in New Hampshire, where for some time his parents, Rev. Moses and Nancy (Hovey) Flint, made their home. The best educational advantages were given him that the neighborhood afforded. On the completion of a common-school course he was sent to an academy, where he fitted himself for the work of teaching, and afterward for a long period he continued successfully as an educator in the east and in Iowa. For twenty-one years he lived in Iowa and followed his chosen calling with gratifying success, winning a position among the foremost teachers of his locality. On retiring from the school-room to engage in outdoor activities, he removed to California and since then has resided in San Bernardino county.

The marriage of Mr. Flint was solemnized March 17, 1861, and united him with Hannah Sophronia Balch, a native of Grafton county, N. H., and a daughter of Theodore and Sally (Lovejoy) Balch. On both sides of the family her ancestors were identified with the early history of our country. Both of her grandfathers participated in the war of 1812, one enlisting from Hebron, Grafton county, and the other from Lyme, same county. The patriotic spirit characteristic of the family finds further proof in the fact that two of Mrs. Flint's brothers bore a brave part as Union soldiers in the Civil war, and were faithful in their allegiance to the cause from the time of their enlistment with a New Hampshire regiment until the expiration of their term of service. Six children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Flint, namely: Edwin Atwood, who was born January 3, 1863, in New Hampshire, and received his education in Iowa; Theodore Balch, who was born in Iowa November 28, 1865, and now resides in California; Sarah Elizabeth, who was born April 27, 1868, and is now the wife of David Scoville, of Decatur county, Kans.; Levi Carroll, who was born December 28, 1871, and died March 5, 1876; Moses Deloss, who went to the Philippines as a soldier in the Spanish-American war and since the close of the war has remained in Manila as a supervisor of teachers; and Emma Frances, who was born April 27, 1877, and is now the wife of Daniel Ledford, of San Bernardino.

The family are identified with the Baptist Church and in former years Mr. Flint officiated as a deacon of his congregation. In fraternal relations he became affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows many years ago and has retained his interest in that organization, besides being identified with the Masonic Order in the blue lodge. As a citizen he is always found on the side of measures for the benefit of the people and for the efficient training of the rising generation, it being his belief that a thorough education is the best preparation for a successful life. Through all of his labors he has shown a thoughtful consideration for others and a spirit of impartiality and justice most important to a teacher. In the quiet life of an orchardist, remote from the turbulent world of affairs, he finds abundant exercise as well as a keen pleasure in the improvement of the land, and after years of energetic application to educational work he enjoys the change to his present occupation with its accompanying activities.

ULYSSES F. RICHARDVILLE. Having been left an orphan in his sixth year, Ulysses F. Richardville had a childhood lacking in the tender care of parents, and from the age of eleven years was obliged to make his own way in the world. Armed only with a scanty common school education, his two empty hands, and indomitable pluck and energy he has succeeded in acquiring a good working education by careful and extensive reading, and accumulated considerable property, as well as attained a position of some prominence in his locality, where he is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. The Richardville family is of French extraction, the first members having come to America four hundred years ago. U. F. Richardville was born in February, 1868, in Knox county, Ind., the son of Peter and Ida (Cornpint) Richardville, both of whom were natives of Indiana. The father was a farmer in that state, his death occurring there April 30, 1874, at the age of thirty years; his wife died in 1870, when twenty-five years old. From the time he was eleven years old until 1892 Mr. Richardville worked on farms by the month for Indiana farmers, and in that year he decided to seek wider opportunities in the west. Arriving in Redlands, Cal., he worked out for six months, and then started to ranch for himself in Moreno, beginning necessarily in a small way. By the exercise of prudence and careful and economical business methods he was able gradually to add to his interests until now he is recognized as one of the leading ranchmen in the valley.

C. R. Mont

By his marriage in Yuma, Ariz., in July, 1898, Mr. Richardville was united with Maggie Suey, a native of California, and they have one child, Myrtle May. Fraternally Mr. Richardville is a member of Redlands Lodge No. 343, I. O. O. F., and of Redlands Lodge No. 583, B. P. O. E. Politically he is a Republican. His home ranch comprises seven hundred acres of land which is devoted to the raising of barley and the indications are that this (1906) year's crop will yield ten sacks per acre. Besides owning all of the machinery necessary to operate the ranch he also has fourteen head of stock horses.

CORNELIUS R. SHORT. Prominent among the pioneer ranchers of Southern California is Cornelius Short, now a resident of Los Angeles county and engaged in ranching near Norwalk. He has witnessed the development of the state and participated in its upbuilding, enduring the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life and now in the evening of his days he is privileged to enjoy the phenomenal progress of the western commonwealth. His boyhood home was on the Atlantic coast, his birth having occurred December 5, 1830, in Lewiston, Delaware. His parents, Stanley B. and Eliza (Clifton) Short, were natives respectively of Baltimore, Md., and Lewiston, Del., the maternal grandfather being a patriot in the war of 1812. The parents were farmers throughout their entire lives, removing to Missouri, where the mother died at the age of fifty-five years, and to Oregon in 1864, where the father died at seventy-eight. One of their sons served in the Mexican war under General Scott and was advanced to the rank of captain; he died about two years after the war. The other three children are still surviving, a daughter living in Oregon at the age of seventy-eight, a son in Washington at eighty-four, and Cornelius R. in California nearly seventy-seven.

Cornelius R. Short received his education in the schools of Delaware county, Ohio, where the parents located in his childhood, and there he remained until nearly fifteen, when, in 1845, his parents removed to Missouri. He completed his education in that state, after which he learned the trade of brick mason and worked at it for a time, finally engaging with Russell, Majors and Waddell, who were employed by the government in the delivery of freight to all frontier forts as far as Salt Lake City. In 1858 Mr. Short came as far west as Salt Lake City and there spent the winter at Camp Floyd, returning then to Missouri and the following year crossing the plains to Placerville, Cal. From there he went on to Oregon, arriving January 6, 1860, and became occupied in furnishing miners' supplies, and also conducted some personal mining enterprises, and engaged in the butcher business. In 1869 he returned to California and near the present site of Santa Ana, Orange county, engaged in ranching and also had charge of a lumber yard. Later he engaged in the stock business and for seven years shipped stock from Arizona to Los Angeles; finally selling out he came to his present place as manager of a ranch of one hundred and five acres of the Glassell estate, thirty-five acres being in bearing fruit, the balance in grain land. He has lived on this ranch for nineteen years and has made it a profitable investment for its owner. In 1875 Mr. Short married Floretta Houghton, a native of Texas, and their home is located at No. 528 South Eastlake avenue, Los Angeles, where he owns property. They have two children, Edna, wife of Fred Davis, of New York City; and Claude, who married Cora Hathaway, of Arizona. Mr. Short is identified fraternally with the Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Pioneer Society of Los Angeles county; in political affiliations he is a stanch adherent of Democratic principles and while a resident of Oregon was chosen by his party to the office of sheriff of Josephine county, having previously served for two terms as deputy sheriff.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN MAXSON. An inheritance of sterling traits of character, have made the members of the Maxson family able to take a place among the representative citizens of whatever section they have made their home. New England ancestry gave to their descendants name and character, later members locating in New York, where in Allegheny county, Abel Maxson, a native of Rhode Island, engaged as a farmer. Following the example of his Revolutionary sires he served in the war of 1812, participating in several important engagements, among them Sacket's Harbor. Some time after the close of the war he removed to Dane county, Wis., where he made his home until his death, which occurred in his eightieth year. He married Abigail Lull, a native of New York, in which state her death occurred. They had six sons, namely: Mathew, a miner, located in El Monte, and the only son living; Schuyler and Edmund, who were killed during service in a New York regiment during the Civil war; William, who served as captain in a New York regiment in the Civil war; George, who served as major in a Georgia regiment, in the Confederate army; and Benjamin Franklin, the father of the subject of this review.

Benjamin F. Maxson, Sr., also served in the Civil war, enlisting in Company K, Thirteenth Wisconsin Infantry, and participated in many important engagements, principally in the middle west. His hearing was seriously impaired at the battle of Nashville by the concussion of a shell, which injury in after years resulted in deafness and caused his death; while crossing the Southern Pacific tracks at Shorb he failed to hear the oncoming train and was struck and killed in May, 1899. After the war he remained in Wisconsin until 1867, when he came to Colusa county, Cal., and engaged in farming for about eight years. Coming to Southern California in 1875 he located in Tustin and purchased a ranch, which he improved with an orange, lemon and walnut grove. In 1889, having sold his Tustin ranch, he came to El Monte, where with P. F. Cogswell he purchased a tract of land and set out one of the first walnut groves in the Mountain View district. He improved about two hundred acres of land, and owned at the time of his death about one hundred and seventy acres, which was considered one of the best improved properties in this section. He was not only active in his personal affairs, but maintained a creditable interest in all matters of public import, being particularly associated with educational and religious work, and was instrumental in the building of schools and churches. He was a liberal and public-spirited man in every avenue of life and one who could always be counted upon to uphold public honor, either personally or by his vote. He was a Republican politically, while in religion he belonged to the Presbyterian Church. He had been associated for many years with the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife, formerly Olive Merwin, was born near Genesee Falls, N. Y., a daughter of James Merwin, a farmer, who also removed to Wisconsin. Her mother was a Miss Babcock, the lineage of whose family can be traced back to John Alden, of Pilgrim fame. Mrs. Maxson died in February, 1900, leaving a family of six children, of whom five are now living: Myra, wife of A. C. Drake, of El Monte; Annie, wife of Thomas R. McMichael, of El Monte; Benjamin Franklin Jr., of this review; Fay, Mrs. Neely, of Manila, Philippine Islands; and Olive, of El Monte.

Born in Tustin, Orange county, Cal., May 15, 1879, Benjamin Franklin Maxson, Jr., was reared on the paternal farm and educated in the public schools in youth; entering Pomona College, which course was interrupted by the death of his father. Returning home he gave his attention to the management of the home ranch, conducting its interests for two years, when he located in a twenty-acre tract and engaged in the management of a walnut grove. In 1906 he sold out, and in the meantime, having purchased other property which he had set out in walnuts and upon which in 1905 he had installed a pumping plant for its irrigation, he immediately located upon this ranch and began the raising of walnuts and alfalfa. This ranch of forty acres is located in the Bassett district and is well improved, 1907 witnessing the erection of a handsome and comfortable residence.

In El Monte Mr. Maxson was united in marriage with Miss Mary Alexander, a native of this place, and born of their union are the following children: Frances, Marjorie, Benjamin Franklin, Jr., Stanley and Alice. Mr. Maxson supports the Baptist Church in its charities, his wife being a member of that denomination. Mr. Maxson is a Republican in his political convictions. He belongs to the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association and seeks to advance the interests of the section in which he makes his home. Mrs.

Maxson is the daughter of pioneer parents, her father, John Henry Alexander, a native of the Pickett district, of South Carolina, having come to California when twenty years old, crossing the plains with ox-team and on his arrival engaging in the mines of the state. He became foreman of a mine in Drytown, Amador county, and later engaged in mining in Calaveras county. Disposing of his interests in 1880, he came to El Monte, where he made his home until his death, which occurred in 1882, at the age of fifty-three years. He was married in Drytown, Cal., in 1863, to Miss Marie Publetis, a native of Chili, whose father, Jose, was born in that country, of Spanish ancestry. She came to San Francisco with an aunt in 1849, then a city of tents, and after the death of her relative at Spanish Flat she made her own way in the world. She came to El Monte with her husband and children in 1880, and two years later was left a widow with seven children, whom she reared with all the advantages children could have, and continued to improve and add to the value of her five acres of walnuts. She has six children living, namely: John H., of Nebraska; Albert A., in Nevada; Andrew J., a carpenter of El Monte; James S., an engineer of Bassett; Rosa, Mrs. Reynolds, of Puente; and Mary J., wife of B. F. Maxson. Mrs. Alexander still survives and is prominent socially in El Monte, supporting the interests of the Baptist Church, to which she belongs.

MRS. HELEN B. GRISWOLD. The possessor of a comfortable home situated in Twin Oaks valley seven miles northwest of Escondido, San Diego county, Mrs. Griswold enjoys in the afternoon of her life the pleasures afforded by an equable climate and an attractive environment. Though far removed from the land of her birth and the home of her childhood, she is happily not remote from kindred, but has the companionship of a sister, Mrs. Janet Craig, who resides with her, also of two sisters, Mrs. Jane O'Brien and Mrs. Agnes Andrews, who reside only one mile distant. The four sisters are well known throughout the valley and have won the friendship of their large circle of acquaintances in the county.

Of English birth and Scotch lineage, they are the daughters of David McCutcheon, who was born at Ayr, Scotland, May 7, 1809, and by occupation followed mercantile pursuits. While still a single man he removed to England and settled at Dudley, Worcestershire, and there, in St. Thomas' Church, March 19, 1832, he was united in marriage with Jane Little, who was born in Scotland June 3, 1809. Ten children were born of their union, namely: Anthony, who was born in 1834 and died at Davenport, Iowa, at the age of eighteen years; Margaret, who was born in 1836 and died in England at three years of age; Janet, Mrs. Craig, who was born in 1837; David, born in 1839, deceased in 1840 in England; Jane, Mrs. O'Brien, who was born in 1840; Agnes, Mrs. Andrews, born in 1842; Helen B., Mrs. Griswold, born in 1844; William, who was born in 1846 and in 1862 enlisted in the Twentieth Iowa Infantry, marched to the front with the regiment, was taken ill at Mobile and there died; Mary, who was born in 1848 and died in Davenport, Iowa; and Sarah, who was the only member of the family born in the United States, a native of Davenport, Iowa, and there deceased in infancy.

It was during the year 1850 that the family left England to seek a home in the United States, setting sail on the ship Gypsy, from which they debarked at New Orleans. Thence they went up the Mississippi river on the Josiah Lawrence to St. Louis, and on the Archer to Davenport. Misfortune soon befell them. The father was taken ill with cholera and died on the 24th of May. His body was buried at Villa Vista Landing and the widow and children proceeded to Davenport, Iowa. In a few more years another bereavement came upon the children, when their mother was taken from them by death, in 1854, at the age of forty-five years. When the only surviving brother died during his service in the Union army, the sisters were left as the sole representatives of the once numerous family. Of the sisters Helen B. became the wife of Cornelius Griswold, their marriage being solemnized in Jamestown, S. Dak., whence they proceeded to Mr. Griswold's home at Boulder, Mont., and there he died in April, 1887, at the age of forty-one years. After a brief sojourn in Davenport, Iowa, Mrs. Griswold went to St. Paul, Minn., and there made her home for a number of years. About 1894 she came to California and purchased ten acres two miles south of Carlsbad, San Diego county, erecting thereon a commodious structure which she utilized as a hotel. For four years she lived at that place and it is still in her possession. Returning to Iowa she visited in Davenport for a year and then came back to the coast. After a year she bought thirteen acres seven miles northwest of Escondido and built a substantial residence with modern appointments, where since she has made her home.

Mrs. Craig, who for some years has been with Mrs. Griswold, was married in Davenport, Iowa, in 1861, to William T. Craig, and they resided in Waterloo until his death, in April of 1881, at the age of forty-seven years. Three children blessed their union, namely: Ella M., wife of A.

L. Gartside, member of the sash and door manufacturing firm of Curtis, Gartside & Co., of Oklahoma City, Okla.; Edward Challen, who is employed as draftsman with Curtis, Gartside & Co.; and Winnifred M., wife of John A. Bevington, principal of the schools of Santa Fe Springs, Cal. Fraternally Mr. Craig was identified with the Masonic Order. In religious views Mrs. Craig upholds the doctrines of the Baptist denomination and Mrs. Griswold also is in sympathy with the teachings of that church.

The next to the eldest of the four sisters is Jane, who in October, 1898, married Capt. William Thomas O'Brien, a native of Rockland, Me., and for thirty years a captain on the high seas. After their marriage they removed to his ranch in Twin Oaks valley, San Diego county, and there he died August 23, 1904, at the age of sixty-five years. The third of the sisters, Agnes, was married at Wapello, Iowa, in 1868 to Ira E. Andrews, who was born in Connecticut, served in the Civil war, and engaged in business for a time at Davenport, but subsequently at Newton, Iowa, where he died in 1886, at the age of forty years. Three children were born of their union. The sons, Ira G. and Warren, are engaged in the grain business in St. Paul, Minn., and the daughter, Lulu, makes her home with them in that city. In religious connections Mrs. Andrews holds membership with the Christian Church, but Mrs. O'Brien, like the other sisters, favors Baptist doctrines. Fraternally Captain O'Brien was a stanch believer in the principles of Masonry and long affiliated with that order. The origin of the O'Brien family in America has in its history something of the element of romance. The captain's great-grandfather, while in England, was taken on board a man-of-war and forced to enter that country's service. Eagerly he awaited a chance to escape and such an opportunity came when the ship was off the coast of Maine, when he swam on the shore and sought a refuge among the Indian tribes then frequenting that coast. To him belonged the distinction of being the first white school-master on the shores of Maine and his descendants long lived and flourished in that state where he had become a settler unexpectedly to himself.

HANS ANDREAS JOHNSON. The president of the Klamath Falls Land and Live Stock Company, who until recently also was proprietor of the Johnson Packing Company of San Diego, is of Scandinavian birth and ancestry, and was born in the village of Honefossen, twenty-eight miles from Christiania. His parents, Gilbert and Bertha (Juul) Johnson, natives of the same locality, owned and occupied an improved farm named Ostmoen, meaning "Eastern" or "Clearing in the woods." The mother was the daughter of parents who came from Drammen and who were of old Norwegian families, allied with the Lutheran denomination from the epoch immediately following the Reformation. When somewhat beyond middle life she came to the United States and later died in Minnesota. All of her four children have established homes in the new world. Hans Andreas, who was second among the four, was born June 26, 1845, and received a fair education in his native tongue. During the spring of 1861 he came to America and settled at Winona, Minn., but soon removed to Chicago.

Enlisting in the Union army in the fall of 1862 Mr. Johnson was assigned to the One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Infantry, but on account of illness did not join his regiment. On his recovery he was placed on detached service as wagonmaster under General Steadman, with whom he served in Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee. At the expiration of his time, April 2, 1865, he was honorably discharged from the army. Meanwhile his mother had settled in Allamakee county, Iowa, and there he joined the family, soon after which he embarked in the grain business at Lansing, same county, making shipments from there by river. In addition he owned warehouses and business interests in De-Soto, Wis., and Decorah, Iowa. During 1871 he became interested in the hotel business at Mankato, Minn., but the following year he removed to Sioux Rapids, Iowa, and erected the first store building and opened the first store in that town, continuing in the place for some years.

During the spring of 1877 Mr. Johnson removed to the Black Hills and bought a ranch on the Box Elder, eighteen miles from Deadwood, where he had a large range for his stock. Later he established a second ranch near Hot Springs, S. Dak., and the Diamond J Cattle Company, of which he was the owner, became known throughout the entire northwestern country, where his brands of J within a diamond, and two half circles, together with his horse brand of HA connected, were to be seen on many of the finest cattle and horses of the territory. On selling out his cattle and ranches in 1899, he came to San Diego, where he first purchased an interest in the Mixon Packing Company and eventually bought the entire stock of the company, whereupon he changed the title to the Johnson Packing Company. Besides engaging in the wholesale and retail grocery business he made a specialty of manufacturing and packing pickles, ketchup, Worcester sauce, etc., all of which bore the Diamond J label. On account of his health he closed out the business in the spring of 1906, since which time he has given his attention to the development of the Klamath Falls Land and Live Stock Company, recently started in the vicinity of Kalamath Falls, Ore. The company is incorporated under the laws of the State of California with a capital stock of $200,000, three-fourths of which amount is now (1906) in the treasury, and the remainder on sale at fifty cents a share, par value $1 per share, fully paid and non-assessable. The land owned by the company is within the government irrigation project, for which $4,500,000 has been appropriated; it is also within a short distance of a projected railroad, which will be the main line of the Southern Pacific Railway Company between San Francisco and Portland.

Mary J. Westgate

Charles A. Westgate

The first wife of Mr. Johnson was Miss Mary Hanson, who was born in Norway and died at Sioux Rapids, Iowa, leaving three children, namely: George, living in Wyoming; Mrs. Clara Austed, of Buford, N. Dak., and Mrs. Hattie Revendal, who lives near Deadwood, S. Dak. In Fayette county, Iowa, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Clement, who was born in Norway. Two children were born of their union. The daughter, Mrs. Gina Lowman, lives in San Diego. The son, Carbonate O., is now secretary of the Klamath Falls Land and Live Stock Company and secretary and treasurer of the Native Gem Mining Company. Mr. Johnson belongs to the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, in politics votes with the Republican party, fraternally was made a Mason in Storm Lake Lodge No. 309, A. F. & A. M., at Storm Lake, Iowa, and on the organization of the Scandinavian Society of San Diego became one of its charter members, later holding the office of vice-president for a time.

CHARLES A. WESTGATE. Prominent among the venerable and highly respected residents of Long Beach is Charles A. Westgate, a man of sterling worth and character, who, though having outlived the allotted span of man's life, bears with grace and dignity his burden of years. Thrown upon his own resources in boyhood, he labored untiringly, and by dint of perseverance, self-reliance and thrift won success in his undertakings, and now, living retired from active pursuits, is enjoying in comfort and leisure the visible fruits of his many years of toil. A son of Levi Westgate, he was born April 10, 1824, in Chenango county, N. Y., coming from New England ancestry.

A native of New York state, Levi Westgate spent his early years there, following the shoemaker's trade. In 1847 he removed to Kendall county, Ill., locating in Little Rock township, where he resided until his death, August 30, 1857, aged sixty-five years. While young he served as a soldier in the war of 1812, participating in several engagements. He married Hannah B. Hall, who was born in Massachusetts, on Cape Cod, and died in Plano, Little Rock township, Ill., August 1, 1862 aged sixty-five years. She was descended from a family of prominence in colonial days, having been a great-granddaughter of Charles Bunker, who owned the hill in Charlestown, Mass., on which the battle of Bunker Hill was fought, and who was killed in that memorable engagement.

At the age of nine years Charles A. Westgate was bound out, and thereafter received such an education as he could obtain in the winter terms of the district school. Beginning for himself when eighteen years old, he worked by the month for a number of years. In 1845 he migrated to Illinois, locating in Kendall county, where he rented land and for many years was prosperously employed as a tiller of the soil. August 8, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Infantry, under command of Capt. Charles Schriver, and served until the close of the war. He took part in many important engagements, including among others the engagements at Yazoo, Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, Missionary Ridge and Atlanta, and marched with Sherman to the Sea, driving a six-mule team from Atlanta to Washington, D. C., where, on June 11, 1865, he took part in the Grand Review.

After receiving his discharge Mr. Westgate returned to Kendall county, Ill., remaining there until 1867, when he located in Will county and started a nursery, which he conducted for about a quarter of a century, meeting with good success in that industry. He was also prominently identified with the agricultural advancement of that part of the state, more especially with that branch relating to the breeding of stock, becoming a pioneer raiser of registered Hereford cattle, and one of the organizers of the American Hereford Breeders' Association, of which he is still a stockholder. Disposing of his farm and stock in 1890, he came to California on account of ill health, locating at Orange in December of that year. Purchasing a fruit ranch, he operated it for five years, when he sold out. Coming to Long Beach in 1896 he invested in city property and also bought land northeast of town, buying a farm of one hundred and sixty acres which he sold in July, 1904. He then bought the house and lot where he now resides, and is living retired from the activities of business. While living in Illinois he was very prominent in public affairs, both in Kendall and Will counties, in the former helping to organize the town of Plano, and in the latter the town of Peotone, serving for a while as trustee of each place, and for six years was a member of the local school board.

For forty years he was an auctioneer, starting after the war to sell condemned government goods throughout Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and Missouri.

November 12, 1851, Mr. Westgate married Mary Jane Hall, who was born February 23, 1835, a daughter of David and Sarah (Jenner) Hall. Her parents were both born in England, were there married, and in 1833 immigrated to New York, where they resided until 1847. Removing to Illinois, they remained there seven years, when they removed to Iowa, taking up government land in Jones county. Later they sold from their land the site of the Oxford mills. Mr. Hall died in 1873 at the age of seventy-five, and Mrs. Hall in 1871, at the same age, both being buried in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Westgate are the parents of six children, three living, namely: James E., Ella A., and Charles A., Jr. James E. Westgate was the first white child born in Plano, Ill., and is now a resident of Chicago; he is married and has four children. Ella A., the only daughter, is the wife of Dr. James T. Arwine, who has recently opened an office for the practice of his profession in Los Angeles. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Arwine was employed in the pension office at Washington, D. C., for nine years, and was one of two special clerks sent from that department to the land office, with which she was connected for two years. Charles A., Jr., who is in business in Santa Ana, Cal., is married and has two children. Politically Mr. Westgate is a stanch Republican and is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Fraternally he was made a Mason in 1865 in Sunbeam Lodge No. 636, A. F. & A. M., in Plano, Ill.; he assisted in organizing the lodge in Peotone, serving six years as master, and upon his retirement was presented with a silver pitcher; he is now a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327. Mrs. Westgate has been a member of the Eastern Star Chapter since 1870 and for twenty years held office in Peotone, Dorcas Chapter; she was presented with an emblematic pin at the time she left Illinois. She is also a member of the Woman's Relief Corps. Mr. Westgate joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Little Rock, Ill., in 1853 and his wife joined the Rebekahs the following year. Mrs. Westgate is an artist, having some very fine reproductions in oil from her brush, her work being remarkable from the fact that she had never taken the brush in hand until she was fifty-eight years old. November 12, 1901, Mr. and Mrs. Westgate celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home on Linden street, and on the same day in 1906 they celebrated their fifty-fifth anniversary. Comparatively few couples are spared to enjoy this privilege and the occasion was celebrated in a fitting manner, old friends as well as new calling to pay them homage and wishing them many more years of continued health and happiness.

FRANCIS J. SILLIFANT. Actively engaged in business as one of the foremost contracting plasterers of San Diego, Francis J. Sillifant is contributing his full share towards the advancement of the industrial prosperity of the city, and holds an assured position among its respected and valued residents. An excellent workman, familiar with every branch of his trade, and ever willing to oblige all patrons, he is kept busily employed at all times and gives employment to several journeymen plasterers. An Englishman by birth, he was born in Launceston, County Cornwall, May 18, 1857, the son of William Sillifant, the latter a contractor and builder of Launceston, and the descendant of an old and respected family.

On July 4, 1897, Francis J. Sillifant located in San Diego, and ere many seasons had passed he has successfully filled many contracts in plastering, winning a fine reputation for durable and artistic work, and building up a substantial business. Politically he sustains the principles of the Republican party in national affairs, but in local matters votes independent of party restrictions. Fraternally he is a member of the Foresters of America, of the Royal League and of Silver Gate Lodge, No. 296, F. & A. M.

ORVILLE S. HECOX. Early in the colonial history of our country the Hecox family came from Ireland and became identified with the pioneer element of Connecticut, where some of the name aided in the building up of the town of Durham. About 1786 Robert Morris purchased a large tract in New York from the Seneca nation, and shortly afterward James Hecox, of Farmington, Conn., accompanied by his son, Adna (then a youth of nineteen years), and some six others of the same neighborhood, started out to explore the new purchase and after arriving at the Big Tree began to survey land for Mr. Morris. However, on account of the hostility of the Indians, immigration was temporarily abandoned, but later James Hecox purchased six hundred acres of land. In his family there were four sons, James, Salmon, Adna and Reuben. Of these Adna (through whom the present genealogy is traced) made his home at Fort Maldin in Canada and from there moved to Goose Island near Detroit, where his son, Adna A., was born January 26, 1806. While the father was engaged in repairing some of his farming implements, on the 3d of July, 1812, a friend, James Chittenden, came to his house with the alarming news that war had been declared with England. Two hours later the father and mother, with their six children and three hired men, were in two canoes on their way to Detroit, seeking the protection of the soldiers at that post. In the spring of the following year the father went to a small island, where he planted and harvested a sufficient quantity of corn and potatoes to keep the "wolf from the door" until the war had ended. Later he returned to Goose Island and after the death of his wife, in 1820, he bought a tract of land near Fort Rock, where he remained until his death in 1829. His life had been characterized by the stirring incidents of the frontier, and he was a typical pioneer, honest, hospitable, companionable and energetic, well qualified by a stalwart frame and robust constitution to endure the vicissitudes of existence beyond the confines of civilization.

The early recollections of Adna A. Hecox were associated with scenes of peril and hardships on the frontier, where he was reared. In February of 1829 he married Catherine Mannausan and three years later moved to St. Joseph county, Mich., where he remained for six years. Meanwhile, in 1834, his wife died of cholera while visiting at Brownstown. July 10, 1836, he married Margaret M. Hamer, of Pennsylvania, a woman of beautiful character and saintly life, whose memory is cherished in the hearts of her children. From Michigan they moved to Illinois, but considerations of health caused them to seek a more genial climate. April 1, 1846, an expedition started for California with three wagons and ox-teams. The party consisted of seven men, two women and seven children, among them being A. A. Hecox, wife and four children. When they reached the Chariton river the road became blocked with Mormons headed by Brigham Young, but the party of emigrants proceeded without pause and on their arrival at camp found the Mormons had gone forward. On the 4th of May they arrived at St. Joseph, Mo., thence crossed the Missouri river, and started westward via Forts Kearny and Laramie, and the Platte river. While crossing the plains they were attacked by a herd of buffaloes and Mrs. Hecox received a fracture of the collarbone. While at Big Meadows they were visited by "Old" Truckee and two others who proposed to accompany them to the new land. October of 1846 found them camping in the Sacramento valley. As soon as it became known that they had arrived at Sutter's Fort, Captain Swift of Fremont's battalion visited them to solicit volunteers to aid in reconquering the Mexicans. A few of the party joined Captain Swift and the balance proceeded to San Jose in the hope of securing a permanent location.

On the 1st of November the company arrived at the old mission at Santa Clara, where they had been told they could get shelter, but they found the place almost uninhabitable. The number of the expedition had increased to eighty women and children, twenty-five men, and some eight boys old enough to shoulder a rifle, but too young to join General Fremont. Soon typhoid fever broke out among the emigrants and fourteen of the number died of the disease. In one instance a man endeavored to buy a few boards with which to make a bed for his sick wife, but, not finding anyone who would sell, he took a few boards. With these he constructed a rude bed and a few days later made them into a coffin for his dead wife. Afterward the alcalde fined him $25 and put him in jail for taking the boards. The first Protestant sermon ever preached in California, so far as known, was preached by A. A. Hecox on the 15th of December, 1846, his audience being the few Protestant emigrants who had settled in the neighborhood.

During the spring of 1848 a report came to the settlers that workmen at Sutter's Fort had found small quantities of gold. The year previous A. A. Hecox had moved to Soquel, Santa Cruz county, and had erected a mill for Michael Lodge, also had built the first billiard table made in California, using redwood in its construction. While he was operating a mill rented of Mr. Lodge in 1848, all of his hands left to dig gold and he closed the mill and also proceeded to the mines, where he was one of the discoverers of the rich gold mines at Hangtown. On the afternoon of their arrival his party picked up six pounds of gold. In July he returned to Santa Cruz, where he was ill for six weeks. In September he started for the mines of the Mokelumne river and meeting Captain Aram he hauled his goods to Sonora. Though gone but five days, they cleared $2,200. In the fall of 1848 he returned to Santa Cruz, where at first he sold goods for William C. Parker & Co., and in 1849 opened a store with Elijah Anthony. In the fall of 1849 he was elected alcalde, in which office, during 1850, he had sixty-three cases (mostly criminal) in two months. After the admission of California as a state he was made justice of the peace, holding that office several terms. Also he served as public administrator and associate justice of the county court. In 1861 he was elected county treasurer of Santa Cruz county, which office he filled for two years and six months. At the expiration of his term he was appointed lighthouse keeper of the Santa Cruz station and continued in that position until his death, March 17, 1882, since which time his daughter, Miss Laura J. F., has filled the place.

Surviving Adna A. Hecox is his widow, Margaret M., who possessed the fortitude and powers of endurance necessary to frontier existence. During the war in California and while they lived at the old mission in Santa Clara, her husband was appointed one of the guard; for several nights he was too sick to fill his post, so she shouldered his rifle and took his place as a guard. In July, 1847, she was interested in the organization of a temperance society, and she still holds in her possession the pledge, written on a blank leaf of the Bible. The following is a copy: "Washington Pledge, July, 1847.

"We, the undersigned, anxious to promote the true principles of temperance, do pledge our honors that we will not use any intoxicating liquors as beverages."

(Signed): A. A. Hecox
Margaret M. Hecox
Edwin Shaw
James G. T. Dunleavy
Mary Ann Dunleavy
Michael Lodge
William Parks
Curtis Comstock
James T. Kearny
Henry Hill
Robert Devereaux.

Three of the children who crossed the plains with their parents are still living, namely: Mrs. Sarah E. Stampley, of Oakland, Cal.; Mrs. C. M. Brown, of Berkeley; and Adna H. of Santa Cruz. The four children born after the family came to California are as follows: Mrs. Matilda Longley, of Santa Cruz; Mrs. A. R. Organ; Miss Laura J. F., who succeeded her father as keeper of the lighthouse; and the youngest, Orville S., whose name introduces this article, and who was born at Santa Cruz, this state, May 1, 1859. One of the most talented members of the family, Douglas Tilden, a nephew of Orville S. Hecox, has an interesting history. Born at Chico in 1860, he was stricken with the scarlet fever at the age of five years and though he regained his health he was left deaf and dumb. In order to receive proper care he was sent to the asylum at Berkeley in 1883 and afterward became an instructor in the institution. He was twenty-four years of age before he discovered his talent for the sculptor's art. In 1885 he produced his first work, "The Tired Wrestler," and later spent seven months in the National Academy of Design in New York, after which he went to Paris as a private pupil of Paul Chopin, the winner of the gold medal at the salon. After five months he began modeling without an instructor. Among his exhibits at the salon were "Our National Game" or "The Baseball Player," the "Young Acrobat," "The Bear Hunt" and "The Football Player." Since his return to California he has modeled the large fountain erected by the Society of the Native Sons in honor of the admission of California as a state.

Upon completing the studies of the public schools Orville S. Hecox began to learn the trade of house painting, which he followed for many years. In 1886 he came to Oceanside, San Diego county, where he found ready employment at his trade. For two years he also engaged in farming near Rainbow, San Diego county. In 1896 he went to Tustin, later followed his trade at Monrovia for two and one-half years, and May 15, 1905, he returned to Oceanside, where now he engages in the sale of real estate, both city property and farm lands. His marriage took place in Santa Cruz, May 12, 1880, and united him with Miss Etta L. B., daughter of J. E. Butler, who rounded the Horn in 1849 and settled in San Francisco, where he kept the Ocean house and also followed the trade of a builder. Removing to San Mateo, he took the contracts to erect the finest residences of that place. In 1876 he went to Santa Cruz and built a flour mill, but lost a fortune in the enterprise. In 1882 he settled at Riverside and two years later came to Oceanside, near where he took up two hundred acres of government land. During the boom he sold his property at a high figure, but later lost heavily through investments at Rainbow. While making his home at Rainbow he died in 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Hecox have an adopted daughter, Margaret. The family are identified with the Advent Church and are honored members of the best social circles of Oceanside.

LOUIS L. LARSEN. Although he has been conducting his restaurant business in San Bernardino but a short time Louis L. Larsen has built up a large trade and is conducting one of the most successful establishments of the kind in this city. He is a native of Drammen, Norway, his birth having occurred there August 19, 1876. His father, Olaf Larsen, was a Norwegian sailor, who, when he came to America, followed the same business on the Great Lakes, his headquarters being in Milwaukee. He later removed to Minneapolis, where his death occurred. Mrs. Larsen, who was in maidenhood Christine Louise Olafson, is now residing in Minneapolis.

The first nine years of the life of Louis L.

Charles Post

Larsen were spent in his native town and his education was received principally in the public schools of Minneapolis. After completing his school work he was apprenticed to Reagan Brothers of that city to learn pastry cooking, finishing the training in three and one-half years. He then took up professional cooking and spent a summer in Yellowstone Park as pastry cook in one of the hotels owned by the Yellowstone Park Hotel Association. From there he came to San Mateo, Cal., in 1897 accepting a like position in the St. Matthew boarding school at that place. Following this he held positions as pastry cook successively at the Arlington hotel, Santa Barbara, and the hotel at El Paso Robles, remaining in the latter place eighteen months. His next position was in Los Angeles in the Imperial cafe as night cook. In 1899 he entered the employ of Fred Harvey as pastry cook at Needles, then went to San Diego, to what is now known as Hotel Robinson. Again engaging himself to Mr. Harvey he was in San Bernardino for a time, then went to Ash Fork, Ariz., and finally back to San Bernardino, becoming chief cook of the Harvey house. He resigned this position in 1904 to take charge of the Squirrel inn as proprietor, and in October, 1905, opened Larsen's lunch counter and has since been conducting it with splendid success. In 1906 he remodeled the quarters, put in a new range, and cold storage rooms, and now has a fifty-stool modern place which is enjoying great popularity.

Fraternally Mr. Larsen is a member of the Eagles and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He belongs to the Merchants' Association and also the Board of Trade. No enterprise tending to upbuild San Bernardino goes without his support and co-operation.

CHARLES POST. The advantages afforded to a sojourner in the west and particularly that portion of the west embraced within the limits of Southern California find in Mr. Post an enthusiastic advocate and stalwart champion. For a long period he has made his home in the west. By actual experience he has gained an insight into the soil, climate and possibilities of various portions of the country lying west of the Rocky mountains, and of all this broad domain he considers the finest section to be in the vicinity of his present home. Since 1891 he has resided in Redlands, and for a considerable period he rendered efficient service as zanjero with the Bear Valley Irrigation Company. More recently, however, by reason of official duties, he has had his headquarters in the city of San Bernardino.

The lineage of the Post family is traced back to Peter Schuyler Post, who owned sixteen hundred acres in Orange county, N. Y., and wielded a large influence among the men of his day and locality. Next in line of descent was Edwin Post, who passed his early years upon his father's vast estate in the east, but on starting out for himself sought the then unknown regions of Illinois and in the midst of the wilderness carved out a home for himself. The now prosperous city of Galesburg numbered him among its early settlers. For a number of years he followed lumbering, for a long period engaged in the cattle business, and also at another time carried on a large farm. Since his death, which occurred in 1894, his widow, Mary (Doolittle) Post, has removed to California, and now resides at Redlands. The family of which she is a member came to this country from Holland in a very early day.

During the residence of Edwin and Mary Post, at Galesburg, Ill., their son, Charles, was born there January 5, 1860, and there he received a fair education in the grammar and high schools. At the age of sixteen years he left school and gave his attention wholly to aiding his father in the care of their farm near Lincoln, Neb., where he remained for several years, during this time taking considerable interest in the cattle industry. During 1884 he came to California and in 1891 settled at Redlands, which has been his home. Two years before coming to California he married Miss Clara Henderson, daughter of William T. Henderson, a prominent citizen of Galesburg, Ill. Of their union five children were born, namely: Clara, Mary E., C. Alfred, Llewellyn C. and Katherine. Fraternally Mr. Post holds membership with Redlands Lodge No. 86, K. of P., in which he now officiates as district deputy, and further holds office as deputy grand chancellor. In addition he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, being past commander of the local camp. The Benevolent Protective Order of Elks number him among their members, his name being that of a leading member of No. 583, at Redlands.

Through all of his active life, ever since attaining his majority, Mr. Post has been a stanch supporter of the Republican party and has given its candidates his vote. In the various places of his residence he has been an influential local worker. At this writing he is a member of the Republican county central committee and ranks among the leading men of the party within the limits of San Bernardino county. In recognition of his fitness for office and his services in behalf of the party, in 1901 he was appointed deputy county clerk under L. A. Pfeiffer, and this position he held until he was elected county clerk November 6, 1906, by the second largest majority received by any candidate in San Bernardino county.

ISAAC FUNK BAKER. The business interests of El Monte have in Mr. Baker one of their most important factors, his enterprise and progressive spirit having contributed no little to the material upbuilding and development of the place. He has built a substantial business block where he is located and carrying on a mercantile enterprise which is bringing him large financial returns. Mr. Baker is a native of Illinois, and was born in the vicinity of Bloomington, February 15, 1865. His father, N. S. Baker, was born in Somerset, Pa., in 1814, and in manhood became a pioneer settler of Indiana and thence removed to Illinois, where he engaged in farming from 1860 to 1875. He then located in Story county, Iowa, where he made his home until 1893, in which year his death occurred. He was descended from a Revolutionary family, his father having served as a patriot in the colonial army. By his first marriage he had two sons, Isaiah H., a resident of Nebraska, and David. They both served in the Civil war, in which service David was killed. Subsequently Mr. Baker married Mary Jones, a native of West Virginia, whose death occurred in Iowa in 1885. Of this union were born ten children, seven of whom are living.

Isaac Funk Baker was the fifth child by his father's second marriage. When ten years old he became a resident of Iowa, where he grew to manhood, alternating home duties on the farm with an attendance of the public schools, which was completed by one year at the State Agricultural College at Ames, Iowa. His first independent effort was as a clerk in Colo, Story county, where he continued for about two years, and in 1886 went to Boone county and followed a similar occupation for six years. He then went to Chicago and clerked for three years, when, in 1895, he came to California and in El Monte established a meat market with his brother, B. F. Baker, the two continuing in business for two and a half years. He then sold his interest and in 1897 went to San Francisco and embarked with an excursion party for Alaska, arriving at St. Michaels and thence going to Dawson by river boat, reaching his destination October 1 of the same year. He remained one year engaged in mining with success, when he returned to El Monte, September 1, 1898, purchased a lot and put up the block in which he is now engaged in business. In 1904 he put up a brick building 52x84 feet in dimensions, on the corner of Lexington and San Bernardino road, and put in a stock of general merchandise which includes everything to be found in a business of this character. He is one of the original stockholders of the First National Bank of El Monte, which was organized in 1903, and is now serving as a director.

In Providence, R. I., September 26, 1906, Mr. Baker was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Tucker. She is a native of Providence and a descendant of the famous Tucker and Greene families of Rhode Island, whose ancestry can be traced for five generations in that state. She was born on the old Greene homestead a mile from Shannock, which had been in the family for five generations, received her preliminary education in the public schools, after which she attended and graduated from the State Normal School. She came to California and in Los Angeles became prominent in educational work, and at the same time accepted the principalship of the El Monte schools, which position she retained for fourteen years. Her resignation took place in July, 1906, when she returned to Rhode Island and in her home in Providence was married in the September following. She is a woman of rare ability and culture, abreast of the times in every particular, broad-minded to an unusual degree, and capable of making and retaining friends wherever known.

Mr. Baker is associated fraternally with Lexington Lodge No. 104, F. & A. M., of El Monte, in which he has served as master for the past six years, having been made a member of the organization in Columbia Lodge No. 292, of Colo, Iowa. He also belongs to the Royal Arch and Knights Templar of Boone, Iowa, and Al Malaikah Temple, N. M. S., of Los Angeles. His wife is a member of the Congregational Church, which he supports liberally. Politically he is a Republican and stanch in the support of the interests of this party, being an ex-member of the Republican county central committee. He is a man of splended ability, of executive force and strength, capable of making a place for himself in whatever portion of the world his lot may be cast. He has won a wide circle of friends who appreciate him for the qualities of character he has displayed during his long residence in El Monte.

JEREMIE CHEVALIER, of El Monte, is a native of France, his birth having occurred in Hautes-Alpes, May 23, 1868. His parents, Jacques and Mary (Blanc) Chevalier, both died in France, where as agriculturists they had spent their entire lives. They had five children, of whom Jeremie was next to the oldest. He was reared on the parental farm and educated in the common schools. He was sixteen years old when he came to California, arriving in Los Angeles February 22, 1885. Without means or friends he began at the bottom, securing employment in a vineyard in this city, after which he went to San Pedro and engaged with Ed Amar in the sheep business. After four months he went to Tehachapi and worked for ten months in the same business, when he returned to Los Angeles county and engaged in the dairy business. Four years later he undertook an independent effort, purchasing teams and renting land in Orange county, where he successfully engaged in raising grain. Four years later he engaged in raising alfalfa at Los Nietos, Los Angeles county, for a similar period, and finally, in 1902 he bought twenty-five acres of the Peck tract, where he raised alfalfa and walnuts. He installed a pumping plant with a fifty horse power engine and a capacity of two hundred inches, with two wells one hundred and twenty-five feet deep each, this being in partnership with two other ranchers near him. He still retains this property and makes it his home, at the same time renting land with which to carry on more extensive enterprises, devoting the rented land to grain and hay.

In Los Nietos Mr. Chevalier married Miss Mary Buschard, a native of Sacramento, and a daughter of Frank Buschard, who was born in Canada of French descent, came to California in 1849 and for years engaged in mining. He is now retired and living in Los Nietos. Mr. and Mrs. Chevalier have two children, Henry and Clementina. Mr. Chevalier is independent in politics.

WILL LUCIUS FOWLER. The name of Fowler is one well known and highly honored in Redlands, where father and son have given their efforts toward the upbuilding of the city's best interests and its advancement among the other sections of Southern California. The son, Will L. Fowler, is serving at the present writing as city marshal and ably discharging the duties that fall to him as an incumbent of this position; the father, William Fowler, was a prime factor in the municipal government up to the time of his death. The family was originally of English ancestry, the name being located in Connecticut, where William Fowler was born, a son of Bildad, who brought his family to Ohio and established the town of Fowler's Mills, near Cleveland, where he engaged as a farmer until his death. About 1852 William Fowler located in Newport, Minn., and followed farming until the breaking out of the Civil war, when, in 1861, he volunteered for service in Company F, Eighth Minnesota Infantry, serving a full three years' term as second lieutenant. At Murfreesboro he received his only wound during the war, being shot through the right hand. Honorably discharged in 1864 he returned to his farming pursuits in Minnesota, and was there honored by election to the state legislature two consecutive terms. Previous to this he had served his county as supervisor and was a prominent advocate in the advancement of educational affairs. He served for three years as president of the Minnesota State Dairymen's Association, and in a like capacity for the State Agricultural Association of Minnesota for two terms. In 1891 he came to Redlands and bought an orange grove and later set out more acreage to this fruit, and in this work and his connection with municipal affairs of the city as member of the city council, at first by appointment and later by election, and president of the board of trustees for seven years, he occupied his time until his death, which occurred May 20, 1905. Redlands owes much to this enterprising and helpful citizen, whose name will forever be inscribed on the roll of the city's honored men. He was a member of Redlands Lodge No. 300, F. & A. M., and was commander of the Grand Army post here, and also held the same office in Minnesota. He was an active member of the Baptist Church and gave liberally to its support and upbuilding, while in Minnesota being a delegate to the state convention. Politically he was a stanch advocate of Democratic principles. In Ohio Mr. Fowler married Miss Caroline A. Lane, a native of Ohio, and she is now surviving and making her home in Redlands. They became the parents of six children, of whom four are now living, namely: Frank L., engaged in horticulture in Redlands; May C., Mrs. Thompson, of this city; Nellie C., of San Jose; and Will L., of this review.

In Newport, Minn., March 16, 1875, Will Lucius Fowler was born and there obtained his education primarily in the public schools, completing the course in the Redlands high school, after his location here with his parents in 1891. He was graduated in 1895 and the following year entered the University of California and passed the ensuing two years. In 1898 he enlisted in Company G, Seventh California Infantry, and was mustered in at San Francisco for service in the Spanish-American war. He was mustered out with his regiment in December, 1898, with the rank of corporal, after which he returned to Redlands and at once engaged in horticultural pursuits and also in building until April, 1906, when he was elected city marshal and ex officio tax collector on the Good Government ticket. Taking the oath of office April 18, 1906, he at once entered upon the duties of his position and has since given it his entire time and attention. In Redlands Mr. Fowler was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth E. Shorey, a native of Omaha, Neb., but who was brought to California at the age of three years and here reared to womanhood and educated in the Redlands public and high schools. Mr. Fowler is a member of the Spanish-American War Veterans' Association, a member of the Sons of Veterans and the Red Men. He belongs to the First Baptist Church and officiates as deacon, having previously served as superintendent of the Sunday-school. He is a member of the Board of Trade and active in his efforts to promote the best interests of the city.

GEORGE S. KLING. The milling interests of San Pedro have in George S. Kling a competent representative and a man whose energy and ability are enlisted in the line of his work. He is now superintendent of the San Pedro Lumber Company's mill department, a position which he has filled since June, 1905, and his past record is one that evidences a future of success wherever he is located. He is a native of Lewis county, N. Y., his birth having occurred at Lowville, September 30, 1866. His remote ancestors were German immigrants, who located in New York state, where his grandfather, Peter Kling, was born and in manhood engaged as a farmer. In the course of time he married and reared a family, a son, Stephen S., born in Schoharie county, becoming in manhood a manufacturer of sash, doors and blinds in Lowville, N. Y. Later he removed to New Bremen, same state, where he followed his business until retirement from active duties. During the Civil war he served in the Twenty-sixth New York Cavalry, being quartermaster-sergeant in Company H. He is a stanch member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is now living retired in Los Angeles. He married Ann Janette Hoyt, a native of Lewis county, N. Y., and a daughter of James F. Hoyt, a native of Connecticut, who became a pioneer of Lewis county, N. Y. Mrs Kling is still living and enjoying the evening of her days among the delights of Southern California. They were the parents of three sons and one daughter, of whom the sons attaining maturity are: George S., of this review; Spencer J., of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and Wayland H., of Los Angeles.

Reared to young manhood in New Bremen and Lowville, George S. Kling received a good education in the public schools and Lowville academy, after which he began teaching in his county, being then but seventeen years old. He followed this occupation for four years, during the summers continuing as he had in boyhood by working with his father in the sash and door factory. After attaining his majority he worked with his father steadily until the spring of 1894, when he went to Illinois, and in Hamilton became superintendent in the same kind of factory under Dickenson & Bartlett, which position he retained for one year. He then went to Hermansville, Mich., and accepted the position of assistant superintendent in a hardwood flooring plant of the Wisconsin Land & Lumber Company, with whom he remained for three years, when he resigned, and in December, 1897, came to California, arriving in January of the following year. Going to Los Angeles he established a real-estate business there with his brother Spencer J., but after two years he returned to the milling business, accepting a position as a stickerman at the San Pedro mill, where he remained for eighteen months. He then returned to Los Angeles and accepted a position with the Pacific Tank Company (now known as the Pacific Coast Planing Mill Company), the plant being then in course of construction. He helped to install the machinery and remained in their employ from 1901 until 1905, in the course of time becoming superintendent of the mill and lumber business. He resigned from this position in June, 1905, and came to San Pedro to accept the position of superintendent with the San Pedro Lumber Company, having charge of their mill, which is one of the largest on the coast.

In Los Angeles, Mr. Kling was united in marriage with Ardella E. Sharp, a native of Ontario, Canada, and they have one son, Spencer S., a daughter, Birdie, having died in infancy. Fraternally Mr. Kling was made a Mason in San Pedro Lodge No. 332, and is also a member of the Knights of the Modern Maccabees. His wife is a member of the Baptist church, to which he gives a liberal support. In his political affiliations he is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party .

JOSEPH E. JONES. The family represented by this progressive young business man of San Diego county traces its lineage to Wales, where many generations lived and labored. The locality where they resided was largely given over to the mining industry, hence they naturally sought their livelihood in this occupation, and proved themselves patient, industrious and painstaking miners. The first to come to the United States found in the new world greater opportunities than his native land could offer. After leaving Wales Joseph Jones became a miner in the southern part of Illinois and made his home at Chester, that state, in which locality his wife, who was a member of the Scotch family of McKinzie, was born, reared and educated. About the year 1888 they removed to California and eventually became established on a farm near San Luis Rey, where he engaged in ranching until 1905, the year of his retirement from active agricultural cares. While they were living at Chester, Ill., their son, Joseph E., was born December 4, 1873, and in the schools of that city he was primarily educated, but after coming to the Pacific coast he had the privilege of attending excellent schools, including the Santa Barbara Business College. In 1893 he became a clerk for the firm of Irwin & Co., dealers in dry-goods and general merchandise at Oceanside, and from a humble position he worked his way upward through diligent attention to every detail connected with the business.

S. H. Marlette

On the selling out of the mercantile stock in 1898, the firm of Irwin & Co. embarked in the hay and grain business at San Diego, but continued to be identified with the commercial life of Oceanside through the establishment of a hardware store in this town, and Mr. Jones was retained in the capacity of manager, a position that he fills at the present writing. In addition to conducting the business with judgment and energy, he has been actively associated with the civic life of his town and as a Democrat has been prominent in local politics. In 1903 he was appointed city trustee to fill an unexpired term in that office and the following year he was duly elected to the position, which he has since filled with characteristic intelligence and fidelity. In fraternal relations he is connected with various organizations in Oceanside, including Lodge No. 346, I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 385 of the Fraternal Brotherhood, and Lodge No. 4402, I. O. F., in the work of all of which he maintains a warm interest.

GEN. SENECA H. MARLETTE. The pioneer days of General Marlette have resulted in a material upbuilding for California, for he brought with him to the state the ability and perseverance which alone could give to the commonwealth its impetus toward the position it now occupies among its sister states of the Union. He was born in New York, near Syracuse, January 18, 1824, a son of William J. Marlette, a native of New York and the descendant of an old French family, three brothers of the name having located in America many years prior to the Revolution, in which a member of the family served with the rank of major. William J. Marlette engaged as a contractor in New York, working on the Erie canal and other public works; he later located in Ohio and engaged in railroad contracting. His last days were spent in Illinois, where he died at an advanced age. By his marriage with Lucy Balch, of Massachusetts, he allied his fortunes with those of an old Revolutionary family, her death occurring in Iowa. Of their seven children Seneca H. Marlette was the fourth in order of birth, and after receiving his preliminary education in the public schools entered the Rensselaer Institute, now the Polytechnic, at Troy, N. Y., from which institution he was later graduated with the degrees of B. N. S. and civil engineer. He started in as a railroad surveyor, but not securing the business he wished, he took up the study of medicine with Wright & Brynsmade, in Troy, but was later occupied as civil engineer with the New York & Erie Railroad Company. He remained with this company until 1849, when he concluded to come to California, and accordingly he joined the Albany company which was organized by Bishop Kip and Mr. Collier. They made the journey on the Helena via Cape Horn, starting March 4 and arriving at their destination September 23.

Mr. Marlette went at once to the mines of Calaveras county, Cal., but a short time after returned to San Francisco for provisions, and while there obtained a position with the city surveyor. He followed surveying in that city at $20 per day, but having to pay $3 per day for the use of a compass. Later he purchased instruments for surveying, including a theodolite, going in debt for them and paying 6 per cent interest per month. For Halleck, Peachy, Billings & Wright he made a survey of a part of the Larkin grant, now the western addition to San Francisco, surveying blocks and lots; during this time he had many interesting experiences with the squatters, who pulled up their stakes and came with axes and threatened them for trespassing. He then surveyed a sub-division between this and the city for Hervey Sparks. Later Mr. Marlette made arangements for the publication of a map of San Francisco, including the Western Addition. After making a trip to Santa Clara county he was so well impressed with the place that he took up a ranch, but before he could get a home on the place a friend jumped it. He then returned to the mines in Calaveras county. In the meantime he had become acquainted with ex-governor Edwards of Missouri, and he having established a general merchandise store at Mokelumne Hill asked Mr. Marlette to become a partner in the concern. Not having made a success of his mining he was willing to accept the proposition, and accordingly became connected with the mercantile interests of that section. In 1852 he was elected county surveyor and later was compelled to close out his mercantile interests at a loss of $1500, for which he settled by note at 6 per cent interest per month. He was nominated for re-election in 1853 but in the same year was nominated for the office of surveyor-general of the state of California, and being elected by a good majority he assumed the duties of his position, the capital being located at Benicia and during his term was moved to Sacramento. He served from January, 1854, to January, 1856, and during this time surveyed most of the emigrant wagon roads. Later he closed the survey of the Pico grant in Calaveras county, after which he purchased an interest in a mine in San Andreas and retained it until 1860, when he went to Washoe, Nev., which was a part of Utah, as a surveyor. He was elected county surveyor of Carson county, Utah, and had to make his report to Salt Lake City until Nevada was organized as a territory. Governor Nye appointed him surveyor of Story county, and he was later elected first state surveyor-general of Nevada. He was re-elected but failed to qualify because he was so busy making out his report; he was later appointed by the governor to this office until the next election.

Retiring from his professional work General Marlette engaged in the lumber and water business in the vicinity of Lake Tahoe and Truckee, there building sawmills and manufacturing lumber in partnership with W. S. Hobart, who died in 1892, after which he sold his interests to the estate for a small amount. They had been known as the Sierra Nevada Wood & Lumber Company, and owned together about eighty-five thousand acres of land, of which forty thousand acres belonged to the general. They owned what has since been named Marlette lake, having disposed of this to the Virginia & Gold Hill Water Company. After disposing of his interests General Marlette came to Southern California to make his home in Los Angeles, having made the first trip south in 1883 in search of timber lands. He has become interested in Mentone and in partnership with William P. McIntosh and others purchased a claim on Mill creek in 1884, having already bought other lands here, in 1887 laying it out and bringing water on the place, being the organizers of the Mentone Irrigation Company, now owned by General Marlette and Mr. McIntosh. They have about two thousand acres in the tract, of which about four hundred acres are improved to navel oranges all in full bearing, water having been developed by a tunnel a quarter of a mile in length from Mill creek, while they also have wells and pumping plants in case of need.

General Marlette located here in 1896, now owning a beautiful home on Mentone avenue, where he and his wife have seventy acres in oranges. He was married in Washington, D. C., May 3, 1874, to Miss Alice Ingham, a native of Illinois but reared in California and Utah from early childhood. The general is a stanch Republican in his political convictions; in the line of his profession he is a member of the National Geographic Association.

FRANCIS HARDEN STANTON. Horticulture and general farming have in Mr. Stanton an active and capable exponent, his efforts since 1900 being the upbuildings of his own personal interests in the vicinity of Bassett, Los Angeles county, as well as the best development possible for the community. He came to California in 1899. He was born in Grantville, Md., twenty-four miles west of Cumberland, August 5, 1855; his father, William Stanton, was a native of Maryland, as was also his grandfather, George. The great-grandfather came from England and located in Maryland, where he participated in the Revolutionary war. William Stanton engaged in farming until his death, which occurred at an advanced age in his native state. He married Mary Ann Ridgley, also a native of Maryland and daughter of Eli Ridgley, a farmer. They became the parents of ten children, six of whom are living. One son, A. Jackson, served in a Pennsylvania regiment during the Civil war, survived its perils and eventually located in Kansas, where he died.

Francis Harden Stanton was next to the youngest in the large family of children born to his parents. He was reared on the paternal farm, receiving his education in the public schools and being trained to the practical duties which have proven of so much benefit to him in manhood's years. Upon attaining his majority he went into partnership with his brother, Uriah, and together they farmed the old homestead. He remained at home until the spring of 1880 when he set out for the west and engaged in mining in Ouray, Colo. He was successful and acquired some means with which he purchased a farm on the Uncompahgre river, helping to take out a ditch and canal for irrigation purposes, and continuing to improve and develop the property for some years. He had two hundred acres devoted to alfalfa, general farming and stock raising, and in this enterprise was uniformly successful. On account of his wife's health he came to California in 1899 and in Los Angeles engaged in a retail mercantile enterprise. After one year he disposed of this interest and in December, 1900, purchased forty acres at Bassett, built a residence, barns and outbuildings, and engaged in general farming once more. In 1902 he set out twenty acres of walnuts and followed this up two years later by setting out the balance in the same commodity. He also engages in grain raising at Puente.

D R Clay

Mr. Stanton's wife was formerly Miss Alice Killen, a native of Missouri, their marriage having taken place in Colorado. They have eight children living, namely: Mary, Harry, Alva, Ridgley, Elnora, Francis, Robert and Eugene. Mr. Stanton was made a Mason in Ouray (Colo.) Lodge No. 37, and is now identified with Lexington Lodge No. 104 of El Monte. He has always taken a deep interest in educational affairs and while a resident of Ouray was a member of the school board, and also occupied a similar position in Bassett until his resignation.

DANIEL RANDAL CLAY. The present growth and prosperity of San Pedro is a fulfillment of the early visions of Daniel Randal Clay, for years one of the most progressive citizens and most sagacious authorities in real estate whom the town boasted in its list of prominent residents. Ere yet his dreams had come to their realization he was called from the activities of life, leaving a void in the hearts of family and friends and a vacant place in the business circles of his home city. Through his labors as a member of the board of trustees for several years; through his services as the first chief of the fire department of San Pedro; through his membership in the Chamber of Commerce, and in other capacities he was a promoter of San Pedro's welfare, and his interests likewise extended into the business activities of Los Angeles, where he held membership in the Chamber of Commerce.

Gorham, in the state of Maine, was Mr. Clay's native place, and November 13, 1849, the date of his birth. His father, Rev. Daniel Randal Clay, a native of the same place and a minister in the Baptist denomination, removed to Wyoming at an early day and from there came to California, where now he makes his home in Los Angeles. In 1898 he was bereaved by the death of his wife, who passed away at San Pedro; she bore the maiden name of Mary Hamlin and was a native of Maine. Born of their union were four sons and two daughters, of whom the next to the youngest was given his father's name and remained in Maine until nineteen years of age, when he turned his steps toward the west. While still quite young he learned telegraphy and this occupation he followed throughout much of his active life. For eight years he acted as telegraph operator and station agent for the Union Pacific Railroad Company at Carbon, Wyo., from which point he removed to Denver and took up the real-estate and insurance business. His next location was at Rico, in the mountain districts of Colorado, where he remained for two years.

Coming to California in 1884, Mr. Clay secured employment with the Southern Pacific Railway Company as telegraph operator at San Pedro and for a brief period gave his attention to the duties of the position. In the meanwhile he had become interested in the possibilities of the town. Thoroughly believing in its future growth, he decided he could advantageously engage in the real-estate business, hence he gave up telegraphy in order to devote himself exclusively to business affairs. The firm of D. R. Clay & Co. was the first general real-estate and insurance business established in the town and under his active supervision it was developed into an important institution. Among his most important enterprises was the laying out of the Clay subdivision to San Pedro and he was interested in other additions, his real-estate transactions being extensive and important, and aiding greatly in the upbuilding of the town. While still actively engaged in business he died February 18, 1904, and a few days later his body was interred in a cemetery at Los Angeles. The business since his death has been purchased by his son-in-law, J. W. Walton, who conducts it under the title of D. R. Clay Co., and maintains the high reputation established during the lifetime of its founder.

The fraternal associations of Mr. Clay included membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Royal Arcanum, and the Masonic Order, in which he was the first master of San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M., and also an active member of the Royal Arch chapter. Though not a partisan in politics, he had pronounced convictions upon the leading questions of the age, and gave his unqualified support to the Republican party. Surviving him are his widow and two daughters. The former, who bore the maiden name of May J. Sanders, was born in Cardiff, England, and was a daughter of James and Hannah Charlotte (Jones) Sanders, natives respectively of Bristol and London, England. The father, who was an engineer by occupation, brought the family to the United States and settled at Salt Lake City, where both he and his wife remained until death. In the family of Mrs. Clay there are two daughters, both of whom are married and reside in San Pedro. The elder daughter, Josie May, is the wife of J. W. Walton, and they have one daughter, Mary Lillian; the younger, Lillian, married L. W. Goodhue. The Clay family residence stands on the corner of Tenth and Bacon streets and is one of the most attractive homesteads in the city. Like her husband in political views, Mrs. Clay believes in the principles of the Republican party. With the other elements forming a rounded character religion blends its harmonious light. The creed which Mrs. Clay espouses is that of the Episcopal Church and to its charities she is a thoughtful contributor. In fraternal associations she is identified with the Order of the Eastern Star and the Rebekahs.

ALEXANDER GILL. The life of the noble pioneer will ever be held in reverent remembrance in the community that he helped to build up. Among pioneer settlers Ventura county had in Alexander Gill of Springville one of its most enterprising citizens, a man of energy and ability, successful along personal lines and at the same time prominent in public affairs, in which he constantly sought to advance the best general interests. He was a pioneer of California, having located in the state in 1867 from his birthplace, Canada, he having been born November 2, 1847, in Grinnville. His parents, David and Mary (Frazier) Gill, were natives respectively of North Ireland and Scotland, the father emigrating to this country at the age of sixteen years. They were married in Canada and spent the balance of their lives in that location, his death occurring at the age of fifty-six years and hers at the age of thirty. Alexander Gill received his education in the public schools of Canada and during the years of boyhood and young manhood received parental training which fostered in his character those traits that distinguish natives of the countries from which his father and mother emigrated. He followed agricultural pursuits in Canada until 1867, in which year he came to the Pacific coast, and in Mendocino county, Cal., farmed for about nineteen years. In 1886 he came to the Santa Clara valley in Ventura county and purchased the property where he ever since made his home. This property, which consists of two hundred and forty acres, was then raw land entirely devoid of cultivation or improvements; today his farm holds rank with the best in Ventura county, being well improved with a comfortable residence, substantial barns and outbuildings, good fences, and also has a fine artesian well which furnishes a good supply of water. In addition to his own land he rented three hundred acres, his interests being principally centered in the raising of beans (to which sixty acres are devoted) and the cultivation of wheat and barley. He ably demonstrated his ability along agricultural lines and was accounted one of the most successful men of this section, as well as a liberal and public spirited citizen.

Mr. Gill established home ties through his marriage in Canada, in 1876, to Miss Linda Smith, a native of Canada, and born of this union are the following children: Ernest, residing in Los Angeles county; Bessie, Alice, Edmond Roy, George, Charles, Marion, Harry, John, Allen, Jessie and Myrtle. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church, to which Mr. Gill gave liberally, supporting all its charities. Fraternally he was identified with the Masonic organization, being a member of Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., and Oxnard Chapter No. 86, R. A. M. Educational matters received no little of the attention of Mr. Gill, whose best efforts were always given toward the promotion of the best advantages possible. For a number of years he served efficiently as trustee of the Springville school, which office he held up to the time of his death September 17, 1906. Politically he was a Republican, and although too much occupied with his personal affairs to care for official recognition, was counted upon to support the men and measures of his party in a public-spirited manner.

EDWIN WATERMAN COLMAN. Business connected with the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California receives the entire time and attention of Edwin Waterman Colman of San Pedro, he having been one of the organizers and the first president of the association. For more than thirty years he has been a resident of California, the greater part of which time he has been identified with the development and upbuilding of this city. The Colman family is of English extraction and the name was formerly spelled Calman. The first members who came to this country settled in Massachusetts and the grandfather, Amial, who was born in Scituate, was proprietor of and originally laid out Colman's Hills in Scituate and Cohasset, Mass. Waterman Colman, the father of Edwin Waterman, was also born in Scituate, Mass., and as a young man followed seafaring life. After making two trips he gave up that life, however, and engaged in mercantile pursuits in Medford and West Medford. Later he came to California and is now living in Woodland, this state, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. His wife, who was before her marriage Nancy Elizabeth Loring, was born in Yarmouth, Me., of English descent, and her death occurred in 1890.

The only child of his parents, the birth of Mr. Colman occurred May 1, 1856, in Boston, and he was reared in North Cambridge. After completing his studies in Shepherd grammar school he entered the high school preparatory course at Cambridge, being in the same class with ex-governor William U. Russell of Massachusetts.

W. Fairbury

His eyesight failed him before the work in the school was completed and he was obliged to give up further study. For an entire year he took treatment for his eyes without apparent results, when suddenly his sight returned to him and has not troubled him since. He then entered the employ of Mr. Woodworth of Boston and learned to become a proficient tea taster. His health becoming impaired he was obliged to give up this business and refusing an offer of a position at a salary of $3,500 in 1876 he came to San Francisco. Upon his arrival he secured employment at Woodland, then became connected with the California Pacific Railway, at Willows he being engaged in checking up all of the material which was sent to the northern road. In 1884 he came to Southern California and took a position with the San Pedro Lumber Company, a year later removing to Los Angeles, where for the succeeding four years and four months he filled the position of foreman for the Davies-Henderson Lumber Company. He then returned to San Francisco and was occupied as tallyman until 1893, when he took up his permanent residence in San Pedro and began as a lumber surveyor. In 1903 he assisted in the organization of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California and after filling the office of president for two and a half years refused longer service in that capacity.

Mr. Colman was made a Mason in Wilmington Lodge No. 198, F. & A. M., and is now a charter member of San Pedro Lodge No. 332. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. As a public-spirited citizen he is actively interested in the upbuilding of this section and takes a leading part in the furthering of all enterprises tending to develop the community in which he resides.

SIMON FAIRBURN. Prominent among the large and prosperous fruit growers of Los Angeles county is Simon Fairburn, owner of one of the most valuable ranches in Burbank. A man of exceptional, executive and financial ability, he has filled positions of trust and responsibility with great credit to himself and to the pecuniary advantage of others, having for more than twenty years been connected with the Standard Oil Company in an official capacity. A son of William Fairburn, he was born, May 16, 1850, in the Shenandoah valley, Augusta county, Va., of substantial Scotch descent. His grandfather was born and reared in Pennsylvania, but subsequently settled as a planter in Virginia, being a pioneer of the Shenandoah valley. He served in the Revolution, and likewise in the war of 1812, in the latter being in the army until his death, in 1814.

William Fairburn was a life-long resident of Virginia, his birth occurring there in 1800, and his death in 1890. He was owner of a plantation, and a citizen of influence. He married Elizabeth Funk, the descendant of a family that emigrated from Germany to the United States in 1706, and located in Pennsylvania. Her birth occurred in Virginia in 1808, and her death in 1872. She bore her husband twelve children, five of whom reached years of maturity, and four are now living.

Brought up on the home plantation, Simon Fairburn assisted his father in its management until seventeen years of age, when, as an apprentice he learned the miller's trade. Subsequently leasing the mill of his former employer he operated it successfully for three years. In 1874 he made a new departure. Going to Parkersburg, W. Va., he secured a position with the Standard Oil Company, with which he was connected for twenty-two years. Beginning with the firm in a low position, he gradually worked his way upward, carefully learning the details of the business in its every branch, and for three years, from 1883 until 1886, was superintendent of their works in Parkersburg. In the fall of 1886 he was sent as a representative of the company to Mexico, with instructions to locate, construct and operate a refinery in the City of Mexico. In 1889 he was instructed to build a refinery in Vera Cruz, Mexico, and was then made superintendent of the entire Standard Oil business in the Republic of Mexico, a position of great responsibility, which he held until 1896. Being obliged to send his children north to be educated, and wishing to be in Parkersburg a part of the time each year, Mr. Fairburn then asked the company for a transfer, and this being refused, he at once resigned his position. Returning to the United States, he traveled through many parts, and in September, 1896, decided to locate permanently in Southern California. Accordingly, he bought sixty acres of land in North Glendale, near the line of the Pacific Electric road, paying $4,500 for the first thirty acres, and $2,850 for the other half. Taking up ranching in earnest, he has made improvements of an excellent character, including the setting out of an orchard, and has now one of the most desirable estates in this part of the county.

In Washington, D. C., Mr. Fairburn married Bettie M. Williams, a native of Bath county, Va., being a daughter of Dr. R. P. Williams, who served throughout the Civil war as a surgeon in the Confederate army. Mr. and Mrs. Fairburn are the parents of five children, namely: Charles W., Eva E., Flora E., Ollie W., and Ruth A., the latter born in California. Mr. and Mrs. Fairburn are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Burbank, and Mr. Fairburn is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

MICHAEL BALDRIDGE. To the pioneers, the pathfinders to civilization and prosperity, a special debt of gratitude is due, and the residents of California who now enjoy the delights and privileges of a locality which has no equal in the country, should never forget the meed of praise which they owe the few sturdy frontiersmen who made their pleasant life here possible. Among this noble band of pioneers who came to the state during the gold period was Michael Baldridge, whose accounts of the happenings of early days have probably had more readers and listeners than any other one of the remaining pioneers. He never tires of recounting the incidents of those days, which were filled with hardships which we of this day cannot even picture in our most vivid imagination, but even under these conditions kind-hearted liberality and brotherly love prevailed. Not only is Mr. Baldridge a fluent speaker, but he is a ready writer as well, and his reminiscences and anecdotes of pioneer life in the west are eagerly read and greatly appreciated, not only by those who, like himself, have crossed the plains and experienced its perils and hardships, but by the younger generations.

The first of the name to settle in the new world was the grandfather, another Michael Baldridge, who was born in the north of Ireland and upon coming to the United States located in Little Britain, Lancaster county, Pa. In his religious belief he was a strict Presbyterian. His son John was born in Little Britain, Pa., where he made his home until reaching his nineteenth year, when he transferred his interests to Seneca county, N. Y. There he established himself as a tiller of the soil, an occupation which he followed throughout his life, or until his death in 1876. Not only had he lived long, but he had lived worthily, putting into daily and hourly practice the principles of his belief in Christianity as set forth in Presbyterian doctrines. His marriage united him with Agnes Barr, a native of Seneca county, N. Y., and a daughter of Robert Barr of Scottish birth. Upon coming to the United States he first settled in Washtenaw county, Mich., and later in Kent county on the present site of Grand Rapids. At that time there was little evidence that the straggling settlement would ever attain its present prominence in the commercial world, but Mr. Barr was a far-seeing man and often prophesied a brilliant future for the town on account of its excellent water power. To Mr. Barr and his wife were born seventeen children, all of whom grew to mature years and all early in life established their independent careers, which was perhaps a matter of necessity rather than one of choice. A large family also blessed the marriage of John and Agnes Baldridge, and of their twelve children eleven attained maturity. During the Civil war John Baldridge, one of the sons, served in the engineering corps; Robert is now a resident of Covina, and James was a resident of Pomona at the time of his death, having come to the west with his brother Michael in 1858.

Michael Baldridge was born in Seneca county, N. Y., December 21, 1826, and was brought up on his father's farm, attending district school during the winter months and working on the farm in the summer. Notwithstanding the crude surroundings and lack of present-day advantages he became a brilliant scholar and was especially apt in spelling, and in the old "spelling school" of former days he carried off the honors as a champion speller, being able to "spell down" the entire class. Among the memories of those days he recalls his intimate acquaintance with the old Cobb speller, a text-book then in general use and which served as an arbiter in case of dispute in the study of orthography. When he was nineteen years of age he left the east and went to Montcalm county, Mich, where he had relatives, but it was not long before he returned to his native state, and later became an employe in the counting room of C. C. Marsh, in New York City. It was while there that he heard of the French expedition to California, plans for which were exploited in the daily papers, and his youth and ambition could not withstand the challenge. With colors flying and hopes high the steamer Georgia, under command of Parker H. French, left New York harbor with its load of gold seekers bound for the Pacific coast. On the way they touched port at Havana, New Orleans, Galveston and El Paso del Norte, in which latter place the expedition was broken up on account of French not keeping his promises. From there they made their way as best they could, walking a distance of one thousand miles in reaching Mazatlan, and on the way passed through Chihuahua and Durango. When Mr. Baldridge started from New York he had $20 in ready money and as secretary of the expedition was to receive $25 per month for his services. He received nothing, however, and when he arrived in San Francisco eight months from the time of leaving New York, he was exceedingly short of funds. His prime object in coming to California had been to seek wealth in the mines, and for three years he bent his efforts in this direction. That his efforts did not meet with the desired results was evident from the fact that at the end of that time, in 1853, he returned to familiar scenes and surroundings in the east. From then until 1857 he engaged in business in Waterloo, Seneca county, N. Y., but as that was the year of the panic he suffered the fate of many other business men and was forced to close his doors. The following year he again started for the Pacific coast, coming by way of Panama, and on this trip was accompanied by his brother James. Once more he tried his luck at the mines, but with about the same results as before, sometimes making money but more often losing, until after thirteen years he gave it up entirely and furthermore resolved never to be tempted to try mining again. For twelve years he worked in the employ of others as clerk, remaining with one house in San Francisco for eight years, and during all of this time was a most indefatigable worker, his motto being how much and not how little he could accomplish for his employer's welfare.

Thus far in his career Mr. Baldridge had struggled against great odds, but with the year 1873 brighter prospects opened up before him. In that year he started in business on his own account, handling bonds and stocks under the title of M. Baldridge, banker and broker. A large commission business grew out of this humble beginning, and he became a charter member of the Pacific Stock Exchange, being chairman of its executive committee for seven years. Failing health, however, compelled him to give up his interests in San Francisco and in 1880 he located in Covina, where he started a nursery composed of orange trees entirely. At that time there was no market for these trees, so he bought land at $11 per acre and set out one hundred and eleven acres to orange trees, and in time was able to sell the nursery stock. He gave away thirty-one acres of the land, still retaining eighty acres, which he carried on as a nursery for seven years, during which time his health was greatly improved. At the end of this time he was offered $70,000 for his ranch, an offer which he accepted, and the same year came to Pomona and built his present residence on Kingsley and Washington streets. During the thirteen years which he has made this place his home he has built up one of the finest ranches in this part of the county. It comprises ten acres, and is supplied with a pumping plant which furnishes an abundant supply of water for both domestic and irrigating purposes. He also owns a ten acre orange grove at Bloomington, as well as a block of five acres on a street in San Bernardino, upon which he is erecting twenty-six cottages of patent stone, having put in his own manufacturing plant for that purpose.

Upon his return east after his first expedition to California Mr. Baldridge was married, in 1853, to Miss Elizabeth Garrison, a native of New York, but their married life was of short duration, as her death occurred four years later. His second marriage occurred in Indiana in 1871 and united him with Mrs. Elizabeth (Graham) Lee, who was born in Ohio, and is still living. Politically Mr. Baldridge is a Republican. As may be surmised he is a member of the Society of California Pioneers of 1849, none of whose members, it is safe to say, experienced more severe or prolonged hardships than did Mr. Baldridge in reaching the Golden West. His motto through life has been to put into daily practice the principles of the Golden Rule, and all who have been brought in contact with him will testify that he adhered to these principles rigidly. His name is on the membership roll of the Unitarian Church of Pomona.

SETH MARSHALL. There are few citizens in San Bernardino who have so emphatically impressed their worth upon their community as has Seth Marshall. His advent into the Pacific coast country dates back to the spring of 1875, coming hither in the hope that the ocean voyage would restore his health, which had become greatly impaired by overwork in East Saginaw, Mich., where he was then residing. His quest for health had not been in vain, the sea voyage and the bracing climate of San Francisco, where he remained for a time, both contributing to his welfare. So well pleased was he with the outlook in the west that he decided to remain and grow up with the country.

Of Puritan stock, Seth Marshall was born April 25, 1850, on the old Marshall homestead on the Western Reserve, in what is now the city of Painesville, Ohio, whither his grandfather had immigrated from Colebrook, Conn., in the early '30s. Among the children in the grandfather's family was one Seth, who became an important factor in the upbuilding of that new country. Before the building of the Lake Shore Railroad he was a clerk on one of the large lake steamers, and subsequently was bookkeeper and later president of the old Bank of Geauga, an institution which in later years became the First National Bank of Painesville. Before the Civil war he took a firm stand in the question of slavery, and throughout northern Ohio no one labored more zealously to abolish the nefarious institution than did Mr. Marshall, whose home was one of the stations on the underground railroad used for the escape of the negroes. As one of the organizers and upholders of the Republican party in that state he counted among his friends and co-laborers such men as Ben Wade, Joshua R. Giddings, Salmon P. Chase, besides others of equal fame during that time. As a delegate to the national convention of his party Mr. Marshall had a hand in the nomination of Lincoln for his second term, and was one of the presidential electors from Ohio at that election. As a fitting close to his long and useful life he was permitted to spend his last days in the land of Sunshine and Flowers, passing away at the home of his son in San Bernardino in 1880.

By the time he was eighteen years of age Seth Marshall, Jr., had completed his studies in the school of Oberlin, Ohio, and was ready to launch upon his business career, which he did by becoming a clerk in the wholesale hardware business owned by his uncles, Morley Brothers, of East Saginaw, Mich. It was not long before he had acquired an interest in the business, and finally became general manager of the plant, but after seven years of close application his health became impaired to such an extent that he followed the advice of his physicians and took an ocean voyage, the same which brought him to California in 1875. After disposing of his interests in Michigan he entered with vigor into the life of the new country and among other enterprises which he assisted in founding was the Pacific Stock Exchange, organized in the summer of 1875. His interest in various mining properties in Nevada, Arizona and in the Ord district of San Bernardino finally led to his location in this country in 1880.

With his brother-in-law, William H. Cheney, and the latter's uncle, John Cheney (the latter one of the original Cheney Brothers who founded the Cheney Brothers silk works at South Manchester, Conn.), Mr. Marshall purchased one thousand acres of land, the eastern part of the Muscupiabe grant. Legal complications which followed delayed the improvement of the tract and in the mean time John Cheney died. Mr. Marshall was appointed administrator of the estate, which was finally bought by an eastern syndicate of which he was a member. To secure water for this large acreage he organized the Highland Ditch Company, to build a canal from the east side of City creek west, above the Cheney tract, on to North San Bernardino, where Mr. Marshall then owned another tract of one thousand acres. In time the canal was completed to the Cheney tract, which enabled the land owners along the foothills of Highland to secure water for their lands, the Cheney land benefiting likewise. Subsequently this canal was sold to the Bear Valley Company with the proviso that the latter company was to complete the canal to north San Bernardino, which has since been accomplished. Mr. Marshall was also one of the organizers of the North Fork Water Company, of which for years he was a director and also president. When the loop line of the Santa Fe road was built around the east end of the San Bernardino valley its construction was largely aided by the personal effort of Mr. Marshall, he contributing over $3,000 and the right of way for over two miles through his property. Horticultural affairs also have received an impetus through his efforts, a practical demonstration of which was seen at the time of the organization of the Highland Orange Growers' Association, of which he is now president. One of the most stupendous undertakings in San Bernardino was set on foot with the organization of the Arrowhead Hot Springs Company. With the assistance of a strong local directorate Mr. Marshall inaugurated an enterprise which promises to out-distance any undertaking of the kind in the world. The company is incorporated for $1,000,000, and has among its stockholders some of the leading men in this part of the state and also of the east. It is the confident expectation of all concerned that with the natural advantages of scenery, climate, elevation and surroundings these springs will develop a resort which will make the San Bernardino valley world renowned.

In San Francisco, in 1878, Mr. Marshall was married to Frances Marie Moyle, a sister of Mrs. William H. Cheney, of South Manchester, Conn. After almost twenty years of happy married life Mrs. Marshall was called up higher, February 15, 1897, leaving a void in her home as well as in the many charitable and social organizations with which she was connected. Her greatest happiness consisted in doing for others, and none knew her but to love her. She was a devoted member of the Episcopal Church and one of its active workers.

AMASA PARKER JOHNSON, JR., the president of the city council of San Diego, is a member of one of the pioneer families of California. In a family of six daughters and two sons, of whom all are living except one son, he is next to the oldest and represents the third successive generation bearing the same name. San Francisco is his native city, the date of his birth being October 29, 1866. Primarily educated in public schools, he later had the advantage of study in St. Matthew's Hall at San Mateo, and meanwhile became interested in stenography. When eighteen years of age he started out to earn his own way in the world, his first position being that of private secretary to Jesse D. Carr, president of the Salinas Bank. From Salinas he came to San Diego in February, 1888, and after filling a position as stenographer for two months he became a deputy in the office of the county recorder. There he continued for five years, and during the last three years acted as chief deputy. The following five years were spent in the county assessor's office as deputy (a part of that time being chief deputy) and then he returned to the county recorder's office as chief deputy for five years.

L. J. Orr

By the purchase of the interests of the Reed & Burt Abstract Company, in February, 1903, Mr. Johnson organized the Union Title & Trust Company, and by forming a combination with the Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles the strongest organization of its kind in Southern California was secured. The company has a capital stock of $100,000, and Mr. Johnson acts as manager, secretary and treasurer.

Under appointment by Governor Pardee in the year 1904 Mr. Johnson became a member of the city council according to the new charter. The following year he was elected to represent the eighth ward in the council, where he served as chairman of the street committee and a member of the finance and water committees. On the resignation of Mr. Osborn as president of the city council, in November, 1905, Mr. Johnson was chosen to fill the vacancy and since then has acted in the capacity of president.

JOHN J. ORR. A native Californian, John J. Orr was born on the old Orr homestead near Norwalk, Los Angeles county, March 3, 1876, a son of W. W. Orr, one of the esteemed pioneers of this section whose personal history is given at length in another part of this volume. His preliminary education was received through the medium of the public school of Little Lake, after which he attended Woodbury Business College, of Los Angeles. Returning home he remained with his parents until attaining his majority, when he began the cultivation and improvement of a ranch of forty acres on which he resides. This is largely devoted to alfalfa although he has a fine dairy herd of twenty cows, which net him a handsome income. For one year of the time he has spent on this ranch he was in Tulare county, where he went with a large herd of stock. He is progressive and enterprising and although young in years bids fair to make one of the most successful ranchers of this community. In August, 1901, he was united in marriage with Miss Marinda Sackett, who was born in Artesia, Los Angeles county, a daughter of William A. Sackett, represented at length elsewhere in this volume. They have two children, Emma and William. Mr. Orr is very prominent fraternally, being a member of Norwalk Lodge No. 315, F. & A. M., and serving as senior warden, while both himself and wife are associated with the Order of Eastern Star in the Norwalk chapter; he also belongs to the camp of the Maccabees of Artesia, and the Odd Fellows, of Artesia, and self and wife are identified with the Rebekahs of that place. He supports the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a devoted member. Politically he is a stanch advocate of Democratic principles. Mr. Orr stands exceptionally high in the community, respected alike for his business ability so early displayed, and his personal qualities of character which have won him many friends.

JAMES HENRY LEWIS. In tracing the genealogy of the branch of the Lewis family represented by this influential citizen and horticulturist of Pomona we find that he is descended from ancestors who came from England with the Pilgrims and landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620, they later settling in Barnstable, Mass. Representatives of the family finally drifted into Connecticut, for it was there that the great-grandfather, John Lewis, was born January 3, 1754. He was a young man of about twenty-one years when the war for independence was waged between England and the colonies, and as one of the soldiers who fought in behalf of the young nation he lived to see the accomplishment of their purpose and enjoy the freedom from tyranny and oppression. He died in Connecticut in 1828. The grandfather, James Lewis, was also born in the Nutmeg state, where he was reared and married, but during middle life he settled as a pioneer in Kane county, Ill., and there rounded out a useful career. His marriage united him with Desire Remington, she too being a native of Connecticut. Among the children born to them was Norman Lewis, whose birth occurred in Suffield, Hartford county, Conn., and he too became a pioneer in the newer west. For some years he made his home in Ohio, and it was while the family were living in that state that James Henry Lewis was born. After the death of the wife and mother, which occurred in that state, the father returned to Connecticut, where for a time he was employed as a blacksmith in Colt's armory. Coming to the west once more he located in Kane county, Ill., in 1853, and the year following went to Iowa, where he carried on farming until the breaking out of the Civil war. Going to Tama City he opened a general merchandise business which he conducted until the close of the war, and then, in partnership with his son James, engaged in the lumber business in that city. Later he retired from the business and for a number of years prior to his death had been free from business cares. He died in Tama City at the advanced age of seventy-eight years, his loss being deeply felt in his community, for he had been an active citizen and had done much toward the upbuilding of the town. He was a member of the county board of supervisors, justice of the peace and was also postmaster of the town. Up to the time of the war he had stanchly upheld the principles of the Democratic party, but thereafter he allied himself with the Republicans. From the age of twenty years he had been a member of the Baptist Church, and the teachings of the Christian religion were manifest in his daily life and sustained him in his death. His marriage united him with Lucy Kent, who was a native of Suffield, Conn., and who died in Medina county, Ohio. Four children were born of this marriage, three of whom grew to maturity, but only one of the number is now living.

The only representative of his parents' family now living, James Henry Lewis was born in Akron, Ohio, June 13, 1840, and was reared in Ohio until he was a lad of nine years, when his mother having died, his father took the family to Connecticut. His schooling was gained almost entirely during the five years they remained in that state, for when they came west and settled on a pioneer farm in Tama county, Iowa, in 1854 his services were needed in breaking the soil and preparing the fields for cultivation. In response to the call to arms at the time of the Civil war he laid down the implements of peace and industry and instead shouldered the musket in defense of the principles which he believed were just and upright. In August, 1862, he volunteered as a member of Company E, Twenty-fourth Iowa Infantry, being mustered in at Muscatine, and in the following October his regiment was sent to Helena, Ark., thereafter taking part in the siege of Vicksburg, Champion Hill, Port Gibson, and Black River Bridge. For meritorious service in the latter campaign he was promoted to corporal and with the remainder of his regiment was made a part of the Department of the Gulf and under General Banks participated in the Red River expedition, among others taking part in the battle at Sabine Cross Roads. By boat they went from New Orleans to Washington, D. C., and under General Sheridan took part in the Shenandoah Valley campaign, taking part in the battles of Winchester, Cedar Creek and Fisher's Hill. Thereafter, from January, 1865, until mustered out in July of that year in Savannah he remained on duty in that city and vicinity, having in the meantime been promoted to sergeant, and as such was honorably discharged from the service in Davenport in August of 1865.

After the war Mr. Lewis prepared himself for commercial life by taking a course in Eastman's Business College in Chicago, Ill., and thereafter returned to Tama City, Iowa, where for about six years he was engaged in the lumber business. Later he became interested in the agricultural implement business, first in Tama City, and later in Traer, following this business until 1879, when he removed to Nebraska and once more took up farming. Near Oxford, Furnas county, he took up four hundred and eighty acres from the government, upon which for the following fourteen years he made a specialty of stock-raising. Upon the sale of his land and stock in 1893 he came to Pomona, where for the past fourteen years he has been interested in horticulture, owning among other ranches a ten-acre orange grove known as the San Antonio tract in San Bernardino county.

In Tama City, Iowa, Mr. Lewis was married to Miss Emeline Carmichael, who was born in New York state and died in Pomona in August, 1901. Of the four children who were born to them three are now living, Charles N., having died in Pomona. Sarah L., is at home with her father; Arthur P., who is a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in San Francisco, is now a practicing physician in Amador county; and Lucy M., who graduated from the University of Illinois at Champaign, is now librarian of the Agricultural College in New Mexico. Mr. Lewis keeps his war experiences fresh in memory by associating with old comrades in Vicksburg Post No. 61, of Pomona, of which he is post commander, and at one time was aide on the department staff. He is an active member of the Baptist Church, in which he is serving as trustee, and politically he is a Republican. While a resident of Nebraska he joined the Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, being an officer in the latter organization.

WILLIS EARL NEWTON. The success achieved by Willis E. Newton since his residence in Bassett is the result of his own efforts and application, bringing to bear in his work an intelligent appreciation of the difficulties to be surmounted and the best method of laboring. The family is of eastern origin, the grandfather, Marcellus, a native of New York, having become a pioneer settler of Illinois in an early date in its history. He made his home in the vicinity of Springfield for some time, finally removing to Lake Mills, Wis., where he followed farming for a livelihood. His son, Almond P., the father of Willis E., was born in Illinois and reared in Wisconsin, where in manhood he engaged in a land and loan business. He eventually removed to Denver and engaged in mining and real estate enterprises in partnership with Eben Smith, a connection which was broken by the death of Mr. Newton. He is survived by his wife, formerly Isabelle Lamb, a native of Wisconsin, and some time after Mr. Newton's death she married J. C. Hutchinson, of Los Angeles, in which city she now resides.

Of the five children born to his parents, of whom four are now living, Willis Earl Newton was born October 8, 1873, in Waterloo, Wis., next to the youngest in the family. He was quite young when the family located in Denver and in that city received his education in the public and high schools, graduating from the latter, after which he entered the postoffice under Cochran and served under him and Jordan in the inspection department until his resignation in 1897. In the last named year he came to California and in Los Angeles secured a position as traveling salesman with the John D. Farwell Dry Goods Company, and for the ensuing six years traveled over the state of California. In 1903 he resigned and accepted a position in the purchasing department of the Dolge Manufacturing Company, resigning two years later to engage in farming. He purchased sixty acres of land at Walnut Center, in the Bassett district, and has since set it out in walnuts and alfalfa, has installed a pumping plant which irrigates the entire place and has improved it by the erection of a residence, barns, outbuildings, etc. Equal to his success in other lines has been that which he has met with in his farming enterprise, and he is today numbered among the representative horticulturists of this section.

In Whittier, Mr. Newton married Miss Jennie Tyler, a native of El Monte, Cal., and daughter of Mrs. Tyler English, located on Villa street, Pasadena. They have one daughter, Majorie. Mrs. Newton is a member of the Presbyterian Church and her culture and refinement add much to the social circles of El Monte.

CHARLES FINNEY RUGGLES. While Oxnard was yet a small village Mr. Ruggles became identified with its commercial development and remained one of its earnest and devoted citizens up to the time he sold out his interests there and removed to Ventura. For some years he was the owner and proprietor of the largest laundry in Ventura county. The business was conducted in a building specially erected for the purpose, consisting of a main structure, 25x80 feet, with two additions, each 20x20 feet, also a boiler room with a boiler of twenty-four horse power and an engine of twelve horse power. The building was equipped with machinery of the latest pattern and adapted for its special purpose, the whole being arranged so that work could be turned out with dispatch and yet with scrupulous care. Water was furnished from an artesian well on the premises, and in addition Mr. Ruggles manufactured distilled water for sale, shipping the same to Santa Paula, Nordhoff and other neighboring towns.

Of eastern extraction, Mr. Ruggles is a son of William M. and Hannah (Hoke) Ruggles, natives respectively of Illinois and West Virginia. The maternal grandfather, Jacob Hoke, was a member of the F. F. V's and removed from Virginia to Illinois, settling upon a farm. Being a man of means and culture, he was solicitous to give his children the highest advantages, and his daughter was sent to college at Oberlin, Ohio. One of his sons, Hon. J. T. Hoke, held office for years as district judge of Kings county, Va., and now fills the position of American consul at Halifax, Nova Scotia. After having cultivated a farm near Dixon, Ill., for some years, William M. Ruggles removed to Iowa and settled in Jones county near Mechanicsville, where he took up farm pursuits. Later he removed to Cherokee county, Iowa, and transformed a raw tract of land into a cultivated farm. Eventually he became a pioneer farmer of South Dakota and now resides in Beadle county, that state, where he is a county commissioner and a man of large influence and acquaintance.

Of the family of William M. Ruggles three sons and one daughter have passed from earth, and two sons and two daughters are now living. The eldest of the family was Charles Finney, who was born at Jackson, Wis., February 10, 1860, and passed the years of boyhood on a farm in Jones county, Iowa. After having completed the common-school studies he attended Mount Vernon College, the State Agricultural College at Ames and Hillsdale College, leaving school at the beginning of his senior year. The expenses of his collegiate course he had paid by teaching eight terms of school, following the occupation in Iowa, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio. After leaving college he settled at Coldwater, Branch county, Mich., where he engaged in the insurance business, held office as city clerk, acted as pension attorney and also served as deputy county clerk. Leaving Michigan in 1889 he came to California and in 1890 assisted in surveying the colony of Dos Palos in the San Joaquin valley, working with the agent of the land department of the Southern Pacific Railroad. As he made a careful study of the land he decided that it was less adapted to orchard purposes than a strip three miles distant, therefore he bought land in the locality he preferred instead of in the colony itself. On his property he set out a vineyard and orchard, and had the satisfaction of seeing the vines and trees start most auspiciously. Meanwhile the colony was found to be planted on land affected by alkali and therefore not adapted for orchards, so afterward the colonists moved to the district he had preferred, and he built the first store building in Dos Palos.

Coming to Ventura in 1892 Mr. Ruggles bought eight and one-third acres on Ventura evenue and set out a lemon orchard, which he still owns, and which he has occupied since disposing of his interests in Oxnard. While that town was still in the incipient stages of its development he located there, erected a store building on the Plaza and engaged in the mercantile business, but later turned his attention to the laundry enterprise previously mentioned. After coming to California he was married at Los Angeles to Miss Asenath R. Waite, who was born in Michigan, received an excellent education, is a lady of culture and a member of the Universalist Church. While in Coldwater, Mich., Mr. Ruggles was initiated into Masonry and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is past chief patriarch of the encampment. For eight years he held the commission of lieutenant-colonel of the First Regiment, Patriarch Militant, also was identified with the canton. At this writing he is connected with Oxnard Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is past noble grand. Politically he favors Republican principles and votes with that party. For several years he was a member of the Iowa State Militia and later joined the Michigan State Militia at Coldwater, serving altogether for twelve years.

ROBERT G. LIVINGSTON. In Robert G. Livingston is found one of the finest types of the California pioneers who crossed the plains in 1853, a man who has been identified with the business and social, public and private interests which have tended toward the highest development of the state ever since. He succeeded in amassing a comfortable fortune and is now enjoying the fruits of his labors, having retired from active business some time ago. The Livingston family is one of the oldest in America and one of the ancestors of this branch, Robert R., was a chancellor of England who came to America before the days of the Revolution and had the honor of administering to Washington his oath of office upon his election to the presidency. The grandfather of Robert G. Livingston fought in the war of 1812, and the father, George, was born in old Virginia and became a pioneer of Ohio, moving to a farm near New Lisbon with teams, where his death occurred. The mother was in maidenhood Sarah McClure, her native home having been in Virginia. The family consisted of eleven children, nine of whom grew to maturity, but only two of whom are now living, and Robert G. is the only one who came to California. He was born September 20, 1830, at New Lisbon, Ohio, where he spent his boyhood days, receiving his education in the public schools at that place.

In 1848 he went to Adams county, Ill., locating on a farm near Quincy, but in the spring of 1853 decided to push on further west. In company with three companions he purchased four yoke of oxen and crossed the plains, traveling by the way of Council Bluffs, Salt Lake and Beckwith Pass. The five months' trip was accomplished without important incident and the journey was ended at the point which is now Quincy, Cal. For some years he engaged in placer mining and tunneling on the Feather, Yuba, American and Consumne rivers, meeting with good success. In 1860 he went to Contra Costa county, locating near what is now Danville and engaged in farming. Continuing there until 1865, he then went to Lake county and farmed for four years, or until 1869, when he removed to Southern California, locating at Hueneme, where he engaged in the mercantile business for twenty-five years. His other property interests embrace the ownership of a two hundred acre ranch located four miles southeast of Hueneme, which he rents for beet and grain farming purposes. It is well improved with all necessary farm buildings.

December 3, 1863, Mr. Livingston was married to Miss Hannah V. Palmer, a native of Trenton, Tenn., and a daughter of William Palmer. Her father was a native of South Carolina, who in his young manhood taught school in his home state and later removed to Bloomfield, Mo., became a farmer and died there. Her grandfather, who was also a native of South Carolina, was a patriot of the Revolutionary war. Her mother, before her marriage Pamelia Miller, was born in Virginia, and died in Missouri. Mrs. Livingston is a member of a family of twelve children, the most of whom are deceased: She came to California in 1859 with her sister, Mrs. Flippin, and settled in Contra Costa county. She is a very fine woman and has done much active work in the cause of Prohibition, in which she is intensely interested, and is now president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hueneme. Mr. and Mrs. Livingston are the parents of four children, of whom they are justly proud. They are Charles, a traveling salesman with headquarters at Portland; William, a graduate of the American College of Physicians and Surgeons, and who is now practicing his profession at Oxnard; May, the wife of Dr. Broughlan of Oxnard; and Lottie, a graduate of the Cumnock School of Expression of Los Angeles, and now a teacher of physical culture and elocution at Pasadena. Both parents are members of the Pioneer Society of Ventura county and Mr. Livingston is also a prominent Prohibition worker, being a member of the executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League of Southern California. Fraternally he was made a member of the San Ramon Lodge, F. & A. M., became a charter member of the Ventura Lodge, then master of Hueneme Lodge and is now a member of the Oxnard Lodge, F. & A. M. He also belongs to the Order of Eastern Star. He is a man who is interested in every business or social interest that has a beneficial and elevating influence and is highly esteemed and respected by the whole community.

W. C. Larkins

WARREN COOPER LUKENS was born in Harrison county, Ohio, March 20, 1845, and is the second oldest son of a family of six children born to William E. and Margaret (Cooper) Lukens. The former was born in Pennsylvania, the latter in Maryland and were both members of the Society of Friends. The father was a farmer in Harrison county, Ohio, and later was a miller in Sterling, Ill., where the parents died. One of their sons is Theo. P. Lukens, superintendent of Forest Reserve, residing in Pasadena, a man of much prominence and influence. Mr. Lukens was educated in the common schools until the age of sixteen when at the first tap of the drum he volunteered in Company B of the Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was mustered into the three months' service. Early in 1861, and before the expiration of his time, he reenlisted May 24 with Company B, Thirteenth Illinois Infantry, serving under General Curtis in the Army of the Southwest, until November, 1863, when on account of physical disability he was mustered out in St. Louis, Mo. He then returned to Illinois, but his constitution had received such a setback that he never recovered, and for four years was unfit for any labor. For two years he engaged in horticulture in San Jose and then returned to Sterling, Ill., following the same business until 1880, when he came to Pasadena, Cal., when there was but one store and blacksmith shop in the place. He purchased thirteen acres and set out a peach and apricot orchard, which at the time of the boom he, in 1887, sold to good advantage. He then removed to Redlands where he purchased thirteen and one-half acres of cacti and sage-brush and started a nursery and at the same time set it out to oranges, which he sold in 1900. In the mean time, in 1899, he had purchased seventy-nine acres at Oak Glenn in the Upper Yucaipe valley and with four others formed a private company known as the Oak Glen Land and Water Company. The water was brought by ditch and pipe-line from Oak Glenn creek to irrigate their farms and he set out thirteen acres to apples, now an excellent blooming orchard. He with four others of the Oak Glenn company in the Southern California exhibit at St. Louis received the highest award for apples. In March of 1905 he removed to Los Angeles and located at No. 2707 Normandie avenue.

His marriage occurred in Fairview, Ill., uniting him with Maria Jane McIlmoyl and to them have been born five children: William Ellis, who died in Redlands; Annie M. and Ernest B. of Los Angeles; Charles A. of Oak Glenn and Walter at Colon, on the Isthmus of Panama. Mr. Lukens is a member of Bear Valley Post, G. A. R., at Redlands, and his allegiance politically is with the Republican party.

JOHN HENRY FAIRBANKS. Of original English extraction the Fairbanks family in colonial days settled in Massachusetts, and from the time when the great-grandfather, Nathaniel, gallantly fought for freedom in the Revolutionary war until the present day its members have been closely identified with the upbuilding and development of our country. John Henry Fairbanks, who was born July 20, 1837, in Schoharie county, N. Y., was a son of John B. and a grandson of John Fairbanks, both of whom were natives of Worcester, Mass. The grandfather lived on the old family homestead in Worcester and served in the war of 1812. The father was by trade a contractor and stone mason and at the age of twenty-five years removed to New York state, where he was married to Hannah Granidier, a native of that state, her family being of German and French extraction. Her father, Abraham, was one of the earliest settlers in New York, and he also was a soldier in the war of 1812, in which he attained the rank of major. Seventeen years after locating in New York state Mr. Fairbanks went to Racine, Wis., and engaged in business as a contractor and builder, and it was while residing in that state that the death of his wife occurred. In 1849 he joined the rush of gold seekers to California, crossing the plains with his oldest son, and for three years they worked at mining. Two years later the son died at Sacramento and the father returned to Racine, where his death occurred.

A member of a family of seven children, four sons and three daughters, John Henry Fairbanks is the only son now living. One of his brothers, Abraham F., served as a second lieutenant in the Fifty-first Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers during the Civil war. His own boyhood days were spent in Wisconsin, where he attended the district school in the primitive log schoolhouse furnished with slab benches. With generations of patriotic blood flowing in his veins it is not surprising that his decision to offer his services to his country at the outbreak of the Civil war was quickly made. After leaving school he had occupied himself as a teamster, going from Racine and Milwaukee to Burlington, and later was foreman of Norton's ranch for four years. He was working on a threshing machine when the news of the declaration of war reached him, and turning the job over to his father he immediately volunteered his services. In 1861 he was mustered in at Milwaukee as a member of Company C, First Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, and among the engagements he took part in were those at Murfreesboro, and Marietta, assisting in the taking of Atlanta; was wounded in the battles at Buzzard's Roost and at Chickamauga, having been shot from his horse and made insensible at the latter place. He was an officer in the ordnance department, having supervision over the ammunition of the Fourteenth Army Corps, to which he had been previously attached. At the expiration of his time of enlistment he was returned to Milwaukee and there mustered out in 1864. After the close of the war he went to Sparta, bought a farm, and continued to raise stock and conduct a threshing business until 1884. For eighteen continuous seasons he operated a Case thresher, made many inventions for the machine and helped J. I. Case, who had been a boyhood schoolmate, with many improvements both on the thresher and the steam engine. Having disposed of his farm Mr. Fairbanks retired from active business for five years and resided in Sparta.

In 1889 he came to Los Angeles and made his home in that city for two years, after which he went to Downey, purchased a ranch and improved it and raised fruit and hay, still owning ten acres of land there. He had early purchased a lot on West Third street, Long Beach, and the residence which he erected thereon is still the family home. He has witnessed many changes in the city since first coming here and himself farmed land which is now occupied by city homes. By his marriage in Monroe county, Wis., he was united with Phoebe Ann Dame, a native of Maine, and they became the parents of three children: Imogene, who married Lewis Millard, of Long Beach; Mattie, who became the wife of a Mr. Whalen and died in Los Angeles in 1905; and J. T., who resides on the ranch at Downey. Mr. Fairbanks is a strong Republican, has served on the county central committee for years and has been sent as delegate to conventions. He is a member of Long Beach Post, G. A. R., and Mrs. Fairbanks is a member and active worker in the Baptist Church. In all matters relating to the social and civic development of the city he takes an energetic and enthusiastic interest, and is held in the highest respect and esteem throughout the community.

ALBERT JOHNSON. As clerk of the board of school trustees of Long Beach Albert Johnson is recognized as one of the most progressive citizens of this city, for those men who interest themselves in the cause of education are the most valuable citizens a community can have. On his mother's side he is a direct descendant of Governor Bradford of Massachusetts, and his father's family comes from old English stock. Mr. Johnson was born July 8, 1843, in Stockbridge, Mass., the son of Jonathan and Eunice (Bradford) Johnson, the former a native of Stonington, Conn., and the latter of Massachusetts, her father, William, having been born in Connecticut. There were five children in the family, and of them William Bradford came to California in 1852, via the Isthmus, his death occurring in Petaluma in 1857; Edward L. is a resident of Dixon, Ill.; Mrs. S. J. Carr lives in Los Angeles; Mrs. Brewer died in Dixon, and Albert was the youngest child.

Reared on his father's farm in Massachusetts, Mr. Johnson received a preliminary education in public schools, and then entered Lennox Academy to prepare for Williams College. August 20, 1862, he demonstrated his patriotism by enlisting in Company F, Forty-ninth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into service in Pittsfield, having enlisted for a term of nine months. He was first sent to New York City on provost duty on the steamer Illinois, went from there to the gulf and New Orleans under General Banks, took part in the siege of Port Hudson, being there at the time of its surrender, and was engaged in skirmishing until he had served three months over time. He was then ordered back to Massachussetts and mustered out at Pittsfield. In the fall of 1868 he removed to Dixon, Ill., where he farmed for a short time, but in 1875 entered the county recorder's office as deputy circuit clerk and deputy county recorder. At one time he also conducted a large abstract business in partnership with Ira W. Lewis, under the firm name of Lewis & Johnson, in all of his work meeting with good success.

The condition of Mrs. Johnson's health necessitating a change of climate the family removed to California in 1894, locating in Los Angeles, where Mr. Johnson engaged in the real estate business. In 1902 he came to Long Beach and continued to deal in realty, the greater part of his time being devoted to the handling of his own property. The family residence is at No. 225 West Fourth street. Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Emily Comstock, a native of Lee, Mass., and they are the parents of three children: William Bradford, teller in the German-American Savings Bank of Los Angeles; Lottie, Mrs. John T. Laing, who resides in Dixon, Ill.; and Emma L., who makes her home under the parental roof. Mr. Johnson is an active member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and belongs to Long Beach Post G. A. R. He is an advocate of Republican principles and in all matters of social and civic interest lends his influence to the furthering of those enterprises which tend to elevate and upbuild.

SYLVANUS THURMAN. Prominent among the old pioneers of Southern California is Sylvanus Thurman, who came to the state with his parents in 1860, a lad of ten years, and since that time has made his home in the land adopted by them, content to pass his declining years in its pleasant surroundings. He was born in Taney county, Mo., April 5, 1850, the eldest in a family of four sons and one daughter; their father, Elisha A. Thurman, was a native of Kentucky, where the paternal grandfather, John, located from Virginia and engaged in farming, finally removing to Missouri and following the occupation of flatboating on the Mississippi river. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, serving under General Jackson at New Orleans. Elisha A. Thurman located in Taney county, Mo., and engaged as a farmer and stockman, and in 1860 outfitted with ox-teams and necessary provisions and brought his family across the plains, via the Platte, Sweetwater, Fort Hall on the Snake river, across the Humboldt, thence by the Carson route to California, making the journey in seven months. He located in Ione, Amador county, and engaged as a farmer, and remained there until 1866, when he went to Jackson county, Ore., and followed a similar occupation for the period of three years. Returning to California in 1869 he located in Los Angeles county and near the Seventeen Mile house at Anaheim engaged in the stock business. In 1872 he bought a farm at La Puente, later resided in El Monte, and finally located in the vicinity of Downey, where he farmed until his death, which occurred in 1902 at the advanced age of eighty-two years. His wife, formerly Eliza Phillips, was born in Tennessee, a daughter of John Phillips, who removed to Moniteau county, Mo.; she died in El Monte. Besides Sylvanus, there were three sons and one daughter, namely: Columbus, who died in Downey; William C., located in Humboldt county, Cal.; Elisha A., Jr., who died in Redlands; and Susan, wife of O. H. Beardsley, of Mentone.

Sylvanus Thurman was reared in Missouri to the age of ten years, when he accompanied his parents on the memorable journey across the plains. He helped drive the ox-teams and the cattle, taking his turn at standing guard, and early learning the lessons of self-reliance and courage. Besides his father's two wagons, his mother's brother had a team and wagon, and he, having crossed the plains before, knew the way and they came through without trouble. After locating in Amador county he attended the public school, after their removal to Oregon assisting in the management of the home farm. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he began for himself, starting in the sheep business two years later at Puente, and continued there until 1877. This being the dry year, he sold out and then engaged in farming at El Monte, and after two or three years spent one year at Verdugo, and then went to Tombstone, Ariz., and took charge of a freighting outfit for Springer & Van Tazzle. One year later he returned to California and in 1882 located on Mill creek just below the Tyler ranch and engaged in farming and the conduct of a pack train, he running the first passenger pack train over the San Bernardino mountains from his ranch to Bear valley and Seven Oaks. He continued this work for many years and was very successful in it. In 1891 he purchased a ranch of one hundred and twenty acres at Bluff lake, and now has two hundred acres. In 1884 this was named Bluff lake by the Bear Valley dam workers; it has an altitude of seventy-five hundred and seventy-five feet, and consists of a beautiful meadow a mile long and a quarter of a mile wide, with the lake in the center; the plateau is surrounded by pines and fir trees, one fir being eight feet in diameter and one hundred and fifty feet high. Here he has erected log cabins and shake cabins which are used for cottages, Mr. Thurman himself conducting the dining room, running a dairy in connection with it and having his own beef to supply the table. Since 1891 he has made this place his home, spending his winters in Crafton and his summers in this beautiful resort. He also owns four hundred and forty acres a mile from Crafton, and this property is devoted to the raising of hay, grain and stock. He has an orchard on the place which supplies all his own fruits and also for market. There are eleven mountain springs on his ranch which supply ample water.

In Redlands in 1892 Mr. Thurman was united in marriage with Miss Mary Abbie Pillsbury, a native of New Hampshire and a graduate of Mt. Holyoke College of Massachusetts and who has been a resident of California since 1889. They are members of the First Congregational Church of Redlands, and are liberal supporters of its charities. Politically Mr. Thurman is a stanch advocate of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

GEORGE A. LANE. Oceanside has a full quota of live, energetic business men, prominent among whom is George A. Lane, who, as one of the re-organizers and managers of the Bank of Oceanside, is carrying on a substantial general banking business. In the varied occupations in which he has been employed he has gained valued experience and become well and favorably known in mercantile and financial circles. A son of Gilbert Lane, he was born, in 1856, at Long Branch, N. J., being descended from an old and honored family. His father was born in New Jersey eighty years ago, and during his active life was engaged in the transportation business in New York City. He and his wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Hathaway, are still living. Of their four children, George A., the subject of this sketch is the only one residing in California.

Brought up in Long Branch, George A. Lane attended the public schools when young, completing his education at a business college in Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Starting in life on his own account when a young man, he went to Wamego, Kans., where he was for a time engaged in mercantile pursuits. Locating in Trinidad, Colo., in 1879, he remained there a number of years, first as a merchant, after which he took a contract with others to supply ties for the Utah extension of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad. Later he engaged in the cattle business with a partner, his interests remaining there until 1890. In the meantime in 1886, he went to Flagstaff, Ariz., to take the management of the commissary department of the Arizona Lumber Company. Disposing of his property in that locality in 1890, he came to California, and for the next ten years was in the employ of a wholesale hardware company in Los Angeles, and while in the pursuit of his duties in that capacity became associated with many of the prominent business men of Southern California. Resigning his position in 1900, he removed to Winslow, Ariz., to take the position of cashier of the Navajo County Bank, which he held for five years. Returning to California in the spring of 1905, he, in company with J. X. Woods, bought and re-organized the Bank of Oceanside, and he is rapidly building up a large and lucrative business as a banker, and in addition to managing that institution organized, in 1906, the First National Bank of Oceanside, and is also interested to some extent in real estate in this vicinity. Since the death of J. X Woods he has been elected to the presidency of both banks, giving to these institutions his personal supervision. The present officers of the First National Bank of Oceanside are: G. A. Lane, president; W. V. Nichols, vice-president; and E. S. Payne, cashier; while those of the Bank of Oceanside are: G. A. Lane, president; C. S. Libby, vice-president; and E. S. Payne, cashier.

In Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Lane married May Welch, a native of Wisconsin, and they have one child, Edith. Politically Mr. Lane is a Republican, and fraternally he was made a Mason in Los Animas Lodge No. 28, F. & A. M., Trinidad, Colo., and is now a member of Oceanside Lodge No. 381, F. & A. M., of Oceanside, of which he is junior warden; he is also a member of Winslow Chapter, R. A. M., of Winslow, Ariz., and both he and his wife belong to the Order of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Lane is a woman of culture and refinement, highly esteemed, and is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM C. HUNT. The active, able and progressive business men of San Diego have no better representative than William C. Hunt, who is widely known as one of the leading contracting painters of Southern California. Endowed by nature with many gifts, he has cultivated his perceptive faculties, developing to an eminent degree his mechanical skill and his knowledge of form and color, becoming, in truth, an artist with both pencil and brush. He is noted for his fine workmanship, and as a sign writer and painter has no peer in the county. A native of Dublin, Ireland, he was born May 3, 1852.

Learning the trade of a painter when young, Mr. Hunt located in New York City in 1875, and there followed both carriage painting and house painting for awhile, being subsequently similarly employed in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. From the latter state he came, in 1883, to Oakdale, Stanislaus county, Cal., which was then the terminal point of the railway, and was there profitably employed at his trade for four years. In 1887 he took up his residence in San Diego, and has since been engaged as a contracting painter, and has built up a thriving and lucrative business, not only as a painter of houses and carriages, but as a sign painter, in the latter line especially winning an enviable reputation. He does much of the contract work of the city, keeping from ten to twenty hands employed during the busy season, and in the filling of his contracts invariably giving satisfaction to all concerned.

GOTFRIED MAULHARDT

In the Isle of Man Mr. Hunt married Fannie Ireland, a native of England, and they are the parents of two children, namely: William Charles, engaged in the painting business at Santa Clara, and Dorothy Frances. Mr. Hunt is a member of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, and of the Master Painters' Association, which he assisted in organizing. He is one of the most active and prominent Odd Fellows of the county, being a member and past grand of Sunset Lodge No. 328, I. O. O. F.; past district deputy grand; a member and past chief patriarch of San Diego Encampment No. 58; while Mrs. Hunt is a member and past grand of the Rebekahs, and past district deputy. Mr. Hunt also belongs to Silver Gate Court, Foresters of America.

GOTFRIED MAULHARDT. In the rush of twentieth century enterprise we often fail to give the credit due to the unostentatious patriots and pioneers of the century gone by, and often too we fail in appreciation of the work accomplished by the men and women who laid the foundation of the present prosperity; hence it were well to record their names in the annals of local history in order that future generations may give their memories the tribute of respect they deserve. From the time of his arrival in Ventura county in 1867 until his death more than thirty years afterward Mr. Maulhardt lived up to the measure of an honest and conscientious public and private life. Though of German birth he was intensely American in ideals and spirit, and he was one of those men who, in pursuing the even tenor of their way, form the bone and sinew of Americanism.

Dutterstadt, Germany, was Mr. Maulhardt's native place, and May 27, 1836, the date of his birth, he being a son of Jacob and Christine (Krukenberg) Maulhardt, lifelong residents of Germany, where the father followed the builder's trade. Three of the sons came to California, namely: Jacob and Gotfried, who died in Ventura county, and Anton, who died in Los Angeles. On the completion of the studies of the commonschools Gotfried Maulhardt learned the carpenter's trade and at the expiration of his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman in his home locality. On coming to America in 1867 he proceeded direct to California and settled in Ventura county, where he rented land and engaged in raising grain and stock. After a time he invested his savings in four hundred and ten acres situated one and one-half miles from the present site of Oxnard, and on this place he followed general farm pursuits with gratifying success. When land in the vicinity became very valuable he disposed of a portion of the ranch, but the bulk of the property is still owned by his estate. On the homestead he remained engaged in ranching until his death, which occurred on Christmas day of 1898. In politics he voted with the Democratic party after becoming a citizen of the United states, while in religion he was an earnest member of the Roman Catholic Church.

Some years before leaving his native land Mr. Maulhardt established domestic ties, his marriage in 1862 uniting him with Miss Sophia Maena, a native of the same locality as himself. On the home farm of her parents, John and Dora (Peter) Maena (both of whom are now deceased), she grew to womanhood, meanwhile fitting herself for the practical duties of a housekeeper and also receiving a fair education in German schools. Of all her family she was the only one to emigrate to America, and the death of her husband now leaves her alone, yet her life is far from lonely, for she is surrounded by warm friends and well-wishers and has a large circle of acquaintances in Oxnard, where since 1904 she has made her home on E street. Reared in the Roman Catholic faith, she always has remained true to its teachings and has given generously to its charities and missionary organization. Not only has the church been the recipient of her generosity, but also other movements of a practically helpful nature have commanded her ready sympathy and active co-operation, and probably no one in Oxnard is more deeply interested than she in the progress of all that makes for the permanent prosperity of the city.

MELVIN WILLARD HURST. A man of many estimable qualities is Melvin Willard Hurst, one of the proprietors of the Dreamland skating rink at Oxnard, who has been a resident of this state since 1878. He was born October 8, 1858, at Connersville, Ind., a son of Bennett and Cynthia Simpson Hurst, both natives of Indiana. His grandfather, Sanford Hurst, was a stockman and farmer, and the father still resides on his farm nine miles from Connersville. The mother, who died many years ago, gave birth to three children, two of whom are now living. Mr. Hurst spent all of his youthful days on the home farm in Indiana and received his education through the medium of the public schools. At the age of twenty years, being of an ambitious nature and desiring to see something of the world, he turned his steps toward the land of the setting sun and arrived in Santa Barbara in 1878. Apprenticing himself for three years to a carpenter, when he had mastered the trade he went to Pasadena and worked for a similar period. Following this he spent a short time at work in Los Angeles, then spent five years at Ventura assisting in building operations. From there he went to San Francisco for a few months, when he came to Oxnard, in the year 1898, and helped to build the third structure erected in the then new town. The following three years he was engaged as contractor and builder, having formed a partnership with J. H. Myers, and at the close of this period went to Arizona and prospected in the mines for six months.

Mining did not prove as attractive and profitable as he had hoped it would, however, and upon his return to Oxnard he accepted the position of foreman of the contracting firm of Myers & Abplanalp, retaining the place until the spring of 1906, when he formed a partnership with Mr. McAndrew and built the large Dreamland skating rink on C street. The building is a very large and commodious one, measuring 72x120 feet, the fine maple floor covering a space 60x120 feet, the capacity of the floor being sufficient for two hundred skaters. The equipment is of the finest and the skates are the best Spaulding and Union ball bearing. Many high class entertainment features are given from time to time, including masked parties, dances and races. A regulation double bowling alley is also run in connection with the rink. Mr. Hurst is interested in other property in Oxnard, among his holdings being two residences in the city. Fraternally he affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows' Lodge of Oxnard, and politically he is an earnest advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He is well informed on social and economic subjects and is a public-spirited citizen, highly respected by the whole community.

JOSEPH FERRERO. A business man of Puente, Joseph Ferrero is engaged in dealing in alfalfa and hay, and managing a fine ranch in the vicinity of this place. He is a native of Italy, his birth having occurred in Piedmont, January 6, 1856, the second in a family of three children born to his parents; his father, Peter, was also born in Piedmont, of an old and distinguished family, and both himself and wife died in their native country. Joseph Ferrero was the only one of the family who ever came to America. He was reared on his father's farm in Italy, receiving a rather limited education in the public schools of his native country, after which he engaged independently in farming operations. Deciding in 1886 to try his fortunes in America he crossed the ocean and came to Los Angeles, Cal., where he remained for five years employed principally on ranches. He then purchased a ranch in the vicinity of Whittier and remained there until 1898, when he came to Puente and engaged in the raising of grain on the Puente ranch, in 1903 purchasing the eighty-five acre ranch which he now owns, adjoining the town of Puente. He has added improvements to the place and brought it to a high state of cultivation, installing a pumping plant, equipped with a twenty-three horse power engine, with a capacity of eighty inches. He has set out eight acres in a walnut grove, while the balance is devoted to alfalfa and hay.

In Italy Mr. Ferrero was married to Carlotta Fea, a native of Italy, where her death occurred. Of their three children, two are living, Peter, a farmer in Puente, and Maddelena, Mrs. Faure of Puente. Mr. Ferrero was married a second time to Dominica Boggetti, a native of Italy, and born of this union are the following children: George, Mary, Joseph, Albert, Dominic, Frank, Vincent, Marguerite and David.

D. E. BOWMAN. Varied occupations present themselves as a source of livelihood to the residents of Southern California, and not the least important of these is the management of an apiary. Experience has proved that certain sections are well adapted to bee-culture, and availing themselves of this fact a number of men have devoted themselves successfully to the industry. Numbered among the enthusiastic apiarists of Valley Center may be mentioned Mr. Bowman, who owns an apiary of one hundred and nine colonies and at one time had as many as seven hundred colonies. Long experience has given him a thorough knowledge of the business and there are in the community few men more thoroughly acquainted with the industry than is he. The apiary is situated on his ranch of forty-five acres and forms the principal source of revenue from the property.

A native of Berlin, Canada, born in 1839, Mr. Bowman is a son of John B. and Lydia E. (Erb) Bowman, both of whom are deceased. As a boy he was given the best educational privileges the neighborhood afforded, and on leaving school began to teach not far from the old home, where he remained for a considerable period following the profession of a teacher. In 1869 he removed to Lawrence, Kans., and for a few years resided in that city and state, but in 1874 he proceeded west to the Pacific coast and settled at Valley Center, San Diego county, where he soon acquired extensive apiary interests. During 1886 he became interested in mining at various mines and for twelve years he devoted himself almost wholly to that occupation, but since 1898 he has given his time to the bee business. His knowledge of bees embraces every detail connected with their habits and their needs, and by reason of his long experience and thorough knowledge he is enabled to bring to the markets honey of superior quality and unsurpassed richness of flavor.

James Finley

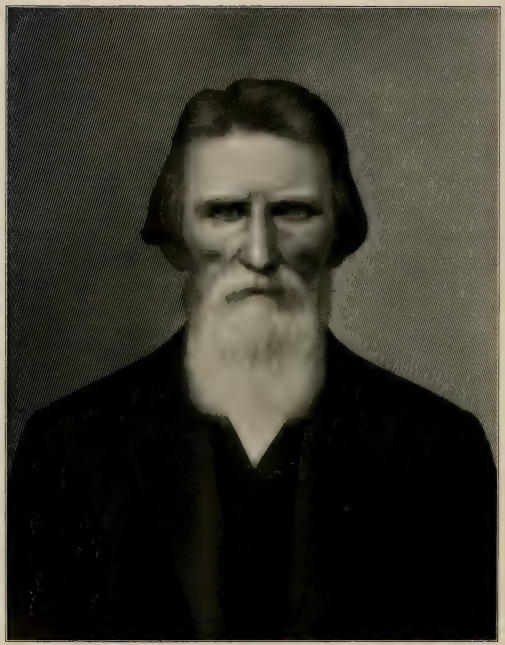
After having remained a bachelor for years, in December of 1905 he was united in marriage with Mrs. Jennie Strong, who shares with him the esteem of acquaintances and with him is an attendant upon services at the Methodist Episcopal Church. Thoughtful reading and a close study of conditions relating to capital and labor have made of him a socialist. In him the poor have a helpful friend, and his sympathies are ever on the side of the unfortunate and oppressed. The course of a long and active life has brought him a wide knowledge of the human race and of the conditions under which the poor struggle for their daily bread, and this knowledge has broadened his outlook as well as deepened his sympathies. To the people of Valley Center, where he holds the rank of a very old settler, he has many warm and sincere friends, who have been drawn to him by his earnestness of character and kindness of heart.

JAMES FINLEY. One of the modern and up-to-date residences in Long Beach is Emerald Cottage, at No. 37 Lime street, which was formerly the home of Mr. Finley, and is still the home of his widow and children. In thus naming his home Mr. Finley perpetuated a name which is dear to all natives of the Emerald Isle, for he was a native of Ireland, born in County Antrim in 1845, a son of William and Eliza (Hanna) Finley, of Scotch and English antecedents respectively.

During his boyhood James Finley was reared on his father's farm until he was eighteen years old, but the routine of the work was irksome to him and he determined to prepare himself for work in another line. The raising and preparing of flax into articles of commerce is one of the chief industries in his native country and it was along this line that his inclinations led him. He learned the art of flax dressing and became so expert at the work that before long he was placed in charge of the mill, holding this position for several years, or until resigning in 1867 to come to the United States. Going direct to Painesville, Ohio, he obtained employment with Stores, Harrison & Co., nurserymen in that city, with whom he remained for about one year, at the end of that time coming to California. Locating in San Jose he obtained a position with the Saratoga Paper Mills Company, while there learning the details of the business and finally rose to the position of superintendent of the mill. Subsequently he was interested in a tannery in Santa Cruz, but was overtaken by disaster in this undertaking when he had been in it about a year, thus losing all that he invested in it. Going then to Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, he accepted a position as traveling salesman and engineer for Joseph Enright, a large dealer in steam harvesters. Returning to San Jose, it was in 1880 that he entered the fire department of that city as engineer, a position which he held for five years, or until March, 1885, when he resigned to accept his appointment as superintendent of the Santa Clara County almshouse. In this as in all other positions which he had filled he gave his undivided attention to the duties that fell to him, with the result that he left a record behind him which was greatly to his credit. After eight years as manager of the almshouse he resigned in 1892 to take charge of his ranch of forty acres near Downey, which he had purchased some years previously. He set out the entire tract as a walnut grove, erecting a fine residence and other necessary improvements, making of it one of the finest ranches in that part of Los Angeles county. After making his home there for eight years he disposed of the property and removed to Long Beach, erecting the residence on Lime street occupied by his widow and children and known as Emerald Cottage. Here he lived retired during his latter years, although his death occurred at the California Hospital, whither he had gone for treatment. An operation finally became imperative, but even this expedient failed to bring desired results and he passed away September 25, 1904. He was recognized as a public spirited man, self-made in every sense implied by the term.



In San Jose, November 24, 1881, Mr. Finley married Sarah E. McGary, who was born in Yamhill county, Ore., four miles north of McMinnville. The McGary family was for many years well known in the south, especially in Kentucky, where the grandparents of Mrs. Finley, James and Martha (Thomasson) McGary, were born and reared and there spent their entire lives. Their son, Garrett W., was born near Frankfort, Ky., and continued to make his home there until a few years prior to the rush to California as the result of the finding of gold. Leaving Kentucky in 1847 he crossed the plains by means of ox-teams and arrived at his destination in Oregon six months later. The Cayuse Indian war broke out soon afterward, and with the other settlers he did his part in quelling the disturbances, serving as lieutenant of his regiment. He came to the west with the idea of settling down as a farmer, and the first property which he owned was in Polk county. Subsequently disposing of this he purchased a half-section of land near McMinnville, which was the home of the family at the time of the birth of his daughter. In 1868 he located near San Jose, Cal., where he carried on a farm until 1884, when he removed to Downey and engaged in walnut-growing. He died on the ranch which he had established there December 20, 1897, at the age of seventy-five years and six months, firm in the faith of the Christian Church, of which he was a member. The wife of Garrett W. McGary was before her marriage Catherine Sparks, a native of Surry county, N. C., and a daughter of Mathew and Sarah (Elmer) Sparks, both also natives of North Carolina, and the latter of English descent. From North Carolina Mr. and Mrs. Sparks removed to Lone Jack, Mo., but later, in 1851, brought their family across the plains to Oregon, two sons having preceded them to California in 1849. Settling on a farm in Polk county they there passed the remainder of their lives, having become the parents of ten children, of whom seven are living. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Finley, all of whom are residents of Long Beach, and with the exception of the eldest, who is married, are still at home with their mother. Named in order of their birth they are as follows: Bessie, Mrs. W. W. Brady; William J., Edward Ayer and James Robert. During his earlier years Mr. Finley was a Republican in his political belief, but during later years took sides with the Prohibitionists. Religiously he was a member of the Holiness Association, while Mrs. Finley is a member of the Christian Church of Long Beach.

W. A. WICKERSHAM. As a progressive and successful ranchman Mr. Wickersham of San Diego county is ranked among her leading citizens. By the exercise of thrift and good business judgment he has become the owner of two very fine ranches, although he is yet a young man. His birth occurred December 10, 1872, in Kansas City, Mo., his parents, Joshua J. and Damearis (Hipes) Wickersham, both being natives of Indiana. The father was a contractor and builder by trade, a Republican in politics, and an adherent of the Quaker sect in religion. His death occurred at Rainbow, Cal., at the age of sixty-eight years. The mother, who is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, makes her home with her son, W. A., he being one of three children. With his father Mr. Wickersham came to California when ten years of age, receiving his education in the public schools of San Luis Obispo and Los Angeles. At the latter-named place he learned the printer's trade, although he followed it for a short time only. Later he came to San Diego county and filed on a piece of government land comprising eighty acres, and also bought twenty-five acres. Starting with fifty swarms of bees, he engaged in the production of honey, his gain for the first season being $165. He has eight acres of ground devoted to the raising of raisin grapes, while on the homestead he cultivates hay and grain crops.

Mr. Wickersham's marriage to Ada Z. Coleman, a native of Kansas, occurred in 1899. Roy Walter, the only child born to them, died in infancy. In 1891 Mr. Wickersham also suffered the bereavement of his wife. He leans toward the religious opinions of the Methodist Episcopal denomination and politically is a strong adherent of the Republican party, at present filling the office of deputy clerk of San Diego county. He is one of the most highly esteemed citizens of the community in which he resides.

SMITH LEEDOM. Since 1902 Smith Leedom has been engaged as a liveryman in San Bernardino where he is well known as the proprietor of the Santa Fé stables located on D street. He was born in 1837 near Ricksmill, in Muskingum county, Ohio, where his father followed the occupation of farmer. Educated in the public schools, when he grew to maturity he resolved to continue in the work to which he had been trained through his boyhood and engaged in agricultural pursuits. On June 24, 1863, he was united in marriage with Miss Annie E. Humphrey, born near Cumberland, Ohio, her father, Thomas Humphrey, having been a native of the same state and the son of parents who claimed Virginia as their native home. Mr. Humphrey was a successful farmer, drover, stock dealer and business man, who, after a life of usefulness, died in Ohio, mourned by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. Mrs. Leedom's mother, who was Louisa Ann Harlan before her marriage, died when her only child was but two years of age.

Wm White

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Leedom operated a farm for about two years near Ricksmill, afterward locating near Cumberland and following the same business until 1888. In that year they removed to California, settling in Colton. Two years later they removed to Redlands locating on Ninth and State streets, and afterward bought an orange ranch west of Redlands, known as the Barton tract. Mr. Leedom engaged in ranching for a number of years in this locality and in 1902 purchased the livery business in San Bernardino, which he now conducts. Of the ten children born to Mr. and Mrs. Leedom we mention the following: Allen H. and Walter are successfully engaged in the automobile business in Colton; W. T. is in the same business in Redlands; Jennie, Mrs. Littlefield, resides in San Bernardino, where her husband is a plumber; O'Dell is also engaged in the automobile business in Colton; Etta became the wife of John Bostwick, who is successfully following the painter's trade in Colton; Harry, a lather and shingler by trade, lives in Los Angeles; Orra died in Colton at the age of nineteen years; Clarence died in Redlands when ten years old; Mary became the wife of Willie Gillogey, who is a carpenter by trade and owns a residence in Redlands. Mrs. Leedom is a member of the Baptist Church. Politically Mr. Leedom is a Republican and fraternally is a Mason, having attained the master's degree. As an enterprising and progressive citizen he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

WILLIAM WHITE. Prominent among the early pioneers of Sherman was the late William White, who during his thirty years of residence in this locality was known and respected as an industrious and worthy citizen, a kind neighbor and a loving husband and father; and his death, which occurred January 24, 1904, at the homestead where he had long resided, was a cause of general regret. He was born August 12, 1822, in Harrisburg, Ky., where he grew to man's estate.

Going to Trenton, Grundy county, Mo., in 1845, while yet a young, single man, William White laid a soldier's warrant on a tract of land, and purchased an adjoining tract, obtaining title to many acres. He subsequently served as an officer in the Mexican war, for which he was entitled to a pension from the government, the papers having arrived at his home just four days after his death. At the close of the war he married and settled as a carpenter in his Missouri home. In 1862, hearing glowing descriptions of the lands to be bought for a song farther west, he, accompanied by his wife and two small children, went across the plains with ox-teams to eastern Oregon, locating near the present site of Baker City, where he took up land on which he lived and labored for a year. Forced to leave there on account of ill health, he located in the Willamette valley, near Eugene, Ore., where he bought eighty acres of land. Renting his land, he afterwards followed his trade in that vicinity until 1875. Selling out in that year, he came to Los Angeles county, settling near the present site of Sherman, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of wild land, which he partly cleared and improved, although not doing quite as much as he would had he been physically more able and strong. When he came here, neither railways nor telegraph or telephone wires spanned the country, and the native Indians and the wild beasts had not fled from the advancing steps of civilization. He lived, however, to see the country well settled and himself the owner of a good ranch, fairly well improved, and yielding good crops.

On July 14, 1850, Mr. White married Martha F. Blew, who was born November 17, 1833, in Huntsville, Randolph county, Mo., and they became the parents of four children, namely: Robert M., of Hollywood, Cal.; William O., who died at the age of thirty-three years; Thomas L., owning a part of the old homestead; and Charles R., also owner of a portion of the old home farm. Since giving up possession of the ranch to her sons, Mrs. White has lived in the village of Sherman, where she owns a small house. Politically Mr. White was a zealous supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and for one term served as constable. He joined the order of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons when young, and in 1855 both he and his wife united with the Christian Church. Although he was in poor health for many years, he was confined to his bed but two days before death relieved him from his sufferings, the end coming suddenly in the midwinter of 1904.

GEORGE W. FRAZER. A man who has always had the best and highest interests of humanity at heart and has done much work in the promotion of elevating influences throughout the state is George W. Frazer, of Colton, whose profession is that of horticulturist. He was born January 29, 1831, in Greenbrier county, Va., and when a child of three his parents removed to Will county, Ill., where he spent his boyhood days and was educated in the public schools.

At a tender age he was deprived of a mother's loving care. The father, John Frazer, was a native of Virginia who settled in Illinois in 1834 and continued to reside in that state until the time of his death in 1864. He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and an enthusiastic class leader and Sunday-school worker and surrounded his family with every elevating and refining influence at his command.

From Illinois Mr. Frazer went to New Orleans and Texas, remaining for one winter, after which in 1852 he came to California across the isthmus via Nicaragua route, landing in San Francisco July 14. His experiences on this trip came near to proving disastrous. The sailing vessel which he boarded, after leaving the isthmus port was becalmed in midocean for sixty-seven days with only twenty-five days' rations, and when help reached them crew and passengers were nearly famished. Arriving in San Francisco he left shortly for the mines, but his health being very poor, he soon left that employment and went to Contra Costa county, where he engaged in ranching until 1858. The following twenty years were spent in Salano county in the cattle business. In 1861 he settled on a piece of government land there and the succeeding year was married to Miss Eliza Root, a native of Indiana, a family of eight children blessing their union: Albert, Alice, George, Guy, Lulu, Fred, Adele, and Jessie. The mother's death occurred when she was forty-four years of age.

In 1888 Mr. Frazer located in Southern California and was a fruit dealer in Monrovia for two years, and in 1890 he came to Colton where he has bought a fine home and expects to spend the remainder of his days. Since 1860 Mr. Frazer has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and has always been an enthusiastic worker in religious circles. He is a stanch Prohibitionist and at one time was very active in the Good Templars lodge in which he held office many times. In Contra Costa county he was state lecturer for the Grange organizations there, and served that county officially as deputy sheriff and constable. He is a broad-minded man of strong principles and is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

D. N. DODSON. Probably no man in San Diego county is better acquainted with real life in the west, southwest and northwest than D. N. Dodson, the well-known editor and proprietor of the Ramona Sentinel, who has lived in many states and has had a varied experience. Learning the printer's trade at the compositor's case, he has since been more or less identified with journalistic work, and as owner of the Sentinel for the past four years has greatly increased its literary excellence and its circulation. Public-spirited and enterprising, he has endeavored through its columns to promote all progressive civic movements and to further advance the educational, business, social and moral welfare of the community in which he resides and whose welfare he has at heart. A son of John H. Dodson, he was born, August 31, 1851, in Dubuque, Iowa.

The grandson of one of the earliest settlers of Ohio, John H. Dodson was born and reared in that state, and during his earlier life was there a farmer and hotel keeper, and subsequently a merchant, dealing exclusively in boots and shoes. Going from there to Wisconsin, he was for a short time employed in lead mining, but without sufficient success to continue there. Removing to Iowa, he bought land near Dubuque, and for awhile was engaged in tilling the soil. Locating then in Texas, he carried on general farming and stock-raising until his death, at the age of seventy-one years. He was a man of much influence in the places in which he lived, being active in the Republican party, a Mason and an Odd Fellow, and a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Mary Ann Noleman, who was born in Ohio, and died, at the age of fifty-five years, in Texas. She was a woman of rare personal worth, and a consistent member of the Baptist Church. Of the six sons born of their union, three are residents of San Diego county, namely: J. H., a rancher in the El Cajon valley, now serving as justice of the peace; A. E., of San Diego, an insurance and government land lawyer; and D. N., the special subject of this sketch.

Having acquired his elementary education in the common schools of Iowa Falls, Iowa, D. N. Dodson served an apprenticeship at the printer's trade in Fort Dodge, Iowa, remaining there until twenty years of age. Going then to Texas, he followed his trade for six years, in the meantime studying law. Being admitted to the Texas bar in 1878, he practiced his profession at Denton, Tex., for two years, and while there served as mayor of the city one term. He was afterwards a resident for a time of Clay county, Tex., and there was justice of the peace. Subsequently, in partnership with one of his brothers, he was for a year or more engaged in the printing business at Dallas, Tex. In December, 1887, he came from there to San Diego, Cal., and the following three years was similarly employed in that city. Subsequently locating in Escondido, he bought four hundred acres of wild land and began the improvement of a ranch, at the same time owning and managing a newspaper at Otay. Disposing of all of his interests in that locality, he went to Alaska, investing his money in Yakatat claims, which proved worthless. Not in the least discouraged, Mr. Dodson, in company with a Mr. Patterson, then located in Valdez, Alaska, where he practiced law, and also served as notary public for a few years. Accumulating some money, he erected eight cottages, all of which were soon after entirely swept away by a sudden rise in the Glacier stream. Returning then to the States, he lived for six months in Washington, traveling for an insurance company. Coming back to San Diego county, he started life anew, without money, rich only in friends and courage. With characteristic enterprise he continued his labors, and in his professional career has met with eminent success. Four years ago he bought the Ramona Sentinel, which he has managed so ably, and while assisting the material and financial growth of the town, has added to his own wealth, building a good residence here and accumulating other property. He takes an intelligent interest in everything concerning the public welfare, and is now serving as notary public.

In Denton, Tex., in 1880, Mr. Dodson married Tillie Cleveland, who was born in Missouri, and died in San Diego December 24, 1889, at the early age of thirty years. She was a woman of refinement and culture, greatly esteemed and beloved by a large circle of friends, and was a member of the Baptist Church. Four children blessed their union, namely: Bruce, residing in Los Angeles; Clare, wife of Clarence M. Telford, of Ramona, a carpenter and ranchman; Nellie, who died at the age of eighteen years, in Ramona; and William, seventeen years old, living in Glendora, Los Angeles county. Possessing the courage of his convictions, Mr. Dodson votes for the best men and measures, independent of party restrictions, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

HIMALAYA MINING COMPANY. Collectors of precious gems are today finding an alluring field for study and discovery in the tourmaline, a beautiful and brilliant gem from Nature's treasure house which connoisseurs declare to be second only to the diamond. Like the diamond, the tourmaline is not found in paying quantities in many localities. Indeed, there hitherto have been but three fields to yield this gem, Maine and Connecticut in the United States and Ceylon in India. The gem has been found in Brazil and other countries, but not in sufficient quantities to render successful mining possible. Up to the present time the demand has far exceeded the supply, hence the discovery and successful development of new mines presents points of great interest to those engaged in buying and selling stones and gems.

Recent important discoveries of tourmaline have been made in the Mesa Grande mountain district, fifty-four miles from the city of San Diego and thirty miles from the town of Foster, the nearest railroad station. Three companies have been pioneers in developing this rich field, namely: Tannebaum Mining Company, whose properties cover eighty acres; San Diego Tourmaline Company, forty acres; and Mesa Grande Tourmaline and Gem Company, seven hundred and eighty-four acres. It was in 1891 that Prof. George F. Kunz, while prospecting in Mesa Grande mountain, found tourmaline in distinct, isolated crystals, many of which were translucent and even transparent, with separate forms and perfect prisms. Though the rubelite predominated, there were also to be found specimens made up of four or five distinct sections, resembling those at Haddam Neck, Conn., and Paris, Me.; while the Brazilian form is also to be found; with the exception that those have the interior of the crystal red inclosed in white, with green exterior, while the Mesa Grande crystals show green in the interior or yellow green inclosed in white, with the exterior red.

Ten years after making his original statement concerning this discovery Professor Kunz reported that $15,000 in gems had been taken from the mines, of which almost one-half were found within twelve feet of the surface although the best stone was taken out at a depth of fifty feet. Some of the stones he stated to have more brilliancy than anything in the world with the sole exception of the diamond. In value the tourmaline ranges from $5 to $50 a carat according to quality and size. The rubelite tourmaline is taking the place, in a large degree, of the ruby. The demand continues to exceed the supply and there is every encouragement for stockholders in the various companies to push forward the work of mining with all the celerity possible, as the results cannot be otherwise than gratifying.

The Himalaya Mining Company, which located eighty acres in 1900, is owned by Lippman Tannenbaum of New York City, one of the largest importers of diamonds in the world. The general manager and superintendent of the company's interests is J. Goodman Braye, Jr., who ranks as one of the expert tourmaline miners in the world and has a knowledge of the Mesa Grande mines exceeded by no one.

JAMES WEIR, president of the board of trustees of San Pedro, is also chief engineer of the San Pedro Lumber Company, besides which he is first vice-president of the Harbor City Savings Bank, in the organization of which he took an active part. He is a native of Mercer county, Pa., born September 21, 1860, the eldest of four children and the only one to locate on the Pacific coast. His father, George Weir, was a native of Scotland, from which country he immigrated to America and in Pennsylvania engaged as a farmer until his death. His wife, formerly Eliza Craig, was also a native of Scotland.

Educated in the district schools, which he attended between the years of six and sixteen, James Weir, began the battle of life with a substantial foundation upon which to built future knowledge. At the age of sixteen years he left school and accepted a position as apprentice to learn the trade of machinist, and upon his mastery of the work began a prosecution of his trade in Pennsylvania. He made that place his home until 1892, when he came to Madera, Cal., and entered the employ of the Madera Flume and Trading Company in the capacity of engineer and machinist. He remained with them for about four years, when, in 1896, he came to San Pedro and accepted the position of chief engineer at the mill of the San Pedro Lumber Company, which was just then completed. This position he has subsequently filled with efficiency, and since the installation of the engine and machinery improvements his responsibilities have been lessened considerably.

In this city Mr. Weir married Della Hann, a native of Indiana, and they are now the parents of two children, James and Mabel. Mr. Weir is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M., in which he was first initiated into the order, is also enrolled among the members as high priest, of San Pedro Chapter, No. 89, R. A. M., and is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America. He has taken a deep interest in the development of San Pedro in 1902 being elected a member of the board of trustees for a term of four years, and two years later selected as president of the board. In 1906, at the April election, he was re-elected to his office and made chairman by the members which position he holds at the present writing. He is a man of ability and a citizen of worth, who is best appreciated where best known.

WILLIAM L. CLARK, superintendent of the Cleveland-Pittsburg Gold Mining Company and one of the most efficient and experienced mining engineers of the west, has held his present position for several years, coming here from Colorado. The mine of which he has been given the charge has been in operation for perhaps one-half a century and is owned by the company named, whose main offices are in Pittsburg. The location of the mine is on a portion of the rancho Rincon del Diablo of one hundred and thirty acres, situated two and one-fourth miles southeast of Escondido, and here he may be found busily engaged in the details of his work, which he superintends with business acumen and expert skill.

Mr. Clark was born in Pennsylvania, near Pittsburg, in 1859, and is a son of D. S. and N. H. (Long) Clark, the former of Scotch ancestry, and the latter of Irish extraction. During an early period in the history of the west Mr. Clark removed from the east across the plains with ox-teams and embarked in business in the then small village of Denver, with whose commercial development he remained identified until his death. His wife also continued to reside in that city as long as she lived. Their son, William L., was educated in the schools of Golden and at early age gained an excellent knowledge of mining, being especially skilled in engineering work. When only sixteen years of age he became interested in mining at Leadville and later formed mining interests at Aspen. While making these two towns his headquarters he traveled over every part of the United States and Mexico where mines are to be found and was retained as engineer in many responsible connections. Later he took up work in the Cripple Creek mines, where he continued from 1892 until his removal to California in 1903, and since the 1st of August of the latter year he has been in charge of the Cleveland-Pittsburg Gold Mining Company's interests at Escondido.

The marriage of Mr. Clark took place in Aspen, Colo., in June, 1889, and united him with Anna L. Girard, who was born in Pennsylvania and received superior educational advantages. One child, a son, Girard, blesses their union. Mrs. Clark is a daughter of a pioneer of 1849, J. B. Girard, who was born and reared in Pennsylvania, and at the time of the discovery of gold in California came west by wagon across the plains and engaged in mining. After a time he returned to the east and eventually settled in Colorado. When the Ancient Order of United Workmen became established in Pennsylvania he was one of the charter members of the original lodge and took a warm interest in the development of the fraternity. During the Civil war he rendered faithful service as a member of the Union army and later identified himself with the Grand Army of the Republic. He died in Aspen in 1891. In their church affiliations Mr. and Mrs. Clark are Episcopalians, but maintain liberal views and contribute as far as possible to all worthy religious movements without reference to creed or doctrines. In fraternal relations he holds affiliations with the Masons, having been prominent in the work of Cripple Creek Lodge No. 96, A. F. & A. M., also a member of the chapter in the same city.

George A. Hails

GEORGE A. HAILS. Prominent among the successful men of Ventura county is George A. Hails, a rancher located five miles southeast of Oxnard, where he has been a resident for nearly twenty years, establishing his personal fortunes on a secure basis and at the same time lending his aid toward the furtherance of all movements toward the general welfare of the community. Mr. Hails is a native of New England, his birth having occurred in Sudbury, Mass., September 23, 1856; his father, Richard Hails, was born in Newcastle-on-the-Tyne, and in young manhood immigrated to the western world, where, in Sudbury (then Quincy) Mass., he engaged as a merchant tailor. He remained in that location until 1873 when he came to California and passed the remainder of his days, dying at the advanced age of eighty-four years. He is survived by his wife, formerly Abbie Jones, who was born in South Lincoln, Mass., a daughter of James Jones, a native of the same vicinity and the representative of an old New England family, prominent in the history of that section. She resides in Santa Barbara at the present writing. Of her children, Abbie resides in Santa Barbara; Charles died in young manhood in that city; George Alvin is the subject of this review, and Mary, wife of John T. Torrance, resides in Santa Ynez, Cal.

The first seventeen years of George A. Hails' life were spent in his native state, where he received an excellent education in the public and high schools, fitting him for the work of his young manhood. In October, 1873, he came with his parents to Santa Barbara, and shortly afterward secured employment on a ranch in Santa Barbara county. This occupation he decided to make his life work and from that time on he followed ranching, being associated with his brother at Goleta. In 1887 he came to his present location, which was a part of the Scott estate, purchasing property upon which he has since placed all of the improvements. He has erected a handsome and modern residence, commodious barns and outbuildings, has his property well fenced, and the land in a high state of cultivation. He has set out a fine orchard as well as numerous shade trees, which greatly enhance the beauty of the place. For a time he was engaged in the raising of grain and stock, but has since devoted the greater part of his time to the cultivation of beans and beets, in which he has met with success. In addition to the one hundred acres he owns he also rents one hundred and fifty acres, the entire property being devoted to beans and beets. His methods are strictly modern and up-to-date, his interest keen in the science of farming, and in the conduct of his farm has well earned the position he holds among the ranchers of Ventura county—that of a progressive and enterprising farmer.

In Goleta, Santa Barbara county, Mr. Hails was united in marriage with Miss Ettie Kenyon, a native of Michigan and the daughter of Gerdon Kenyon, who became a pioneer rancher in the vicinity of Goleta. They are the parents of three children, Mary E., Eva M., and Elsie I. Mr. Hails has not allowed his personal affairs to so engross his attention as to render him valueless as a citizen, but has instead interested himself on all questions of the day and has kept closely in touch with progress along all lines. He is specially active in educational interests, and since the organization of the Oxnard Union high school district has served as a member of the board of trustees, assisting materially at the time of the erection of the high school building. He has also served as a member of the Ocean View school board of trustees. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Fraternal Brotherhood, while politically he gives his stanch support to the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. The support of the family is given to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Hails is a member, although all charitable enterprises, whether denominational or otherwise, receive financial aid from them. Mr. Hails merits the high esteem in which he is held by all who know him, either in a business or social way, for he has carried into active practice his belief in stanch principles of integrity and honor. Pleasant and courteous in demeanor, he has won many friends who appreciate him for his sterling traits of character.

P. H. BARTRON is a native of Tioga county, N. Y., and was born April 19, 1842. Taken by his parents to Potter county, Pa., he there had the advantages of the public schools, of a practical agricultural training and an apprenticeship at well boring, which he has followed at intervals during his entire active career.

Mr. Bartron was nineteen years old when the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln fell like a clarion call upon the heart of every able-bodied son in the land. Enlisting in Company K, One Hundred and Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, he served for three years, taking his part in camp, on the march and in battle until disabled. This injury necessitated his retention in the hospital at West Philadelphia for three months, after which he rejoined his regiment and participated, among others, in the battles of Gettysburg, The Wilderness, Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg. He was a brave and fearless soldier, and during his career accumulated a fund of interesting information.

After the war Mr. Bartron engaged in lumbering in Pennsylvania for about four years, and in 1871 removed to Wisconsin, where the Eau Claire river offered excellent opportunity for the same industry. The following year he married Elsie Dodge, a native of Wisconsin, and soon afterward returned to Pennsylvania, where he worked in a grist and saw mill for a couple of years. In 1878 he brought his family to California, settling on land near Hanford, Kings county, where he lived three years, and from where he came to Santa Barbara county during the summer of 1881. He had, in the meantime, both made and saved money, and this he invested in property which is devoted to pasture, hay and stock-raising, besides which he owns lots in Santa Maria.

Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bartron, Elison is the wife of J. H. Mahurin; Myra D. is the wife of John Grant; Bert is at home; Isabelle is the wife of John Aubert; and Ethel, James and Roy live with their parents. Mr. Bartron is a Republican in politics, but confines his political activity to casting a conscientious vote. He is a member of Foote Post No. 89, G. A. R., and Mrs. Bartron is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps. Mr. Bartron's reputation is based upon practical efforts as a farmer and well borer, upon courage as a soldier, and honesty as a citizen of a prosperous and moral community.

JOHN BARTLEY SMITHSON, JR. The present deputy sheriff of Needles, Cal., John B. Smithson, Jr., is the descendant of English ancestors on the paternal side, but it is not definitely known when the family was first represented in this country. It was prior to the birth of the grandfather, Allen F. Smithson, however, for it is known beyond a doubt that he was born in Mississippi. Leaving the south with his family in 1846 he started for the west, his son, John Bartley Smithson, Sr., then being a lad of about five years. Several years were spent in Colorado and Utah, and it was not until 1850 that they finally reached San Bernardino, Cal. Here they found the Indians more numerous than white settlers and as a matter of safety they built a fort as a retreat for the women and children. John B. Smithson, Sr., well recalls these pioneer conditions, and as he was of an age to be of service in driving the teams he proved a valuable assistant. Subsequently he engaged in teaming and farming in this locality, following this dual occupation for nineteen years, and in the mean time accumulating considerable land. At one time he owned four hundred and eighty acres, set out to apples principally, although he also raised other fruits and vegetables in addition to managing a dairy. With his wife, formerly Miss Jane Cadd, he is now living retired in San Bernardino, loved and respected by many who are familiar with his long and interesting career.

Of the large family of children born to these parents ten are now living and of these John Bartley Smithson, Jr., is the second, his birth occurring in San Bernardino September 18, 1868. During his boyhood and youth he attended the public schools of his home town, and as soon as old enough and when his school duties would permit, he worked for his father, assisting him in freighting and caring for the home ranch. Subsequently he accepted a position in the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe boiler shops in San Bernardino, filling the same until 1901, when he relinquished it to engage in business for himself. Seeing a good opening ahead in running a line of teams to the mountains he secured the necessary teams and outfit and for about two years, or until May, 1903, carried on a very profitable business along this line, giving it up on the date last mentioned, however, to accept his appointment on the police force of San Bernardino. In January of the following year he was promoted to his present position as deputy sheriff and special officer for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, having charge of the station at Needles, and to which he devotes his entire time and attention.

The family home however is in San Bernardino, at the corner of Ninth and I streets, and is graciously presided over by Mrs. Smithson, who before her marriage was Miss Florence Case, a native of this city and the daughter of James H. Case. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Smithson is brightened by the presence of one child, Lois Alene, who is the joy and pride of her parents and will receive every advantage in their power to bestow. Fraternally Mr. Smithson affiliates with the Woodmen of the World, and also with San Bernardino Parlor, N. S. G. W., and in his political belief he is a Republican. Personally he is well liked for the many fine traits of his character, which is in keeping with his stalwart and well-built frame.

MILLS BROTHERS. California is rich in the possession of men of ability and enterprise who have given their best efforts toward the material growth and progress of the state. Among these prominent mention may be made of two native sons, the Mills brothers, Francis

E. and Edward T., located in the vicinity of El Monte, and actively engaged in the improvement and cultivation of a fine walnut grove. Their father, E. T. Mills, was born in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1833, their grandfather, Abel, being a native of the same state and the descendant of English ancestry. E. T. Mills engaged as an assistant in his father's business, which was that of a miller, until he was seventeen years old, when he came to California; he outfitted with ox-teams and in company with a large train set out across the plains for the Mecca of the fortune hunter's dreams. They had many exciting and fearful experiences during the journey, running out of provisions, which forced them to eat mule meat in preference to starvation. They finally abandoned their wagons and made the remainder of the journey as best they could, arriving in Hangtown after several weary, trying months, where Mr. Mills found employment in the mines. After several years in this occupation he came to Southern California and in San Bernardino county engaged in lumbering. Following his marriage there he removed to Los Angeles county and became a pioneer settler of El Monte, where he followed farming and stock raising, and also conducted a freighting business between Los Angeles and San Bernardino before the railroads supplied the early hotels of the former city. He always retained an interest in the mining operations of the state. He was a stanch Republican, an ardent advocate of all upbuilding enterprises, and foremost in whatever looked toward the betterment of the community. His death occurred in 1887, while his wife, formerly Mary Margaret Cleminson, a native of Missouri and sister of James Cleminson, whose history appears elsewhere in this volume, passed away in 1879. They were the parents of three children, Francis Eugene, Edward Theron and Imogene, Mrs. Thompson, of Azusa.

Francis Eugene Mills was born on the Cleminson place in El Monte, February 5, 1860, while Edward Theron Mills was born on the present site of the high school building of this town, July 10, 1862. They were classmates in the public schools of El Monte, studying together, playing together, and as early as 1875 began working land together. They leased land in the vicinity of El Monte and engaged in general farming and the raising of grain, which occupation proved successful and gave them means, with which, in 1884, they began the improvement of ten acres of land. Slowly adding to this property with their accumulated means they have now thirty acres, finely improved and capable of the highest cultivation, all devoted to apples and walnuts, which make of the property one of the fine groves of this section. They have been successful in their efforts, have accumulated a competence, and at the same time established for themselves a place among the progressive and enterprising men of this section. Francis E. Mills is married, his wife in maidenhood being Gertrude Hall, a native of Vermont. She was reared in Kansas and came to this state with her parents in 1880, her marriage occurring in El Monte. They have had five children, namely: Ellsworth, Francis, who died in infancy; Gertrude, Mary Imogene and Ruth Gladys. Both brothers are members of the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association, in which Francis E. is a director, and officiates as treasurer. Both are stanch adherents of Republican principles.

FRED G. BIERLEIN. A popular and successful young business man Fred G. Bierlein of Long Beach has within the three years of his residence in this city made himself a leader among automobile dealers and is conducting a rapidly growing trade. The family is of German descent, Mr. Bierlein's grandfather having been born in Germany and after coming to this country he settled on a farm in Frankenmuth, Saginaw county, Mich., where his son, Mathew, was born. The birth of Fred G. occurred July 9, 1880, in Richville, Tuscola county, Mich., his father now owning a farm near that place. His mother, who is also living, was before her marriage Anna M. Ranke, a daughter of Fred Ranke, who was a native of Pennsylvania and became an early settler in Saginaw county, Mich., and was there engaged in farming.

A member of a family comprising thirteen children, Fred G. Bierlein acquired a common-school education and helped his father until twenty-one years of age, then went to Bay City and secured employment in the West Bay City Sugar Company's factory, and within two years had risen to the position of assistant to the superintendent. Desiring to secure a commercial education he went to Lansing and entered the Lansing Business University, from which he graduated in 1902. The following year he filled the position of bookkeeper and office man with the Huber Manufacturing Company in Lansing, and in December, 1903, came to Los Angeles and was employed by L. T. Shettler, agent for the Oldsmobile, as bookkeeper and salesman. Retaining this place until January, 1905, he conducted an Oldsmobile agency in Riverside for four months, then came to Long Beach and built the old Palace garage on Fourth street, becoming the proprietor and securing the agency of the Reo and Winton automobiles. In the spring of 1906 he sold out and started an automobile supply business at No. 38 Locust street and erected a new garage at No. 232 Pacific street, moving into the new quarters in September, 1906. The building is 50x190 feet, the materials used in its construction being entirely of brick and stone, making it an absolutely fireproof structure. In the front are the spacious salesrooms and offices, and back of this is the main room for machines, equipped with private lockers for regular customers, air tanks and everything that goes to make a thoroughly up-to-date complete garage, no expense having been spared to instal every modern convenience. Automobiles are kept for rent and Mr. Bierlein has the agency for the Reo, Winton and Strothers machines, his business in every department being the largest of the kind in the city.

Mr. Bierlein's marriage in Bay City, Mich., united him with Miss Emily A. Kloha, a native of that state, and they have become the parents of one child, Leon Jacob. They are members of the Lutheran Church, whose charities and benevolences they support liberally, and exert an elevating and progressive influence throughout the community in which they reside.

SAMUEL TRELOAR is one of those fine old gentlemen whom it is always a delight to meet, and the various paths which his life has followed and the stirring scenes through which he has passed make him an interesting conversationalist. His father, also Samuel Treloar, was born in England and with his family came to this country in 1834, when his namesake was but two years old. Settling in the territory of Wisconsin, he there reared his eleven children, seven of whom grew to maturity, and of these two now make their homes in California. The mother passed away at the age of fifty years, but the father attained the advanced age of eighty-six years.

As has been previously stated Samuel Treloar is a native of England, his birth occurring November 9, 1832, but as he was brought to the new world when he was a mere child he has no personal knowledge of his native land. His boyhood and youth were associated with the pioneer conditions which then prevailed in Wisconsin, and in the mean time he attended the subscription schools in the vicinity of the family homestead. In 1852, before he had attained his majority, he joined a party of immigrants bound for California, and upon reaching the state went at once to the Placerville mines. From Eldorado county he went to Sierra county, following mining in both localities for about twenty-seven years, and in the mean time had investigated the mining prospects of the Fraser river country. Returning to his old home in Wisconsin, he remained there seven years, at the end of that time retracing his steps to the Golden state. Going to Yuba county, he there settled down as a tiller of the soil, in addition to which he also followed mining. Selling out his interests there in 1896 he came to the southern part of the state, and near Carpinteria, Santa Barbara county, purchased one hundred acres of choice land upon which he still makes his home, although the work connected with the management of the ranch is performed by others.

In 1864 Mr. Treloar was united in marriage in Forest City, Sierra county, with Lizzie Lee, who was a native of his childhood home, Wisconsin. Nine children were born to them, and with the exception of two, all are married and established in homes of their own. Named in order of birth the children are as follows: Lizzie J., who is the widow of Ed Jeffrey;; Frank Benjamin; Carrie, the wife of George Martin; William, who married Hattie Webster; Forrest, who chose as his wife Ora Lentz; Charles, who married Mabel Baton; Stella, the wife of Philip Dane; Myrtle E. and Albert Lee. Since 1864 Mr. Treloar has been identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has passed through all of the chairs of the order, this also being true of the United Workmen Lodge, of which he is also a member. For three years he was a member of the Home Guard in California. Politically he supports Republican principles, and in religion he affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

PATRICK QUINN. As the owner of the Quinn granite quarry, Patrick Quinn is known as one of the successful and progressive business men of Temecula, where he has one hundred and sixty acres of mountain land with a frontage of half a mile of solid granite. The stone is of fine quality and is used for head stones, building and curbing purposes, and is shipped at the rate of about fifty carloads per year to San Francisco and Los Angeles markets.

Mr. Quinn was born in April, 1853, in Galway county, Ireland, where he received his education. At the age of seventeen years he came to the United States and located at Waltham, Mass., there learning the trade of stone cutter. His arrival in California dates from 1876, when he reached San Francisco. Subsequently he traveled all over the coast section and in 1886 came to Temecula and began his present business, which was the first one of the kind in this section, and has now grown to proportions requiring the employment of sixteen men in the quarries. Mr. Quinn is a public spirited citizen, interested in the development of his section of the state and lends his support to all enterprises tending towards its upbuilding.

G. H. Johnson

GEORGE H. JOHNSON. The owner of one of the finest orchards in the San Jacinto Valley, George H. Johnson is known as one of the most successful and highly respected citizens of this section of the state. His ranch was in a very neglected condition when he bought it, but he has improved it until it is now considered a very desirable property. It is located three-fourths of a mile east of Valle Vista, on Florida avenue, and the greater part of the forty acres is devoted to oranges, although he also raises sufficient hay for his own use. The birth of Mr. Johnson occurred December 5, 1860, in Phelps county, Mo., he being the son of Milton and Trythene (Deem) Johnson, both of whom were natives of Indiana. They settled in Missouri in early years, in 1862 becoming residents of Indiana, where they remained twelve years, the succeeding ten years being spent in Illinois, and in 1884 they removed to the still further western state of Kansas, locating in Burr Oak, where Mrs. Johnson's death occurred. The father then came to California, arriving here in 1893, lived in San Jacinto and Valle Vista until 1897, when he returned to Kansas, his death occurring a short time later at the age of sixty-seven years.

The education of Mr. Johnson was received in the schools of Indiana and Illinois, in which latter state he was married, February 25, 1884, and the following year he removed to Kansas, whither his parents had already located. A desire to come still further west induced him to make another change in the spring of 1891, at which time he settled in Diamond valley, Riverside county, Cal., later removing to the San Jacinto valley and purchasing a half interest in the ranch upon which he now makes his home. The death of his wife occurred in Kansas in 1890, the year previous to his removal to this state. She was before her marriage Miss Mary Belle Mason, a native of Illinois, in which state she was married. Two children were born of this union, Roy, whose death occurred in his eleventh year, and Earl, now nineteen years of age, who lives at home with his father. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is a member of San Jacinto Camp No. 100, W. O. W., and Hemet Lodge No. 190, I. O. O. F. He is a man who takes an especial interest in educational matters and served on the school board of his district for two years.

GEORGE A. TELFORD. The attractive country home situated one-half mile south of Ramona has been occupied and owned by Mr. Telford during the entire period of his residence in the west. On coming to California in 1890 he at once settled in Ramona and purchased a ranch adjacent to the village, where he set out an orchard of thirty-five acres of all kinds of fruit. About the same time he erected a modern and substantial residence containing ten rooms and equipped with the latest improvements, this being still recognized as one of the most elegant farm houses in San Diego county. Everything on the place bears an appearance of thrift indicative of the energy and judicious management of the owner, who in addition to superintending the farm takes contracts for the erection of residences and other buildings.

The Telford family is of eastern stock, coming from New York State. For many years David W. Telford was a prominent member of the bar of Cayuga county and ranked high for his knowledge of jurisprudence and the fundamental principles of the law, but eventually he retired from practice and established himself upon a farm. For a time he also filled the office of surveyor of Cayuga county. There he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in 1900, at the age of eighty-nine years, many years after the demise of his wife, Caroline (Mason) Telford, who had passed away in 1865, at the age of thirty-four years. Among their children was George A., born in Cayuga county, N. Y., April 28, 1853, and educated in public schools and Red Creek Academy. During 1872 he started out for himself and went west as far as Missouri, where he settled in Meadville, Linn county. As time passed by he acquired various interests and formed important business relations, becoming one of the well-known men of his town. The packing and poultry industries were his principal occupations for some time and he also held a position as traveling salesman with J. H. Dunn, while in addition for twelve years he engaged in contracting and building in that town and county.

While making his home in Missouri Mr. Telford was united in marriage in 1876 with Miss Eva J. Butler, a native of Beloit, Wis., but from childhood a resident of Missouri. Four children were born of their union, namely: Ida, who married J. C. Bargar, represented on another page of this volume; Eunice, wife of William Stockton, who is engaged in the stock business and resides at Ramona: Clarence M., who married Clara Dodson and resides in Ramona, and is his father's partner both in the cultivation of the farm and the contracting business, and Carrie E., who remains with her parents on the home farm. The family stands high in social circles of the neighborhood and is identified with the Congregational Church in religious connections. In politics Mr. Telford for years has been a believer in Republican principles and a voter of that ticket at all elections. Fraternally he holds membership with Court No. 8520, Ancient Order of Foresters. The general esteem of the people is accorded him, and he enjoys the confidence of all, for his uprightness of life and probity in business transactions have been such as to commend him to the people with whom he has had associations.

FRED P. SMITH. Varied business experiences in different parts of the east were followed by Mr. Smith's removal to California, where since January, 1897, he has been employed by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad as their agent at the Carlsbad station. Born and reared in New York City, he is a member of an old eastern family of Quaker ancestry and he was by birthright a member of the Society of Friends, but forfeited his membership through enlisting in the Civil war, participation in warfare being in direct opposition to the society's teachings. His parents, Dr. John T. S. and Amelia (Franklin) Smith, were natives respectively of New Bedford, Mass., and New York City, and the former, removing to the metropolis at an early age, there established a homeopathic pharmacy. When seventy-three years of age, in October, 1876, he died in New York City, and his wife also died there at the age of fifty-six years.

Born December 5, 1849, Fred P. Smith was given an excellent education in private schools of New York City and later assisted his father in the pharmacy business, eventually becoming a partner in the same business with his brother, Henry M. Smith. About 1875 he turned his attention to the provision business, in which he remained for seven years. The next occupation in which he became interested was that of nursing, in which capacity he was retained by patients of homeopathic physicians in New York. On leaving that city he removed to Camden, N. J., and acted as agent for the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Company for a short time, afterward engaging in the grain business for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. On leaving the Atlantic seaboard he settled in Toledo, Ohio, where he had charge of collecting rents for his brother-in-law's real estate business and for a time he also filled the position of warden in the Homeopathic hospital of Toledo. Removing to the Pacific coast in 1886, he soon afterward settled in Twin Oaks valley, San Diego county, and made his home in Escondido for two years or more, since which time he has resided in Carlsbad, and is a well-known citizen of this place.

Though very young when the Civil war was in progress Mr. Smith was accepted as a member of Company K, Eighth New York State Militia, and served until the expiration of his time. Later he affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, in the activities of which he has maintained a constant interest. Among the other organizations in which he has borne a part may be mentioned the Knights of Pythias (his membership being with the Escondido Lodge) and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows (affiliating with the Oceanside Lodge). While living in New York City he there married, in 1874, Miss Josephine Stevens, a native of Michigan. Two children were born of their union. The daughter, Marion, married James Furber and resides in Rahway, N. J., while the son, Sherman S., also makes his home in the same city.

CAPT. LEWIS ALBERT PAINE. Since November, 1901, Capt. Lewis A. Paine has been a resident of California and in the city of Long Beach has given his best efforts toward advancement along all lines calculated for the upbuilding of this section of the state. He is at the present writing serving as deputy city clerk, and although but a brief time has elapsed since his appointment to this position by the city council he has ably demonstrated his ability and bids fair to rise to higher positions of trust and responsibility in the gift of the people. Captain Paine is the descendant of an old New England family, his father, Elbridge M., and grandfather, William Henry, both being natives of the state of Vermont, where the elder man engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. He eventually brought his family to the middle west, where in the vicinity of Fond du Lac and Manitowoc, Wis., he spent his last days. Elbridge M. Paine was reared on the paternal farm in Wisconsin to years of maturity, when he removed to Charles City, Iowa, passing a brief time in that location; returning to Wisconsin he was occupied as a farmer for three years and then became a resident of Boone county, Neb., where in the vicinity of Cedar Rapids he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. Locating in Long Beach in 1901 he has since lived retired from the active cares of life and is now numbered among the citizens who are enjoying the advantages produced by their early years of effort. His wife, who is also living, was formerly Rhoda Emigh, born in the northern part of New York state, a daughter of Henry Emigh, a farmer who later in life located in Fond du Lac, Wis.

Of the three children born to his parents Lewis Albert Paine is the second in order of birth, he being a native of Charles City, Iowa, born April 2, 1875. His childhood days were passed in Nebraska, where he attended the public schools, supplementing this training by a course in the high school of Cedar Rapids and the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. He left the university to enlist for service in the Spanish-American war, becoming a member of the Second Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, in Company A, after an eight months' service being honorably discharged as corporal. Following his release from the army he spent one year in traveling, after which, in 1901, he came to Long Beach with his parents and for the ensuing four years engaged in contracting. In May, 1906, he was appointed by the city council to his present position of deputy city clerk. He takes a deep interest in the advancement of all public enterprises and has a firm faith in the future of this city, where he has invested in real estate.

William Singleton

On the 21st of December, 1904, Mr. Paine was one of the organizers of Company H, Seventh California National Guard, and was at that time elected second lieutenant. May 1, 1906, while in service at Oakland following the great San Francisco disaster, he was elected captain of the company. In matters fraternal he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America (of which he is venerable consul), Knights of Pythias and Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is an honored member of the Spanish-American War Veterans of Long Beach.

WILLIAM SINGLETON. In the citizenship of San Bernardino and Riverside counties William Singleton occupies a prominent position, esteemed alike for his business characteristics as well as for personal qualities which have been displayed during his long residence in this section of Southern California. Mr. Singleton was born in Lancashire, England, a son of James and Ann (Houghton) Singleton, both natives of the same place. His grandfather, William Singleton, was a brewer in Lancashire, where he spent his entire life. James Singleton engaged as an engineer and machinist in his native country until 1853, when he brought his family to America, arriving in New Orleans, transferred to river steamer and landing at Keokuk, Iowa, and completing the transcontinental journey by means of the time-honored ox-teams. Arriving in Salt Lake City he engaged in farming until 1857, when he once more loaded his worldly effects into an ox-wagon and finished the trip to the Pacific coast, arriving in San Bernardino, and there securing employment as a machinist and engineer in a sawmill and also entering a farm, locating upon the same in 1868. With his son William he purchased the old Roubideaux place of forty-four hundred and forty acres, and there followed agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1881 at the age of sixty-seven years. One-half of this large property was sold to a farmer located near them and the remainder kept in the family. His wife, a daughter of William Houghton, a miner in England, survived her husband until 1894. They had two children, William, of this review, and Ann, now Mrs. Hiram Haskell, of this place.

Born November 13, 1834, William Singleton was reared in his native country and educated in a private school to the age of eleven years, when he engaged with his father to learn the trade of machinist. He was first employed as a wiper and from that learned the trade. In 1853, on February 8, the family embarked at Liverpool on the sailer Elvira Owens, bound for New Orleans, and after seven weeks they arrived at their destination. They went up the Mississippi river to St. Louis, thence to Keokuk, where they outfitted with ox-teams and necessary provisions and set out on the journey overland to Salt Lake City. Arriving in that city October 6 Mr. Singleton began farming with his father, and remained in that location until 1857, when they again outfitted and came overland to San Bernardino. Here he first followed the work of engineer in a sawmill, remaining so occupied for the period of two years, and then again becoming interested in farming. In 1868 with his father he located on the farm before mentioned, and with him developed and improved it, erecting a residence in which he now resides, and conducts an extensive dairy business and creamery, as well as general farming operations.

In San Bernardino Mr. Singleton was united in marriage with Miss Lydia Brooks, a native of St. Louis, Mo.; she came to California in 1852, crossing the plains with her father, James Brooks, to Salt Lake City, and ten years later came to Southern California. They are the parents of the following children: Annie, Mrs. Goetting, of El Casco; William James, engaged with his father; Helen, at home; Thomas Henry, farming near Beaumont; and Charles Edward, at home. For many years Mr. Singleton served as school trustee of the San Timoteo district and has always taken a practical and helpful interest in educational matters. In political affiliations he is a stanch Democrat. The business interests of Redlands had in Mr. Singleton one of its prominent factors, as with his nephew, W. H. Singleton, mentioned at length in this volume, building the Club Stables and operating them until their sale some time since. He enjoys the esteem of the citizens of this section who have known him for a half century, and merits the high place he holds as a representative rancher, stockman and business man.

LEWIS CALVIN LINDSEY. Since his location in Long Beach Mr. Lindsey has taken an active interest in the development of the city and has manifested his faith in the permanency of conditions here by investing largely in real estate holdings. He is practically retired from active business cares, seeking a needed relaxation in the evening of his days. Mr. Lindsey is a native of Norwich, Muskingum county, Ohio, his birth occurring February 22, 1830, the tenth of a family of thirteen children, of whom but two are now surviving. His father, Joseph Lindsey, a native of Pennsylvania, was a carpenter and builder who located in Muskingum county, Ohio, and in addition to his building enterprise engaged in the improvement and cultivation of a large farm. He spent his last years in Cedar county, Iowa. His wife, formerly Ellen Miller, a native of Ohio, died in Illinois.

Lewis Calvin Lindsey was reared in Ohio until he was seven years of age, when he was taken by his parents to Illinois, in Champaign county, receiving a limited education through an attendance of the public schools whose sessions were held in the log cabin of the day. At the age of twenty years he removed to Iowa, having at that age been dependent upon his own resources for five years. His principal occupation was as a farmer in Iowa, improving a farm of one hundred and twenty acres in the vicinity of Wilton Junction, breaking prairie with five yoke of oxen. He remained a resident of Iowa until 1881, when he removed to Nebraska and three miles west of Hastings purchased and improved a farm. Later he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Hayes county, Neb., which property he still owns. Finally retiring from active farming life he located in Hastings where he made his home until the fall of 1901, when he came to Southern California and located in Covina. Two years later he came to Long Beach, where he now owns a commodious residence and also owned a ranch of three acres near Signal Hill.

In Cedar county, Iowa, February 22, 1852, Mr. Lindsey married Ellen Halderman, a native of Illinois, and born of this union were ten children, eight of whom are now living: Martha J., wife of Nelson Ridenour of Custer county, Neb.; Mary, wife of Eugene Nye; Laura, widow of John Elmer De Forest, of Los Angeles; William, of Long Beach; Clara, wife of Eugene Hammond, of Hastings, Neb.; Charles Upton, of Long Beach; Minnie, wife of C. F. Casebeer; and Irene, wife of Fred Hart, of Seattle, Wash. Mrs Lindsey is a daughter of Christian Halderman, who was born in Germany, and after his immigrating to America engaged as a farmer and carpenter in Illinois. Later in life he located in Cedar county, Iowa, and on Rock creek operated a flour mill and also engaged in farming, being a pioneer of that section. He died there in early life. His wife, formerly Martha Lake, was a native of Ohio, whose death occurred when her daughter was but four years old. Mr. Lindsey is a Democrat in his political affiliations and takes an active interest in the principles he endorses.

JEFFERSON HAIL HATHAWAY. The family represented by Mr. Hathaway of Pomona is traced to Old Virginia, where the grandparents were born, but later years numbered them among the residents of Missouri, the birth of their son Jefferson M. occurring in St. Joseph, that state. When he was a lad of about seven years removal was made to Texas, and in that state he was reared and received such meagre educational advantages as were in keeping with the pioneer conditions. When the fever of excitement following the finding of gold in California had somewhat subsided a more conservative class of homeseekers followed in the wake of the forty-niners, and among the number who came to the state with this object in mind was Jefferson M. Hathaway. Behind a team of slow plodding oxen he crossed the plains in 1853, passing through Arizona, and finally reached Santa Ysabel, San Diego county. From there he came on to El Monte, Los Angeles county, and then crossed over into San Bernardino county. After his marriage, which occurred in the latter county, he returned to El Monte and engaged in farming, following this until 1867, when he went to Rincon and purchased a ranch in that vicinity. Sixteen years later he removed to Azusa, and four years later, in 1887, he took up ranching near Pomona, and it was here that his earth life came to a close December 14, 1905. His wife was formerly Martha M. Russell, who was born in Illinois, the daughter of Hiram Russell, who brought his family across the plains in 1858 and settled in San Bernardino county. Mrs. Hathaway is still living and makes her home at No. 808 West Ninth street, Pomona. Seven sons and three daughters were born to this worthy couple, and of the number four sons and three daughters are now living.

Next to the oldest of the surviving children is Jefferson H. Hathaway, who was born in El Monte, Los Angeles county, March 14, 1865. He was a child of only two years when the family removed to Rincon and settled upon a ranch in that vicinity. As soon as he was old enough to be of assistance on the ranch he gave his services to his father, at the same time attending the public schools when in session. This association continued until 1899, when the son, who had always displayed a mechanical turn of mind, established himself in the bicycle business in Pomona, in connection with which he also does general machine and repair work. His shop is located at No. 443 West Second street, where may be seen a good assortment of second-hand bicycles, as well as new ones of his own manufacture. His interests are not solely absorbed in the business just mentioned, however, for he is the owner of a fine ten-acre alfalfa ranch near Chino.

CAPT. JOSEPH MASSELIN

Mr. Hathaway's fraternal associations are numerous and include membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to the Encampment and the Rebekahs; the Independent Order of Foresters, Fraternal Aid and Fraternal Brotherhood. In politics he is a Democrat.

CAPT. JOSEPH MASSELIN was born in Havre, France, August 16, 1830, and was reared on a farm until he went to sea, sailing out of Havre. In 1849 he came around Cape Horn to San Francisco. He sailed on the coast and bay of San Francisco, becoming captain of vessels and later on owned his own vessels, which he sailed as master, among them being the Garibaldi, Jean Fredrick and Safety. The latter was burned in San Francisco bay. In 1870 he sold his vessels and located in Los Angeles and for many years was successfully engaged in the sheep business, ranging them on La Brae and Cienaga ranches in Los Angeles county. In about 1880 he purchased a farm of one hundred and forty acres, part of the Cienaga ranch, and there engaged in farming until his death, October 21, 1898.

Captain Masselin was married in San Francisco October 29, 1860, to Miss Marie Sehabiague, who was born in Basses-Pyrenees, France, the daughter of Michael and Dominica Sehabiague, who were successful agriculturists in the south of France. By way of Cape Horn Mrs. Masselin came to California in 1859, leaving Havre on the sailer Chatelon, and after a voyage of six months and fifteen days landed in San Francisco. Since the death of her husband she has continued to reside on her ranch looking after her interests. It is located on Wilshire boulevard, one and one-half miles west of the city limits, and aside from engaging in general farming she has it leased to an oil company, which has several producing wells, two of them flowing. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Masselin, namely: John B., a grocer on west Pico street, Los Angeles; Zellie, wife of Pierre Sarrail, proprietor of the Ramona Bottling Works of Los Angeles; Eugenia, Joseph, Julia and Cornelia, all under the parental roof. Captain Masselin was a very enterprising man and always ready to give of his time and money towards the upbuilding of his community. He was much interested in education and for many years served as trustee of the Cienaga school district.

MARK McLAUGHLIN. Throughout Ventura county are to be found men of wealth and position who came to this country from the British Isles poor in purse, but with an unlimited stock of energy and perseverance, and who by untiring industry and wise management have acquired a competence. Prominent among this number is Mark McLaughlin, a large landholder, who is now living retired from active pursuits on his well-appointed ranch near Oxnard, enjoying a well-earned leisure. One of the early settlers of the Santa Clara valley, he has ever taken a warm interest in its development, encouraging and supporting all beneficial projects, and as a man and a citizen is held in high esteem. He was born, April 20, 1843, in Ireland, where his parents, Patrick and Ellen (Wynne) McLaughlin, spent their long and useful lives, the father attaining the age of eighty-eight years, and the mother living until eighty-two years old. Of the twelve children born into their household, eleven grew to years of maturity, and two came to America, one son settling in Detroit, Mich., and the other, Mark, being the subject of this review.

In common with his brothers and sisters, Mr. McLaughlin attended the district school until about fourteen years old, when he began to be self-supporting. At the age of seventeen years, being firmly convinced that there were greater facilities for a poor boy to better his financial condition in America than in his own country, he crossed the Atlantic, landing in New York City, where he remained eighteen months, a part of that time being night watchman in some of the wholesale stores. Coming to California in 1863, he lived for six months in San Francisco, after which he was engaged in farming in Alameda county for several seasons, working by the month. Desirous then of making a permanent settlement, in 1870 he came to the Santa Clara valley, locating near Hueneme, where he made his first purchase of land, buying three hundred and eighteen acres. In its care and management he was very successful, and as he accumulated money he at once invested it in additional land, and now owns, besides his original farm, a ranch of one hundred and twenty acres near Oxnard, one of two hundred and forty-three and one-half acres near Camarillo, and has also considerable land in Los Angeles county near the Palms. His home ranch he devotes to the raising of beans and sugar beets, and his other two ranches to the growing of beans and hay. All of these are profitable crops, yielding excellent harvests, the beans averaging a fair number of sacks to the acre, and the beets doing equally as well in this fertile valley. To some extent he is also engaged in the cattle business, raising enough horses for his own use.

In 1871, in the Santa Clara valley of the Southern Coast, Mr. McLaughlin married Margaret Clyne, a native of Ireland, and into their home nine children were born, three of whom have passed to the life beyond, two dying in infancy, and Margaret Ann at the age of thirteen years, while six are living, namely: Thomas F., who married Annie Lidle, and has four children; James P., living at home; Mary Kate, wife of Henry Borchard; Nellie, wife of Frank Borchard; and Caroline and Sarah E., both at home. Politically Mr. McLaughlin is a straightforward Democrat, and for over twenty years has served as school trustee. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and religiously he and his family belong to the Catholic Church. He is connected with the People's Lumber Company of Ventura county, being one of its directors, a capacity in which he is doing much to promote the interest of the organization. He is also a stock holder in the Oxnard Commercial Bank, and is also similarly identified with the A. Levy bank.

THOMAS FREER gives to the state of his birth his most loyal allegiance, upholding her interests in every possible way, supporting her principles, and is enthusiastic concerning the future which awaits California among the commonwealths of the nation. He was born in Berryessa, Santa Clara county, December 25, 1859, a son of William H. Freer, one of the early pioneers of California. For a full account of his career refer to his personal sketch, which appears elsewhere in this volume. Reared in Santa Clara county until he was fifteen years old, Thomas Freer received his education in the public schools of that section, attending for a brief time the schools of El Monte, Los Angeles county, to which place his father removed. He remained on the paternal farm until July 25, 1893, when in El Monte, he married Miss Victoria Schmidt. She was born in San Gabriel, Los Angeles county, the second in a family of five children born to Henry and Eliza Schmidt, the father a native of France and the mother of California, the latter being a daughter of William Slack, a pioneer of this state.

After marriage Mr. Freer engaged in farming in the Mountain View district and later conducted a dairy of sixty cows on the old Freer homestead. In 1903 he located in El Monte and is now engaged in walnut raising, having purchased twenty acres of land in the Mountain View district. He is enterprising and progressive in spirit, putting forth an intelligent effort in the management of his property and is proving himself a popular and profitable citizen of this section. He upholds the best interests of the community, educationally and socially, and is an advocate of Democratic principles. Fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He has a family of three children, Walter, Merle and Thomas, Jr.

LEE FREER. Inheriting the qualities of character which have made the Freer name respected and esteemed throughout Los Angeles county and indeed all Southern California, Lee Freer holds rank as one of the representative citizens of El Monte. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in San Jose April 6, 1870, and five years later he was brought by his parents, William H. and Zerelda (Stucker) Freer, to Southern California, where all of his life has since been passed. Reared in Savannah he received his education in the public schools and St. Vincent's College, after which he went to Tehachapi, and worked on a farm for one year. Returning to El Monte he entered the employ of John Barton, with whom he remained until 1889, when he purchased his present ranch of forty-six acres. This was then new land, which he has since improved and cultivated. After following farming for some years he finally set it out in walnuts, which are now all in bearing and his grove is pronounced one of the finest in the section. He has built a handsome residence, barns and outbuildings, and added every possible comfort and convenience, and during this time also improved a thirty-six acre tract, which he subsequently sold.

In Savannah Mr. Freer married Miss Caddie Adams, who was born in this place, a daughter of Rev. Abram Adams. The latter was a native of Lowndes county, Ala., and son of Abram Adams, Sr., who removed from his birthplace in North Carolina to Alabama, where he became a planter and accumulated considerable wealth, continuing this occupation until his death in 1869. He served in the war of 1812, and also in the Mexican war, in the latter acting as captain of a company. He was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and adhered to the belief of his ancestors in religion, being a member of the Presbyterian Church. Abram Adams, Jr., became a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and preached in Mobile, Ala., and Columbus, Miss., being presiding elder in the church in the latter state. In 1869 he came to Los Angeles and in that city established the first church of his denomination, and until 1891 followed the ministry in various parts of Southern California. Retiring from the ministry in the last named year he gave his attention to the ranch which he had purchased in the year of his arrival in the state, and continued its improvement and cultivation up to the time of his death, which occurred April 10, 1901, at the age of seventy years. In early life he adhered to the principles of the Democratic party, but finally affiliated himself with the Prohibition party. He married Isabella Williams, a native of Greene county, Ala., and a daughter of Benjamin Williams, a native of South Carolina, who located in Alabama and engaged as a planter until his death. Her mother was in maidenhood Edna Hitt, whose father was an emigrant from Wales. Mrs. Adams died in El Monte, in February, 1892, at the age of fifty-one years. They were the parents of nine children, namely: Annie; Augustin; Belle, Mrs. East; Caddie, wife of Lee Freer; Margaret, wife of William Pearson; Mary; Jeannette, Mrs. Kasling; Alice, deceased; and Abra, wife of Edward Hayes, all of the living children being residents of El Monte with the exception of Mrs. Kasling, who resides in Salida, Colo.

Joe Gisla

Mr. and Mrs. Freer became the parents of the following children; Zerelda; Ruth; Wesley; Shirley, who was burned to death in Tehachapi; Margaret, who died in El Monte; Haven, Emmett and Edwin Allen. Mr. Freer supports the charities of the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is a member. Politically Mr. Freer is a Democrat. He is associated with the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association, and is prominent in all matters of public import.

JOSEPH GISLER. Near the shores of the far-famed lake of Luzerne, whose beauty of scenery and calm loveliness overshadowed by the snow-capped mountains have attracted tourists from every part of the world, for many generations the Gisler family lived and labored in simple content. The first to seek the possibilities of the new world was Max Gisler, who crossed the ocean and settled in California in 1877. Later the family joined him at El Rio, where he bought land and engaged in general farming. When he died, in January, 1890, at the age of sixty-two years, he owned a well-improved farm of fifty acres, the same representing his efforts after coming to California. In his native country he had married Josepha Blouser, who was born and reared there, and died at El Rio September 9, 1905. Surviving the parents are all of their children, namely: Sigmund, of Oxnard; Gabriel, farmer at Springville, Ventura county; Samuel, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Orange county; Solomon, who operates land near Oxnard; Edward, a farmer living in the vicinity of Ventura; Max, also farming near Ventura; Frank and Joseph, who have been partners in extensive farming operations; Mary, a resident of Oxnard; Theresa, whose home is at Camarillo, Ventura county; and Hannah, who lives at Springville, this county.

The youngest of the eleven children is the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch and whose birth occurred May 14, 1873, in the Canton of Uri, Switzerland, near the village of Altdorf on the bay of Uri. When six years of age he was brought to the United States, the family joining his father in California, where he attended common schools and helped in the cultivation of the farm. At the age of nineteen years he and his brother, Frank, engaged in raising beans on the Jack Hill place and later leased a part of the Patterson ranch, successfully cultivating four hundred acres in grain, beans and beets. During 1900 they bought one hundred and fifty-seven acres north of Oxnard and there raised beans and beets with encouraging success. A division was made of the property in 1905, and Joseph now owns eighty-three acres on the Saviers road one mile north of Oxnard, the same forming a very valuable farm. Irrigation is arranged for by means of a pumping plant, in which Mr. Gisler owns an interest. The substantial modern residence was completed in 1905 and to it Mr. Gisler brought his bride, whom he married in Oxnard in February, 1906, and who was Miss Adeline Brooker, a native of San Francisco. Both are identified with the Santa Clara Catholic Church and contribute to its maintenance with generosity, as well as aiding other movements for the uplifting of humanity.

While Mr. Gisler has been averse to activity in public affairs, he has kept posted concerning national problems, is well informed as to the issues of the age, and gives unqualified support to the Republican party and its principles. The only fraternity with which he holds membership is the Order of Knights of Columbus. His attention has been given closely to agricultural affairs and the management of his interests has required such close attention as to preclude participation in other affairs. Already a large degree of success has come to him, his home farm one mile north of Oxnard being quite valuable, while in addition he and his brother own about fifty-six acres at El Rio. Industry and perseverance have aided him in the accumulation of a competency and the attaining of financial independence, while a course of steadfast integrity in all dealings has brought him the respect of his community.

JAMES BASCOM FREER, the second son of William H. Freer, whose name is known and honored throughout Southern California as that of a pioneer, was born in Trenton, Grundy county, Mo., April 15, 1843, remaining a resident of his native state until 1849, when he was brought across the plains to California. Although a child of but six years the events of that ever-memorble journey are fresh in his mind. His duty was to assist in driving the cattle, which he performed faithfully to the close of their six months' trip, and although parties ahead and behind them were attacked by the Indians they were mercifully spared this added trial. Leaving Missouri in April they arrived in California in September, and in 1850 they located in San Jose, where James B. received his education in the primitive schools of the day. He remained at home until he was twenty-five years old, when he started out for himself, engaging in farming on the old Palla ranch, near San Jose, being interested principally in the raising of grain. In 1869 he came as far south as Ventura county and purchased a stock ranch in Hopper cañon, improved the place, and at the same time raised cattle in the mountains. He remained a resident of that section until 1884, when he located in Los Angeles county, conducted his father's place for two years, then farmed in the Rowland tract for several years. In 1888 he went to Oregon and near Pennington, Umatilla county, he followed stock-raising for two years, after which for one year he was located in Puente, Cal. In 1891 he located on his present ranch near El Monte, consisting of forty-five acres, all set out in walnuts.

In Santa Clara county, March 25, 1868, Mr. Freer was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Hopper, who was born near Lone Jack, Mo. Her father, Ari, was born in Indiana and removed to Missouri, where he engaged in farming. In 1850 he crossed the plains to California by means of ox-teams, and for a time following his arrival worked in the mines. He returned to Missouri by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and in 1852 once more made the trip across the plains, bringing his wife and two children to California. They located first in Petaluma and then in the Santa Clara valley, and in 1868 settled in Ventura county, where Mr. Hopper purchased land in what was afterward known at Hopper cañon. He farmed there for many years, eventually removing to Covina, Los Angeles county, where he spent his last days, dying January 22, 1898, at the age of seventy-six years. He was survived by his wife, formerly Susan Easely, a native of North Carolina, whose parents removed to Missouri when she was a child. She passed away in Covina November 18, 1905, at the age of seventy-eight years. They had three children, all of whom attained maturity, two now surviving, of whom Mrs. Freer is the eldest.

Mr. and Mrs. Freer are the parents of seven children, namely: Albert, an engineer residing in El Monte; Mary, Mrs. Miller, of Los Angeles; Ida, Mrs. Avis, of Los Angeles; Henry, a farmer in El Monte; Eldridge, an engineer residing in El Monte; Wallace and George at home. Mr. Freer supports the Baptist Church of El Monte, the oldest church of that denomination in Southern California, having been built in 1853, and of which his wife is a devoted member. Mrs. Freer is prominent in the social circles of El Monte, belonging to the Degree of Honor and the Shakespeare Club. Mr. Freer is a Democrat and has served as delegate to county conventions. He is a member of the Society of Los Angeles County Pioneers.

GEORGE F. BRINKERHOFF. One of the best known and successful ranchers of Los Angeles county is George F. Brinkerhoff, located in the vicinity of Compton and engaged in the cultivation of a well-improved farm. He is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in Santa Barbara county, October 12, 1860, his parents being Peter S. and Jane (Nidever) Brinkerhoff. Peter S. Brinkerhoff was born in Oswego, N. Y., where he taught school and followed farming for many years. He made a trip to California by water in 1852 and five years later married Jane Nidever, who had crossed the plains in the same year. He engaged in farming in the vicinity of San Francisco and later was located in Santa Barbara county, his last days being spent with his sons near Compton. His death occurred June 16, 1891, at the age of seventy-six years. He had witnessed the development of the western state and participated in large measure in its advancement. He made five round trips to the east, seven passages being made by water and three by land. He was twice married, having six children by his first union, and seven by the second. Alice B. Lawton and John N. live in Santa Barbara; David H. in Compton; Henry R. in The Palms;

John Engebretsen.

Roelif C. in Riverside; and Sarah Breckenridge in Compton. Mr. Brinkerhoff was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while his wife, who died January 15, 1870, was a Presbyterian.

George F. Brinkerhoff received his education in the schools of Santa Barbara, after which he was taken by his parents across the Isthmus of Panama and thence by water to New York City; from that point they went to Michigan, where their home remained for four and one-half years. The next residence was in Kansas, to which state they moved by wagon, and there the father rented land for two and one-half years, after which they came overland to California and located in Santa Barbara county. In 1880 he came to his present ranch in the vicinity of Compton, consisting of one hundred and twenty-two and one-half acres and at the same time purchased forty acres of land near here, and has since carried on general farming and dairying, having at the present time eleven milk cows.

In October, 1894, Mr. Brinkerhoff married Miss Rose Brunton, a native of Kansas. They have no children of their own, but have taken into their home two little girls, Alice and Edna. Mr. Brinkerhoff is a nephew of George Nidever, who found an Indian woman on the Island of St. Nicholas, and to the best of all calculations she had been there about eighteen years. She had been taken there as a hostage and was the only one of the tribe left, the remainder having been killed by the Northwest tribe. Her dress was made of birdskins and sewed together with sinews. Mr. Brinkerhoff is a member of the Fraternal Aid, to which society his wife also belongs, and both are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Prohibition party.

JOHN ENGEBRETSEN. One of the most successful and enterprising of the foreign-born citizens of San Diego is John Engebretsen, who for years has conducted a general contracting business and has taken contracts for street paving, grading and excavating, with a specialty of cement work. At his office, No. 614 Fifth street, he superintends his work and furnishes estimates for all kinds of cement and stone work, street paving, excavating, grading and all kinds of hauling. His yards are at the northwest corner of H and Twelfth streets. During the busy season he furnishes employment to fifty hands and utilizes twenty-five teams, and the management of a business of such magnitude makes him one of the busiest men in his home city.

In the southeastern part of Norway, near the city of Drammen, lies the little hamlet of Harbro, where John Engebretsen was born March 5, 1858, being next to the youngest among eight children, only two of whom survive. His parents, both of whom are deceased, bore the names of Engebret Petersen and Maren Olie Nilson, the latter being the daughter of a harness-maker. The father, who was born near Drammen, became an iron manufacturer at Harbro, but later engaged in the lumber business at Drammen, where he died. When the family removed to Drammen John was a small child and his education was principally received in the schools of that town. After leaving school he learned the lumber business. In 1880 he shipped on the bark Beta via Cape Horn to the Sandwich Islands, where he landed after a voyage of more than four months. Eighteen months were spent on the islands, where he followed teaming. In 1882 he shipped for California on the vessel Emma Augusta, and arriving in this state settled at Eureka, Humboldt county, where he secured employment at lumbering. In 1884 he went to San Francisco and from there to Martinez, Contra Costa county, where he learned the stone-cutter's trade. For one season, beginning in 1886, he operated the Concord quarries under lease.

On coming to San Diego in the fall of 1887 Mr. Engebretsen leased the quarry at Temecula and engaged in the cut-stone business, furnishing all the stone used in building in San Diego and shipping also to San Francisco. After a time the railroad between Temecula and Oceanside washed out and he then removed to San Bernardino, where he took contracts for street paving of a most important and substantial character. The contracts were completed in two and one-half years, and he then returned to San Diego, where he has since engaged in general and street contracting. Among his contracts have been those for opening and grading Logan avenue, Milton avenue, Elm street, Thirteenth street, L street, E street, Third street, Brooks avenue, Columbia street, Robinson avenue, Fourteenth street, Main street, India street and others; also he has had the contract for most of the grading at the Homestead, Point Loma, and roads in the county. The amphitheater, golf links, foundations, etc., at Point Loma are fine examples of his skill and workmanship.

The first vacation which Mr. Engebretsen allowed himself from his work occurred in 1894, when he spent four months in the old country after an absence of many years. While abroad he visited the legation at Christiania and made a tour of inspection to many points of world-wide interest, besides enjoying a pleasant visit with those of his relatives and boyhood friends who still remained in Norway. His marriage took place in Los Angeles in 1895 and united him with Miss Augusta Petersen, who was born in Norway and reared in Wisconsin. Her death occurred in San Diego April 2, 1896. For a decade or more Mr. Engebretsen has been identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During 1896 he was initiated in San Diego Lodge No. 153, in which he is past officer. Besides being a member of the Encampment and senior warden of the same, he is past captain of San Diego Canton No. 22, and a member of the Order of Rebekahs. In religion he was reared a Lutheran and always has been in sympathy with the doctrines of that denomination. In national politics he votes with the Republican party. In 1896 he was appointed and commissioned deputy consul at San Diego for Sweden and Norway and two years later was made acting consul pending his appointment and commission as consul, said appointment occurring April 29, 1901, confirmed by Secretary of State John Hay June 5, 1901. Since the dissolution of the union between Norway and Sweden he has been instructed to continue to act as consul for each country, and was reappointed for Norway in 1906. On the organization of the Scandinavian-American Society of San Diego he became one of its charter members and since then has been actively interested in its meetings and its work.

HENRY T. COOK is a native Californian and the son of one of the pioneer settlers of the state. His father, John J. Cook, was born in Michigan, and his mother, who was Miss Mary Ann Turley before her marriage, was a native of Canada. There were five children born to them, Henry T. first seeing the light of day one year after the emigration of the family to California. The father died at the family home in San Bernardino county when fifty-six years old, and the mother, who later made her home with this son, lived to be seventy-seven years of age. The birth of Henry T. Cook occurred February 9, 1863, in San Bernardino, and his education was received through the medium of the public schools of that city and Los Angeles county. After ranching in the San Joaquin valley for one year he removed to Hollister, where he remained for three years, and from there in 1876 moved to the Santa Clara valley of Southern California and purchased the ranch which is now his home. It comprises one hundred and twenty acres of as fertile land as there is in the valley, and of this he has ninety acres of beans, the rest being hay land. He has more recently planted sixty acres to walnuts, which will soon yield him a handsome income.

Mr. Cook's marriage united him with Sarah E. Wilkinson, who was born in Illinois, and to them have been born two children, both of whom are now married. William H. married Winnifred Huff, and Walter A. married Irene Stockton, and to them one child has been born. Mr. Cook is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Santa Paula, and takes a lively interest in political matters, being a member of the Republican county central committee. He is a hale fellow well met, highly respected and esteemed and in every way a successful business man.

ROY HOLCOMB. Prominent among the most popular, progressive and highly esteemed young farmers of Valley Center is Roy Holcomb, who is actively and successfully employed in agricultural pursuits. He is distinguished not only for the excellent New England ancestry from which he is descended, but a native born son of California, his birth having occurred October 12, 1880, in Bear Valley, San Diego county, on the homestead of his father, the late Benajah Holcomb.

A native of New England, Benajah Holcomb was born in 1846 in Connecticut, where he was reared and educated. Public spirited and patriotic, he offered his services to his country during the Civil war, enlisting in Company I, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, with which he was connected three and one-half years. Suffering the trials and hardships of army life, he lost his health, and soon after receiving his honorable discharge came to California, hoping in this genial climate to regain his former physical vigor. He lived for a while in Mariposa county, but subsequently settled in San Diego county, taking up a homestead claim near Valley Center, and improving the ranch now owned and occupied by his son Roy. He engaged in dairying and grain-raising, living here until his death, in April, 1903. He was a man of sterling qualities of heart and mind, a useful and valued citizen, and his death was deeply deplored throughout the community. He married Nancy Holcomb, who was born in Illinois, and died on the home farm, at Valley Center in 1895. Of their union, seven children were born, namely: Clara, wife of H. Shelby, of Paradise Mountain; Bertha, wife of Edward Hunter, of Randsburg; Nettie, wife of C. M. James, of Lusardi; Myrtle, living on the home ranch with her brother; Ray on the home ranch; Walter, of San Diego; and Roy, the special subject of this sketch.

Receiving a good common school education,

Roy Holcomb was subsequently employed as a farm hand or surveyor for a number of years, always keeping busy. Since 1900 he has been carrying on general ranching on his own account, managing the old home farm of one hundred and sixty acres. Energetic and industrious, he is meeting with well merited success in his undertakings, and is carrying on general farming and dairying after the most approved modern methods, and though young in years has attained a noteworthy position among the prosperous ranchers of this part of the community. He shows excellent judgment in his business operations, being regarded as one of the rising young men of Valley Center, and is in every way worthy of the respect and esteem accorded him.

In October, 1905, Mr. Holcomb married Allie Risdon, who was born in Kansas, a daughter of Nathaniel Risdon, now living in this valley. Mr. Holcomb is a stanch Republican in politics, as was his father, who was likewise a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

FANKHANEL BROTHERS. Recognized throughout the vicinity of Ramona, San Diego county, as enterprising and prosperous agriculturists, H. O. and F. E. Fankhanel hold a position of note among the esteemed and respected citizens of their community. Although young in years, their energy and progressive spirit have placed them where they rightfully belong, and many men twice their years might be proud to lay claim to their achievements. Besides owning a fine ranch of three hundred and twenty acres stocked with high-grade cattle, they also rent a tract of three hundred and fifty acres devoted entirely to the raising of grain, all in all owning and managing one of the most productive ranches in the county.

Although the father, C. F. Fankhanel, was a native of Germany, at a very early age he was brought to the United States, growing up in an atmosphere of push and independence which developed like qualities in himself and resulting in the accumulation of a large property. Ill-health, however, made inroads upon his constitution and means and a change of climate was the only alternative. Selling his farm of eight hundred acres in Butler county, Kans., in 1893 he started by wagon for California with his family. Innumerable hardships confronted them on the journey, and by the time El Paso, Tex., was reached it was deemed advisable to give up the original plan and complete the trip under less trying conditions. After disposing of the outfit they boarded a train for San Diego and reached their destination without further inconvenience. As soon as Mr. Fankhanel's health would permit he once more became interested in agricultural affairs and followed ranching throughout the remainder of his life. His death occurred December 16, 1899, at Barona Valley, at the comparatively early age of fifty-four years. His political sympathies were in accord with Republican principles, but he was never ambitious to hold public office, preferring to discharge his obligations by way of casting a conscientious ballot. The wife and mother, before her marriage Jennie McLenon, was born in Ohio and her marriage to Mr. Fankhanel was celebrated in Kansas. She is still living and makes her home with her sons. One daughter, Laura, was born in 1876, and is now the wife of George L. Frey, of Poway.

At the time of the removal of the family to California Henry Olvin and Frederick Earl Fankhanel were fourteen and eight years old respectively, the birth of the former occurring in Butler county, Kans., June 1, 1879, and the latter in the same place January 6, 1885. On account of the ill-health of the father their chances for an education were rather limited, and at an early age they began their self-support by working out on neighboring ranches. The father's death a few years later was a sad blow, but their previous experience had prepared them to assume the responsibilities which fell to their lot. By careful financiering they were enabled to purchase their present ranch near Ramona in 1903, and have since become known as progressive and thoroughgoing ranchers in this part of the country. As was their father before them both are Republicans, and the elder son, H. O., is filling the office of school trustee and roadmaster in his district. San Diego county is fortunate in possessing two such progressive citizens as the Fankhanel brothers, and judging from their early efforts and the results accruing therefrom it is not too much to expect that the coming years will find them among the most prosperous ranchers and successful business men in this part of the state.

JOHN FRANCIS. Twelve miles from Redlands and located in the San Timoteo cañon is the ranch of twenty-three hundred acres operated by John Francis, one of the progressive and enterprising dairymen and ranchers of this section of Southern California. He is proprietor of the T. C. creamery and in his work has proven himself a reliable business man, prompt and accurate in his methods, courteous and obliging to all customers, and showing himself possessed of unusual executive ability and shrewd judgment. May 10, 1866, Mr. Francis was born in Montgomery county, Wales, a son of John Francis, Sr., also a native of that place, where his death occurred some time since, having followed farming throughout his life. He is survived by his wife, formerly Ellen Manford, also a native of Montgomery county, Wales, where she now makes her home.

Of the three children born to his parents John Francis, Jr., is the only son and the eldest child; he was reared in his native country and educated in its public schools, where he continued until attaining the age of seventeen years, when he came to the United States anxious to make the best of the abundant opportunities offered here. He finally located in Iowa City, Iowa, and in the vicinity of that place followed general farm work. He was located in that place for about four years, when, in 1887, he came to California and in the vicinity of Los Angeles engaged in general farming and dairy pursuits. Two years later he came to Riverside county and in San Timoteo cañon entered the employ of David Johnson, a dairyman of this section, in the capacity of butter maker. With his accumulated earnings he was able four years later to buy out his employer's interests, and leasing land from Mrs. Clough he engaged in the dairy business and general farming, operating twenty-three hundred acres, of which five hundred acres are tillable and the balance is in pasture and alfalfa. Irrigation is supplied from twenty-five wells one hundred and sixty feet deep, and also from a ditch from the San Timoteo creek. He has a dairy of one hundred and seventy cows of Holstein stock, and a herd of cattle of five hundred head. The T. C. creamery is equipped with every modern device for a successful conduct of this business, having a combined separator and churn with a large capacity, and the products are considered among the finest on the market.

In Los Angeles Mr. Francis was united in marriage with Miss Anita Hovera, a native of San Bernardino county, Cal., her father being a resident of this cañon. They became the parents of the following children: Herbert, Rowland, Gladys, Agnes and Anita. Fraternally Mr. Francis is associated with the Foresters of Norwalk, and politically adheres to Republican principles.

E. M. WILLIAMS. One of the well-known and successful ranchmen of Santa Paula is E. M. Williams, who owns a property of two hundred and fifty acres of fertile land devoted to stock and the raising of beans. His father, Edward Benton Williams, was born in New York City, and his mother, who was Elizabeth Rogers before her marriage, was also a native of New York state. In 1855, when his son E. M. was an infant, the father came to California by way of Panama, and in San Francisco was employed in the H. C. Hudson & Co. spice mill. In December, 1866, he came to Ventura county, and in the vicinity of Saticoy engaged in agricultural pursuits. Twenty years later, in 1886, he removed to Santa Paula and since then he and his wife have made their home with their son E. M. The father is now in his eighty-first year, and both himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. Both father and son affiliate with the Republican party and give it their loyal support.

E. M. Williams was born in Oneida county, N. Y., February 3, 1855, and was an infant when he was brought to California. He received his education in San Francisco and afterwards came to Ventura county and engaged in ranching near Saticoy, where he purchased a ranch in 1882. In 1895 he was married to Ida Hudson, who is a native of California, the daughter of John Hudson, her grandfather, H. C. Hudson, being the pioneer coffee and spice manufacturer of San Francisco. Mr. Williams is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood Lodge at Santa Paula, and of the Presbyterian Church, both himself and his wife giving the latter their support as active members.

NORMAN ASHCROFT. The postal service of Hollywood, Los Angeles county, is under the able supervision of Norman Ashcroft, who has risen to his present position as the result of efficient work while in the rural delivery service in this locality for a number of years. His initiation in the rural service dates back to the postmastership of Philo J. Beveridge, and he also served under his successor, Hervey Friend. The resignation of Mr. Friend made a vacancy which Mr. Ashcroft was selected to fill, which came to him as a reward for faithful and conscientious work as carrier.

Mr. Ashcroft is the son of New England parents, Norman and Mary M. (Davis) Ashcroft, having been born in New York state and Maine, respectively. Before the birth of their son, however, they had settled in the Mississippi valley, his birth occurring in Kankakee county, Ill., February 19, 1870. With the education received in the schools of his native county he started out in business, first as a grocer and later as an employe of the Adams' Express Company. Subsequently he held a position with Armour & Company, where for three years he was in the timekeeping department. For five and a half years following he was car-shop clerk with the Provision Dealers Dispatch, a position which he held up to the time of starting for the west. He left his Illinois home February 1, 1900, and in due time arrived in Antelope valley, where he remained for about eight months. Coming to Hollywood at the end of this time, he became interested in ranching, a business which he carried on for about three years, or until giving it up to accept a position under the government as rural mail deliverer under Philo J. Beveridge. As has been previously stated his selection as postmaster of Hollywood followed the resignation of Mr. Beveridge's successor, Hervey Friend, and since February 11, 1906, Mr. Ashcroft has given efficient service as chief of the department. Two rural routes radiate from Hollywood and carry mail into the outlying districts.

John B. Gunn

In Chicago, Ill., January 31, 1900, Norman Ashcroft and Libbie White were united in marriage, Mrs. Ashcroft being a daughter of Robert and Emma (Levy) White. The only child born to Mr. and Mrs. Ashcroft is Harold. The family occupy a commodious residence of ten rooms on Iowa and Wilson streets, Hollywood, which Mr. Ashcroft erected in 1905. Its location in the center of the best residence district in the city makes it a valuable piece of property, which is a credit alike to the owner and to the city. In their religious views Mr. and Mrs. Ashcroft are Baptists, and in the church of which they are members Mr. Ashcroft has served as clerk. Politically he is independent in the casting of his vote, his ballot and influence both being given in favor of candidates and measures opposing the liquor traffic.

JOHN BURR. Prominent among the leading agriculturists and fruit growers of Fernando is John Burr, who has had many years of practical experience in his chosen field of labor, and in his various operations has met with eminent success. Descended from a long line of honored Scotch ancestry, he was born, November 13, 1849, in Scotland, the country of industry, thrift and frugality.

Completing his studies in the common schools of his native land, John Burr subsequently turned his attention to horticultural pursuits, for seven years working as a gardener. Becoming proficient in his work, and desiring to try life in the new world, he crossed the Atlantic in 1872, and immediately made his way across the continent to San Francisco. Locating soon afterward in San Mateo county, he secured a position as landscape gardener with Senator Fulton, whose grounds he laid out in a most attractive and artistic manner. His ability in that line becoming known, he had no trouble in finding an ample amount of congenial work, and remained in that vicinity until 1884. Going then to Tulare county, he settled near Visalia, where he purchased a ranch of two hundred and fifty acres, a part of which he set out with vines, while on the remainder he raised wheat, continuing thus occupied for three years. Disposing of that property in 1887, he came to Fernando, Los Angeles county, with a view to locating here permanently. With two partners he bought forty acres of land and immediately began the cultivation of oranges and small fruits. The venture proving successful, he subsequently purchased the interests of his partners and has since carried on the business alone. From time to time he has bought additional land, and has at the present time sixty-two acres devoted to the growing of oranges, fifteen acres of olives, and in addition has a grain ranch containing one hundred and ten acres. He is constantly adding to the improvements on his home estate, which is one of the most beautiful and attractive in this section of the county, bearing visible evidence of the intelligence, ability and thrift of the owner.

In England Mr. Burr married Anna Philpott, and they are the parents of three children, namely: John and Charles, both residents of Visalia; and William, living at home. Politically Mr. Burr is an active member of the Republican party, and as sheriff of Los Angeles county from 1894 until 1898, and as horticultural commissioner for the county for one and one-half years, rendered excellent service to the people. In Masonic circles he stands high, being a thirty-second degree Mason; he is a member and past worthy master of Fernando Lodge No. 324, F. & A. M., also belonging to the Mystic Shrine of Los Angeles. In 1877, at Redwood City, he joined the Odd Fellows, and is now a member of the lodge at Fernando; he also belongs to Los Angeles Encampment, and is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters.

GEORGE F. JACOBY. An active and practical agriculturist, energetic and ambitious, George F. Jacoby is meeting with excellent results in his chosen occupation. His ranch of eighty acres is pleasantly located at Valley Center, and from its thrifty appearance it is evident that he takes pride in his business, his land being finely improved and under a good state of cultivation and well supplied with all the accessories of a first-class estate, having a substantial set of farm buildings and all of the needed machinery to facilitate the otherwise slow and tedious work of a farmer. A son of Herman Jacoby, he was born, January 6, 1872, in Bloomington, Ill., but his childhood days were spent in Iowa.

Herman Jacoby moved with his family from Illinois to Iowa in 1872, and was there a resident eleven years. His family came to California in 1883, and has since resided in this state. A faithful and loyal citizen, during the Indian troubles he served under General Crook. He married Elizabeth Fleshman, and they became the parents of three children, namely: Albert F., residing in Orange county; Annie C., wife of James Woods, of Bear Valley, San Diego county; and George F., the subject of this sketch.

But eleven years of age when he came with his mother to this state, George F. Jacoby continued his studies in the common schools, acquiring a practical education. Coming then to Valley Center, he lived for a few years with an uncle, in the meantime becoming familiar with farm work. Wishing to know more about the northwestern country before making a permanent settlement in life, Mr. Jacoby and his wife made two trips to Washington and Oregon, being away about six years, working and sight seeing throughout those states. Finding no place that pleased them especially, they returned to Valley Center, invested money in land lying a few miles above their present homestead, and began its improvement. Subsequently selling out at an advantage, Mr. Jacoby bought his present ranch of eighty acres, which is one of the most valuable in many respects of any in the valley. He has since made improvements of an excellent character, erecting all of the buildings required on a well-kept homestead, and is now devoting his time and attention to grain raising, dairying and chicken raising, intending to make a specialty of the two latter branches of industry.

In 1894 Mr. Jacoby married Miss Ivy Westmoreland, a daughter of A. S. and Emma A. (May) Westmoreland. On the breaking out of the Civil war, Mr. Westmoreland, then a resident of Tennessee, was a volunteer in the Southern army, in which he served until the close of the war. In 1881 he came with his family to California, and here he and his wife reared their family of eleven children. In their religious beliefs Mr. and Mrs. Jacoby are in sympathy with the creeds of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Jacoby is an uncompromising Democrat, and for a number of years has been a school trustee. Fraternally they are members of Escondido Camp, I. O. F.

FRANK D. FOOT. When the enterprising men of San Pedro are mentioned the name of Frank D. Foot is always found in the list. He is well known in the community, for his various interests bring him in contact with all classes of people. As a general contractor and proprietor of the Foot Transfer Company he has demonstrated his right to the title of a successful business man. His father, Solomon R. Foot, was a native of Ohio, and a pioneer of Sterns county, Minn., immigrating to that section in the early days and starting in business as a stock raiser. The Sioux Indians were on the war-path and soon put him out of the stock business and came very near putting him out of the world. In those early days of the settlement of the west men seeking homes in a new country not only had to endure the privations incident to pioneer life, but frequently were called upon to protect their families and their homes from the bloodthirsty savages who were ever ready to make raids on unprotected settlers. The Foot family, consisting of himself, his wife and two little ones, and a neighboring family by the name of Erickson finding themselves in danger from the Indians, fortified one of the houses to withstand attack. The Indians came as expected and for two days and nights harassed the families, badly wounding both men. During a suspension of hostilities the men finally persuaded the women to take the children and make an attempt to reach the fort, charging them as they valued their lives to travel only at night and to keep a constant watch for the Indians who were liable to discover them at any time, and discovery meant death, and death in its most horrible form. With the little ones the women set out to reach the fort and on the second day of their journey met a party of soldiers, who conducted them to the fort. In the meantime Foot and Erickson were rescued by some men passing their way and were brought by them to the fort, where they and their families were happily reunited. Both men recovered from their wounds, and very soon afterward Mr. Foot enlisted in the Minnesota Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and served in the campaign against the Sioux Indians. In 1862 he was at the Indian massacre at Green Lake, where he received a gun-shot wound through his right lung and six buckshot in his back. At the close of the war he took his family and located in Melrose, where in addition to farming he kept a hotel on the stage route. In 1883 he removed from Minnesota to North Dakota, near Minot, and again engaged in the stock business. In 1888 he came to California and located at San Pedro, where he lived until his death in 1903.

Frank D. Foot was born at Melrose, Minn., August 25, 1867, the youngest of his father's family of six children, four of whom are still living. His mother died when he was twelve years of age. He lived in the town of Melrose and attended school there until he was sixteen years old and then went to North Dakota and engaged in stock-raising until 1889. In the last-named year he came to California and located on a farm near Gardena, where he engaged in grain-raising for nine years. In 1898 he came to San Pedro, and seeing an opening for business he started a livery stable at the corner of Second and Beacon streets. It proved to be a profitable investment for him and he awaited his opportunity to enlarge his business in the same line. When the Pony livery stable was for sale he purchased it, running it until November, 1905, when he sold it. Since then he has devoted considerable attention to his transfer business, the Foot Transfer Company having the largest business of the kind in San Pedro. In addition to his transfer business he has taken up a line of general contracting, doing an extensive business in grading, building and all contract work of that class.

While living in North Dakota Mr. Foot married Annie Miller, who was born in Galesburg, Ill., of Scotch descent. They have one child, a son, Clyde, and have a beautiful home on Ninth street near Palo Verde. Mr. Foot is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, is president of the Eagles, and a member of the Independent Order of Foresters. In politics he is a Republican.

GEORGE W. COLE. When George W. Cole arrived in Los Angeles county from Texas in 1864 and settled near what is now Downey things looked quite different from what they do at the present day. Los Angeles was a very small frontier town with a population composed mostly of Spaniards and Mexicans and the country around was in a wild and unsettled condition, with scant vegetation to lend beauty to the scenery. Mr. Cole at first purchased one hundred and sixteen acres of the old Downey ranch, but later, in 1875, located on his present ranch near Whittier. Originally it contained two hundred and twenty acres of land, but he is now the owner of but sixty acres, having divided the balance among the various members of his family.

April 3, 1827, occurred the birth of George W. Cole in Bureau county, Ill., his parents, Sampson and Vina (Tompkins) Cole, being natives respectively of Kentucky and Tennessee. They were among the pioneer settlers of Bureau county and spent their last days in California. When their son George was twelve years old the family moved to Carroll county, Ark., and after a short sojourn there went to the Cherokee nation, near the Grand river. There the father bored salt wells under contract for the Indians, the sinking of the famous Grand Saline well having been accomplished in the completion of his contract. Subsequently the family lived for several years in Jasper county, Mo., and next located on the Colorado river, thirty-five miles below Austin, Tex. At the expiration of a year in Texas George W. Cole enlisted in the Jack Hayes regiment of Texas rangers, being first under command of Zachary Taylor, and later under General Scott. Their principal work was in the skirmishing line, although they participated in the battle of Buena Vista. His term of service lasted one year and fifteen days, after which he returned to Burleson county, where the family were living. A little later he went to Jasper county, Mo., where he was married November 15, 1848, to Olive Margaret Chilson, who was born in Indiana in 1832. Her parents, Emer and Mary (Osgood) Chilson, were natives of Vermont and Maine respectively and pioneers of Bureau county, Ill. Mr. Chilson died in California and his wife in Missouri. After his marriage Mr. Cole returned to Burleson county, Tex., and for years engaged in general farming and stock raising there. In 1853 he came to California on a prospecting tour, but remained only a short time. Ten years later he enlisted in Captain Turner's company, C. S. A., and while he fought in the battle of Donaldsonville, on the Mississippi river, he was principally occupied as a scout and skirmisher. Upon the expiration of his term of enlistment he returned to Texas, and in the spring of 1864 he started for California, making his way over the plains with a wagon and ox-team, the journey taking about eight months. Since permanently locating on his present ranch, near Whittier, he has witnessed many changes in the country and in many of them he has been an active participant.

Mr. Cole is a Democrat in politics, with strong independent tendencies. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Downey, and is a charter member of the local lodge. He is a member of the Baptist Church and contributes generously towards its support. To Mr. and Mr. Cole have been born eight children: Aurelia, Mrs. John Tweedy; Mary E., Mrs. William Keller; California, wife of Henderson Cheney; George W.; Charles E.; Dora, wife of Jacob Ginther; Joseph A. and Byron S.

CHARLES ANDREW. The ranch now occupied by Charles Andrew, located two and a half miles south of El Monte, has been brought to a high cultivation by his own personal efforts. Energetic and ambitious, he has given his entire time and attention to the upbuilding of his interests and has succeeded in making for himself a place among the prominent ranchers of this section. He is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in San Bernardino February 14, 1875, his father, Tilghman D. Andrew, an honored resident of El Monte, having been one of the early pioneers of the state. For more complete details concerning the life of the latter refer to his personal biography, which appears elsewhere in this volume.

Brought to Los Angeles county by his father in 1881, Charles Andrew grew to manhood in the Mountain View district, receiving his education in the public schools of El Monte. He remained with his father until attaining his majority, when he engaged in teaming and general farming in the vicinity of El Monte. In 1899 he began farming on the damp land owned by the Baldwins in La Puente school district, raising grain, alfalfa, potatoes, etc., and meeting with a success in his venture which enabled him to accumulate sufficient means to purchase in 1903, twenty-one acres of land, upon which he has since made his home. This property lies about two and a half miles from El Monte and after his purchase was set out in walnuts, while he at the same time raised alfalfa and potatoes. He improved the ranch by the erection of a good residence and all necessary outbuildings, and the place now stands as a substantial evidence of the young man's energy and ambition. His home is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Edna A. Taylor, who was born in Michigan, the daughter of George Taylor, who died in that state. She then came to California and was reared by her maternal grandfather, M. D. Mason, of Alhambra. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew are the parents of four children, Florence, Ray and Roy (twins), and George. Mr. Andrew is quite prominent fraternally; he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and is past officer of the lodge in El Monte; holds a like position in the Modern Brotherhood of America, and is past chief templar of the Independent Order of Good Templars. In politics he is a stanch Prohibitionist.

MARCUS L. SPARKS. One of the fine appearing ranches in the Pomona valley is that owned and managed by Mr. Sparks, comprising one hundred and thirty acres and lying in close proximity to Lordsburg. Although he has been a resident of the state since 1875, it was not until 1890 that he came to this vicinity, the nucleus of his present large property consisting of twenty acres, to which he has added from time to time as his means would permit until today he has one of the large ranches of Los Angeles county.

Mr. Sparks is a native of North Carolina, born in Wilkes county, March 20, 1853, one of seven children, three sons and four daughters, born to his parents, Joseph and Mary (Gray) Sparks, they too being natives of North Carolina. It was about 1866 that the father left the south with his family and located in Kansas, which was the family home for about nine years. Upon coming to California in 1875 he located in the Sacramento valley, where his remaining years were spent, his death occurring when he was in his sixty-sixth year. Up to the time of his death he was a stanch member of the Baptist Church, of which denomination the mother was also a member. December 5, 1906, she passed away at the home of her son, Marcus L., who, with the exception of a sister in Oregon, is the only one of the children living.

The schools of North Carolina during the boyhood of Mr. Sparks were far from complete as compared with the temples of learning in that state today. Such as they were he attended them with as much regularity as the home duties would permit, and at night in after years continued his studies by the light of the pine knots on the hearth at home. When he was thirteen years old he removed with the family to Kansas. In 1875 he came to California with his father and settled in the Sacramento valley, for about five years working as a ranch hand in that locality. In 1880 he came to Pomona valley and with the means which he had accumulated purchased five acres of land. In connection with the cultivation of his own land he still continued to work for others, following this for about six years, when he came to the vicinity of Lordsburg and purchased the nucleus of his present ranch. He now has fifty acres in navel oranges and lemons, all of which he set out himself, and the remainder of the land, eighty acres, is in grain. Water is supplied from a pumping station on the ranch, which makes it possible to irrigate the land thoroughly.

In 1880, during his residence in the Sacramento valley, Mr. Sparks was married to Miss Nancy M. Michael, and of their union three children have been born. Nellie became the wife of L. L. Ehresman and is now the mother of three children: Elsie is the wife of W. A. Keating and the mother of one child, the family residing in Lordsburg; Edith is unmarried and at home with her parents. The family attend the Baptist Church of Pomona, of which Mr. Sparks is a member, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Mr. Sparks has always been an ardent advocate of good schools. He is now serving as trustee of the grammar school at LaVerne, and is president of the board of trustees of the Boneta high school, both in Los Angeles county. Two organizations in which he takes a special interest and which bring him into close association with other ranchers of this vicinity, are the LaVerne Citrus Association and the San Dimas Land and Water Company, in both of which he holds the office of president. Politically he casts his vote for Democratic candidates at national elections, but in the choice of local candidates he supports the Prohibition ticket. Mr. Sparks has a geniality of nature that wins and retains friends, and these he numbers by the score.

L. W. Houghton

LAKE W. HOUGHTON. Those who have enjoyed the hospitality of the Houghton home in Rivera and who have noted with artistic appreciation the comforts evidenced throughout the entire residence of twelve rooms, unite in bestowing upon Mr. Houghton the highest praise for the success he has attained by unaided exertions. Possessed of a sterling character and contented spirit, he was no less at ease amid the frontier environment of the early days than when surrounded by the luxuries of the twentieth century, seated in his attractive home, with telephone at hand to furnish private conversation with any of the four telephone stations on his ranch. Though identified with Rivera for a brief period only, having moved to the town in September of 1905, he has formed a large circle of acquaintances and has gained a reputation for public spirit and energy.

Not many years after Texas had secured its freedom from Mexican rule and had acquired independence, W. L. Houghton removed to that then unknown country, where he remained from 1844 until his removal to the Pacific coast twenty-four years later. In his family was a son, James D., who with his wife, Nancy E. (Hastings) Houghton, became an early settler of Hopkins county, Tex., at that time a stock-growing region, but now studded over with large cotton plantations. While James D. Houghton was still in the prime of life he was taken from his family by death and soon afterward the widow determined to remove to California. During 1868, in company with W. L. Houghton and wife, and with her two sons and three daughters, she traveled overland with wagon and team, via Denver, Colo., the wagon road running almost parallel with the present route of the Union Pacific Railroad.

For one year the Houghton family remained in Northern California, where they occupied a ranch near Modesto (then called Paradise City), the county-seat of Stanislaus county, and from that locality they traveled south, following the coast road through to Santa Barbara. In the vicinity of Santa Fe Springs they bought a tract of forty-four acres, where the grandparents and the mother died soon after settling in Southern California. Reared to a knowledge of ranch life, it was natural that Lake W. Houghton should select agriculture as his life work, and the record of his years proves that he made no mistake in his choice. Though by birth a Texan (having been born near Sulphur Springs, Hopkins county, April 25, 1858, he has been a resident of California since a boy of ten years, and is thoroughly in touch with the history of this commonwealth and its rapid progress toward permanent prosperity. Through the exercise of industry and wise management he has acquired a tract of two hundred and seventy-five acres of farm and pasture land near Studebaker, which is devoted to alfalfa and dairy. Of recent years he has also turned his attention to the raising of soft-shell walnuts and now has fifty acres in that profitable product.

The first wife of Mr. Houghton bore the maiden name of Julia Borden and died in 1893. Five children were born of that union, namely: Roy J., Archie (who died at eleven years), William L., Ella and Stella (twins). After the death of Mrs. Julia Houghton on the home place, Mr. Houghton was united with Miss Jennie Brooks, by whom he has a daughter, Nannie. Though well posted in state and national affairs, he is not a politician and maintains an independence of attitude in regard to politics, voting for the men he deems best qualified to represent the people, irrespective of their political views. Downey Lodge No. 220, F. & A. M., has his name enrolled as an active member, and the doctrines of brotherhood and charity promulgated by the order receive his stanch support and sympathy.

ABRAHAM ONTIVEROS. The ranch of two thousand acres owned and occupied by Abraham Ontiveros is his by inheritance, and was the property of his father, Juan Pacifico Ontiveros, who was born in Los Angeles county, in 1782. Juan Pacifico inherited the qualities of martial ancestors, and in early life joined the Spanish soldiery in their efforts to subdue the Indians and protect Spanish interests in Southern California. As reward for services rendered he was given a tract of land known as the Cajon de San Quan ranch in Los Angeles county, and which he eventually sold for what in those days constituted a large fortune. He then purchased the Tepusquet ranch of nine thousand acres, now the home of his son, where he attained to ninety-five years, the possessor to the last of gracious qualities of mind and heart, and of the respect and good will of all with whom he had ever been associated. His wife shared his fortunes until her eighty-ninth year, and in the meantime reared a family of thirteen children, nine of whom are living.

At the age of fifty-four Abraham Ontiveros is one of the fortunate men of California. He has a beautiful home, a large income, a family of children who have largely realized his expectations for them, and a host of friends. His reputation as a rancher is unexcelled, and in the management of his property he conforms to the standards of the progressive farmer. He is a breeder of fine horses, owns two hundred and fifty head of blooded cattle and raises large quantities of grain, grapes, olives, walnuts and general produce. He built a reservoir of two hundred thousand gallons capacity on a hill one hundred and fifty feet high and brings the water from the mountain springs for family use and irrigation. He has lived on his present ranch for half a century, coming here in 1856 from his father's ranch in Los Angeles county, where his birth occurred April 5, 1852. In 1879 he was united in marriage to Doraliza Vidal, a native of Santa Barbara county, and around his hearthstone have grown to maturity six children: Ozell A., Erasmus A., Edmund F., Evanoy L., Blanche and Ida. In 1904 he married Petra Arellanes, of the city of Santa Barbara. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Catholic Church. His energies have been devoted to the improvement of his extensive holdings, to a quiet and dignified interest in public affairs, and to the exercise of a delightful hospitality.

WILLIAM H. PEIRCE. Travels through many sections of the country, followed by the establishment of his home in San Diego county, gave to Mr. Peirce an excellent knowledge of conditions of soil and climate through varied localities, and convinced him that no region possesses a climate more equable than that of his home. For some years after settling in this county he followed the carpenter's trade and later for a number of years held the position of collector for the Linda Vista irrigation district, following which in 1899 he removed to Mesa Grande, and in 1902 bought a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres near the town, where since he has engaged in raising grain and cattle. Besides the supervision of his ranch he owns and operates the stage line between Mesa Grande and Ramona and also carries the United States mail.

During the earlier half of the nineteenth century there resided in Middleboro, Plymouth county, Mass., a carpenter and contractor bearing the name of William S. Peirce, who was a native of the old Bay state and a descendant of an old family. During 1844 he lost his wife, Prudence (Dean) Peirce, who at the time of her death was thirty-four years of age. At the time of the discovery of gold in California he was among the first to start for the new gold fields and in 1849 he set sail from New Bedford, Mass., rounded the Horn and eventually landed at San Francisco, from which point he went to the mines. Soon he returned to San Francisco, leased lands and erected houses, but three times in the early fires that destroyed that city he suffered the loss of his property and so decided to return to the east. During 1851 he went back to Massachusetts, where he engaged in contracting and building. With the exception of one year spent in Kansas he remained in Massachusetts until his death, which occurred in 1859, at the age of forty-eight years.

Among the children of William S. Peirce there was a son, William H., who was born in Middleboro, Plymouth county, Mass., June 13, 1836, and was orphaned by his mother's death when he was a boy of eight years.

After having completed his education in the public schools and Peirce Academy he learned the carpenter's trade and followed the same in Massachusetts until 1857, when he removed to Lafayette, Kans., and became interested in the building business. Two years later he left that town and during the next fifteen years he traveled much, visiting many sections of the country and acquiring mining interests in Colorado. From that state he went to St. Joseph, Mo., in January, 1861, and there joined a party en route for the Pacific coast, making the journey with teams and wagons and arriving in safety at Auburn, Ore. From that point he proceeded into Idaho and in December of 1864 came to San Francisco, but during the same month took passage on a steamer and returned to his old home. After nine months in Massachusetts he secured employment in New York City and remained there until the failure of his health in 1867 demanded a change of climate. For that reason he went south to Texas and spent a year in Galveston, returning from there to New York City and then removing to Sumner county, Kans., where he engaged in farming until he transferred his residence to his present county.

The marriage of Mr. Peirce took place at Oxford, Kans., June 1, 1876, and united him with Miss Margaret M. Bain, a native of Indiana, but from four years of age a resident of Iowa and after 1871 making her home in Kansas, where her father, Samuel, engaged in agricultural pursuits. Five children were born of the union. Edith A. taught four terms of school in San Diego county and then entered the Leland Stanford University, where she is now a student. Roland E. follows the blacksmith's trade in San Francisco. Eldred E. was formerly a student in the Lowell high school and now is taking a course in mining engineering at the Lake school in San Francisco. Earl D. is a student in the State Agricultural College at San Luis Obispo. Everett C., the youngest member of the family, is a student in Lick University. While in Massachusetts in 1865 Mr. Peirce was initiated into Masonry and ever since has been a believer in the philanthropic principles of the fraternity. With his wife he attends the Baptist Church and contributes to its charities. In politics he votes with the Republican party.

ALLEN J. RUSSELL. Although a comparative newcomer in Fallbrook, Allen J. Russell is well and favorably known and is numbered among its best men, socially and financially, being especially valued as a large-hearted, public-spirited citizen, whose enterprise and liberality have done much towards advancing the welfare of the community and adding to the comfort and happiness of its people. As an agriculturist he is meeting with marked success, his large and well-kept ranch bearing visible evidence of his energy, thrift and good management. A son of Allen Russell, he was born August 29, 1856, in Buchanan county, Pa., where he lived until after attaining his majority.

Born in the mountainous section of Tennessee, Allen Russell migrated when young to Missouri, going there in 1837. He subsequently took up land in Buchanan county, and there began life for himself as a tiller of the soil. During the excitement that followed the discovery of gold in California he came across the plains in an ox-team train, arriving in San Francisco in 1850. Becoming discouraged as a miner, he boarded a vessel and started for home. At Mazatlan, Mexico, the boat was shipwrecked, and he made his way from there back to Missouri by mule back. Resuming his former occupation, he was subsequently there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, in 1883, at the age of sixty-three years. He married Eliza Wolf, who was born in Pennsylvania, and died in Missouri in early womanhood.

Left motherless when a mere child, Allen J. Russell attended the district schools, remaining at home until after the death of his father. Going to Kansas in 1884, he followed farming in that state for about a year, when he returned to Missouri, and there continued as a farmer for several years. Starting overland from Missouri June 9, 1895, he followed the southern route through the panhandle of Texas and New Mexico, crossing the Pecos river at Fort Sumner, the Colorado river at Fort Yuma, thence by Banning Pass and Temecula to San Diego county, arriving at Fallbrook with his five wagons, stock and horses on December 8 of that year. Although long, the trip was a pleasant one, and much enjoyed. There were twenty-one days of the time when not a white person was seen by any of the family. Since settling here, Mr. Russell has been actively engaged in his independent calling, and has now a magnificent ranch of seven hundred acres, the larger part of which he devotes to the raising of grain. He exercises good judgment in financial matters, and in the establishment of beneficial enterprises gives willing aid and encouragement. In 1903 he was one of the organizers of the Mercantile Store, of which he has since been a director, and he is likewise one of the directors of the Fallbrook Hardware Company.

December 24, 1882, in Missouri, Mr. Russell married Martha Elizabeth Russell, who was born in that state, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Opal W., Cleveland Lee, Jessie Obern and Thomas Franklin. Politically Mr. Russell is a straightforward Democrat, and religiously he belongs to the Baptist Church.

WILLIAM WILEY. Among the earlier settlers of Los Angeles county was the late William Wiley, who located near Downey when this section of the country was comparatively new, and was one of the most interested witnesses of its development and growth. Turning his attention to agriculture, he improved a fine ranch, raising principally walnuts and fruits, in this line of industry meeting with signal success. A native of Pennsylvania in the vicinity of Pittsburg, he was born September 22, 1836, and died at his home in Downey, November 9, 1896, his death being a loss to the community, as well as to his immediate family and many friends. When a child of only five years he was orphaned by the death of his mother, and later he began his education in the primitive schools of his native state. Until seventeen years of age he lived on a farm in that state, and then went to Minnesota, remaining there for two years. In 1855, when nineteen years of age, he came to California, driving an ox-team for the government. Upon reaching Salt Lake City he remained there for a short time and then resumed the journey to San Bernardino, and from there later came to Los Angeles county. Subsequently for five years he drove teams from Los Angeles to Wilmington. His first experience in the west as an agriculturist was on rented property near El Monte, and later, in 1868, he came to the vicinity of Downey. To his first purchase of twenty-five acres he later added ten acres adjoining, also purchased thirty-one acres in this locality, besides which he owned seventy-three acres at Willows, but this latter tract Mrs. Wiley disposed of in 1906. In his political preferences Mr. Wiley was a Democrat, and fraternally affiliated with the Society of Chosen Friends. As a constable he rendered acceptable service to his constituents, and was a stanch advocate of good schools.

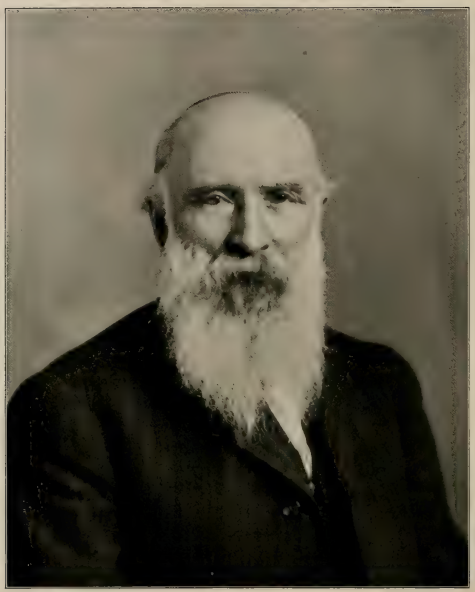
Mr. Wiley married, May 19, 1872, Elizabeth M. Simmons, who was born in Rapides Parish, La., and is the only survivor of the four children, three sons and one daughter, of James Simmons, of Orange county, Cal. A native of Mississippi, James Simmons moved when a young man to Rapides Parish, La., where he resided a number of years. In 1868 he came across the plains to California, and is now living near Santa Ana, on the ranch which he has improved. He is a man of sterling worth, highly respected throughout the community, and is a faithful member of the Baptist Church. In politics he invariably supports the principles of the Democratic party.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wiley was blessed by the birth of eight children, five sons and three daughters, as follows: Robert J., of Tustin, Cal.; James H., M. Lulu; Walter C., William K., Frederick E., Lena E. and Iva Mae. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Wiley has lived on the home ranch, which is under the supervision of two of her sons, Walter C. and William K. The home place, as well as the thirty-one acre tract in the vicinity, is devoted to the raising of apples and walnuts, both of which yield abundantly and from which a good annual income is realized.



ALEXANDER J. CUNEO. An example of the results of well-directed efforts coupled with pluck and persistence is to be found in the person of Alexander J. Cuneo, a resident of San Gabriel and its principal merchant, who set out in the world dependent upon his own resources and with nothing but his native qualities to presage any future success. He has won the esteem of the entire community through his business methods, his fair dealing with the public, and has built up an extensive custom which has brought him large financial returns. Born in Genoa, Italy, March 7, 1870. Mr. Cuneo is a son of M. and Mary (Garibaldi) Cuneo, both natives of Italy, and immigrating to America many years ago. Their first home was in New York City, but they soon removed to Los Angeles county, Cal., for two years making their home in the city of that name, and thereafter being residents of San Gabriel. The father died in 1884 in San Gabriel and the mother in 1897 in Los Angeles, leaving a family of nine children, of whom four are surviving, those besides Alexander J. being a daughter in Nome, Alaska, one in San Diego, and one in Los Angeles. Mr. Cuneo was a stanch Republican politically; in religion he belonged to the Catholic Church.

Alexander J. Cuneo left his native land at three years of age, and coming to New York City with his parents remained there nearly two years, when he was brought to California, which ever since that time has remained his home. His education was received in the public school of San Gabriel, and his first employment was as a clerk in a mercantile establishment. In 1896 he engaged independently in this occupation, establishing himself in San Gabriel with a fine stock of goods, to which he has continued to add with the passing years until to-day he is proprietor of one of the best equipped grocery, dry goods, hardware, feed and grain enterprises in this section of the county. He has built his trade to lucrative proportions and now employs two delivery wagons to handle his country custom.

On the 27th of August, 1897, Mr. Cuneo was united in marriage with Miss May Slack, a daughter of William Slack, a well-known pioneer resident of San Gabriel, in which place she was born. Both himself and wife are members of the Catholic Church. He is a Republican in politics, a progressive and public spirited citizen, and one whose interest in public affairs results in practical helpfulness at all times.

THOMAS D. MENDENHALL. Fertile valleys lying between the stern and rugged stretches of foothills and plains afford opportunity for the carrying forward of agricultural pursuits under favorable surroundings, and the numerous valleys for which San Diego county is noted are the sources of the considerable agricultural wealth of this part of the state. Bear valley is not without its fertile farms and among them may be mentioned the ranch of four hundred and eighty acres occupied and managed by Mr. Mendenhall, who is a native son of California and a lifelong resident of the coast county. The family of which he is a member came from Southern ancestry and early was established in the far west. His father, Enos T., was born and reared in North Carolina. When General Fremont blazed a path for emigrants across the desert and mountains, and reports were brought back by the expedition concerning the fertility of the lands in that unknown and unsettled region lying west of the Rockies, the plans of many were turned toward immigration, and he was one of the number who braved the vicissitudes of the perilous trip in order to gain the possible returns that Destiny might bring. As early as 1847 he followed the overland route to Oregon and conveyed in his wagon the first fruit trees ever taken into that state.

After having engaged in teaching school in Oregon, Enos T. Mendenhall was led to remove to California by reason of reports concerning the discovery of gold, and during 1849 he became a pioneer of San Francisco. A short time afterward he went to Placer county and opened a general store near the mines, also operated a sawmill and a hotel in Colfax (then known as Illinoistown). For a long period he retained important business interests in that region, but during 1870 he removed to Bear valley and took up a tract of land from the government. In addition he bought the claims of many settlers who needed money more than they needed land, and in this way he increased his holdings until at the time of his death he owned more than seven thousand acres in Bear valley and on Smith mountain. His death occurred December 29, 1904, at the age of eighty-two years. In early life he married Emily Mills, who survives him and now, at the age of seventy-three, makes her home at Oakville, in Napa county.

C. E. Colton

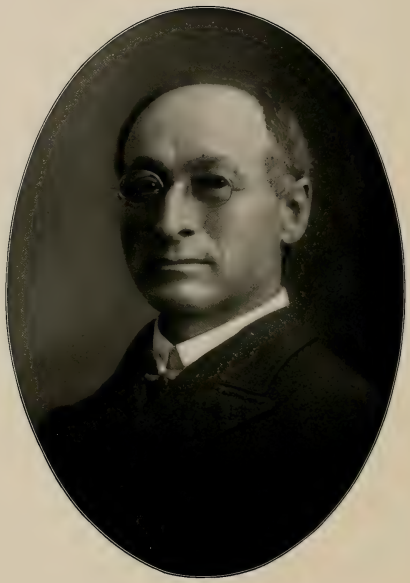
During the residence of his parents in Sacramento, this state, Thomas D. Mendenhall was born November 2, 1860. Few educational opportunities blessed his youth. For a few years he attended the public schools of Placer county, but while still quite young he began to earn his own livelihood, and from that time to the present he has depended upon his own exertions. His first occupation was that of railroading. At the age of sixteen years he was employed as brakeman on the narrow gauge railroad between Colfax and Nevada City, and at the expiration of three years he was given charge of a freight train, which he ran for seven years. On resigning his position as conductor he spent two years in Napa county and in 1899 came to Bear valley, where since he has occupied and managed a farm in this fertile region, giving his attention closely to the details of the work and laboring with unwearied energy to maintain a profitable and systematic condition in the agricultural possibilities of the place.

CHARLES EDWIN COLTON. Some men's lives are passed quietly in the enjoyments of their home and family, while others are so rudely buffeted in the voyage through life; are thrown into such strange company; meet with so many thrilling adventures; have so many hairbreadth escapes; and are engaged in so many diversified occupations, that a true account of their work and wanderings sounds like a romance. Prominent among those whose career in this world has been thus characterized is Charles E. Colton, a prominent and highly esteemed citizen of Glendale. Leaving home when a boy, he has since, by his own efforts risen from a condition of comparative poverty to one of influence and affluence. An early pioneer of the state, he was actively identified with some of the important historical events of the territory of California, and to some extent assisted in establishing its claim to statehood. A native of Michigan, he was born, October 26, 1834, at Utica, Macomb county, a son of Philander and Polly (Merrill) Colton, both of whom were born and reared in New York state. The first of the name to settle in America was Quartermaster George Colton, of England, in 1640 and from this progenitor has descended the entire Colton race.

Between the ages of two and ten years Charles E. Colton lived in Cook county, Ill., and then, with his parents, went to Iowa. Two years later, in 1846, he left home without warning, going on foot to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and from that time became self-supporting. Entering the service of Lieut. George Stoneman, who was afterward commissioned general, and still later was governor of California, he accompanied him as far as Santa Fe, when he was assigned as servant to P. C. Merrill, of the Mormon Battalion, under Col. St. George P. Cook, with whom he went first to Mexico, and from there came to California. After a short stop in San Diego he spent six weeks in San Luis Rey, and on April 12, 1847, arrived in Los Angeles, where he remained until honorably discharged from the service, July 16, 1847. During the time, Mr. Colton, then a beardless youth, assisted in raising the first flag ever hoisted in the place, going on June 8, 1847, with a detachment of thirty-one soldiers to Mill creek to get poles for a flag staff. Taking one six-mule and one four-mule government team to carry the provisions and the poles, they performed the journey successfully, securing two poles, which when spliced and bound together with raw hide, gave a staff a hundred feet in length. On the Fourth of July, 1847, a few days after the return of the detachment, the Mormon Battalion under command of Col. John Stevenson, raised the flag on Fort Hill, then called Fort Moore, the people there assembled singing "The Star Spangled Banner" during the raising, and cheering lustily as its folds were unfurled to the breezes.



After his discharge from the service, Mr. Colton with twenty-two companions, guided by Capt. Jefferson Hunt, went north, first to San Francisco, then to San Jose, from there proceeding to Stockton, where they learned from a party of Mormons that Samuel Brandon had gone across the mountains to meet Brigham Young and his followers. A few days later the little band went in Fort Sutter, where they fell in with two men who said they had been lost from the Mormon party that left Los Angeles for the interior of California at the same time that Captain Hunt and his party started northward. Very soon after, the Hunt company left Sutter Fort, crossed the mountains, and while in camp on the spot where the Donner party was afterwards massacred, was joined by Samuel Brandon, who informed the leader that Brigham Young was located at Salt Lake City. The party, therefore, followed the old Indian trail along the Humboldt river to Goose creek, thence across Snake river to Fort Hall, which at that time belonged to the Vancouver Fur Company, and was under the charge of Captain Grant. Continuing along the trail, the party arrived at Salt Lake City in October, 1847, and there Mr. Colton spent the winter, living during the time on thistle roots and wolf meat, having generously given his allowance of flour, etc., to the old people.

In the spring of 1848, Mr. Colton planted a patch of corn, but the entire crop was eaten up by crickets. Going to Fort Bridger in the fall, he stayed with the American Fur Company, No. 42, until spring, when he returned to Salt Lake, where he again tried farming for a year. In the spring of 1851 he guided a party across the Rockies to Sacramento, Cal., arriving there with an ox-team train in July, with four hundred head of cattle. Leaving Sacramento in the fall, he began mining on the present site of the Folsom Penitentiary, and was thus engaged about a year, working along the Yuba river to Marysville. Locating in Sacramento in 1853, he spent a year in that vicinity, during which time he carried the mail from there to Salt Lake City. The journey was tedious and perilous, on several occasions having encounters with the Indians, who at one time stole his flour, for which he had paid $1 a pound. In the spring of 1854 he married, and settled as a farmer in Provo, remaining thus employed for about three years, in the meantime taking part in the Indian troubles. In 1857 he with twenty-five others was called upon by Brigham Young to go to the North Platte to bring up supplies, and the little band met in Young's barn to make arrangements for the trip. In 1859, through Mr. Young's influence, he obtained a position as guide, and in that capacity brought a company of men and a band of cattle to San Bernardino, Cal.

Remaining in that place, Mr. Colton had charge for a short time of his father-in-law's ranch of two hundred and forty acres, but not liking that part of the state came to Los Angeles in the spring of 1860, and resided there two years, in the meantime filling a hay contract under Gen. Winfield Hancock. Going back to San Bernardino in the spring of 1862, he was engaged in the freighting business in that locality for twenty-two consecutive years, working for the government, and carrying goods to the various mining camps. During the time he made twenty trips across the desert to Salt Lake, (eight times being accompanied by his wife) then up into Montana, while in 1868 he was a contractor on the Union Pacific Railroad, his family making their home the greater part of the time in San Bernardino. While thus employed, Mr. Colton became interested in cattle raising, and when the establishment of railways encroached upon his business he gave up freighting and devoted himself exclusively to stock raising on a ranch in Colorado, where he purchased a squatter's claim to one hundred and sixty acres. Disposing of his interests in that state in 1884, he moved with his family to Ogden, Utah, that his younger children might have better educational advantages.

In the spring of 1885, Mr. Colton, desirous of locating his two older sons in business, went with them first to Oregon, and then to Raft River, Idaho, where he started them in the stock business. In September, 1887, he brought his family to California, settling at Red Bluff at first, but soon after going to Chico, arriving there on October 22. There leaving his family, he proceeded to Sacramento, where he made arrangements to buy mules to ship to the Sandwich Islands. After buying the mules in Utah he shipped them from San Francisco, making considerable money in the transaction. Joining his sons, then, at Raft River, Idaho, he sold his ranch and cattle, and the following summer lived at Chico. Going then to Santa Rosa, he rented a vineyard of one hundred acres, but subsequently sold out his lease, and went to Ogden, Utah, where, in the spring of 1889, he purchased land, and embarked in sheep raising, stocking his ranch with a band of sheep which he owned, and at the time was leasing out. He remained in Ogden the greater part of the time for six years, his family in the meantime coming to Los Angeles, where he joined them in 1895. In 1898 he made a trip to Inyo county, and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land which was stocked with cattle. In 1901 he traded that ranch for property in Burbank. He has crossed the desert many times, including among others many trips to Arizona, and upon two of these was accompanied by his wife. He is now living retired from active pursuits in Glendale, enjoying the fruits of his many years of toil and labor. He owns valuable property at the corner of Eighteenth street and Central avenue, and also has a ranch of fifteen acres, all cultivated, yielding abundant crops of fruits and berries.

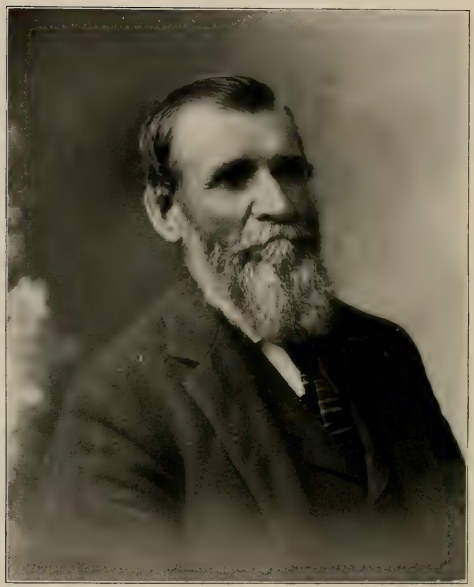
M. A. Lewis

In April, 1854, Mr. Colton married Mary Ann Kelting, and into their household eleven children were born. Joseph P., of Burbank, married Adelaide Rollins, by whom he had four children, Mrs Minnie Elizabeth Ropes, Ella Minerva, Earl, (deceased), and Harry Leslie; Charles Henry, a freight conductor, married Rosa Wollin, and they have two sons, William Edwin and Jay; George Frederick, of Los Angeles, the discoverer of the Searchlight mine, married first Matilda Firth, by whom he has two children, Ella Moore of Colton and George; his second marriage was with Melvina Leatherbery; Ella R., living in Fresno, is the widow of the late T. B. Dowd and has five children, George, Clarabelle, Charles, James and Mary; Raymond is deceased; William, of Searchlight, Nev., married Electa Weaks, and they have four children, Clara, Hazel, Edna and Letha; Frank of Searchlight, married Minnie Corber and they have one son, Glenwood; by a former marriage he had one daughter, Pearl Ethel, who was reared by Mrs. Colton; James is deceased; Mae, the wife of H. Sellers, of Los Angeles, has one daughter, Mildred Ione; the two children who died in infancy were Edwin and Mina. Politically Mr. Colton is a Democrat.

MARX A. LESEM. In two points at least the lives of Marx A. Lesem and Sebastian Kneipp, the recognized father of the water cure, were parallel, both being of German birth and both becoming afflicted with what was thought to be an incurable disease when they were at the pinnacle of expectancy for success in their respective life callings. The Kneipp method of treatment as practiced by its founder in Germany became world-renowned during his lifetime and the little parish-town of Woerishofen has grown from a mere hamlet to a prosperous, cosmopolitan health resort. The records show that from 1891 to 1894 over fifty thousand patients sought Father Kneipp's help, and it was no uncommon thing for four hundred afflicted persons to seek relief in a single day. Many eminent physicians, recognizing the merit of his system, came to him for instruction in his methods of curing diseases with the result that Kneipp institutions were established in all of the large cities of Europe. Thus, with the wide distribution of literature on the subject, the knowledge of the meritorious system spread to all parts of the world. Thus it was that Mr. Lesem, after he had tried all other known remedies without any relief, became an inmate of the famous institution, leaving it eight months later entirely cured. In the meantime he had become deeply interested in the method of treatment and had made a practical study of the system, the outcome of which was the establishment of M. A. Lesem's Kneipp Sanitarium in San Diego, Cal., in 1896.

A native of Rheinpfalz, Bavaria, Germany, born March 4, 1844, Marx A. Lesem is a son of Alexander and Caroline (Deutch) Lesem, both natives of the Fatherland. In his native land the father was an extensive dealer in grain, giving this up in 1859 to take up life in the new world. He survived only a few months to enjoy his new surroundings, for his death occurred at Quincy, Ill., in October, 1859, when in his sixty-fourth year. His wife survived him many years, passing away in New York City at the age of ninety-four years. Of the five sons and two daughters who blessed their marriage three sons and one daughter only are living, Marx A. being next to the youngest of the family. His childhood years were spent in the place of his birth, and among the pupils of the schools in that vicinity none was more deeply devoted to his studies than Marx A. Lesem. In fact, all of his spare time out of school was spent in acquiring knowledge. Although through his entire life he has continued to be a student, his school days, strictly speaking, came to a close in 1859, for it was in that year that his father brought the family to America. Settling in Quincy, Adams county, Ill., three of his brothers there opened a merchandise business on Fourth street, in which he was interested as clerk until he also became a partner in the business.

It was while associated with his brothers in business that Mr. Lesem was taken ill. Local physicians were unable to give him relief, and after consulting the best-known practitioners of Chicago and New York he was still in the same condition. Disposing of his interest in the business in 1879 he returned to Bavaria, Germany, in the vague hope that in his native land he might find relief from the disease which had fastened itself upon him. He first tried Marienbad, one of the renowned health resorts, but this treatment resulted like all previous ones, and it was at this time that his attention was called to the Kneipp water cure. As a patient in the sanitarium at Bavaria he soon began to note an improvement in his health, which not only greatly encouraged him in the hope of complete recovery but elicited his interest to such an extent in the system employed that during the eight months which he spent there he had become a convert to the belief that all diseases if taken in time could be cured by Nature's simple remedy. His return to his home and friends in Illinois in 1881 was looked upon as a miracle, for when he left nearly two years before none expected to see him come back alive. Resuming business life, for several years thereafter he was located in Chicago occupied in looking after his interests there.



The ill health of his wife made a change of climate a necessity at this time, and thus it was that his attention was drawn to the equable climate of Southern California. He came to San Diego in 1887 and in 1888 established a merchandise business, which he continued to carry on for five years. During all of these years plans had been maturing for the establishment of a water-cure sanitarium, and in 1896 he opened the Kneipp Sanitarium of which he is now the proprietor in his residence at No. 2467 First street. Basing his belief in his treatment on the cure which was brought about in his own case he takes for his motto "What man has done man may do," and with this as his watchword he has carried on his humanitarian work for the last ten years with the greatest satisfaction to himself, for he has the assurance that he has saved many lives and alleviated much suffering. No matter what the disease may be or of how long standing Mr. Lesem has absolute faith in his ability to effect a cure if the patient will be persistent and determined in following the treatment. Requests for admission into the sanitarium far exceeded the ability to furnish accommodation, but with the erection and equipment of a new building this difficulty has been obviated. The long list of unsolicited testimonials which Mr. Lesem has received during the past years shows that his patients have not been confined to his home city or county, but on the other hand they have come from all over the United States and even from the British Isles.

While a resident of Quincy, Ill., Mr. Lesem was united in marriage with Theresa Greenebaum of Chicago, Ill., who was born in that city, where her family was well and favorably known. Of the children born to them five are living, as follows: Regina, now Mrs. Apple and a resident of Springfield, Ill.; Lillie, at home; Alexander M., who is a merchant in Danville, Ill.; and James G. and Henry F., both of whom are in business in Chicago. Mr. Lesem was made a Mason in Chicago and still holds membership in the lodge there. His interest in the advancement and progress of his adopted city has from the first been one of his most noticeable characteristics, and the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego has no more interested member than he. In him also the Republican party has a strong ally. Mr. Lesem is a man who justly holds a high position in the community where he lives and is honored and esteemed for his recognized worth.

W. WALTER COULTAS. Ranking high among the industrious, thrifty and well-to-do agriculturists of Ventura county is W. W. Coultas, who is engaged in his pleasant and profitable vocation near Oxnard. A hard-working, persevering man, one who observes and thinks for himself, he is meeting with genuine success in his labors, and as a man of integrity and honesty holds a good position among the leading citizens of the town. A son of Benjamin Coultas, he was born February 3, 1846, in Scott county, Ill., and was there educated. His father emigrated from England to Illinois, settling in Scott county, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising until his death, at the age of fifty-five years. On first coming to this country he was identified with the Whigs, but was afterwards a Republican in politics. In Illinois, in 1836, he married Sarah Clark, who was born in England, and died in Ventura county, Cal., at the advanced age of seventy-seven years. Both he and his wife were members of the Church of England. Five children blessed their union, and of these W. W., the subject of this sketch, is the only survivor.

After completing his studies in the common schools of his native town, W. W. Coultas assisted his father on the home farm. At the age of eighteen years he started in life for himself, and in course of time became owner of a fine farm of two hundred acres in Scott county, and in addition to carrying on general farming was a large stock-raiser and dealer. In 1884 he sold out and removed to Sedgwick county, Kans., where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, on which he resided two and one-half years. Disposing of that property, he came to Ventura county in 1887, and the following sixteen years had the management of the one thousand-acre ranch belonging to his uncle, the late Thomas Clark. The estate being divided after the death of Mr. Clark, he has since purchased three hundred and thirteen acres. In addition to this he has other property in Ventura county, a ranch containing one hundred and forty-six acres of land lying near Oxnard, and has ten acres of valuable land in Toluca, Los Angeles county, in the center of the fruit belt. He devotes his land to the raising of barley. He has some fine horses, keeping both driving and farm horses, in all having about thirty head of valuable animals.

March 12, 1867, in Illinois, Mr. Coultas married Ruth A. Wells, who was born in Illinois, in 1840, and died in Ventura county, September 6, 1896. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Coultas thirteen children were born, namely: Luella M., wife of Samuel Chamberlain, of Toluca; Edith, wife of William Wheeler, of Sawtelle; Jessie, who died in infancy; Albert W., of this county, who married Susie Chamberlain; Grace A., who died at the age of nineteen years; Theresa; Thomas; Alexander; Percy, who died in infancy; Bertha; Ventura; Frederick; and Ruth A. Politically Mr. Coultas is a stanch Republican, and while in Kansas served as township treasurer, and since the building of the Union high school he has served as a member of the board. Fraternally he is a member of Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., and of Oxnard Chapter No. 86, R. A. M. Religiously he belongs to the Christian Church, with which he united in Illinois.

L. H. Gaskill

LUMAN H. GASKILL. The name of L. H. Gaskill belongs among those noble citizens who braved the dangers of the pioneer days and swept them successfully from his path and gave the first impetus toward the greatness of California statehood. He was born in Steuben county, Ind., July 17, 1843, a son of Cortland Gaskill a pioneer throughout his entire life. The elder man was born in New Jersey, inheriting the sturdy traits of his Scotch ancestors which induced him to face fearlessly the trying conditions of frontier life. In young manhood he located in the state of New York and engaged in stage driving until 1835 when he removed to Steuben county, Ind., where he hewed a farm from the wilderness lands in that state. He eventually removed to Michigan whence in 1855 he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama. He engaged in the dairy business in Petaluma and later followed a similar occupation on the Russian river in Mendocino county. Finally returning to Petaluma he made that place his home until his removal to San Diego county, where he resided in Campo, the scene of his sons' activities, until his death which occurred at the age of eighty-seven years. His wife, formerly Theresa Brink, was born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Moses Brink of Holland ancestry, and her death occurred in Sonoma county. They were the parents of six children, four of whom came to California, and three still surviving.

The early boyhood days of Luman H. Gaskill were spent in his home in Michigan where his parents had located in the vicinity of Battle Creek. He attended the public schools until he reached the age of fourteen years, when he accompanied his mother to California, the father having preceded them two years. They went to New York City and took passage on the Star of the West to Aspinwall, there crossing the isthmus and completing the voyage on the old John L. Stevens and arriving in San Francisco in July, 1857. They were met by his father who took them to the home which he had established in Petaluma. There the youth engaged with his father in dairy farming and remained so occupied until 1861 when he with countless others joined the Comstock rush at Virginia City, Nevada. He engaged in prospecting and mining and the developing of claims, owning three mines, one of which was the extension of the Warren Wells. They struck a sheet of ore that assayed $2,000 to the ton, but it was all worked out in a month, yielding only sixteen tons. Mr. Gaskill returned to California in 1866 and spent the ensuing year on the Russian river in Mendocino county. In 1867 he came south to Santa Barbara county, during the trip hunting along the way, spending some time in Ventura county, and finally locating in San Bernardino where he engaged in gardening with his brother, the two entering a tract of one hundred and sixty acres at the mouth of City creek. They built a ditch and irrigated the land themselves and set out an orchard and vineyard. They remained in that location but one year when they removed to San Jacinto and purchased one thousand acres and engaged in farming and bee culture. In the spring of 1868 they came to San Diego county, the two purchasing immense tracts of land in the vicinity of the present town of Campo, which place they established by building the first store, blacksmith shop, grist mill and other enterprises, and where for sixteen years Mr. Gaskill served as postmaster, was justice of the peace for twelve years and school trustee for twenty years, he and his brother building the first schoolhouse at that place. They engaged in the raising of stock, their range extending into Mexico and Lower California, and as superintendent of their cattle interests for six years Mr. Gaskill made his home in Ensenada where he also conducted a meat market. They were also extensively interested in bee culture, having four different apiaries of about four hundred colonies which produced many carloads of honey, one summer their crop being over thirty tons. They were the second largest apiarists in the United States, being exceeded in this enterprise by only their honorable old friend, J. S. Harbison of San Diego.

The cattle interests of the Gaskill Brothers were finally removed to the Colorado river where the sons of Luman H. Gaskill looked after their interests. In 1901 the cattle interests were disposed of and in January, 1902, the property in Campo was sold and partnership dissolved between the two brothers, when they both came to the city of San Diego and established their homes. Luman H. Gaskill purchased a residence on the corner of Third and Elm streets where he enjoys the comforts and fruits of an industrious life and where his friends are ever welcome to his hospitality. He has invested his means in property in and about San Diego, among his possessions owning a fifty-five-acre ranch in Mission Valley which he rents for garden purposes. Mr. Gaskill's home is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss E. J. Benson, a native of San Bernardino, and with whom he was united in marriage in San Jacinto. They are the parents of six children; Walter, a stockman in Lower California; Marion, deceased, was a business man in the city of Mexico; Carrie, wife of H. A. Jenkins of Callexico; Erma, wife of P. W. Preston of Washington; and Ava and Leo at home. Politically Mr. Gaskill is a stanch adherent of the principles in the platform of the Republican party.

While the two brothers were engaged in their business interests in Campo they had many exciting experiences with Mexican desperadoes, as the town was located on the border. It was frequently necessary for them to stand guard night and day. Both he and his brother, Silas E. Gaskill, were excellent marksman and owing to this the desperadoes were very careful in their method of attack. The most serious encounter which they ever had was on December 4, 1875. After the death of Vasquez, the leader of the desperadoes, Cruiz Lopez became the leader in his stead with his lieutenant, Chavez, who planned the attack on the Gaskill Brothers. On the day of the attack they left nine men standing on the hill in ambush, while six came to the store armed. Two of them came into the store where Luman Gaskill was showing merchandise, Lopez waiting at the door to give the signal to the three outside. Mr. Gaskill happened to be looking up and saw the signal of Lopez and instantly shouted to his brother, who was on the outside of the store, and at the same time crawled under the counter for his gun. Before he could reach it the desperado had jumped over the counter and in the struggle with Mr. Gaskill held him for Lopez to shoot. Just as the latter touched the trigger Mr. Gaskill twisted his body and received a ball in the lungs instead of the heart, but became unconscious for a short period. Lopez always prided himself on his marksmanship and did not fire a second time. In the mean time Silas Gaskill was having trouble on the outside, having dodged a mortal shot but received a wound in the side and arm, as he rushed for his gun in the rear of the shop. As the attack occurred, a Frenchman rode up and was wounded by a stray bullet from the effects of which he afterward died. He was not so disabled, at this time, however, as to prevent his firing at the miscreants, and raising his gun on the pommel of his saddle he shot Lopez, who died from the effects of the wound a year later. Silas Gaskill having secured a gun rushed back to the attack and felled two men, one of whom was Theo Vasquez, who a few minutes later was shot and killed by Luman Gaskill from the inside of the shop; the other was Rafel Martinez who was only wounded. While these stirring events were taking place, Luman Gaskill recovered sufficiently to take in the surroundings and by an effort reached his gun and obtained a position that enabled him to shoot Jose Alvis. He then made his way around and under the store and shot Jesus Alveto just as he was mounting his horse to escape. Alvis and Martinez were captured and immediately hanged to a tree by the citizens of the place. Of the six desperadoes, Alonzo Coto was the only one not wounded and who also made his escape. He was never again heard of in this vicinity, but some time afterward a man from Sonora passed through Campo who had run across Coto, who wanted to know if the men were still alive that he had once called upon, remarking that he would not make a second visit. From him was learned of the death of Lopez which occurred about a year after the fight. When the affray was over the citizens of Campo telegraphed to San Diego for medical aid and Dr. Millard and the sheriff started for Campo immediately, making the seventy-five-mile trip in twelve hours via Tia Juana and Tia Carte Mexico without stopping to feed their team. In thirty days Luman Gaskill was sufficiently recovered to be out again, while Silas Gaskill was not even confined to his bed from the effects of his wound. The Frenchman, who was shot and who was the cause of Lopez's death, died in San Diego some time later.

Among his curios Mr. Gaskill has a large copper kettle made in 1710 from native copper which was hammered out over a boulder, the beating being done with a rock. It has a capacity of fifty gallons. The copper carries some gold and it is estimated there is about $150 worth of gold in the kettle. He has gathered about him many interesting souvenirs of his early life in California, his reminiscences making him an interesting and entertaining companion. His natural characteristics of courage and an indomitable will have led him into many dangers but have also brought him safely through. His life has been an exciting one, but while he has enjoyed in experiences he has given his efforts toward a personal success as well as interesting himself in the upbuilding and development of whatever section he has made his home. He is highly esteemed by all who know him and held in regard as a representative of the early pioneer.

JACOB RUDEL. One of the substantial ranchers of Los Angeles county and a man who has done much for the advancement of the wine and grape industry in this section, Mr. Rudel has with two associates, recently established a winery at a cost of $20,000. He is thoroughly in touch with the spirit of his work, and has succeeded in acquiring a success which places him among the substantial citizens of this locality. Born in Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, July 27, 1853, he is a son of Henry and Mary (Hartmann) Rudel, both natives of Germany, where they spent their entire lives as agriculturists, the father passing away at the age of eighty-nine years and the mother at seventy-six. There were three children in the family, Jacob Rudel being the only one who came to America, a sister still surviving and making her home in Germany.

Jacob Rudel received his education in his native country, after which, at the age of eighteen years, he came to the United States, having previously learned the trade of coppersmith in Germany. While following his trade in New York City he attended night school in a further pursuit of education, which has proven of benefit to him in later life. After three years in the metropolis of the western world, he came to California and in Sacramento followed his trade for a railroad company in that city. He remained in that location for five years, when he came to Southern California, arriving in Los Angeles, where shortly afterward he established a coppersmith business for himself. The profits of two years enabled him to turn his attention to more desirable occupation, and he accordingly invested his means in property in the country, first purchasing forty acres of raw land, to which he added from time to time, until he now has one hundred and thirty acres in one body, upon which he has set out a vineyard of one hundred acres. At the time of purchase all of the land was devoid of improvements with the exception of forty acres in vines, but with the industry and perseverance inherited from his forefathers he set himself to the task of bringing it to rank with the most highly developed ranches of this section. That he has succeeded cannot be doubted when viewed in the light of events. His initial venture as a manufacturer of wine dates back to the year 1885, and formed the nucleus of his present business. This was organized in 1905 with himself as president. About one hundred thousand gallons of wine are turned out per year, and sold at wholesale to the eastern trade. The output from Mr. Rudel's vineyard is not quite sufficient to supply the capacity of the winery and he therefore buys grapes from other producers in his section. He has put up substantial improvements on his property, a comfortable residence, barns and outbuildings, and has made it one of the model ranches.

In 1885, in Los Angeles county, Mr. Rudel was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Vogel, a native of Switzerland and a daughter of Jacob Vogel, a pioneer of Southern California now deceased, his wife still surviving and making her home in Los Angeles. They have two children, Millie, aged nineteen, and Atwood, aged seventeen. Mr. Rudel is independent along political lines, reserving his right to cast his ballot for the man he considers best qualified for official duties. He takes an active interest in the growth and upbuilding of Los Angeles, and is still a stockholder in the First National Bank of that city.

JACOB SECKINGER. Ventura county has many well-to-do and successful farmers who have accumulated what they have of this world's goods through their own individual efforts. Among this class Jacob Seckinger occupies a position of note. Living near the village of Oxnard, he has a valuable ranch, and is industriously engaged in the prosecution of his independent calling, in which he is meeting with unquestioned success. A son of Thomas Seckinger, he was born, April 17, 1864, in Richland county, Ill., of thrifty German ancestry.

A native of Germany, Thomas Seckinger was reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1860 he immigrated with his family to the United States, and finding in the rich prairie soil of Illinois an excellent place for following his chosen occupation, he settled in Richland county, where he has since been employed in general farming, being now seventy-four years of age. In the Fatherland he married Catherine Deimel, who died on the home farm in Illinois in 1894, at the age of sixty-five years.

Acquiring a practical knowledge of the various branches of study pursued in the common schools of his native county, Jacob Seckinger was subsequently well drilled in the art and science of agriculture by his father, remaining at home until after becoming of age. Coming to California in 1886, he was employed as a tiller of the soil in Santa Barbara for three years. Removing to the Santa Clara valley in 1889, he purchased forty acres of land, and by dint of earnest work improved a good ranch, which he afterwards sold at an advantageous price. In January, 1905, he purchased his present valuable estate of one hundred and five acres, lying near Oxnard, and in its care and cultivation has met with satisfactory results. He makes a specialty of raising lima beans, of which he has ninety-five acres, while on the remainder of his ranch he reaps excellent crops of alfalfa.

October 29, 1890, Mr. Seckinger married Laura Reiman, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Schneider) Reiman, with whom she came to this country from Germany when a girl. Immigrating to the United States with their family in 1881, Mr. and Mrs. Reiman came directly to the Santa Clara valley, where he was engaged in general ranching until his death. His wife, an active woman of seventy-six years, now makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Seckinger. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Seckinger, three children have been born, Mary, Bertha and Elizabeth. Politically Mr. Seckinger is identified with the Republican party, and religiously both he and his wife are members of the Catholic Church.

W. C. BINNS. Standing high among the younger generation of thriving agriculturists of Ventura county is W. C. Binns, a well-known rancher and fruit-grower of Moorpark. With characteristic perseverance and diligent labor he is carrying on mixed farming with unquestioned ability and success, his property, with its many valuable improvements, ranking among the most attractive and desirable estates in this section of the state. A son of Rufus H. Binns, he was born, May 28, 1871, in Mahaska county, Iowa, where he grew to manhood.

Born in Columbus, Ohio, Rufus H. Binns lived there during his boyhood. In 1842 he went with his parents to Iowa, and when ready to choose a life occupation selected farming as the most congenial employment. In the years that followed he made a number of trips to California, and in 1892 settled permanently in Ventura county, where he owns property on which he is now residing. He has always taken an active interest in public affairs, in his earlier life being identified with the Democratic party, and afterwards being a Populist. While in Iowa he was elected supervisor on the independent ticket, and served in that capacity three terms. In Iowa he married Nancy Griffee, who was also born and reared in Columbus, Ohio. She came to California with him, and died, at the age of fifty-one years, in 1896, at the home of her only child, W. C. Binns.

Educated in Mahaska county, Iowa, W. C. Binns attended first the public schools, subsequently taking a course at the Oskaloosa Commercial College. Returning then to the home farm he remained beneath the parental rooftree until December, 1892, when he came to Southern California. After living for a short time in Ventura he purchased his present ranch, of which he took possession in 1893, and has since been profitably employed in its management. He has two hundred and fifty-five acres, about fifteen of which he devotes to the raising of apricots, the remainder being sowed to grain or planted to beans. He makes a specialty of drying apricots, selling on an average eight or nine tons of dried fruit a year. He deals to some extent in stock, raising cattle for the market, and in his agricultural and horticultural operations is very successful, raising profitable crops and disposing of them advantageously.

In August, 1901, Mr. Binns married Florence Lloyd, who was born in California, but as a girl spent several years in Nebraska, returning to this state when twelve years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Binns have two children, Alice and Helen. Politically Mr. Binns is an independent voter, casting his ballot in favor of the men and measures he deems best, unhampered by party restrictions, and socially he is a member of the Fraternal Aid Association of Simi. Religiously Mr. Binns belongs to the German Reformed Church, and Mrs. Binns is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS BOYD. The Santa Maria valley claims no more successful rancher than Thomas Boyd, whose property is admirably located, lying six miles from the village of that name. Of the four hundred acres comprising the ranch twenty acres are in apricots, while the remainder is in grain and beans, the latter commodity producing nine sacks to the acre.

A native of Ireland, Thomas Boyd was born in County Fermanagh June 25, 1850, being one of nine children born to his parents, Edward and Mary A. (Stephenson) Boyd, both also natives of the Emerald Isle. Mrs. Mary A. Boyd died at the early age of thirty years, and some time afterward the father was again married, this union resulting in the birth of six children. He passed away in his native land when in his sixty-fourth year, in the faith of the Established church, of which he was a member, as was his first wife also. Thomas Boyd has two brothers who are residents of California, besides two half-brothers. He himself was reared and educated in his native land until twenty years of age, when he took upon himself the responsibilities of his own maintenance. Crossing the Atlantic in 1870, he arrived in New York City in due time, and for about two years engaged as a stone mason and stone setter in that metropolis. Frugal in his habits, he laid by from his earnings whatever remained over and above actual expenses, and thus it was that he was enabled to come to the west in 1872 for the purpose of settling here permanently. In order to familiarize himself with the methods of farming in this country and furthermore to enable him to look about for a choice location he worked out as a ranch hand for about two and a half years, the greater part of the time in the vicinity of San Jose, Santa Clara county. Coming to the Santa Maria valley in 1874 he lived on rented land for a time, but later took up a quarter section. Subsequently he sold half of the tract, but in 1880 purchased three hundred and twenty acres adjoining the remainder, the whole combining to form his present ranch of four hundred acres. The land was in its primitive condition at the time it came into his possession, so that all of the improvements which have been necessary to bring it up to its present state of development are the work of his hands. All of the buildings are of a substantial character, and are in keeping with the family residence, which is one of the most elegant and up-to-date houses in the valley.

David A Hughes

In 1884 Thomas Boyd was united in marriage with Miss Emma Griffith, who is a native of the state, having been born in San Jose. Six children were born to them, but of these two died in infancy, and those now living are: Edna, the wife of J. F. Bradley; Elmer and Ruth, both of whom are attending school; and Emma Bernice. In his political views Mr. Boyd favors Republican principles, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, belonging to Santa Maria Lodge No. 340, F. & A. M. Mrs. Boyd is a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church of Santa Maria, toward the support of which Mr. Boyd contributes freely, in fact no worthy object fails to number him among its supporters, for he is a lover of his fellow-man and adopted home and appreciates to the fullest degree what both have meant to him in his struggle for a competency during the past thirty-two years.

DAVID A. KUGHEN. Holding a noteworthy position among the active and enterprising men who settled in Los Angeles when that thriving city was in its infancy is David A. Kughen, now a well-known and highly esteemed resident of Burbank. For many years he has been prominently connected with the agricultural and horticultural interests of Burbank and its vicinity, contributing his full share towards the industrial prosperity of the place. He is a man of great integrity and worth, keenly alive to the need of encouraging and supporting all beneficial projects, and as a strong Prohibitionist is especially interested in advancing the temperance cause. A native of Greene county, Pa., he was born, August 9, 1839, in Wayne township, where he was brought up and educated, living there until seventeen years of age.

Going to Illinois in 1857, Mr. Kughen worked on a farm in Bureau county for four years, when he migrated to Warren county. November 8, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, under command of the late Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and served as a private until discharged on account of physical disability in 1862. Returning to Warren county, he remained there until 1866, when he came as far west as Montana, residing there until 1883. During this time he was actively and prosperously engaged in ranching and mining until the spring of 1881, when he embarked in mercantile pursuits. Coming to Southern California in 1883, he opened a grocery store in Los Angeles, which was then but little more than a village, and for two years carried on quite a business, when he sold out, turning his attention to real estate, which was then booming. Moving to San Bernardino county, in 1887, he purchased one hundred acres of wild land and immediately began its improvement, setting out twenty acres to oranges and lemons. Selling his ranch in 1891, he once again became a resident of Los Angeles, and for a time was there engaged in the grocery business. Locating in Burbank in February, 1894, he bought his present ranch of thirty-five acres, situated one-half mile west of the village, at the same time purchasing his residence property in the village, where he has since made his home. On his ranch he has seven acres of walnuts, and the remainder of the land is in alfalfa and general farming. He is very progressive, using the most approved modern methods employed by scientific agriculturists, and in 1898 installed on his ranch the first pumping plant used for irrigating purposes in Burbank. He now rents a part of his land for the growing of small fruits and berries, and in the management of the remainder is meeting with characteristic success. In 1906 he disposed of ten acres.

In February, 1882, in Missouri, Mr. Kughen married Elizabeth Lovely, and of their union six children were born, namely: Flora Elizabeth, a student in Occidental College; Cassie Pearl, deceased; David L., John Thomas Whitman, who died December 31, 1905; Maude Hope; and Glenn Omar. From 1864, when he cast his first presidential vote, until 1895 Mr. Kughen was an earnest supporter of the principles of the Republican party, but since that time he has been one of the leading Prohibitionists of Los Angeles county and an active worker in party ranks. Both himself and his wife are faithful members of the Christian Church, in which he is serving as an elder, and toward the support of which he is a liberal contributor.

FRANK GISLER. The experiments of recent years have proved that much of the land in Ventura county is well adapted for the raising of beans and beets, and thus these two crops now form the principal products in a certain portion of the county. To an amateur the raising of these two products presents many formidable obstacles, and success only comes after repeated failures and discouraging experiences; yet in the end, to those who thoroughly learn the business, no occupation presents greater opportunities for the earning of a neat income as the result of a year's application and energetic devotion to the work. Perhaps few men in the county have a more thorough knowledge of the growing of beans and beets than Mr. Gisler possesses and as a result of his sagacity and energetic application he now owns one of the finest farms in the vicinity of Oxnard.

A native of Canton Uri, Switzerland, Frank Gisler was born January 17, 1872, being a son of Max Gisler and a brother of Joseph Gisler, well-known among Ventura county's agriculturists. When he was about seven years of age he accompanied his mother to America, joining his father in California, and here he was sent to the public schools until he had acquired a fair English education. When only a small boy he began to assist his father and in youth was the possessor of a thorough practical knowledge of agriculture. With his brother, Joseph, in 1893 he began to farm on the Jack Hill place, where more than four hundred acres were placed under cultivation to grain and beans. Later he was employed at Springville for one year and in 1897 he and his brother leased four hundred acres of the Patterson ranch, where they made a specialty of raising grain and beets. With the money thus earned in 1900 they bought one hundred and fifty-seven acres, known as the Clemens ranch, lying just north of Oxnard, and here they found themselves the owners of very fertile land, well adapted for beet-raising. On the division of the property in 1905 Frank received about seventy-five acres of plow land, and in addition he and his brother own fifty-six acres of beet-land at El Rio, the income from the two properties amounting to a gratifying sum.

The marriage of Frank Gisler was solemnized at El Rio April 8, 1901, by Rev. John Pujol, and united him with Miss Grace Eastwood, a sister of Ernest Eastwood, in whose sketch the family history appears. Mrs. Gisler is a daughter of George J. Eastwood and was born in Ventura, received an excellent education in the county schools, and after leaving school held office as deputy in the El Rio postoffice, of which her mother was then postmistress. Mr. and Mrs. Gisler are the parents of one child, Raymond. The family hold membership with the Santa Clara Catholic Church and contribute to its maintenance and missionary enterprises, as well as to other movements for the benefit of their community and the uplifting of the human race. While Mr. Gisler has not identified himself actively with politics and has not displayed any partisan spirit in his opinions, yet he stanchly advocates Republican principles and by his ballot gives support to the party and its platform.

HERBERT ALFRED BURDICK. As the oldest business man in El Monte Herbert A. Burdick has witnessed and participated in the development and upbuilding of the town and community and is still actively interested in all public affairs. He was born in Cortland county, N. Y., February 18, 1855, the second in a family of seven children, five sons and two daughters, of whom four sons are now in California. The father, Amos, was also born in that place, as was the grandfather, Joseph, who as a frontiersman engaged as a hunter and trapper, and in summers as a farmer. Amos Burdick followed his early training and became a farmer, in young manhood removing to Wisconsin, where he enlisted in Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, and served in the Civil war for three years and nine months. Returning to civic life he located in Milton, Rock county, and pursued agricultural lines until his final removal to California, where he located in Pomona, thence returning east and dying in North Loop, Neb. His wife was in maidenhood Martha Spencer, who was born in Cortland county, N. Y., a daughter of Oliver Spencer, who as a carpenter passed his entire life in the state of New York. Mrs. Burdick died in Modesto, Cal.

Herbert A. Burdick was reared in Wisconsin and in North Loop, Neb., and was educated in the public schools. Reared upon a farm, he continued this occupation when starting out for himself. He later homesteaded property in Greeley county, after which he went to Sheridan county and entered land and improved a farm, eventually owning two large and well improved farms. Having learned the blacksmith's trade in the meantime he built a shop in Rushville and worked at his trade. In 1888 he came to California and located in St. Helena, Napa county, remaining there for one year, and then came to El Monte and leased the shop which he is now conducting, two years later purchasing the same and continuing in business to the present writing. In 1896 he rebuilt the shop, installing an eight horse power engine, and added to his equipment until he now has the best equipped blacksmith shop in El Monte. He has also built a residence here.

In North Loop, Neb., Mr. Burdick was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Elizabeth McDowell, a native of Michigan, and they are the parents of two children: Lester, engaged in the plumbing business in El Monte, and Thisba. Fraternally Mr. Burdick is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Modern Woodmen of America and Fraternal Brotherhood. In religion he is a member of the Seventh Day Adventists, belonging to the Los Angeles church of this denomination. Politically he is a Republican.

ALBERT HADLEY. In the financial circles of Whittier and the surrounding country no name stands out in greater prominence than that of Hadley, two of whose representatives, Washington and Albert (father and son), organized the First National Bank of Whittier October 1, 1900, under national laws, and have since held the positions of president and vice-president respectively in the institution, the son being now the general manager of the entire banking business controlled by the company. In addition to his connection with this solid institution he acts as a director of the Whittier Savings Bank, which also is in a flouishing condition; and furthermore he has been on the directorate of the Whittier Home Telephone Company. During the existence of the Whittier Light and Fuel Company he was its president and manager, holding that office until the plant was sold to the Edison Electric Company.

A native of Annapolis, Ind., Albert Hadley is a son of Washington and Naomi (Henley) Hadley, and a grandson of Micajah Henley, a prominent Quaker of Wayne county, Ind.; also a grandson of Jonathan and Ann (Long) Hadley, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Virginia. When the family lived in Parke county, Ind., Albert Hadley had the advantages offered by Bloomingdale academy, and in early manhood he served as a clerk in the office of the treasurer of Parke county for a year. His first knowledge of the banking business was acquired while acting as errand boy in the Parke County Bank. During the four years of his employment by the bank he was promoted to be bookkeeper and teller. On resigning the latter position he removed to Kansas and in October, 1865, assisted in organizing the National Bank of Lawrence, in which he first held the position of bookkeeper and later was teller, assistant cashier and cashier successively, being with the same institution for twenty years. During the period of his residence in the town he was for two years associated with the Lawrence Savings Bank, but at the expiration of that time he returned to the National Bank. Besides his other connections he was identified with the Western Farm Mortgage Company, a local institution of Lawrence, in which he officiated as a director. Though not a partisan he was a stanch believer in Republican principles and while in Lawrence consented to fill the office of deputy city treasurer for one term, but with that exception he refrained from any participation in local politics.

On the removal to Denver, Colo., of the main office of the Western Farm Mortgage Company, Mr. Hadley bore an active part in the work and assisted in establishing the organization in its new quarters. It was his intention to remain with the company at Denver, but the altitude proved injurious to his health and for that reason he sought a more favorable climate in removing to California in 1890 and settling at Whittier. Immediately after coming to his new location he secured the position of paying teller and assistant cashier of the National Bank of California, in Los Angeles, in which later he was promoted to the cashiership. After an active association of eleven years with that institution he resigned on account of ill health and for a year relinquished all activities, but on the expiration of that time, having partially recovered his former strength, he again assumed business relations with a bank, this time beginning his connection with the institution in which he is now an officer.

The marriage of Mr. Hadley was solemnized at Rockville, Ind., and united him with Mary J. Brown, who was a member of an old New York family and died at Los Angeles in 1900. Three children survive her, namely: Frederick W., who by gradual promotions worked his way up to be paying teller in the National Bank of California and is now assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Whittier; Meda N., who was educated in the Marlborough school, Los Angeles, and died in Los Angeles November 3, 1903, at the age of twenty-two years; and Mildred M., a graduate from the Marlborough school, and now a student in Stanford University at Palo Alto. The family are identified with the Whittier Congregational Church, in the organization of which Mr. Hadley was an active worker and to which he has been a generous contributor. In fraternal relations he is connected with the Masons and Ancient Order of United Workmen. A man of varied talents, strong of mind, keen in analytical powers, quick in decision, energetic in action and resourceful in ideas, he has been a promoter of the permanent prosperity of Whittier and has accomplished much in behalf of its banking interests, its religious upbuilding and its educational development.

ALBERT G. BARTON. Worthy of representation in a volume of this character is Albert G. Barton, an esteemed and highly respected resident of San Pedro, who has been active and influential in the upbuilding of this section of Los Angeles county, and has been somewhat prominently identified with public affairs. A son of James Harvey Barton, he was born, in 1838, in Eaton township, Lorain county, Ohio.

A native of New York state, James Harvey Barton was born and brought up there, but in early manhood settled as a wheelright in Lorain county, Ohio. Following the march of civilization, he went to Wisconsin in 1845, and taking up a tract of land in Cottage Grove, Dane county, improved a fine farm. Retiring from active pursuits in his old age, he spent his last years in Stearns county, Minn., at the home of his son Albert, of whom we write. He married Eliza Bassett, a native of New York, and a daughter of Samuel Bassett, who subsequently settled as a pioneer in Ohio. She died on the home farm in Wisconsin. Of the five children born of their union, five grew to years of maturity and three are now living. Two of the sons served in the Civil war, namely: Sylvester, who served in a Wisconsin regiment during two terms of enlistment, and Albert G.

About seven years of age when his parents removed to Wisconsin, Albert G. Barton was brought up on a farm, and educated in the district schools of Dane county. Going to Minnesota in 1858, he worked in what is now Kandiyohi county for about four years. In the fall of 1862 he enlisted in Company D, Minnesota Mounted Rangers, and until mustered out, a year later, was employed in subduing the Sioux Indians. Re-enlisting, in the spring of 1864, in the Minnesota Independent Battalion Volunteer Cavalry, he was located on the frontier for two years. Returning then to Stearns county, Minn., he was there extensively and prosperously employed in farming and stock-raising for a number of years. Deciding then to change his place of residence and his occupation, he came to San Pedro, Cal., in 1883, and was here engaged in contracting and building for six years. Being appointed postmaster in 1889, he served for some little time after the change of administration, in 1893. He subsequently carried on general ranching at Altadena for a short time, but not satisfied in that part of the county soon returned to San Pedro, and having erected a good residence at the corner of Center and Santa Cruz streets has since made this his home.

In Melrose, Stearns county, Minn., Mr. Barton married Emeline J. Foote, who was born in Ohio, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Mrs. Cora Evelyn McIntire, of Pasadena; Mrs. Alberta Adeline Nichols, of San Pedro; and Mrs. Ina Ozella Fawcett, of San Pedro. Politically Mr. Barton is an uncompromising Republican, sustaining the principles of his party at every opportunity. Fraternally he is a Master Mason, and socially he is a member of Harbor City Post No. 185, G. A. R., of San Pedro. Religiously both Mr. and Mrs. Barton are valued members of the Episcopal Church.

GEORGE B. WEIDLER. Throughout Los Angeles county are many young men of promise, who are already important factors in developing and promoting the industrial prosperity of Southern California, prominent among the number being George B. Weidler, a poultry raiser and dealer, living near Wiseburn. Endowed with a remarkable degree of energy and push, he is rapidly building up for himself a substantial business and winning an excellent reputation for ability and worth. A son of the late Samuel W. Weidler, he was born, in 1880, in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he grew to man's estate.

Born, reared and educated near Lancaster, Pa., Samuel W. Weidler resided in his native town until 1875, when he moved to Ohio. Locating in Cincinnati, he built the mill and warehouse that still bear his name, and successfully operated both until his death, in 1904. He married Mary A. Beal, a native of Ottawa, Canada, and they became the parents of three children, all boys, one of whom died in infancy, the others being George B., the special subject of this sketch; and Frank K., who is in business in Los Angeles, being a member of the Advance Buggy Company.

Inheriting considerable property from the parental estate, which was sold after the death of the father, George B. Weidler came to Los Angeles county, and in April, 1905, invested in land, buying his present ranch, comprising thirteen acres, near Wiseburn. He has since erected some fine, up-to-date chicken houses, fenced off yards, and has already established a good market business as a raiser of full-blooded White Plymouth Rock chickens, catering to the high-class hotel trade in Los Angeles. His ranch is well improved, having a substantial residence, and a good barn, and all of the most approved modern conveniences for successfully carrying on his chosen work.

Charles A. Horn

CHARLES I. DORN. As postmaster and general merchant of Moorpark, Ventura county, Charles I. Dorn is named among the representative business men of this section. Like many others of the men who are substantial citizens of California, Mr. Dorn is a native of the middle west, his birth having occurred in Ridgeway, Iowa, November 10, 1873. His parents, Anderson and Arvilla (Reimay) Dorn, were also natives of Iowa, from which state they emigrated to California in 1879 and in Contra Costa county made their home for about nine years. Removing to Ventura county in July, 1888, they located in the Cuyama valley, where the last days of the mother were spent, her death occurring in 1898, at the age of fifty-six years. Subsequently the father removed to Bakersfield, where he died in 1902, at the age of seventy-eight years.

About six years old when his parents brought him to California, Charles I. Dorn received his education in the public schools of Contra Costa county, which remained his home until his fifteenth year. After locating in Ventura county he became interested in the oil fields, engaging in this business in both this county and Los Angeles county, and remaining so occupied up to within four years ago. At that time he took charge of the hotel which he had previously purchased at Fillmore and with a partner ran a livery business, conducting these combined interests for the period of two years. Severing his connections with Fillmore in 1904, he came to Moorpark and established a general merchandise business, carrying a very complete line of groceries, hardware, furnishings, and a general dry goods stock, and in addition buys and ships hay, grain and beans, doing a general commission business. He was appointed postmaster in 1904 and has since ably discharged the duties devolving upon him. He is a man of business ability, combined with good judgment and energy, which have brought about his success in whatever line of work he has taken up.

In Bardsdale, April 30, 1902, Mr. Dorn was married to Miss Mattie Lemmon, a native of Texas, and born of this union is one son, Lawrence M. In his fraternal relations Mr. Dorn is a member of the Masonic lodge of Oxnard, and also of the Fraternal Brotherhood. He is a liberal and public spirited citizen and takes an active interest in advancing the welfare of the community, serving for some time as school trustee.

EMILE RAMBAUD. The oldest merchant in Puente, Los Angeles county, is Emile Rambaud, who was born in France, near Gap, Hautes-Alpes, August 20, 1866, a son of Pierre, the representative of a family which traces its ancestry back six hundred years. The elder man was a farmer and stockman in the south of France, being so engaged throughout his entire life in that location, where his death eventually occurred. He is survived by his wife, formerly Leontine Marchant, also representing an old family of southern France, who makes her home on the old farm. They became the parents of eight children, of whom seven are living, the third child being Emile. He was reared on the paternal farm in France, receiving his education in the public schools and Gap College. At the age of twenty-one years he enlisted in the Second Battalion, Second Company, One Hundred and Fifty-second Infantry, of the regular army of France, and after serving for three years was honorably discharged. In 1892 he came to California and in Los Angeles entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad, remaining so occupied for a year, when he bought out his uncle, Seraphin Rambaud, who owned the pioneer store at Puente, since which time he has continued the business profitably. He conducts a general merchandise establishment, carrying a full line of goods generally found in such an enterprise.

In Los Angeles Mr. Rambaud was united in marriage with Miss Marian Oxarart, a native of Los Angeles, and a member of one of the old families of this section, and they are the parents of two children, Emelianne and Gaston. Mr. Rambaud is an active Republican and is interested in all matters of public import, having served one term as school trustee.

HENRY HORACE WEBB. Among the enterprising business men of Santa Monica who have attained success in their work is Henry Horace Webb, well known as an extensive dealer in ice and as a transfer agent. A man of energetic temperament, honest and upright, he is well worthy of the assured position which he holds in the estimation of the people of the community. A native of Canada East, he was born September 11, 1851, at Roxton Falls. His father, Henry Webb, born in England, migrated as a young man to Canada East, where he married Salinda Hall. He followed the trade of brickmaker during the greater part of his active career, first in Canada, then in Fillmore county, Minn. Coming to California as a pioneer of Santa Monica, he was for a time employed in buying and selling property, but afterwards lived retired.

Going with his parents to Minnesota, Henry

Horace Webb completed his early education in the public schools of Fillmore county, remaining at home until becoming of age. Going then to Boone county, Iowa, he was there prosperously employed in the transfer business for five years. In search of a broader field of action, he came from there to California in 1878, locating in Los Angeles, where for eight years he managed a large transfer business, having an office at first at the corner of Los Angeles and First streets, but subsequently removing it to the new brick block which he built at No. 233 Los Angeles street. He was likewise actively engaged in mercantile pursuits, running a grocery, and in both lines of industry was very successful, carrying on a fine business until after the collapse of the great boom. Coming then to Santa Monica, in partnership with F. W. Vogel, he established an ice business and in addition has also established a large and lucrative business as a transfer agent, at the present time keeping about twenty-four horses employed.

In Boone county, Iowa, Mr. Webb married Mary W. Miller, a daughter of Charles Miller, a pioneer settler of Iowa, and into their household three children have been born: Winnie B., Perry H. and Clarence E. Politically Mr. Webb is identified with the Republican party, supporting its principles by voice and vote. Fraternally he is a member of the Masons, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and the Royal Arcanum. He is a fine representative of the self-made men of our county, by his own efforts having acquired considerable wealth. He has a pleasant home at the corner of Oregon and Eighth streets, and is likewise interested in Santa Monica real estate.

WINFIELD SCOTT FLINT. An acquaintance with the west begun during the period of his service in the regular army first attracted the attention of Mr. Flint to the advantages offered by the Pacific coast, and upon receiving his honorable discharge from the government service he returned to the coast country, where he has since made his home. Of eastern birth and parentage, he was born in Rensselaer county, N. Y., September 22, 1865, and is a son of Clement and Hester (Gould) Flint, natives respectively of New York and Florida. For many years the father engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Brooklyn and New York City, but while still in the prime of life he established himself in Rensselaer county, and continued professional work in that section of the state. When advancing years brought a desire for a release from the arduous life of a busy physician he relinquished his large practice and sought the genial climate of California, settling in 1883 in the Poway valley in San Diego county, where now, at the age of eighty-three years, he is enjoying a merited rest from professional and business activities. His wife, who is fourteen years his junior, is also living and possesses mental and physical faculties in unimpaired strength.

Little occurred to individualize the youthful years of W. S. Flint until his departure from the old homestead to take up the active duties of life for himself. In 1882 he enlisted in the regular army as a member of Company F, Twenty-first United States Infantry, and shortly afterward was sent to Washington with the regiment, being stationed at Vancouver Barracks, where he remained for six months. Later he was stationed at Fort Sidney, Neb., until his discharge from the army. During his brief period of service in the west he had been favorably impressed with the coast region and determined to return thither with a view to making a permanent location. During December of 1884 he arrived in San Francisco and there began to learn the blacksmith's trade, of which he acquired a thorough knowledge during the period of his apprenticeship.

On coming to San Diego county in 1885 Mr. Flint settled at Santa Ysabel and soon after his arrival he took up a homestead from the government. This he improved and made his home, giving his attention to the raising of stock and also of such varieties of grain as suited the soil and climate. Until 1896 he gave his attention unreservedly to agriculture, but during the year named he bought a blacksmith's shop at Santa Ysabel and gained a position of prominence in his locality as an upright business man and expert horseshoer. Near the village he owns one hundred and seventy acres of ranch land and his residence close to town gives him a modern, substantial home with all of the advantages of country life. Before her marriage Mrs. Flint was Millie Paine, her marriage to Mr. Flint occurring in this county January 24, 1889. She was born in Maine and in 1869 was brought to California by her father, C. Paine, who established the family home at Poway. Later Mr. Paine removed to Mesa Grande and since then has remained in that locality, engaging in the fruit business and in general ranch pursuits. Mrs. Flint passed away November 20, 1906. She was an earnest member of the Congregational Church, a lady of gentle character and noble traits, a wise mother to their three children, Margaret F., John W. and Mary F., and popular in the best social circles of the community.

For some years Mr. Flint has held membership in Banner Court No. 8522, A. O. F., at Julian, and to its helpful work he has been a regular contributor. Though not a partisan in politics and at no time a seeker for office, he nevertheless has stanch convictions concerning tariff problems and national issues and gives his allegiance to the Republican party. He was appointed deputy sheriff under F. M. Jennings and took up the duties of its position in San Diego January 1, 1907. Few men of his community are more fond of reading than he, and much of his leisure time is devoted to a study of current events as depicted by the daily press and leading magazines. As a consequence of this study he has gained a familiarity with current affairs, local, state and national history, and measures for the advancement of the people, which gives him a place among the best informed citizens of his locality.

AARON E. KEPNER. About one mile west of Lemon, and not far from the Fairview school house, may be seen one of the fine looking and productive ranches which abound in Southern California. When Mr. Kepner took possession of this property a little over twenty years ago there was apparently little to encourage one in undertaking to transform a barley field (for such it was), but the passing of years has noted marvelous changes. Clearing away the barley stubble he set out a vineyard and also some deciduous fruits, in those days watering his fields by means of a barrel, but in spite of this laborious and unsatisfactory method of irrigation his horticultural undertaking was a complete success and for years he bore the distinction of having the finest vineyard of Muscats in this vicinity. His vineyard has since been replaced by walnuts, having a grove of twenty acres, sixteen acres in deciduous fruits, while the remainder of his sixty-acre ranch is used for alfalfa raising and general farming.

Born in Nora, Jo Daviess county, Ill., December 5, 1849, Aaron E. Kepner is a son of B. H. and Sarah (Bushey) Kepner, both natives of Pennsylvania. They were married in the east and three of their thirteen children were born before their immigration to the frontier of Illinois in 1847. Settling on a farm in Jo Daviess county the father carried on agricultural pursuits throughout the remainder of his active years and there reared his large family of children. With the wife of his young manhood, who had uncomplainingly shared the inconveniences and vicissitudes of pioneer life, he was spared to enjoy a freedom from care in his later years, which were passed in California, both dying in Lemon. The eldest of the parental family born in Illinois, Aaron E. was brought up in that state until he was twenty years of age, in the mean time attending the public schools of Nora. With the knowledge of farming which he had gleaned by assisting his father on the home farm he set out to try his own luck along the same line, settling on a farm near Montrose, Henry county, Mo., in 1869. After remaining there fifteen years, or until 1884, he disposed of his interests in the Mississippi valley to come to California. His wisdom in the selection of another choice piece of property was demonstrated when, during the same year, he purchased his present sixty-acre ranch in the Fairview district, not far from Lemon. From an unpromising barley field he evolved first one of the finest vineyards in this part of the state, and now on the same acreage has one of the most productive walnut groves in the vicinity. Besides the twenty acres in walnuts he has sixteen acres in deciduous fruits and twenty-four acres devoted to alfalfa and general farming. All in all the Kepner ranch is considered one of the best in this part of Los Angeles county and its proprietor is recognized as one of the important factors in the county's upbuilding.

In Lafayette county, Wis., September 29, 1872, Aaron E. Kepner was united in marriage with Miss Roxie Rowe, who was born in Penn Yan, N. Y. Her father, Delevan Rowe, also a native of the Empire state, carried on a hotel and also a planing-mill and cabinet-making business in the east, but after his removal to Illinois settled upon a farm near the Kepner family in Jo Daviess county. Subsequently he removed to Iowa, and now resides on a farm near Iowa Falls, in which locality he is a power in the ranks of the Republican party. Mrs. Rowe was before her marriage Sarah Shaw, born in Orange county, N. Y., and who counted among her kinsmen the well-known Kernochan and McCartney families of that state. The death of Mrs. Rowe occurred in Illinois, at which time she left three children, of whom her daughter Roxie, now Mrs. Kepner, was the eldest. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kepner, but only three of them are now living. The eldest, Etha, who before her marriage was one of the most talented music teachers in Pomona, is now the wife of Dr. E. L. Johnson, of Topeka, Kans.; Ida died in Missouri when seven years of age; Ross B., who graduated from Pomona College in 1906 with the degree of B. S., is now taking a post-graduate course in engineering in the University of Michigan; Florence (known by her family and intimate friends as Birdie) died in Pomona in 1899, when seventeen years of age; Ernest died in infancy; and the youngest, Louis, is attending the Pomona high school. Both Mr. and and Mrs. Kepner are members of the Baptist Church of Pomona, exemplifying in their daily living the principles of their professed religion. Mr. Kepner is a member of the Walnut Fruit Growers' Association.

JAMES G. WARREN. The career of James G. Warren has been diversified and full of interesting events, his school days being interrupted to answer the call of his country to arms in defense of the Union; the long, weary and heart-rending service to 1865 being given uncomplainingly; his return to civic life; and following, a location in various states of the Union and under all circumstances, from the most unfavorable to the most propitious. He is now an honored citizen of Southern California, successful in his personal enterprises and prominent among the residents of El Monte. He was born in East Aurora, Erie county, N. Y., April 21, 1842, a grandson of Gen. William Warren in command during the war of 1812 at Buffalo, N. Y., and whose great-grandfather, William Warren, was a cousin of the General Warren who fell at Bunker Hill, the name having been established in America by two brothers who crossed the Atlantic in the Mayflower. Mr. Warren's grandfather, an old-line Whig, died at the age of ninety-four years.

When ten years old Mr. Warren's parents took him to Geauga county, Ohio, where the next five years of his life were passed. He attended the public schools up to the age of fifteen years, when he left home and went to Buchanan county, Iowa, where he engaged in working on a farm. The inherited patriotism within him stirred to life by the needs of 1862, he enlisted for service in August of that year, in Company C, Twenty-seventh Regiment Iowa Infantry, was mustered in at Dubuque, Iowa, and at once sent against the Sioux Indians in Minnesota. After three months in the north his regiment was transferred to the scene of activities in Tennessee and Mississippi, where he participated in the siege of Vicksburg, was with the Red River expedition, Sabine Cross Roads, etc.; then returned to the relief of General Sturgis, checked Forest's cavalry, and participated in the siege of Nashville. Following this he was in the siege of Mobile and the capture of that city, and Forts Spanish and Blakely. He came safely through the historic struggle and never received the slightest wound. He was mustered out of service in 1865, at Clinton, Iowa, and immediately afterward returned to Manchester, same state.

Until 1868 Mr. Warren engaged in farming and teaming in Manchester, when he went to Adams county and purchased land upon which he remained four years, with the exception of one year spent in Belleville, Kans. In 1875 he went to Jewell county, Kans., and near Mankato homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he engaged extensively in general farming. Later he took up the barber business in Mankato, while his wife, conducted a millinery store. These combined interests were continued until 1894 when Mr. Warren disposed of his business and came to California, making his home for six months in Ontario, after which he went to Pasadena and engaged at his trade. Selecting as a more desirable vocation that to which he had early been trained, in 1896 he located on the farm which he now owns, consisting then of five acres of walnuts, to which after three years he gave all of his attention, having in the meantime disposed of the barber shop which he had established in El Monte. Later he purchased ten acres of walnuts on the Monrovia road, and also owns forty acres near Chino, San Bernardino county, which he is farming at the present writing. A part of his attention at present is given to the raising of fine poultry, white Plymouth Rocks and Buff Orpingtons being his principal fancy stock, the latter, in connection with the massive pines on his place, giving the name of Pines Orpington ranch.

Mr. Warren has been twice married, by the first union, with Cordelia L. Beagle, having five children, namely: Ernest, Fred, Lulu, Edith and Vivian. His present wife was formerly Mrs. Mary A. (Kohler) Trump, a woman of rare qualities, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and one who has many friends. Mr. Warren was a charter member of Jim Lane Post G. A. R., at Mankato, and served as its commander for two years, and is now identified with Pasadena Post. Politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, which ticket he has always voted. He belongs to the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association.

HENRY AUSTIN WARNOCK. Thorough familiarity with the agricultural conditions of San Diego county, acquired by a life-long residence in this portion of California, admirably qualifies Mr. Warnock for the wise and successful supervision of his large landed interests in the vicinity of Ramona. The people of his home neighborhood give him a high position in their esteem and confidence, this respect being accorded him as a result of their acquaintance with his liberal views, high intelligence and marked uprightness. A lifelong resident of his present district, he was born at the old Warnock homestead on Santa Teresa rancho, September 3, 1865, and is a son of William and Ellen (Denig) Warnock and a brother of W. J. Warnock, in whose sketch appears the family history. During his boyhood years he was sent to the district schools and later had the advantage of a course of study in St. Vincent's College at Los Angeles, after which he took a commercial course in Heald's Business College at San Francisco.

Albert J. Freeman

Returning home on the completion of his collegiate course Mr. Warnock took up independent ranching. From the first he was interested in stock-raising and kept on his ranch about one hundred head of cattle and from fifteen to twenty head of horses. In the year 1900 he enlarged his responsibilities by the purchase of a ranch adjoining the old homestead and here he now has twelve hundred and twenty acres of land, of which three hundred and fifty acres are under cultivation, and about fifteen acres are planted in apple trees now in bearing condition. Each year witnesses some improvement made on the ranch, for the owner is a man of progressive spirit and is not satisfied with anything less than the best. In his desire to advance the interests of the ranch he has the active co-operation of his wife, formerly Elizabeth E. Wolfe, and a native of Tennessee, but reared in Southern California, where their marriage took place October 26, 1901. Born of their union are three children, William A., Mabel Elizabeth and Eugene Douglas. While Mr. Warnock has always given his support to Democratic principles he has never sought local leadership in the party nor has he accepted any political office except that of constable. While filling the position of school trustee for two terms he gave his district faithful service in the interests of its educational progress and proved himself to be capable, well informed and progressive, aiming constantly to promote the welfare of the schools.

ALBERT J. FREEMAN. During the years immediately following the discovery of gold in California the tide of emigration drifted constantly from the east toward the shores of the Pacific. Among the thousands of home-seekers and Argonauts came William D. Freeman, who crossed the plains in 1854 in company with a large party of emigrants making the journey with ox-teams and wagons. A native of New York, he was born in Chautauqua county, September 27, 1827, and for many years he lived in Illinois, where he was a pioneer and honored citizen of McHenry county. Upon coming to the west he engaged in mining in Amador county, but later settled in Marin county, where he and his wife still live at their old homestead, the former now seventy-nine years of age, and the latter seventy-two. Both are earnest members of the Christian Church and for years have been identified with its fellowship. The wife and mother bore the maiden name of Mary Halstead and was a native of Canada, but came to the United States in girlhood, and September 15, 1850, became the wife of William D. Freeman. Born of their union were twelve children, of whom two daughters are now deceased. Ten are now living, among them being H. D., a well-known resident of Santa Barbara.

After the family had settled in Marin county a son was born February 5, 1858, who was named Albert J., and who, in common with his brothers and sisters, received a public-school education and grew up to a thorough knowledge of ranching. From early manhood he has been interested in the poultry business and still makes a specialty of that work. Until about 1898 he remained in Marin county, but at that time he moved to Santa Barbara county and settled on his present farm near Santa Maria. Of his tract of eighty-three acres he has forty acres sown in grain and twenty-five acres planted in corn. In his poultry yards he has three thousand young chickens and thirteen hundred hens. During the hatching season he uses five incubators with a capacity of from five hundred and four to five hundred and seventy-six each. These incubators he constructed without other aid, for he possesses considerable ability as a mechanic and executes work with skill. Other necessary arrangements have been made on his well-equipped chicken ranch, and the neat appearance of the place proves him to be a man of energy and wise judgment.

The marriage of Mr. Freeman was solemnized February 20, 1901, and united him with Miss Emma L. Hardisty, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of two children, Ivy and Vina. Mrs. Freeman is a daughter of Charles W. and Clarinda (Meadows) Hardisty, the father born in Savannah, Mo., in 1844, and the mother born in Abingdon, Ill., in 1849. In 1879 Mr. Hardisty removed from Missouri to Montana and during 1883 arrived in California, settling in Santa Rosa, Sonoma county. A thoughtful study of present-day conditions has made Mr. Freeman a convert to the doctrines of socialism, which he upholds not only theoretically, but also at the polls. His wife holds membership in the Christian Church and both contribute to its maintenance. For some years Mrs. Freeman was one of the leading members of the Bloomfield Lodge of Rebekahs in Sonoma county and during the entire period of her passing through the chairs therewith she did not miss one meeting of the lodge. At different times she filled all of its chairs and in recognition of her able leadership and deep interest in the lodge its members honored her with the past grand jewel of her office.

HENRY B. PRATT. The records that give the genealogy of the Pratt family show that its representatives of past generations, like those of the present, held positions of honorable prominence in the various localities of their residence. The first of the name in this country settled along the Atlantic coast in New England, later generations following the trend of emigration toward the west. Julius D. Pratt, a native of Connecticut, became a pioneer of Illinois in 1836 and took up a large tract of raw land near Sterling, where he engaged in farm pursuits and also for a time taught school. When thirty-one years of age he died in 1841 and his wife, Mary (Bowman) Pratt, a native of Pennsylvania, died the year following his demise. Their son, John B., was born in Dixon, Ill., March 24, 1835, and remained at home until the discovery of gold in Pike's Peak, when he went to the mines of Colorado. Two years later he proceeded to Auburn, Ore., and during the next five years he engaged in freighting between that country and Illinois and other points of the Mississippi valley, after which he spent a year at his old Illinois home. Going next to Iowa, he settled on a raw tract of land in Mitchell county, where he gave his attention to the development of an improved farm. Though prospered financially, he found the climate unpleasantly rigorous and therefore removed to California in 1892, settling on a farm near Ramona. Ten years later he rented the land and since then has lived in retirement. In addition to his tract of two hundred and forty-one acres in this valley he owns one hundred and fifty-two acres in the Sorrento valley. Politically he has voted the Republican ticket ever since the organization of the party.

While living in Mitchell county, Iowa, John B. Pratt married Julia Agnes Holbrook, a native of Wisconsin. Three sons comprise their family, namely: Henry B., living near Ramona; Clarence L., who is interested in a store at Pacific Beach, Cal.; and Arthur Earl of Ramona. The eldest of the three sons was born in Mitchell county, Iowa, September 6, 1874, and in early boyhood was taken to Howard county, Iowa, where he attended the public schools. In 1892 he accompanied the family to California and soon afterward rented a tract of farm land. During 1901 he bought his present farm of thirty-six acres and in 1906 purchased eighty acres in the San Pasqual valley, besides which he rents two hundred acres which he has under cultivation to grain, with a certain portion utilized for the pasturage of stock. Like his father, he is a thorough believer in the principles of the Republican party and always votes that ticket. For some years he has been actively identified with the Modern Woodmen of America at Ramona. His marriage was solemnized in the village of Ramona and united him with Miss Katherine M., daughter of John Sause, of Iowa. Mrs. Pratt was born in Iowa, but from girlhood has been a resident of Southern California, and remained in her father's home until her marriage, October 19, 1899, when the young couple began housekeeping on a rented farm, later moving to a farm of their own. They are the parents of three children, Alice Marie, Agnes Flora and Charles Henry. The family attend the Congregational Church and are identified with its membership, as well as liberal contributors to its charities.

RICHARD L. ANDREWS. Numbered among the representative agriculturists in the vicinity of Hynes is Richard L. Andrews, a prosperous tiller of the soil, who is devoting his time and attention to general farming and dairying. He was born June 10, 1869, in Canada, which was likewise the place of birth of his father, Joshua Andrews.

Learning the trade of a blacksmith when young, Joshua Andrews followed his chosen occupation in Canada for many years, being very successful. Migrating with his family to California in 1881, he resided for two years in San Francisco. Coming from there to Los Angeles county, he followed blacksmithing a number of years, first in Downey, and later at Norwalk. Settling near Long Beach in 1895, he devoted himself to the growing of lemons for a number of seasons, but his fine lemon grove is now in the process of being sub-divided, and from the sale of lots he will realize a handsome income. He married Elizabeth D. Moat, a native of England, and of their four children three survive. Politically he is a sound Democrat, active in party ranks, and has served as road overseer. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and to the Knights of Pythias. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Receiving a limited education in the common schools of Canada, Richard L. Andrews came with the family to California in 1881, and in 1883 came with the others from San Francisco to Los Angeles county. Beginning to learn the trade of blacksmith in Downey, he worked with his father until about twenty years old, when he started in business on his own account in Norwalk. He subsequently spent a year in Portland, Ore., but on his return continued in business for himself in Norwalk for a year or more. Changing his occupation then, he rented a part of the Bixby ranch, which he managed about five years meeting with excellent results in his operations. Thus encouraged, he bought, in November, 1897, his present fine ranch of one hundred acres, near Hynes, and as a general farmer has since been exceedingly prosperous. He raises good crops of corn and alfalfa and also carries on a large and profitable dairy business, keeping about thirty cows.

C. M. Gifford.

In October, 1895, Mr. Andrews married Maria E. Harris, who was born in Texas, a daughter of William Harris, a native of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews are the parents of four children, namely: Mabel I., Gertrude L., Richard J. and Susie E. In national politics Mr. Andrews is a straightforward Democrat, but in local affairs he votes independent of party lines, considering the fitness of the man for the office for which he is nominated.

CHARLES M. GIFFORD. Conspicuous among the industries contributing to the material development of San Diego may be mentioned the olive oil factory and pickling and canning factory established by Mr. Gifford in this city upon a very small scale in 1900, the original plant being limited to an equipment for the pickling of olives. In 1903 an olive canning plant was added for the canning of the largest olives grown in the state, known as Gifford's Best. At the present writing (1906) a factory is under process of construction providing a larger capacity than was previously possible. The new brick structure is 100x100 feet in dimensions and two stories in height, provided with engines of suitable power and with all the equipment necessary for the proper management of the business upon the extensive scale now established. Competent judges claim that the factory, when completed, will be the finest in the state for the purposes desired, and already the reputation of the plant has become so widely known that shipments are made from points as far distant as Stockton and the San Joaquin valley.

The Giffords are an old eastern family. Hiram Gifford was a contractor and builder in New York and later in Pennsylvania and his son, Frank, a native of the former state, learned under him the carpenter's trade, in all of its details, afterward following the occupation at Northeast, Erie county, Pa., but eventually removing to Illinois to spend his last days. The wife of Frank Gifford bore the maiden name of Kate Linman and was born in New York, but now resides in Los Angeles. Through her father, Peter, the lineage is traced back to John Linman, a native of Denmark. The genealogy of the family shows a direct descent from Martin Luther. In the family of Frank Gifford there were five children, only two of whom are now living. During the Civil war the father enlisted in a Pennsylvania regiment and his four brothers also fought for the defense of the Union.

The next to the eldest among the five children, Charles M. Gifford, was born at Northeast, Erie county, Pa., May 7, 1856, and received common school advantages. At the age of fourteen he removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio and settled on a farm near Cleveland. When twenty years of age he went to Cheboygan, Mich., from which point he and his brother, D. F., ran the steam yacht Katie for two years. On selling the yacht they built the tug Gifford and for ten years carried on business with the same, selling out in 1886. The following year the Gifford was lost in the Straits of Mackinaw. During 1886 Mr. Gifford made his first trip to California and, being favorably impressed with San Diego county, he removed hither a year later, settling on a ranch eighteen miles east of San Diego. On the land he planted an orange grove and an olive orchard, securing the necessary irrigation facilities from a spring. Later he bought one hundred and one acres adjoining. Twenty acres of the property were in an orchard, while the balance was devoted to general farm pursuits. While engaged in horticultural and farm pursuits Mr. Gifford's attention was directed to the fact that the olive business presented a new and profitable field for investment, and accordingly he began to devote himself to the same, with such success that in the fall of 1895 he sold the ranch in order that he might give his time exclusively to business affairs.

The marriage of Mr. Gifford took place in Cheboygan, Mich., and united him with Miss Rachel Wheelock, a native of that city. They have three children, DeWitt, Ruth and Orville, the eldest of whom now assists his father in the factory. Mrs. Gifford is a member of the Christian Church and the family are contributors to its work and missionary activities. Politically Mr. Gifford votes with the Republican party, but takes no special part in local politics and has never been a candidate for office. The San Diego Chamber of Commerce is one of the progressive bodies whose work he upholds by his membership and influence. After coming to San Diego he was initiated into Sunset Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand. Later he became connected with the Encampment (of which he is past chief patriarch) the Canton and the Rebekahs, to which latter organization his wife also belongs. In preparation for the Grand Encampment of 1905, held in San Diego, he was appointed a member of the executive committee having in charge the plans for the gathering. Those in attendance were enthusiastic in their tributes to the excellent management and sagacious ability displayed by those having the work of preparation in charge, and the convention undoubtedly did much to direct the attention of visitors from other points to the superior advantages offered by San Diego as a city of homes and a center of refinement and culture.

WILLIAM ANDREW. There is always a peculiar interest attached to the history of any of those residents of the United States who have come here from a foreign land, and more particularly of those who have settled in that part of it with which we are most familiar. This is especially true of William Andrew, of San Diego, who has had a varied experience during his active career, and has been associated with the actual life of three continents. A son of John Andrew, he was born October 24, 1858, in the highlands of Scotland, his birth occurring in Wick, Caithness county, where, among its rugged hills and mountains, he grew to sturdy manhood. His father, a farmer by occupation, spent his entire life in Wick, and his mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth St. Clair, was also a life-long resident of Scotland. They were the parents of ten children, all of whom are living, William, the subject of this sketch, and Daniel being the only ones in California.

At the age of fifteen years, having obtained a practical common school education, William Andrew began learning the carpenter's trade in Wick, and two years later went to Edinburgh, where he completed it. In the meantime he attended the night schools of that city, further fitting himself for his chosen occupation by taking a course in drawing and architecture. In 1878, making a bold venture, he sailed from Glasgow, Scotland, for New Zealand, going by way of the Cape of Good Hope, and after a voyage of four months and five days arrived at Dunedin. For two years he followed his trade in that vicinity, after which he enlisted in Company 5, Seventh Regiment, New Zealand Field Force, in which for three years he fought the Maoris. On being mustered out of service he left that country, going around Cape Horn to Rio Janeiro, Brazil, where he was employed in carpentering for three months. Not at all pleased with that city he returned to Great Britain and after working for a short time in England went to Scotland, where he assisted in the construction of the immense bridge across the Firth of Forth, being foreman of a gang of men for fifteen months. Immigrating to the United States in 1886, he followed his trade in Philadelphia for two years, and from 1888 until 1901 was employed as a contractor and builder in Chicago, Ill. In 1901 he spent a short time in Louisville, Ky., but not satisfied with his prospects returned to Chicago. In October, 1902, he came to San Diego, and has since been very successfully employed as a contractor and builder, he and his brother Daniel, under the firm name of Andrew Brothers, having had charge of the erection of many of the finest residences in the city. The development of his native mechanical skill and artistic ability, combined with his practical experience, has given Mr. Andrew a complete mastery of his trade, and he has obtained recognition as one of the leading contractors and carpenters of this part of the county.

In Glasgow, Scotland, Mr. Andrew married Alexandria Henderson, a native of that city. She died in San Diego, leaving four children, namely: Jessie, George, Arthur and Esther. Mr. Andrew is active in the business circles of San Diego, belonging to the Chamber of Commerce, and to the Master Builders' Association. Politically he is a steadfast Republican; fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and religiously he is a Presbyterian.

JOHN D. FARLEY. From the time of his arrival in San Diego county when he was a lad in his "teens" until the present time, when he ranks among the energetic farmers and stock raisers in the vicinity of Romona, Mr. Farley has borne his share in the agricultural development of his district and has maintained his position as an honorable and high-minded citizen. The family of which he is a member belonged to the pioneer citizenship of the Mississippi valley and his parents, Andrew and Susan E. (Finch) Farley, were natives of Jefferson county, Ill., being residents of Burlington, Iowa, for some years after their marriage. While making that city their home John D. Farley was born into their family circle July 20, 1857, and he was a boy of eleven years when the then long journey was made to the shores of the western sea. From 1868 until 1872 the family had their headquarters near Petaluma, Sonoma county, where the father engaged in raising stock and carrying on a dairy business, but in 1872 he brought the family to San Diego county and bought a claim at Otay. Six months later he removed to Tia Juana, this county, and in 1886 he made a final removal to Descanso, where he died in March of the following year, at the age of fifty-seven years. Since his demise the wife and mother has removed to Ramona, where she is now living at the age of seventy-four years.

John B. Judson

Accompanying his parents in their various removals, John D. Farley assisted his father in farm duties and proved an efficient helper in the development of ranch land. Upon the death of his father he took charge of the home place and continued to operate the same until 1901, when he sold his interest in the property and removed to a farm near Ramona belonging to his sister, the widow of George M. Stone. Having never married, he finds a pleasant home with his sister, while she, in turn, has the advantage of his intelligent supervision of the land. The farm comprises about four hundred acres and was purchased many years ago by George M. Stone, a native of Michigan, but from early manhood a resident of San Diego county, where he married Miss Farley at Tia Juana. His death occurred March 8, 1900, and there remained to mourn his loss a large circle of warm friends, besides his wife and their only child, Violet Pearl. The daughter is now a student in the Ramona high school. The farm is advantageously situated in close proximity to Ramona and its value is enhanced by the fact that gem mining is being conducted on it with excellent prospects of paying results. The mine is known as the Surprise and has yielded white and blue topaz, pink beryl, hyacinth and tourmaline. In political views Mr. Farley has sympathized from youth with the principles of the Republican party and has always given stanch support to its candidates. The only fraternal organization with which he holds membership in Court No. 28, American Order of Foresters, at San Diego.

JOHN BACON JUDSON. The founder of the Judson family in the new world was William Judson, who accompanied by three sons came from England in 1634 and established a home in the wilds of Connecticut. Some of that name bore a part in the early wars with the Indians, and they were also identified with the original settlement of Woodbury, Conn., where at different times two hundred and seventy-six representatives of the family made their home. From that vicinity Lemon Judson removed to Vermont about 1780 in early manhood and afterward made his home in that state. During the war of 1812 he enlisted in the service of his country and rose to the rank of major. Next in line of descent was Lemon, Jr., a native of Chittenden county, Vt., where he met and married Philena Bacon, daughter of Lieut. John Bacon, an officer of cavalry in the war of 1812, and a granddaughter of Capt. John Bacon, who was born in 1735 and had the honor of establishing the first iron foundry in the state of Vermont. When the Revolutionary war began Captain Bacon was appointed to lead a company of Vermont soldiers and he remained in their command until he fell on the battlefield of Bennington.

After having engaged in the tannery, shoe and harness business in Canada for eight years, Lemon Judson, Jr., accompanied by his family, removed to Indiana in 1840 and settled upon a tract of raw land which he developed into an improved farm. As early as 1856 he came to California and settled on a farm in Sonoma county, but eventually removed to the San Pasqual valley in San Diego county; he died in 1891, at the age of eighty-four years. His wife was born in Chittenden county, Vt., in 1809, and died some years prior to his demise. Of their twelve children five are now living, namely: Homer, who makes his home near Whittier, Los Angeles county; Mrs. Sarah Wilcox, residing at Tustin, Orange county; Mrs. Lucy Campbell, of San Francisco; Frank, who is now at Goldfield, Nev.; and John Bacon, who was born in Chittenden county, Vt., November 23, 1829, and now makes his home in San Diego, practically retired from heavy business cares.

When eleven years of age John Bacon Judson accompanied his parents from Canada to Indiana, where he attended country schools. Later he studied in the schools of Ypsilanti, Mich., and then taught school in northern Indiana until 1852, when he crossed the plains with teams. For a time he worked in the mines near the old town of Shasta and from there went to Hangtown, where he remained from January, 1853, until the 4th of July, 1854. At the latter date he removed to Sonoma county and bought land, where he engaged in farming. About twenty busy years were passed in that county, at the expiration of which time, in 1875, he sold out and removed to San Diego county, settling upon a ranch of one thousand acres in San Pasqual valley, where he erected buildings as needed and made other improvements. The land has since been given to his children, and he resides in San Diego, where he owns a spacious and comfortable home. However, much of his time is still spent on the ranch with his children, for he is more deeply interested in their success than in his own comfort. No one has done more than he to advance farming interests in San Diego county. His efforts, continued through a long period of years, were helpful to the cause of agriculture in this locality, proving what could be accomplished by men of energy, judgment and resourcefulness. A man of high honor as well as business ability, he is respected by acquaintances and esteemed by associates.

The first marriage of Mr. Judson was solemnized in Bloomfield, Sonoma county, Cal., in October, 1859, and united him with Rebecca, daughter of James Pettit, originally of Elkhart county, Ind. Mrs. Rebecca Judson died in January, 1900, at the age of fifty-nine years, and two years later Mr. Judson was united with Mrs. Ida B. Latta. His children, eight in number, were born of his first marriage, and are named as follows: Charles and Helen, both of whom died at two years of age; Elizabeth, who married Frederick H. Roberts, represented on another page; Andrew, of the San Pasqual valley, who married Mary Boyle of Illinois and has three children; Fred E., who married Lillian Paris, a native of Virginia, and has two children; Newton, who married Harriet Frazier; May, who died at three years of age; and Herbert, who married Dr. Sophia Johnson and has one child.

Politically a Republican, Mr. Judson always has sunk politics beneath his consideration for the welfare of county, state and nation. For some time he served as school trustee and from 1891 to 1895 he represented the fourth district of San Diego county as a member of the county board of supervisors. Since coming to San Diego county he has rendered helpful service in the interests of the stock business, having been among the first to introduce thoroughbred registered Durham cattle in the county. Later he brought in some fine registered Jerseys. In addition, he was the first man to use a cream separator. He established the first creamery in San Diego county and this he owned and operated until 1903, when he sold out, the plant being taken by a co-operative company. The first barb wire ever brought into San Pasqual valley or San Diego county was ordered by him, and he paid twenty-five cents a pound for it in San Francisco, besides paying the freight from there to his ranch. Another helpful contribution to the agricultural interests of the community was his sowing of alfalfa, and he was the first farmer to sow this important product anywhere in San Diego county. Since then the raising of alfalfa has transformed the dairy business and has become one of the most important industries of the county. Hundreds of acres are now in alfalfa where before the land lay unprofitable and uncultivated; and three hundred separators are now in use in the county, where he was the first to purchase such a device, so that in more than one respect he has been most helpful to the agricultural development of the county and is deserving of a high place as a benefactor of the agriculturists in this part of the state.

WILLIAM ALBERT EACHES. A fund of energy, ability and resource was the capital with which William A. Eaches came to California in 1891, at the age of twenty-five, and undertook the upbuilding of his personal fortunes, while at the same time he gave his best efforts toward the material development of the community in which he has made his home for over fifteen years. During this time his name has been associated with a number of enterprises, in Pomona, where he located in that year, but it is perhaps as proprietor of the Opera stables that he is best known, having purchased the stock and equipment of the former owner, F. H. Merrill, in 1905.

A native of Missouri, Mr. Eaches was born in St. Louis, on the corner of Thirty-first and Pine streets, August 30, 1866, and on both sides of the family is directly descended from good old Virginia stock. The grandfather on the paternal side, Dr. William Albert Eaches, was an able and distinguished medical practitioner in St. Louis, Mo., whither he located after his graduation from the medical college in Washington, D. C. His entire professional life was spent in the former city, and his death removed from that community one of its stalwart citizens. His son, D. A., was born in old Virginia, but as he removed to St. Louis while he was still quite young he was practically reared there. For many years he filled the capacity of city weigher of St. Louis, in fact he held this position until he retired from business altogether, spending his last years in retirement. During young manhood he chose as his life companion Miss Amanda Quisenberry, who like himself was a native of old Virginia. Her father, Hon. James Quisenberry of that commonwealth, removed to the frontier of Missouri and became a pioneer farmer in the vicinity of the present city of St. Louis, where in later years he became well known in legislative circles, representing his district in the state legislature. His strong mental characteristics were borne out in his physically strong make-up, being extremely tall and capable of great physical endurance. Mrs. Eaches is still living, and makes her home in St. Louis, a spot dear to her through the associations of many years, both of her girlhood years and of her later married life.

William A. Eaches was the youngest of the two children born to his parents and was the only son. As his parents were well able to give him a good education he passed from the public to the high school, acquitting himself creditably in each, and thereafter was permitted to complete his education in a private school. As has been previously intimated, he remained at home until reaching his twenty-fifth year, when, in 1891, he left parents and friends and started for the west to make a start in the business world. Coming direct to Pomona in that year he entered the employ of A. I. Stewart, a general contractor in the building of streets, and remained with this employer for about five years. Subsequently he became interested in freighting between Pomona and Los Angeles, making two trips per week with his eight-horse team and trailers, an undertaking which was remunerative until the building of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad. It was this change in his plans that led him into the livery business, purchasing the Opera stables from F. H. Merrill in 1905. He has since continued the business in the same quarters, No. 245 West Third street, which is a large, commodious brick structure, giving ample capacity for his boarding and sales stables. Besides the usual equipment of fine horses and vehicles, he has a number of tally-ho coaches used for pleasure trips to the mountains, one of these coaches having a seating capacity for fourteen passengers. He also runs a stage between Pomona and Claremont, making three trips a day.

Mr. Eaches is a Democrat, and as an earnest and broad-minded citizen gives his support to all movements and enterprises best calculated to advance the general welfare. This characteristic is emphatically borne out by his membership and valuable assistance in two of the town's most active organizations, the Board of Trade and the Business Men's Association.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN FAILOR. What is known as Summit ranch, in the Garapatos canyon, sixteen miles north of Santa Monica, has been the home of Mr. Failor for the past thirteen years, he having located here in 1894 in the hope of recovering his health. Too close application to the profession of law was the beginning of his physical break-down, and thereafter he followed teaching, mining and contracting and building in the order named, in the hope that he would not be compelled to give up work entirely, but in this he was disappointed, and in the year mentioned he relinquished his business interests in Los Angeles and removed to the higher altitude in the Garapatos canyon. Here he not only enjoys excellent health, but from a financial point of view is meeting with splendid success as an apairist, having about one hundred stands of bees.

A native of Ohio, Mr. Failor was born in Upper Sandusky September 24, 1853, and until he was twelve years of age was reared and educated under the training of his father, whose death in 1865 left him an orphan. He was then taken into the home of his uncle, Major B. M. Failor, who was also his guardian, and who had recently served as a surgeon in the Civil war. Going to Jasper county, Iowa, with his uncle, he there attended a private academy for about six years, when, at the age of eighteen, he was enrolled as a pupil in Wittenberg College at Springfield, Ohio, remaining there for three years. After one year in a private school in Iowa he began the study of law in the Iowa University, completing his legal training in a private law office in Newton, Iowa. His admission to the bar occurred in 1876, and the same year he began to practice in Newton, later going to Stewart, that state, and remaining there about two years. Relinquishing his practice in 1879 he came west and for a time engaged in prospecting and mining in Montana, Idaho and British Columbia, interspersing this work with teaching, for which he had a special liking and aptitude. When he was sixteen years of age he received a teacher's certificate and for some time he had charge of a school in Iowa. His identification with California dates from the year 1884, at which time he located in San Francisco and for about a year engaged in contracting and building there. Transferring his interests to Los Angeles at the end of that time he there continued contracting until the partial failure of his health in 1894 made it necessary for him to discontinue the business. Thereupon he came to the Garapatos canyon in search of a desirable spot for a country home, and the squatter's right which he then bought formed the nucleus of his present ranch of two hundred and seventy-six acres.

While the year 1884 is memorable as marking Mr. Failor's introduction to the Golden state, it is even better remembered as the year of his marriage, for on January 14 of that year he was united with Mary A. Carroll, who though born in Sacramento was reared in Washington. The only fraternal order to which Mr. Failor belongs is the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being a member of Semi Tropic Lodge No. 371, of Los Angeles. While in college he joined the Greek letter society known as Beta Theta Pi, and has since retained his interest in the order, though not an active member. While nominally he might be called a Democrat, he yet retains the privilege to vote as he sees fit. Mr. Failor is appreciated for his many sterling qualities of heart and mind, his unfailing good nature and general interest in all things that tend toward the betterment of his fellowmen.

ALLEN RUSSELL. No state of our great Union affords greater opportunities to the poor man than California, as here an industrious, frugal man has an excellent opportunity to accumulate wealth. It is true that many fail to do so, but the best of our population lay by some of their earnings, make wise investments, and soon find themselves, through their own strenuous efforts, in the possession of a handsome property. Conspicuous among this number is Allen Russell, familiarly known as "Budd" Russell, who has been in truth the architect of his own fortunes, and is now one of the leading agriculturists of Fallbrook, where he is well known and very popular. A son of Joseph T. Russell, he was born, October 11, 1854, in Buchanan county, Mo.

A native of Tennessee, Joseph T. Russell was a pioneer settler of Missouri, and while yet a young man cleared and improved a farm from the wilderness. In 1866, before the days of railroads, he went to Dallas, Tex., where he purchased cattle that he drove back to Missouri, and was subsequently there employed in general farming and stock-raising until his death, while yet in manhood's prime. He was born August 14, 1829, and died May 4, 1869, being in the fortieth year of his age. December 5, 1850, in Missouri, he married Mary E. Russell, who was born in North Carolina, February 7, 1835, and died at Clearwater, Kans., October 29, 1899. He was the youngest of a family of nine children, of whom but one, Elijah Russell, of Miami county, Kans., is living. The latter is now a venerable man of over four score years. Of the eighteen children born to Joseph T. and Mary E. Russell fifteen are living, a large and noteworthy family.

The early educational advantages of Allen Russell were limited to a brief attendance at a private school, and at the age of sixteen years he became a cowboy in Texas. After spending five years in that occupation he returned to Missouri, and for about a year and a half was employed as a tiller of the soil in Buchanan county, the ensuing two years being similarly engaged in Holt county. Removing from there to Miami county, Kans., he remained there until 1886, when he came to Fallbrook, Cal., where he carried on general farming about four years. Not quite satisfied with the result of his labors, he went back to Kansas, purchased land in Miami county, and after farming there two years disposed of his interests in that section and removed with his family to Oklahoma county, Okla., where he purchased a claim, on which he resided two years.

June 9, 1895, Mr. Russell started for California overland. Leaving Oklahoma City, he came with a train composed of five wagons drawn by horses, in the party being Mr. Russell, wife and six children; his brother, Lee Russell, and his wife; and A. J. Russell, wife and four children. Following the southern panhandle route, the little band passed through Texas, thence by way of White Oaks to Fort Sumner, where they camped a number of days. Continuing along the trail to Fort Craig, the river at that point being too high to cross, the party had to go up stream one hundred and fifty miles to get on the other side, and return to Fort Craig. From there, by way of Mule Gap and Hudson Hot Springs, they crossed the Colorado at Yuma, thence by way of Palm Springs and Banning they came to San Diego county, arriving in Fallbrook after a long but pleasant trip, the California line having been crossed on October 27. At once taking up the independent occupation to which he was reared, Mr. Russell has been very fortunate in all of his undertakings, and has attained a noteworthy position among the most prosperous and most intelligent farmers of Southern California. Arriving here without pecuniary resources of any kind, he has labored perseveringly, conquering all obstacles, in his square and just dealings with all men obtaining a fine reputation for honesty and worth, his word being considered as good as his bond at any time.

October 16, 1881, in Miami county, Kans., Mr. Russell married Mary A. Chilson, and of their union nine children have been born, namely: Joseph Oliver, who is married and lives at Pomona; Hartwell Cook; Myra, who is the wife of Ernest Hiller, and lives on the home ranch; Dollie, attending the high school; Mary R., attending the district school; Esther E., also a school girl; Candace Lee; Allen George; and Alice Treat. Politically Mr. Russell is a stanch Democrat; fraternally he belongs to Fallbrook Lodge No. 317, F. & A. M., and to Fallbrook Lodge No. 339, I. O. O. F.; and is a supporter of church work.

CHARLES MANVEG. The influences which tended to mold the character of Charles Manveg in early boyhood were such as clustered around the province of Alsace-Lorraine, while it was still a French dependency. He was born February 24, 1861, to the marriage of Emil and Mary Manveg, who like their son were natives of France. Both of the parents are now deceased.

J. Robert Johnson

The public schools of his native locality supplied all of the book learning which fell to the lot of Mr. Manveg to enjoy and formed the substantial foundation for the later knowledge gained by extensive travel. The restless spirit of adventure and craving for life upon the high seas, took possession of him when was litttle more than a child in years, for he was only ten years old when he boarded a vessel in France, bound for New York City. Although he landed in that metropolis with the ship's crew, the voyage on the outgoing ship was awaited with keen interest, and from 1871 until 1882 he was on the water continuously, anchoring at many of the largest seaports in the world. In the year first mentioned he landed in the harbor of San Pedro, Cal., but at that time was not sufficiently attracted by its appearance to give up the sea for the life of a landsman, although after eleven years of sea-faring he again came to San Pedro, in 1882, and until 1901 was engaged as seaman on the wharves. In the mean time, from 1890 to 1892, he was interested in seal-fishing, an occupation which took him into Alaska and other Arctic countries. From San Pedro he came to Wilmington in 1901, carrying on a saloon here for about four years, or until embarking in the real-estate business April 1, 1905. He has become the owner of considerable property, both improved and vacant, in the disposition of which he is meeting with the success which his energy deserves. He is also interested in mining property near Mexecala, Mexico, Lower California.

In 1894, in San Pedro, Mr. Manveg was married to Catherine Gangnear, who was also born in France, and three children have come to bless their home, Amele, May and Charles, Jr. Fraternally Mr. Manveg belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, holding membership in the lodge at Gardiner, Ore., and also belongs to the Eagles at San Pedro, being one of the charter members of the latter order. Since becoming of age Mr. Manveg has studied the principles of the two great political bodies to satisfy himself as to their respective merits, and the fact that he now supports the Democratic party shows the result of his investigation.

JOHN ROBERT JOHNSON. An enterprising, wide-awake rancher of San Diego county, near Wynola, is John Robert Johnson, who is a native son of the state, having been born in Contra Costa county. The father, who also bore the name of John R., was a native of England, and from the time he was quite a small boy displayed a predilection for sea-faring, finally becoming a full-fledged sailor. This life brought him in contact with people from all over the world and enabled him to keep himself informed on all current happenings. Probably none of the reports which came to him from other countries was as alluring as that resulting from the discovery of gold in California. Suffice it to say that the year 1849 found him in the state busily engaged in delving for the hidden treasure. In addition to mining he later took up cabinet-making, a calling which appealed to him more strongly perhaps than mining, for he was of a mechanical turn of mind. He died in San Luis Obispo in 1894, at the age of sixty-six years. His marriage was celebrated in California and united him with Miss Antonia Troll. She was born in Germany in March, 1834, and was christened in the Roman Catholic Church in Baden. She has no personal recollection of her native land, having been brought to this country when only one year old. At the age of seventy-three years she is in the enjoyment of good health and makes her home with her son, J. R., in San Diego county. By her first union six children were born and by her second marriage, with the late Robert Reed, four daughters were born.

Born in Contra Costa county, Cal., May 9, 1856, J. Robert Johnson can recall the removal of the family to San Luis Obispo county in 1861, an event which the child of six years enjoyed to the fullest extent. Going to Los Angeles county six years later he became a pupil in the common school of Downey, and the period which he spent in this temple of learning represented his entire school life. Reading and observation in later years, however, have given him a broad and comprehensive knowledge, and all who know him either in a business or social way unite in praise of his breadth of mind, steadfast principles of honor and uniform courtesy towards all. He first came to San Diego county in 1873, and until 1874 had charge of the store at Warners ranch, on the Julian road. In the latter year he became interested in mining in Mesa Grande, and was later similarly occupied at Julian, and although the miner's life is more or less subject to danger, he was fortunate in escaping any serious injury. It was in 1902 that he settled down permanently to the life of the agriculturist, purchasing his present ranch of four hundred acres which forms one of the representative enterprises in this part of the state. The raising of stock and growing of grain form his chief source of income, although his orchard of ten acres also yields abundantly, and what is raised over and above that used for home consumption is readily disposed of at good prices.

Unlike his father, who was a Democrat in his political belief, Mr. Johnson is a Republican, and in him his party has a stanch ally. His interest in fraternal affairs is shown by his membership in San Diego Lodge No. 153, I. O. O. F., and Court Julian Banner No. 8522, A. O. F., at Julian. Mr. Johnson possesses in a large degree those sterling and reliable traits which are bound to win appreciation in any community, and his success and enterprise are matters of no ordinary pride with his many friends and associates.

EDMUND F. BOWEN. It is a fact of general recognition among the people of the little town of Ramona that Mr. Bowen has accomplished much in behalf of commercial, educational and civic progress and has given freely of his time toward the development of movements for the general welfare. While busily engaged in the management of his meat market, the supervision of his large stock ranch and the charge of his slaughter-house, he finds leisure to aid any measure helpful to the people and has maintained an especial interest in educational affairs. For six years he held office as trustee of the grammar school and at this writing is one of the high school trustees, in which capacity he has proved efficient, prompt, intelligent and resourceful. Another movement which commands his time is that of the public library and he is now acting as a member of the library board of trustees, besides which he is one of the town trustees.

A native of Wisconsin, born in Green county, on the 4th of July, 1859, Edmund F. Bowen is a son of Jared and Lucy Ann (Fleek) Bowen, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Virginia. As early as 1844 his father became a pioneer of the then wilderness of Wisconsin, where he was among the first settlers of Green county and took up a tract of raw land from the government. All of the arduous labors of pioneer existence fell to his lot, but gradually he brought the land under cultivation and was in a position to enjoy the labors of a lifetime of agricultural activity. On the old homestead he remained until his death, which occurred in 1886, at the age of sixty-four years. He is survived by his wife, who makes her home at Broadhead, Green county, and remains physically robust for one who has reached the age of eighty-one years.

The country schools of Green county afforded Edmund F. Bowen fair advantages and he attended the same at such times as he could be spared from farm work at home. On starting out for himself he entered the occupation in which he had been reared and settled near the old homestead in Green county, remaining in that locality until 1891, when he removed to California and established himself in San Diego county. Soon after his arrival he took up a homestead near Mesa Grande and later added to the tract by various purchases, until now he is the owner of a stock ranch of nine hundred acres. The land is suitable for pasturage and therefore meets the needs of one desiring to keep constantly on hand a supply of young and growing stock for the later demands of the market.

Some years before leaving Wisconsin Mr. Bowen established a home of his own through his marriage to Jennie Stanton, a native of Indiana, who became his wife at Broadhead, Wis., October 5, 1887, and has since ministered to his comforts with housewifely skill. Ever since girlhood she has been interested in religious activities and has attended services at the Congregational Church and contributed to the work of that denomination. The family consists of two children, namely: Max, who was born December 15, 1888; and Verne, who was born May 6, 1890.

CHARLES L. HOLLIDAY. One of the large land operators and ranchmen of the county of San Diego is Mr. Holliday, whose identification with this region began a number of years ago and has continued prosperously up to the present time. At his present home in the San Pasqual valley he leased and occupies a ranch comprising six hundred and fifty acres of land adapted to the grazing of stock, besides which he has a farm of one thousand acres near Lajolla. Both farms are devoted to the raising of cattle, horses and hogs, and on his home ranch he engages in the dairy business, milking about thirty cows and selling the product in the local markets. While he is an exceedingly busy man, he yet finds leisure to keep in touch with national issues and county affairs, and few men in his community are better posted than he nor are there many more fond of good literature as the sine qua non of mental development.

During the residence at Rock Island, Ill., of J. L. and Anna (Baker) Holliday, natives of Indiana, their son, Charles L., was born February 9, 1871, and he was a boy of seven years when the family came to California, settling at Byron, Contra Costa county. For many years the father engaged in the stock business in that portion of the state, but in 1895 he came to San Diego county, where now he makes his home at Lajolla. Supplementary to a common school education Charles L. Holliday was sent to the Normal Institute and Business College at Stockton, and upon leaving school he took up agricultural pursuits in Linn county, Ore., where he remained for five years busily engaged in the routine work of farm life. At the expiration of that time he removed to San Diego county and established himself on a stock ranch at Lajolla, where he still retains interests, although for some years he has made his home in the San Pasqual valley. The demands made upon him in the discharge of his duties as a stock raiser and large landed operator leave him little leisure for participation in politics, in which, indeed, he takes no part aside from voting the Democratic ticket. His pleasant home is brightened by his two children, Charles L., Jr., and Laura M., and blessed by the presence of a devoted wife and mother. Mrs. Holliday was formerly Marion M. Thresher and was born in Chicago, Ill., but at an early age came to California and at the time of her marriage, in July of 1898, was making her home in San Diego, where she has a large number of warm personal friends.

THOMAS BELL. The Bell family has been established in Los Angeles county since 1858, when W. C. Bell crossed the plains to California and on the 20th of October of that year arrived in El Monte, where the name has since become prominent in agricultural circles as well as in the general upbuilding of the community. W. C. Bell was born in Washington county, Pa., September 17, 1832, the second in a family of five sons and two daughters, of whom five are now surviving. His father, William Bell, was also a native of Pennsylvania, who in 1850 removed to Richland county, Ill., where he engaged as a farmer and millwright. His wife was in maidenhood, Jane Caldwell, also a native of Pennsylvania. W. C. Bell was reared in his native state until he was fifteen years old, when he came as far west as Ohio, where in Concord, he learned the trade of shoemaker. It was in 1852 that he first started to California, taking passage on the old steamer Saluda, which blew up at Lexington, whence he walked to Independence and thence to St. Louis. He then went to Clinton, Ill., and followed his trade, and subsequently was variously located until 1857, when he went to Texas, thence the following year to California by the southern route. He was a member of the train commanded by Captain Coffee. Upon his arrival in El Monte he engaged in freighting to Arizona by the Owens river, and continued this occupation for fifteen years, after which he located permanently in the El Monte district and engaged in farming. He is now retired from active cares and makes his home in El Monte. He has held various public positions, among them that of road overseer under Martin two years, and under Cook four years. He was married in El Monte in the spring of 1859 to Mrs. Rebecca Ann (Fears) Cundiff, a native of Clinton, Ill., who came to California in 1858 across the plains and died in El Monte in 1901. They became the parents of the following children: Thomas, of this review; Charles M., in Arizona; John, in Los Angeles; Susie, wife of George Wandling, of Los Angeles, and Annie, Mrs. Baker, of Ocean Park.

Thomas Bell was born in El Monte October 5, 1859, and in this place was reared to young manhood, receiving his educational training in the public schools of the place. Upon attaining maturity he engaged in general farming for himself, leasing the old Temple place, where he conducted a dairy farm, having four hundred acres of pasture land and from twenty-five to thirty head of milch cows. He met with success and accumulated sufficient means to enable him to purchase his present property, which consists of twenty acres located two and a half miles south of El Monte, which he cleared from tules and willows, and this peet land he now rents for gardening purposes. He continued his dairy enterprises until 1904, when he sold out and built a residence in El Monte, put out walnut trees and otherwise improved his property. He is enterprising and progressive, seeking to upbuild the general interests of the community, while he at the same time carves out his own fortunes. Fraternally he is identified with Lexington Lodge No. 104, F. & A. M., and politically is a stanch adherent of Democratic principles.

HENRY C. BEASLEY. Fidelity to duty may be attributed as the keynote to the success which has always followed the efforts of Mr. Beasley, formerly as a stationary engineer, and latterly as a rancher in Ventura county. The six hundred acres over which he has control forms a part of what is known locally as the Las Posos grant, and in the cultivation of the same Mr. Beasley is interested especially in the raising of beets, beans and barley.

A native of the state in which he has made his life-long home, Mr. Beasley was born in Mendocino county, Cal., and is a son of David T. and Martha Polly Beasley, natives of New York and Massachusetts respectively. Both of the parents settled in the Golden state during the days of its early history, and before the dawn of the present prosperous conditions which exist throughout the length and breadth of the state, the father was called hence, his death occurring at the age of seventy years. By trade he was a blacksmith. He was a man who took considerable interest in the affairs of life, a fact which was demonostrated nowhere no more strongly perhaps than in the Masonic Lodge of which he was a member. His widow is still living, at a good old age, making her home in Texas. Throughout her life she has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

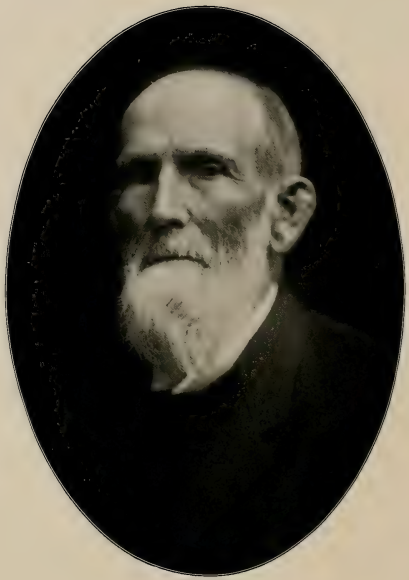
Born January 6, 1862, Mr. Beasley was a lad of ten years when, in 1872, he became associated with affairs in Ventura county. An inborn love for things of a mechanical nature became apparent at an early age, and the first opportunity which he found for giving vent to his ambition in this direction was running the engine of a threshing machine. He later had charge of an engine in a starch factory, also ran engines which propelled machinery used for boring wells, and altogether his experience as a traction engineer covered over seventeen years. About 1895 his interest turned toward agriculture, and an experience in the employ of others for twelve years gave him the knowledge and assurance necessary for managing an undertaking on his own account, which was followed by his assuming control of his present property.

In 1892 H. C. Beasley was united in marriage with Tennie Glenn, a daughter of Joseph and Mary (Growns) Glenn, and who was born in Kern county in 1864. Like his father Mr. Beasley takes considerable interest in fraternal matters, belonging to Oxnard Lodge No. 361, F. & A. M., and to Lodge No. 11000, M. W. A. at Somis. Politically he is interested in whatever affects the Republican party, and his vote may always be depended upon to support its candidates. Personally he is a broad-minded, progressive citizen, thoroughly believing that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well, a belief which has had practical demonstration in whatever he has attempted.

E. SMITH. Standing prominent among the active, intelligent and progressive agriculturists of San Diego county is E. Smith, a successful rancher and fruit-grower of Lakeside. His small but valuable ranch is pleasantly located, and is well improved, everything about the premises indicating the thrift, industry and keen judgment of its owner. A son of M. Smith, he was born, March 30, 1870, in Mexico, where he received an excellent education.

A Mexican born and reared, M. Smith was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Mexico during the earlier years of his life, and was quite successful. Coming with his family to California in 1888, he lived for a year in San Diego, and then settled on the famous Canado De Los Cochis ranch, one of the noted Spanish ranchos, which he managed for five years. Settling then in this valley, he purchased his present ranch of ten acres, and has since been extensively engaged in the growing of raisins, in addition raising some grain. He has met with good results in his undertakings, becoming one of the leading agriculturists and vineyardists of this locality, and one of the most respected citizens, being known far and wide for his generosity and benevolence. Mr. and Mrs. Smith were married, in Mexico, and are the parents of three children, two sons and a daughter.



Coming with the family to Southern California in 1888, E. Smith assisted his father in his agricultural labors, while thus employed on the Canado De Los Cochis ranch obtaining a thorough knowledge of the leading branches of agriculture and horticulture. In 1892 he bought his present ranch of five acres, situated in Lakeside, and in its improvement has taken much pride and pleasure, by his industry and judicious labor bringing it to a high state of cultivation.

Mr. Smith's first wife, to whom he was married in 1892, died leaving five children, Marcel, Lomez, Pas, Aurora and Edward. In 1905 he married for his second wife Candelaria Martinez, who was born and educated in California. Politically Mr. Smith is an Independent voter, and religiously he is a member of the Catholic Church.

ROBERT HOLMES MACLAY. Occupying an assured position among the thriving agriculturists and highly esteemed citizens of Fernando is Robert Holmes Maclay, who is held in high estimation throughout the community as a man of undoubted integrity and sterling worth. A native of California, he was born October 27, 1857, in Santa Clara county, a son of the late Senator Charles Maclay, of whom a brief sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume.

Completing his early education in the public schools of his native county, Robert H. Maclay remained at home until 1874, when he came with his parents to Fernando. At once embarking in agricultural pursuits, he settled not far from the village, where he now owns a well cultivated ranch of fifty-seven acres, from which he derives a good yearly income. He has likewise valuable property in the village, his residence being one of the most attractive on Hagar street. Enterprising and active, he has met with financial success in his various business transactions, and is in all respects one of the solid men of his community.

In Fernando, Mr. Maclay married Jennie Beale, a native of Oregon, and they have one child, a daughter named Mary. Politically Mr. Maclay is an earnest Republican, and religiously both he and his wife attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, and are liberal contributors towards its support.

Hiram Keyes.

HIRAM KEYES. Numbered among the veteran agriculturists of San Diego county who have achieved success in their independent occupation is Hiram Keyes of Ramona, who has made farming his life work, and having acquired a competency is now living free from business activity and care. Intelligent and well-informed, the possessor of excellent judgment and sound sense, he is ably performing his duty as a faithful citizen, and is everywhere respected. A native of Ohio, he was born December 5, 1832, in Morgan county, of good old New England stock. His father, Phineas C. Keyes, a native of Maine, learned the tanner's trade when young, and for many years carried on a successful business in Morgan county, Ohio. He was a man of strong individuality, a noted abolitionist, and a valued member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Mary Gould, who was born in Massachusetts, and they became the parents of eight children, six of whom have passed to the life beyond, one daughter, Mary G. Benedict, a resident of Kansas, and Hiram, the subject of this sketch, being the only survivors.

Brought up in Ohio, Hiram Keyes attended the common schools of Morgan county, after which he attended a high school in Washington county, his early education being completed by an attendance of one term at Oberlin College. Returning home from the latter institution, he taught school a few years, in the mean time assisting his father in the tan yard whenever he was at leisure. In 1855, while Kansas was yet a territory, he there took up a pre-emption claim of one hundred and sixty acres of land and engaged in farming. In 1856 he took part in the Border Ruffian war, serving under "Jim" Lane. In 1861, when the Civil war broke out, he enlisted in Company K, Eleventh Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and served under command of General Blount for three years, when he received his honorable discharge from the army. Returning then to his Kansas home, he resumed his labors as a tiller of the soil, remaining there twenty or more years. Coming to California in 1886 he located first in San Diego, and was afterwards engaged in ranching near Julian, after which he lived at Banner one year. He subsequently located a homestead claim to one hundred and sixty acres of land at Eagles Nest resort, near Warner Hot Springs, where he resided a number of years. About 1900 he purchased a ten-acre ranch in Ramona, and having improved it, is now living here retired, enjoying a well-earned leisure.

In 1858 Mr. Keyes married Lucinda C. Hovey, who was born in Washington county, Ohio, July 23, 1838, a daughter of Harvey Clark Hovey, the latter a son of William Hovey, an officer in the Revolutionary army. Eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Keyes, namely: Charles, who died in infancy; George C., of Pasadena; Harvey Stanley and Phineas Stanton, twins, who died in infancy; Clara, a teacher in Manila, Philippine Islands; Mattie, who died at the age of twenty-three years; Mrs. Charlotte Janeway of Ramona; Edwin E., a lawyer in Berkeley; Lucile, wife of Henry A. Hanigan, first lieutenant in a United States regiment in the Philippine Islands; Hiram, who died in childhood and Minnie, who died in infancy. Politically Mr. Keyes is a straightforward Republican, and religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church. He served as justice of the peace while living near Warner, and while in San Diego was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic For his services during the Civil war he receives a pension.

EDWARD C. COOMER. In her young men is a country's hope, and when by honesty and industrious personal effort a man of but twenty-six years becomes as prosperous and successful as is E. C. Coomer, they are also her pride. Mr. Coomer is of southern parentage, his father, Thomas Coomer, having been born in Kentucky and his mother belonging to a Virginia family. Thomas Coomer served four years in the Union army during the Civil war, having enlisted in Company I, of the Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and had the honor of serving on General Sheridan's staff. His was not idle camp service, but the forward firing line was his favorite post and he carries the scars of four wounds received in battle. He is now an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic in the Carpinteria Post, for both he and his wife are now living in the Carpinteria valley, they having moved here with their son in 1901. Fraternally he affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows lodge.

Edward C. Coomer was born in Edgar county, Ill., February 15, 1880. His parents moved to Canada when he was quite small, then went back to Michigan when he was five years old. After remaining there for five years they next made their home in Tennessee, where Mr. Coomer received a common-school education. This he supplemented with a commercial course, specializing on shorthand, and for two years after his graduation he did stenographic reporting. Later he accepted a position near Covington, Ky., where he had charge of coke ovens and also acted as inspector. This work did not agree with him, however, and his health requiring a change of climate he came with his parents to California. After locating in the state he purchased eighteen acres of land in Arroyo Grande, San Luis Obispo county, but has since disposed of it and now has a fine ranch of twenty acres near Carpinteria which he has improved, thirteen acres being planted to walnut trees.

In 1903 Mr. Coomer was united in marriage with Miss May B. Fowler, a native daughter of California. Politically he is a stanch Republican and is prominent in all matters of interest in the upbuilding of the community in which he resides. He enjoys the good will and esteem of a host of friends and acquaintances, who value him as one of their leading citizens.

CHARLES WALTER SAVIERS. Among the industrious, far-sighted and prosperous farmers of Oxnard, C. W. Saviers is worthy of special mention. Starting in life with no other endowments than strong hands, a willing heart, and the elements of character essential to noble manhood, a brief review of his life affords a good illustration of the exercise of perseverance and resolution under the pressure of financial disaster as well as amid the sunshine of prosperity. He has labored with untiring energy and zeal to establish a home for himself and family, and is now the owner of a ranch which, with its appurtenances, is one of the best and most attractive in his neighborhood, bearing visible evidence of the intelligence and ability of the owner. A son of the late J. Y. Saviers, he was born, November 11, 1866, in Yuba City, Sutter county, Cal., but has spent the larger part of his life in Ventura county.

A native of Ohio, J. Y. Saviers was a tiller of the soil from early life until his death. In 1850 he came to California, following the trail of the gold seekers, but was not fortunate enough as a miner to accumulate any amount of the glittering mineral. Returning therefore, by way of the Isthmus, to Ohio, he remained there for a number of years, working as a farmer. In 1860, however, he concluded to again try his luck in the extreme west, and as captain of a train came with ox-teams across the plains. He had no special trouble on the trip, but after his arrival in California was wounded in a scrimmage with the Indians. Locating in Ventura county, he resumed his agricultural labors, continuing as a rancher until his death, which occurred in Oxnard, in February, 1904, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. He married Elizabeth Jones, who was born in Ohio, and died, in 1867, in California, leaving four children, three sons, all of whom reside in this state, and a daughter, who is now living in Bell county, Tex.

Left motherless in infancy, Charles W. Saviers was brought to Ventura county when but eighteen months old, and was here brought up and educated. As early as practicable, he was initiated by his father into the mysteries of farming, and proved a most faithful worker, remaining on the home farm until twenty-one years of age. Starting then for himself, he worked for wages for awhile in Ventura county, after which he spent four years in Taylor county, Tex., where he had a brief and rather disastrous career as a general farmer. Returning to this county, he was again a wage earner for three years. Accumulating some capital, he again began life for himself on rented land, and in its management was quite successful. In 1902 he purchased his present ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, and has since carried on an extensive and lucrative business as a grower of beets and beans, two of the staple crops of this section of the state. In addition to this he leases seven hundred and fifty acres of land, which he devotes almost entirely to the raising of barley, harvesting on an average from fifteen to twenty sacks, of eighty-two and one-half pounds each, to the acre. As a general farmer, he has been fortunate, and as a stock raiser, on a moderate scale, is meeting with success.

Mr. Saviers' marriage united him with Lottie M. Eggleston, who was born in Iowa, of New England stock, her Grandfather Eggleston having been a native of Massachusetts. Her parents were married in San Francisco, but afterwards removed to Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Saviers are the parents of three children, Walter J., Roy A. and Annie. Mr. Saviers is a stanch Republican in politics, and is now serving as school trustee.

ELI MILTON HADDOX. Liberal and enterprising, throughout his residence in the vicinity of El Monte Mr. Haddox has won a place among the representative citizens who may always be counted upon to uphold public interest and public honor. He is a native of Hancock county, Ohio, and was born in the vicinity of Findlay, February 14, 1853. His grandfather William Haddox, was a pioneer of Ohio, having immigrated from Virginia with his family at an early date in the history of the middle west. His father, Eli Haddox was born in Virginia and reared in Ohio, where the family located in 1802. By trade he was a wagon maker, but in manhood he followed farming, remaining a resident of Ohio until his death. He married Elizabeth Oliver, a native of Virginia, who settled in Ohio with her parents. They had ten children, four of whom are living, the youngest being Eli Milton Haddox.

Reared in Ohio, Eli M. Haddox received his education in the public schools, remaining at home until twenty years old, when he became dependent upon his own resources. He engaged in farming for a livelihood, renting land at first and finally purchasing forty acres, upon which he continued his work. In 1882 he removed to Nebraska and at Fort Kearney bought three hundred and twenty acres of railroad land, which he improved and cultivated for four years. Removing to Stirling (now Buffalo county) he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land and improved this property also. In 1900 he disposed of these interests and came to California and in El Monte engaged in farming, having in the meantime (1896) purchased forty acres from the Bassett property which was immediately set out in walnuts, a pumping plant installed in 1899 with a ten-horse power engine, with a capacity of one hundred inches, this being the first pumping plant on the east side of the San Gabriel river. Twenty acres of his property has since been given over to the raising of apples, while the remainder is in walnuts and alfalfa. He carries on general farming on leased land in the neighborhood and is uniformly successful in his enterprises. He has improved his own property by the erection of a residence, barns and outbuildings, good fences, and every convenience that bespeaks the thrifty and successful farmer.

In Putnam county, Ohio, October 3, 1875, Mr. Haddox married Miss Caroline Riter, a native of Findlay, that state, and the daughter of John M. Riter, an old settler of that section of Ohio. They are the parents of the following children: Eliza, Mrs. Gunnels, of Oxnard; Benjamin, in Los Angeles; Jefferson, of Oxnard; James and Milton, of Los Angeles; and the others at home, Peter, Cora, Wallace, Emmet, Goldie and Arnold. Mr. Haddox is a Republican on all national issues, although locally he can always be counted upon to support the man best qualified for official duties. Fraternally he is identified with the Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

CHARLES RICHARDSON. A pioneer of California, and the son of a pioneer, Charles Richardson, living near Simi, Ventura county, has had a varied experience in life, meeting with fortunes and with misfortunes, but in the end overcoming all obstacles. When he came to this state the country was largely in its original wildness, game being abundant, and the Indians numerous. There being no railways, transportation was with ox-teams chiefly, and the trading points were few and far between. Possessing a vast fund of historical information in regard to pioneer days, and being an intelligent and interesting talker, with a good memory, Mr. Richardson is a most entertaining conversationalist, and one whom it is a pleasure to meet. He was born, August 27, 1836, in Warren county, Mo., being one of the thirteen children of the late John Richardson, all of whom with the exception of two that died in Wisconsin came to California to reside.

A native of New York state, John Richardson migrated to Missouri at an early day, and after spending some years in that state went to Wisconsin. From there he came in 1860 to the Pacific coast, crossing the plains with ox-teams, starting from Missouri in a train composed of eighteen families. While on the journey his oldest child suddenly disappeared, and it was three days before he was found, that incident being the only one to seriously mar the pleasure of the trip. He was a man of strong convictions, a Democrat in politics, and an old-school Baptist in religion. In Missouri he married Lucy Wright, who was born in Kentucky, and died at an advanced age in Ventura county, near Oxnard, while his death occurred in Sutter county. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and during his entire life was a loyal and faithful citizen, and instilled into the minds of his children the spirit of true patriotism.

Accompanying his parents to Wisconsin in April, 1847, Charles Richardson was there educated in the common schools of Grant county. Thirteen years later he came with the family to California, having a four months' trip across the plains in the train commanded by Captain McFarland, and arriving in Shasta county April 9, 1860. He subsequently spent several months in Sacramento, from there going to the San Joaquin valley, where he bought land and was engaged in ranching for two years, being in partnership with his father and brother. Disposing of his interest in the land he continued his agricultural operations alone, being first located in Sacramento, and then in Sutter county, where he resided eleven years. Selling out, he went to Santa Barbara in 1874, and was there for fourteen years, busily employed in tilling the soil. Again disposing of his land he moved to San Diego, bought land, and embarked in general farming, remaining there eleven years, when he had the misfortune to lose title to his ranch. Locating in Ventura county in 1900 he carried on farming on an extensive scale for three years on rented land, in his ventures succeeding well. In 1903 he purchased his present ranch, near Simi, and now has a highly improved farm of forty acres, which he devotes principally to the raising of fruit, having a large orchard of apricots and prunes, also making a specialty to some extent of raising chickens.

In Wisconsin, in 1859, Mr. Richardson married Candace Burton, who was born in Warren county, Mo., being one of the ten children of Alsop and Lucy (Graves) Burton. Her father was born in Virginia, and died in Wisconsin, at the age of fifty-seven years, and his wife, who was born in Kentucky, died in Missouri, aged sixty-seven years. Thirteen children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Richardson: Lionel W., of Ventura county, married Mary Rystrum, by whom he has seven children; Laura died in infancy; Letitia S., wife of Fay Colby, of Sonoma county, has five daughters; Sarah M., wife of J. W. Lewis, of Camarillo, has five children; Charles W., of Sawtelle, married Florence Wilson, and they have four children; Ida C., wife of Lorenzo Jackson, of Sonoma county, has two children; Lucy A. died at the age of nineteen years; Viola D., wife of Harry Wilson, of Sawtelle, has three children; Lizzie, who married John Houston, died at the age of thirty years, leaving three children; Vesta B. is the wife of Robert Beardsley; and Thomas H., Roxie, and Samuel C. are living at home. In his political relations Mr. Richardson is a strong Democrat, and has served many terms as school trustee and as road overseer. Fraternally he is a member of Ventura Lodge No. 120, K. of P.

JOHN R. DOIG, M. D. During his residence in San Diego county, J. R. Doig, M. D., has become known as one of its able and skilful physicians and surgeons, and by his genial manners and kindly courtesy endears himself to all classes of people. Cultured and talented, his long-continued studies and his wide experience as a general practitioner have given him a thorough knowledge of the many branches of his profession and gained for him a place of prominence in medical circles. While devoted to his life work, the doctor takes great interest in the progressive movements of the day and his sympathies are as broad as humanity. The son of Prof. James R. Doig, he was born, March 8, 1845, in Wayne county, Ohio.

A native of New York state, James R. Doig received excellent educational advantages, in early manhood being graduated from Union College. Fitted for a professional career, he moved to Ohio after his marriage, and for several years held a chair in Franklin College, at New Athens, Harrison county. Going from there to Washington, Washington county, Iowa, Professor Doig served as president of the college there until its destruction by a tornado in 1864. Removing then to Monmouth, Ill., he was for ten years professor of languages in Monmouth College, resigning the position on account of his advanced age. He subsequently lived retired at Vinton, Iowa, until his death, in 1885, at the age of seventy-three years. He was a stanch Republican in politics, at all times being active in advancing the interests of his party, and was a faithful member of the United Presbyterian Church. Professor Doig was twice married, first to Hannah Rankin, a native of Washington county, Pa. She died at the age of twenty-seven years in 1850, leaving four children, one of whom is J. R. Doig, M. D., of this review. He married for his second wife Agnes Rankin, who was born in Pennsylvania, and of this union nine children, five sons and four daughters, were born.

Removing with his parents to Iowa when a boy, J. R. Doig attended the college which his father established in Washington, there completing his early education. During the progress of the Civil war, enthused by patriotic ardor, he enlisted in 1862 in the Nineteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, from which he was later transferred to the medical department and in the fall of 1863 he was discharged. Subsequently he re-enlisted in Company L, Second Iowa Cavalry, in which he served until the close of the war, being under General Hearn at first, and later under command of Gen. Edward Hatch. With his comrades he took an active part in many of the noted engagements of the period, including among others the battles at Vicksburg, Miss., and at Nashville, Tenn. After receiving his honorable discharge from the army he began the study of medicine, and in 1869 was graduated from the University of Iowa. Beginning the practice of his profession, he met with success from the first. In 1884, desirous of further advancing his professional knowledge, he took a post-graduate course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Chicago, Ill., while there making a special study of the diseases of women and children under the eminent specialist, Dr. J. Reeves Jackson. Returning then to Kansas, his former field of labor, he practiced in that state for two years, acquiring a fine reputation for skill and ability. In 1886, on account of ill health, he was forced to seek a milder climate, and therefore came to San Diego, Cal., where he remained for twelve years, building up a large practice in both medicine and surgery. Returning then to Kansas, he was for six years traveling surgeon for the Union Pacific Railroad Company, a good position which he had to resign on account of failing health, his old enemy, asthma, again attacking him. Coming to Ramona in 1905, Dr. Doig has here found relief from his physical troubles, and is so much improved in health that he has purchased property and intends to make this his future home. As a physician and surgeon he has built up a large and remunerative practice, and has gained to an eminent degree the confidence and good will of the community, his professional skill and ability being recognized and appreciated.

In 1880 Dr. Doig married Nellie E. Seiver, a native of Muskegon, Mich., and they have one child, Ruth P., a pupil in the San Diego Normal school. The doctor is a Republican in his political affiliations, and for a number of years served as pension examiner for the United States government. Fraternally he is a member of Ellsworth (Kans.) Lodge No. 146, A. F. & A. M.; of Ellsworth Chapter, R. A. M.; demitted from Ellsworth Commandery, K. T.; and is a member of Isis Temple (Salina, Kans.), A. A. O. N. M. S.; and of Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

J. H. Strine

PROF. JOHN HARVEY STRINE. Ranking as one of the foremost educators of California, Prof. John Harvey Strine has, during the twenty years of his active work in this field, given much valuable service both in the schoolroom and in an official position, for he served a term as superintendent of the Los Angeles county schools, during which time he greatly improved the school system. Generations ago the ancestors of Professor Strine immigrated to America and showed the value of the inheritance of the best blood of England, Holland and France by becoming active participants and leaders in the development of the new country. On both paternal and maternal sides Professor Strine's grandparents were natives of Pennsylvania, the former having spent their entire lives in Franklin county and the latter in Lancaster county. The family made a commendable reputation for patriotism during the Civil war. Peter Strine, a great-uncle, fought in the army of the Potomac during the entire conflict; Samuel G. Strine, an uncle, in the Eighty-third Illinois Regiment of the Army of the West, served throughout the war; Jacob Strine, another uncle, in 1861 enlisted for a term of nine months and at the expiration of that time reenlisted for three years, and was killed at Petersburg just two days before the surrender of Lee; the third uncle, Jonathan G. Strine, who had also enlisted for three years, was shot in the head at Petersburg, the same battle in which his brother's life was lost, and in spite of his wound is yet living, his home being in the vicinity of Greencastle, Pa.

On October 26, 1858, occurred the birth of John Harvey Strine, in Newbridge, Franklin county, Pa., he being a son of John and Maria Catharine (Long) Strine, the father having been born February 28, 1829, in Franklin county, Pa., and the mother December 25, 1832, in Lancaster county, of the same state. The father died February 13, 1906, and those of the family now living besides John Harvey are his mother, his sister, A. M. Strine, and his brother, D. L. Strine, all residents of Downey, Cal., and A. T. Strine, of Los Angeles.

John H. Strine's school days began at the early age of five years in Roxbury, Pa., and a year later, his father removing to Martinsburg, W. Va., where he conducted a brickyard, he attended the common schools, and when he was twelve years of age he commenced to work for his father during vacations. The father also purchased a farm near Martinsburg, and when business was especially brisk in the brickyard he left the management of the farm to his sons. In 1877 the family removed to Missouri, after which John Harvey Strine, whose educational privileges until that time had been confined to the common schools, entered the state university of Missouri. In 1882 he graduated from the teacher's course, having earned his expenses by teaching a part of the time. At the time of his graduation he also passed an examination which entitled him to a life diploma as a teacher in Missouri, and after his arrival in California he was given a similar certificate as a high-school instructor. He taught for a time in the district schools of Missouri, but soon arose to the position of principal of the Rolla public schools, and after filling it for two years, resigned in order to remove to California, he having been offered a position at the head of the Downey schools.

Professor Strine's arrival in Downey dates from July 30, 1887, at which time he assumed his duties in the schools, his first work being the grading of the pupils. His ambition was to have his school produce as high class work as any in the state, and within a short time the results of his efforts began to show, in a short time pupils from Downey being accepted in other higher schools without examination. During his residence in Downey Professor Strine has been a leader in many lines, his superior education, talents and position naturally giving him a prominent place in the community. In July, 1891, upon the re-organization of the Downey Bank, he was unanimously elected a director by the stockholders and was immediately placed upon the auditing committee. In 1890 he was appointed a member of the board of education of Los Angeles county, and in 1892 was made president of that body, being re-elected the following year.

In July, 1893, Professor Strine was elected to the principalship of the Monrovia Grammar and High schools, and continued in that position until 1899, when he resigned in order to enter upon his duties as superintendent of the county schools. In recognition of his efficient work in the interests of the schools of the county he was at the time of its organization, in 1895, elected to the presidency of the Los Angeles Pedagogical Society and continued to fill that position, also, until his election as county superintendent. He was one of the most earnest and zealous incumbents of that office that the county has ever had, and the influence of his work and methods are still felt in the schools throughout the county. This was followed by two years of faithful service as secretary of the California state text-book committee. While it would be natural to expect Professor Strine to find his greatest interest in matters educational, he has not confined his talents to those lines, but has been a moving influence in other matters of progressive interest to the community in which he lives. He is the possessor of considerable musical talent and was repeatedly made president of the Apollo Club of Monrovia, and also assisted materially in the organization of the Monrovia Opera House Company, the chief purpose of which was to provide a suitable hall for public assemblages, and the enterprise as carried out has been of untold benefit to the city. During the past two years he has been organizing syndicates, which have been among the most successful in the state in quickly handling large tracts of valuable lands. He is a prominent Mason and is past master of Monrovia Lodge No. 308, F. & A. M. He always stands ready to aid any measure for the benefit of the people, whether from a religious, moral or educational point of view, and does not neglect any of the duties of an intelligent citizen.

FRANK H. REED. Wide-awake, ambitious and enterprising, Frank H. Reed, of Vista, is numbered among the younger generation of successful and prosperous agriculturists of San Diego county, and as a man of upright character and good principles is fast winning for himself an enviable reputation in both the business and social affairs of his adopted home. A son of Dr. J. H. and Ella (Halbert) Reed, of Wisconsin, he was born, February 2, 1880, in Nebraska, but was brought up in Grant county, Wis., where his parents settled when he was a small child.

Immediately after his graduation from the high school, Frank H. Reed was obliged to leave home on account of ill health, the climate of Wisconsin being too severe for him. Coming to Southern California to recuperate, he spent three years at Redlands and Long Beach, inhaling the life-giving air, each day feeling the beneficial influences of the invigorating breezes from the Pacific. Turning his attention to agricultural pursuits, he located in San Diego county in 1905, and at once assumed possession of his present property, known as the Edge Hill ranch, which contains three hundred and eleven acres of land, most of which is tillable. The farm is well improved, having a fine residence and a good orchard, at one time selling for $75,000. Mr. Reed has now excellent prospects of becoming a mine owner and discovering on his estate gems or tourmaline, as on the ridge which passes through it mines have been opened, and bid fair to yield valuable minerals.

In 1903 Mr. Reed married Dorothy Muffley, who was born in Grant county, Wis., and the home over which she so graciously presides is pleasant and attractive. Politically Mr. Reed is a stanch Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Independent Order of Foresters.

CLAUDIUS OTIS DEMSEY. Early in the colonization of America the Demsey family came from Scotland to aid in the development of the new country. John M. Demsey, M. D., a son of the immigrant, was born in Ohio, and there practiced his profession, later becoming a prominent physician of Decatur, Ill., and serving as a surgeon in the Blackhawk and Mexican wars. The lady whom he married, Miss Mary Duncan, M. D., was a graduate of a medical college in Edinburgh, Scotland, and possessed unusual endowments of mind and character. Under their influence it was natural that their son, C. F., a native of Akron, Ohio, should take up the study of materia medica, for which indeed he seemed to possess inherited talents. After having accompanied the California Hundred to the west in 1858 and having gained further knowledge of the country and mankind through his service as a non-commissioned officer in the Second Massachusetts Cavalry during the Civil war, at the close of that historic struggle he entered Rush Medical College, took the complete course and subsequent to graduation practiced in Missouri and Decatur, Ill. The year 1886 found him again in California, viewing with gratification the many improvements wrought by the passing years. For a time he practiced in San Francisco and then removed to Mojave as surgeon of the Southern Pacific Railroad for that district, and since then he has remained in that town, engaged in the practice of medicine and in the oversight of his mining interests. The Republican party receives his support in all elections, and fraternally he affiliates with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During early life he met and married Clarinda Gates, who was born in Ohio and died at Pasadena, Cal., in 1901; her father and two of her brothers served in the Union army during the Civil war. Her mother was a member of the Barrett family.

William M. Thomas

The older among two children and the only son in the family, Claudius Otis Demsey was born in Dayton, Cass county, Mo., March 1, 1870. At an early age he displayed energy of character and force of will. When ten he began to learn telegraphy and at the age of thirteen he was appointed night operator on the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railroad at Warrensburg, Ill. The year 1886 found him in California, employed in the electrical department of the Southern Pacific Railroad at San Francisco. The example of his father, grandfather and grandmother led him to take up the study of medicine in 1888 in Rush Medical College, but a course of lectures covering two years was sufficient to convince him that his talents did not lie in the direction of therapeutics, and he returned to the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in San Francisco and Oakland. In 1897 he married Miss Emma Solari, who was born and reared in Ventura, her father, Augustine Solari, a native of Zoagli, Italy, having been a representative of one of the oldest and most honored families of that county.

After his marriage Mr. Demsey resigned from railroad work and went to the City of Mexico in the employ of Wells-Fargo Company, his work being the changing of rates at the adoption of the metric system. For such a responsibility his knowledge of the Spanish language admirably qualified him. At the expiration of six months he became an operator at Mojave and later was made train dispatcher at Bakersfield. At the latter town, with three others, he located three hundred and fifty acres of oil lands, which he later sold at a fair profit. In 1902 he came to Los Angeles as train dispatcher for the Coast Line at River station, but a year later resigned the position, and in August, 1904, came to Redondo, where he and a partner purchased the grocery stock of Spradling & Lyon. September 11, 1905, he sold his interest to J. M. Chrisman, and in January, 1906, opened a grocery and bakery in the Bank building. Here he has the latest type of oven, with a capacity greater than that of any similar plant in the town. The entire equipment is modern and includes a refrigerator and ice machine. Besides his other interests he owns stock in the People's Savings Bank and the First National Bank. With his wife and two sons, Raymond and Clement, he occupies a comfortable home in Redondo and has many friends in the town. Since coming to this place he has been a leading member of the Board of Trade and a local worker in the Republican party. Though he no longer follows telegraphy, he is still an active member of the Order of Railway Telegraphers, and also affiliates with Lodge No. 99, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Los Angeles, and is worthy past president of the Order of Eagles at Redondo.

WILLIAM M. THOMAS. Among the active, progressive and substantial citizens of Long Beach, William M. Thomas occupies an assured position. As a street grader and contractor he has carried on an extensive business for a number of years, and to his skilful and systematic work is the city largely indebted for the excellent condition of its principal public thoroughfares. A son of J. E. Thomas, he was born, April 13, 1871, in Brown county, Kans. A native of Virginia, J. E. Thomas was reared to agricultural pursuits, and when a young man followed the march of civilization westward, settling as a pioneer farmer in Brown county, Kans., where he was engaged in general farming for many years. Coming to California in 1892, he was first engaged in ranching in Santa Ana, but is now retired from active pursuits, having a pleasant home on Atlantic avenue, Long Beach. He married Lizzie Ramey, who was born in Virginia, and they became the parents of eight sons and two daughters, William M. being the eldest child.

Brought up in Kansas, William M. Thomas left school when fifteen years of age, and from that time was self-supporting, working at any honorable employment. In February, 1890, before attaining his majority, he came to California, settling at Santa Ana, where he rented an alfalfa ranch, which he managed successfully for about six years. In 1897 he located at Long Beach, and with the two teams that he brought with him established the Pioneer Truck Company. Engaging at once in heavy hauling, street grading and contracting, he has built up a large and remunerative business, keeping now ten teams of his own constantly at work, besides having many more. When he located here there was but one street graded, and under his supervision almost all of the other streets and public highways have been constructed and graded. He has acquired some city property, and at the corner of Seventh street and Linden avenue has an attractive residence, in which his office is located.

Mr. Thomas was first married in Whittier, Cal., to Minnie Shank, who was born in Texas, and died at Long Beach. He married for his second wife, in Los Angeles, Cal., Neva Craven, a native of Nebraska, and they have one son, William M., Jr. In his political affiliations Mr. Thomas is a strict Republican, ever loyal to the interests of his party.

A. R. ROBBINS. In promoting the development, growth and material prosperity of Ocean Park A. R. Robbins stands second to none, his influence being apparent in industrial, business and social lines, and to him belongs the distinction of having the original name of the town, South Santa Monica, changed to the name by which it is now known. A son of Chandler Robbins, he was born, October 30, 1859, in Madison, Ind., of substantial Puritan ancestry. His grandfather, Chandler Robbins, Sr., was born and reared in Connecticut, and in early manhood went with Gen. Rufus Putnam to Ohio, settling on the Western Reserve with the New England colony of brave pioneers.

Chandler Robbins was born in Marietta, Ohio, March 1, 1818, and died in Topeka, Kans., May 1, 1885. A talented musician, he was in his earlier life a professor of music in some of the best known colleges of the east, and was afterwards for many years connected with W. W. Kimball & Co., music publishers in Chicago, Ill. Subsequently removing to southern Illinois, he was in business for himself in Cairo until 1877, when he went to Kansas, where he spent his remaining years.

But a year old when his parents located in Chicago, A. R. Robbins lived there until fifteen years old, receiving his elementary education in its public schools, and completing his studies in Cairo, Ill., and in Kansas. Beginning life for himself as a merchant he was first located in Independence, Kans., and afterwards in Topeka. Retiring from mercantile pursuits after a brief experience, he entered the service of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, from 1885 until 1888 being employed in the treasury department at Topeka. His health failing, he then went to Las Vegas, N. Mex., to recuperate, and was there claim clerk for the same company for two years. Being then appointed by President Harrison postmaster of the city, he served for four years, being well liked and prominent in the community. In the spring of 1894 he came to Los Angeles county and for three years, as agent of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, had charge of the upbuilding of South Santa Monica, now called Ocean Park. Continuing with his employers, he was afterwards made oil inspector of the Fullerton oil wells, a position that he retained for some time. Going then into business on his own account, he was engaged principally in promoting oil properties in the Puente district and in Ventura county, continuing until the boom abated. Returning to Ocean Park, he embarked in the real-estate business, helping to organize the Southern California Realty Company. Subsequently selling his interests in that firm, he started the Robbins Realty Company (Inc.), of which he has since been elected president. This company is carrying on an extensive and substantial business, its main office being located at No. 144 Pier avenue, Ocean Park, with branch offices at Santa Monca, Venice, and at Shakespeare Beach, all of these being places which have been largely developed through Mr. Robbins' forethought and good judgment of property values.

In July, 1883, Mr. Robbins married Laura N. Rowe, and into their home five children have been born, namely: Gardner, Earl, Gilbert, Bertha and Vivian. Politically Mr. Robbins is a Republican, and is now serving as Republican precinct committeeman and as notary public in Ocean Park.

HENRY ALLGEYER, a rancher located a mile and a quarter from El Monte, Los Angeles county, was born in Rhineland, Montgomery county, Mo., March 25, 1875. The family is of German origin, and the grandfather, who was seven feet in height, served as bodyguard to Kaiser Wilhelm. The father, John B. Allgeyer, was born in Baden, Germany, where until 1868 he engaged in viticulture. In that year he immigrated to the United States and located in Missouri, there following a similar occupation in addition to general farming. Coming to California in 1881 he spent four months in Napa, after which he returned to Missouri and settled down to his old occupation. Subsequently he again came to the state and located in Anaheim, Orange county, engaging as a vineyardist. A year later he went to Norwalk, Cal., and after spending another year in the state returned to his old home in Missouri. Two months later he concluded to locate permanently in California, and accordingly sold his property and in the fall of 1885 brought his family to Norwalk. He remained in that location for three years engaged as a vineyardist, when, in 1888, he located in El Monte and purchased sixteen acres of new land, which he set out in walnuts and otherwise improved and cultivated until his retirement. His death occurred in this location November 5, 1906. Ever since his location in the United States he had been deeply interested in its public affairs and was a stanch Republican. His wife, Martina Mair, was also born in Baden, Germany; she survives her husband and still resides in this section, being now seventy-two years old. They were the parents of fourteen children, of whom seven grew to years of maturity and five are now living.

The youngest of the children born to his parents, Henry Allgeyer was reared in Missouri until attaining the age of ten years, when he was brought to California by his parents and here completed his education in the public schools. He remained at home and engaged in farming until 1900, when he purchased the home farm and continued its improvement and cultivation. He also purchased adjoining property until he now owns twenty-eight acres on the San Bernardino road, all in walnuts and ten acres of peet land, which he is engaged in farming. He has been successful in his work and at the same time takes a deep interest in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare, like his father supporting the Republican party and advancing its principles. He is one of the charter members of the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association. In Anaheim Mr. Allgeyer married Miss Emily Martin, a native of Germany, and daughter of Ludwig Martin, who died in Anaheim. They have three children, Pearl, Albert and an infant daughter unnamed.

W. H. Hieher

WILLIAM H. NEHER. Though still a young man in the prime of life, Mr. Neher has attained a success for which many give a lifetime of arduous effort. For some years he has made his home on a ranch one mile south of Inglewood. Upon coming to this property in 1896 he bought five acres on the installment plan. From time to time he added to the original tract until he finally acquired ninety acres, but afterward he sold seventy acres of the ranch at a gratifying advance on the first cost. Twenty acres are left in his possession, bearing modern improvements, including a neat residence. In the cultivation of the land Mr. Neher found the raising of popcorn and Indian corn especially profitable and these he made his specialties. In the midst of his ranching operations he found leisure to invent and construct a corn harvester which is unique in that it will not only cut the corn, but also husk and shell the ears. At this writing he is devoting his attention to a number of important inventions and, in order to concentrate his thought upon their perfection, he has rented his ranch and devotes himself exclusively to his patents.

Near Salem, in the county of Marion, Ill., Mr. Neher was born October 21, 1872, being a son of John and Margaret (Beydler) Neher, natives of Indiana, and a grandson of Daniel Neher, who was a pioneer of Indiana, going there from Pennsylvania. Upon attaining man's estate John Neher left Indiana and settled in Illinois, where he improved a tract of land near Salem and remained for a number of years. When Kansas was attracting settlers to its rich farm lands, he took his family to that state, and in 1889 came to California, settling at Lordsburg. Five years later he removed to Texas, but eventually settled in Oklahoma, and now, at sixty-three years of age, is making his home in that territory. During the residence of the family in Kansas his wife died at forty years of age. She was a daughter of an American family of German extraction and her parents were natives of Pennsylvania, removing from there to Indiana and securing government land in an early day.

The children of pioneer families have few advantages for acquiring educations, and the early life of William H. Neher proved no exception to this rule. It early became necessary for him to earn his own livelihood. Being ambitious by nature, he did not allow obstacles to discourage him, but at the age of sixteen years began to be self-supporting and worked his way through the college at McPherson, Kans. In 1890 he entered school at Lordsburg, Cal., where, as before, he paid his own way, earning a neat sum by teaching singing classes. Later he secured a teacher's grammar-grade certificate and for two years taught a country school in Riverside county, but in 1896 gave up that work and came to Inglewood, Los Angeles county, where he has since resided, engaging in ranch pursuits and in the perfection of various inventions.

Mr. Neher has met with success with his inventions and has just perfected and put on the market a crude oil generator for use on any gasoline engine, the use of which reduces the cost of operation fifty to seventy-five per cent. The generator will be manufactured by Fairbanks-Morse of Los Angeles. During 1906 he perfected a water system for irrigating five hundred acres of land in his vicinity, by sinking two wells to a depth of two hundred and thirty and four hundred and eighteen feet, giving a flow of two hundred inches, and by using his crude oil generator he lifts the water one hundred feet at a cost of only thirty cents per hour, which is one-half of the former cost.

As the development of adequate water supply is made possible and the ability to distribute the same at small cost becomes known there is reason to suppose that a demand for the Neher generator will grow as soon as the public at large are convinced of its merits.

In politics Mr. Neher has been an ardent Republican ever since casting his first ballot and has been interested in the success of his party. Always active in school affairs, he has served efficiently as a school director and has maintained a warm interest in the education of the young. In 1895 he was united in marriage with Miss Lottie E. Flory, who was born in Greeley, Colo., and has made California her home since girlhood. Four children were born of their union, namely: May E. and Maude E. (twins), Minerva Josephine and Virgil William. It is Mr. Neher's ambition to give to his children the opportunities and advantages which he was denied, and the success he has achieved is especially gratifying to him, because it enables him to surround his family with every comfort and give his children the encouraging aid so helpful to their moral and educational development.

GEORGE S. RAYCRAFT. Among the successful business men of Compton is George S. Raycraft, who has for many years been actively identified with the manufacturing interests of this locality as a harness-maker. A man of resolution and ambition, enterprising and self-reliant, he has made his own way in the world, and in every sense implied by the term is a self-made man. He was born September 20, 1852, in Cleveland, Ohio, and at the age of eighteen months, his mother dying, he was placed in the Mrs. Benjamin Ross Orphans' Home, in that city. He is of English ancestry, his father, Timothy Raycraft, having been born in Yorkshire, while his mother, a descendant of the House of Stuart, was born and reared in Lancashire. The father, a well-educated man, was a skilled mechanic, a cabinet, maker by trade, and after coming to the United States was foreman for the Brooks Importing Company, in Cleveland, Ohio. At the age of twenty-one years he married, his bride being a girl of sixteen. After her death he went to the Black River mining regions.

At the age of nine years George S. Raycraft made his escape from the home in which he had been placed, and from that time paddled his own canoe. He worked as opportunity offered, attended the common schools, subsequently, in Chicago, Ill., earning enough money to pay his tuition for a year in Allen's Academy. Leaving Chicago, he went to Sterling, Ill., where he served an apprenticeship of three years at the harness-maker's trade, in the mean time making his home with Rev. Jerome T. Mason, a Baptist minister. Becoming familiar with his trade, he had charge of his employer's shop for some time. Resigning his position in 1885, he made his way to California, and for a short time resided in Los Angeles. Coming from there to Compton, he was for eight months in the employ of Charles Lyman, receiving a salary of $18 a week. In 1886 he started in business on his own account, and with the exception of a short time has since resided here. In his operations he has met with success, having built up a large and lucrative patronage, his reputation for honest, reliable work being known throughout this part of the county.

In Los Angeles, Cal., December 25, 1887, Mr. Raycraft married for his first wife Ianthea Rae, assistant principal in one of the public schools, the marriage ceremony being performed in the Methodist Episcopal parsonage by Rev. R. E. Moore. She was a daughter of Thomas Rae, who was born and reared in Maine, and is now a resident of Sonoma county, Cal. Eighteen months after their marriage, which was an especially happy one, Mrs. Raycraft died, leaving a babe of six months. This child, Myron Leslie Raycraft, now a young man of eighteen years, is living with his maternal grandparents in Sonoma county. Mr. Raycraft married for his second wife, December 25, 1890, Bertha Voight, a daughter of David Voight, who was born in Berlin, Germany, and immigrated to America with his family, settling in Lake county, Cal., where he has since resided. From this wife Mr. Raycraft was divorced, and their only child, Marvel Addie, fourteen years old, lives with her mother in Lake county. In politics Mr. Raycraft casts his vote for the best men and measures, regardless of party restrictions. In 1872, while living in Illinois, he joined the Odd Fellows, passed through all the chairs of his lodge, and three times served as state representative. In 1895 he was made a member of Anchor Lodge No. 273, F. & A. M., of Compton, of which he is now past master.

JOHN M. WESTLUND. From Sweden have come some of the most loyal subjects of the United States, and wherever they may be located we find them among the most highly respected and successful citizens and business men. John M. Westlund, of Santa Paula, was born in Sweden April 19, 1870, and when only nine years old he was left motherless. There were six children in the parental family, only one of whom, the subject of this sketch, lives in California. The father immigrated to America and settled in Kansas, where he finally died, at the good old age of eighty-two years. John M. Westlund received his education in the common schools of Sweden and was fifteen years old when he came to the new world and joined his father in Kansas, where they engaged in farming, and also worked on the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

After three years' residence in Kansas, in 1888 John M. Westlund, removed to Ventura county, Cal., and worked on the wharf at Ventura for three years. He was anxious to resume ranching, however, and upon a ranch near Saticoy, he remained about thirteen years, after which he moved onto the place where he now resides. He carries on operations on a large scale, and besides cultivating the thirty-three acre ranch of walnuts which he owns, he rents a tract containing a hundred acres on which he has thirty acres of walnuts and seventy acres of beans. On another ranch of one hundred and forty acres he has twenty acres in walnuts and one hundred and twenty acres in beans. He has lived in his present home for eight years.

In 1902 Mr. Westlund was united in marriage to Sarah Wilson, a native of Nebraska, and to them three children have been born: Francis, Mary and Carl. Both Mr. Westlund, who is a member of the Lutheran Church, and his wife, who belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, are deeply interested in religious matters and contribute liberally to the support of both denominations represented by their membership. Fraternally Mr. Westlund affiliates with the Foresters Lodge of Saticoy, and politically belongs to the Republican party.

JOSEPH EUGENE SHREWSBURY. The present efficiency of the fire department of Long Beach is in large measure due to the efforts of Chief Joseph E. Shrewsbury, with which department of the city's activity he has been connected since May 27, 1902. At the same time he has built up for himself a position of prominence among the business men of this city, being associated with the firm of W. W. Lowe & Co., real-estate dealers. Mr. Shrewsbury is a native of the middle west, his birth having occurred in Stillwater, Minn., August 19, 1867, although California has been his home since he was three years of age. His father, W. P. Shrewsbury, located in Minnesota from his native state, Ohio, having served in the Sixty-third Regiment Ohio Infantry during the Civil war, a member of the Signal Corps. After his removal to Minnesota he engaged in the livery business in Stillwater, where he remained until 1870; in that year he located in Point Arena, Mendocino county, Cal., and engaged in ranching for a time. In Cloverdale, Somona county, he followed the livery business until his removal to Skagit county, Wash., where he now resides. His wife, formerly Nora Kerns, died in Seattle, Wash.

One of three children born to his parents, Joseph Eugene Shrewsbury received his education in the public school of California, which he attended up to the age of fifteen years, when he became dependent upon his own resources. For several years he was employed in the lumber milling business in Mendocino county, after which he was engaged in Seattle as a stationary engineer, later going to Butte, Mont., and following the same occupation. After seven months in the last named place he went to Strum, Wis., and remained in that locality until 1896. Coming then to Southern California he located in Long Beach and with a friend, Mr. Lollich, conducted the Long Beach Steam Laundry, the first enterprise of its kind here. Later he sold his interest to James Clewett, after which he operated a stationary engine and engaged as a machinist for the Mineral Hill Mining Company. Returning to Long Beach in 1902 he purchased an interest in the real-estate business of W. W. Lowe & Co., and has continued an active member of the firm ever since. He was actively interested in the laying out of the Atlantic avenue subdivision, Overlook Park tract, View Acre tract, Summer Villa tract, Fry Walnut tract, Palm Vista tract, Van Orman tract and others.

In Seattle, Wash., Mr. Shrewsbury married Miss Maggie Baldridge, a native of Wisconsin, and born of this union are two children, Elenora and Ruby. Mrs. Shrewsbury is a woman of culture and refinement, prominent in social circles and gives her religious support to the Congregational Church, of which she is a member. Mr. Shrewsbury from the first has taken a prominent part in public affairs, one of the first of his official positions being city plumbing inspector, he being the first incumbent of this position. May 27, 1902, he became connected with the Long Beach fire department, having previously had experience in Anacortes, Wash., as captain of a truck company. Three months after he became associated with the fire department of Long Beach he was elected chief and assumed the duties in the volunteer department. In January, 1906, upon the organization of a new department, he was again elected chief by the members of the department. The central house is located on Third street and Pacific avenue, with branches at Second and Lime, Tenth and Lime and at Terminal; many improvements have been made in the methods and management of the department, its equipment, which is thoroughly modern and up-to-date, consisting of a steamer and combined chemical engine and hose wagon; also two ordinary hose wagons; and hook and ladder, while there has been installed a machine shop where they manufacture their own fire hydrants, the invention of this department. The fire alarm system is one of unusual merit, and unlike most systems an adequate protection for the city. Mr. Shrewsbury is keenly alive to the success of the department and is enthusiastic in his work. He is a member of the Pacific Coast Fire Chiefs' Association and the National Fireman's Association. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor commander; Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias, of which he is ex-lieutenant; and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is likewise a member of Sons of Veterans, being associated with Lawton Camp No. 2 and is one of the state councillors. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Good Roads Society and the Cosmopolitan Club. Politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Mr. Shrewsbury merits the high position which he holds in the esteem of all who have been associated with him throughout his residence in Southern California, appreciated alike for his remarkable qualities along business lines and the characteristics of the man and citizen.

WILLIAM H. CARPENTER. In the development and advancement of the material and industrial prosperity of Compton no one person was more active and influential than the late William H. Carpenter, who during the quarter of a century that he resided here was identified with the establishment of every beneficial enterprise of importance. Industrious, thrifty and capable, he accumulated wealth and distinction through his own strenuous efforts, became prominent in business circles, and as a man and a citizen was held in the highest regard throughout the community, his many sterling traits of character and upright moral principles winning the respect of all with whom he was brought in contact. A native of New York state, he was born, July 20, 1855, in the city of Utica, where he lived until nine years old.

Reared in the Empire state, Mr. Carpenter attended the public schools as a boy and youth, completing his early education at the Clinton Liberal Institute, in Clinton, N. Y. At the age of twenty-one years he came to California, joining his father, who had three months previously settled in Bakersfield, Kern county. A few months later, in October, 1877, Mr. Carpenter located in Compton as a pioneer of this section of Los Angeles county. Purchasing land, he engaged extensively in agricultural pursuits, and in his independent occupation met with eminent success. He farmed on a large scale, at one time having four thousand acres of grain to care for, at the same time running a threshing outfit. Continuing his operations, he was each season well repaid by the bountiful harvests produced in his fertile, well-tilled fields and orchards, which readily responded to his care and management. December 3, 1901, while yet in manhood's prime, he was called to the life beyond, his death being a sad loss to the community as well as to his immediately family and friends. Politically he was a stanch Republican, active in party ranks, many times serving as delegate to county and state conventions. Fraternally he was a prominent Mason and Odd Fellow, holding all of the important offices in the lodges of both organizations.

December 18, 1881, in Compton, Mr. Carpenter married Mary, daughter of William and Lucy (Heath) Malott, natives of Virginia, who came to California about 1875, purchased a part of a Spanish grant near Compton, and there spent their remaining years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter six children were born, two daughters and four sons. The daughters, Mabel C. and Helen L., died in childhood, and the sons are living, as follows: William O. and Arthur L., attending the Los Angeles Military Academy; and Lawrence E. and Raymond, living with their mother.

January 22, 1903, Mrs. Carpenter married Lee O. Funk, of Compton, a prosperous agriculturist, engaged in general farming and dairying, his ranch of two hundred and sixty-four acres lying two miles east of the village. Mr. and Mrs. Funk, however, live in Compton, having a fine home in the pleasantest part of the town. They have one daughter, Lucille Funk, who was born January 26, 1906.

CHARLES Y. FORD. The position of postmaster at Wynola, which he has filled for a period of about ten years, occupies the attention of Mr. Ford to some extent, but the duties are not sufficiently heavy to deter him from engaging in other activities. Accordingly he devotes considerable attention to the care of his farm in the Wynola district, where he and his sister, Miss Mary E. Ford, have established a comfortable home and invested their savings in the land and its improvement. The tract comprises one hundred and twenty acres, the larger portion of which is under cultivation to farm crops or in pasturage, but twenty-five acres have been set aside for a fruit orchard and apple and cherry trees have been planted that now produce bountiful crops of their special varieties.

On a farm near Pinckneyville, Perry county, Ill., Charles Y. Ford was born October 20, 1865, his parents being John P. and Louisa H. (Youngblood) Ford, natives respectively of Kentucky and Illinois. His father was but a small boy when the family removed from Kentucky to the then frontier of Illinois, and hence much of his active life was passed in the developing environment of a new community. In time he became one of the well-known farmers and stockraisers in the vicinity of Pinckneyville, and he continued in the same locality until 1885, when he came to California and settled on a ranch near Santa Ana. On that homestead his death occurred December 27, 1904, when he was fourscore years of age, and his wife passed away in 1897, at the age of seventy.

A. Nelson

On removing to California Charles Y. Ford was a young man about twenty years of age, ready for the active responsibilities of earning a livelihood and ambitious to work his own way in the world. Shortly after his arrival in the state he purchased the land which he still owns and in which his sister also is interested. In addition to managing the home property he rents land which he sows in grain. Recently he has erected a comfortable farm residence that adds greatly to the appearance and value of the farm. In 1897 he was appointed postmaster and has held the office under a Republican administration, although he is stanchly Democratic in his opinions. His sister holds membership with the Baptist Church and he is a contributor to religious measures, although not identified with any denomination. Fraternally he has his membership with Court Julian Banner No. 8522, A. O. F., at Julian. During the long period of his residence in the locality he has gained the confidence of acquaintances and has won an assured position in the esteem of those with whom business or social relations have brought him into contact.

NILES NELSON. One among the oldest settlers of San Diego county and the oldest resident of Poway, Niles Nelson was born near Kongsberg, Norway, July 15th, 1832. He was the son of Ole and Anneken (Stabeck) Nelson, who were among the most substantial and honored old families of the Northland. In 1842 they sold their farm and made the long journey of that day to the New World, bringing their family. The father died while crossing Lake Michigan. At Milwaukee they were met by Mrs. Nelson's brother, Clement Stabeck, who had settled in Illinois in 1839 and by teams they proceeded to Rock Run, Stephenson county, Illinois. Mrs. Nelson still had sufficient funds to purchase a good farm near what is now the town of Davis, and there she resided until her death in 1883 at the age of eighty-three years. She was a woman of strong character, high ideals, and great moral worth, her amiable disposition and strong religious convictions endeared her greatly to her large circle of friends. Her teachings left their deep imprint on Mr. Nelson, who grew to respect, honor and regard them as his guilding star through life.

Mr. Nelson is now the only survivor of the family. He grew to manhood on the farm and attended the common schools, but they were limited in those days and most of his education was obtained by self-study at night after a hard day's work and by experience when in contact with the problems of the business world. When nineteen years of age he and his half-brother, Thurston Knudson, joined a company starting for the gold fields of California. Outfitting with ox-teams and wagons they left April 25, 1852, crossing the Missouri river at Council Bluffs and on up the Platte river, then a wilderness with herds of buffalo and roving bands of Indians. They crossed the summit of the Rockies at South Pass and followed the old Oregon trail to Bear river, where they crossed to the Humboldt, which they followed until arriving at the Upper Humboldt Meadows, when they came by the Lassen route to Shasta county, California, after a six months' trip. There they engaged in placer mining for about four years on Clear Creek, meeting with considerable success, and as they made money they sent it to Illinois and purchased land. Concluding to return east they left San Francisco on the steamer Cortez, April, 1856, to go via the Nicaragua route, but on account of the Walker insurrection the steamer went on to Panama, landing them just before the Panama riots of April 15, 1856, and history gives credit to the valor and courage of the passengers of the Cortez (returning California miners) for saving the day for the Americans against the greasers. During the riot Mr. Nelson was robbed of gold dust to the amount of $1,500, but under the circumstances was fortunate to escape with his life which had also been attempted. From Aspinwall they took a mail boat to Havana, thence to New York City, and returned to Illinois. There he engaged in farming until 1861, when he again returned to California via Panama. He followed mining at the Orofino mines, next in Josephine county, Ore., where he remained until 1862, when he made his way to the Caribou mine on Williams Creek, B. C., where he mined until fall; then he went to the Boise mines, in Idaho, via San Francisco. The fall found him in Astoria, Ore., where he remained until the spring of 1865, when he returned to Illinois via the Panama route. He located on his farm adjoining Davis and engaged in the pursuit of agriculture for eight years. But the Pacific coast had such attractions for him that he could not content himself. During his mining experience he had met and formed the friendship of A. E. Horton, the founder of San Diego, and in May, 1873, he sold his farm and removed to the southland. He embarked in business in San Diego with the prospect that Thomas Scott would build the Texas Pacific R. R., but when the financial crash came Scott failed in business and San Diego suffered accordingly. He then located on a homestead in Poway and there began improving a farm and building a house in what was then practically a wilderness. He has met with success as a farmer and horticulturist and now owns four hundred and thirty acres of land devoted to raising grain and cattle; has a vineyard of thirty-five acres raising both table and raisen grapes and also an orchard of eight acres. He has also installed a pumping plant for irrigating a small area.

At Davis, Ill., Mr. Nelson was married October 25, 1865, to Miss Helene Joranleid, who was born near Christiania, Norway, the daughter of Hans and Ingeborg (Bratlien) Joranleid, who were very substantial and extensive farmers. Mrs. Nelson came to America in 1856 and has been truly a helpmate to her husband. She is a woman of much native ability and is greatly appreciated by her many friends, who esteem her for her excellent qualities. They are the parents of four children, three of whom are living, namely: Henry Oscar, a farmer and horticulturist in Poway, Cal.; Albert I., assists his father in the management of the home ranch; Ida Clarisse, wife of William L. Stone, proprietor of the Jersey Dairy in San Diego; and Nels who died in his teens.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson adhere to the teachings of the Lutheran Church and are strong advocates of temperance. Mr. Nelson is a very public-spirited and enterprising man and has ever been active in the upbuilding of his community. The schools have always received his hearty support and co-operation. For many years he was a member of the board of school trustees, a part of the time acting as clerk. Other enterprises that have been started from time to time have always received his liberal support and aid.

H. P. SCHOFIELD. Several successive generations of the Schofield family have made their homes in the United States, the first of the name in this country having been Arthur Schofield, a native of Schofield, England, and by occupation a manufacturer of broadcloth. On coming to America he embarked in business at Pittsfield, Mass., where he made the first yard of broadcloth ever manufactured in the United States. At the time of his death he had rounded out a full century of usefulness and activity. Next in line of descent was Arthur, Jr., who learned the trade of carriage-making and followed the occupation with considerable success in South Egremont, Mass., remaining a resident and business man of that city until his death at sixty-eight years.

Although his early years were passed in Massachusetts, famed for the high character of its literary institutions and the wide scope of its educational opportunities, it was not possible for H. P. Schofield to attend school owing to conditions over which he had no control. Born in Sheffield, Mass., the son of Arthur, Jr., he was only eight years of age when he ran away from home and from that time onward he was self-supporting. The success which he later achieved was not the result of educational privileges or the help of others, but came as the result of his unaided exertions in the field of business enterprise. The world was his school-room and experience his teacher, and who shall say that he failed to learn his lessons under the rigid discipline of his stern instructor? After having served a full apprenticeship to the trade of carriage-maker in Massachusetts, at the age of eighteen he enlisted in the Union army for service during the Civil war. As a member of Company K, Fourteenth New York Infantry, enlisting at Hudson, N. Y., he accompanied his regiment to the front, where he remained for two years. He was then summoned to Washington, D. C., where he served nearly one year in the quartermaster's department.

At the expiration of the Civil war in 1865 Mr. Schofield went to Rochester, N. Y., and opened a carriage-manufacturing plant, which proved a success from the inauguration of the enterprise. After ten profitable years in the same location he went into the oil regions as an operator and contractor and builder, besides which he operated at Elmira, N. Y. The next industry which engaged his attention was in Chicago, where he manufactured machinery under special patents. The plant on Canal street gave employment to one hundred and fifty workmen and produced machinery for the filing of every variety of saw, from the smallest hand saw to the largest circular kind. By this process the work of filing, previously done by hand, was entirely revolutionized and simplified. From a small beginning the business grew, without the aid of any traveling men whatever, until orders were received from every part of the United States and eventually from every portion of the civilized world.

After a remarkably successful business career as a manufacturer of his inventions and patents Mr. Schofield eventually disposed of his interest in the factory to his partner, L. L. Filstrup. Being thus released from business cares, he was able to seek the delights of a genial climate and thereupon came to Southern California, where he built his beautiful home, Walholla, at Ocean Park. Though his business life was one of great responsibilities and his labors often kept him at his desk from dawn until midnight, yet he retains to a large degree the robustness of youth. In a large measure this is due to his temperament and fine poise of mind. Business cares were left behind when the office door was closed. Anxious moments he had, as do all who control great enterprises, yet he never allowed himself to be worried or irritated by his anxieties, and thus has retained his physical and mental strength and alertness. In fraternal matters he affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Benevolent Protective Order of Elks while living in Chicago. While living in Rochester, N. Y., just after the close of the Civil war, he married Mary A. Darling, who died in New York, and later he married Margaret Buttrey, who was born in London, Canada, and was making her home at Galesburg, this state, at the time of their union.

FRANCIS PERRY SAPPINGTON, M. D. The family with which Dr. Sappington, of El Monte, is connected is one of the oldest and most prominent of St. Louis, Mo., the town of Sappington, in St. Louis county, being his birthplace. His father, T. J., was born there, while his grandfather, John, belonged to an old family of Kentucky and in 1803 settled in St. Louis, which was then a part of the Louisiana territory. He inherited the patriotic spirit which induced him to serve in the war of 1812, an ancestor, John Sappington, of Maryland, having served throughout the Revolutionary war, after which he removed to Kentucky and became a planter, serving in the state legislature and becoming recognized as one of the strong upbuilding factors of the section. He had seventeen children, all of whom he sent to Missouri to buy land nine miles from St. Louis and agreed to come himself as soon as Jefferson purchased the territory. John Sappington, Jr., became the owner of three thousand acres of land and received a medal from the Missouri legislature for having the model farm of the state. In the war of 1812 he was the first man to plunge into the Mississippi river and swim across to join Governor Edwards, of Illinois, for service. T. J. Sappington became a farmer in Missouri, where his death occurred at an advanced age. He was a friend of General Grant and helped him build his loghouse at what was known as Hardscrabble. He married Julia Leffingwell, a native of Beloit, Wis., and daughter of William Leffingwell, of Salem, Mass., and a descendant of Mayflower ancestry and Revolutionary sires. He himself served with Perry in the war of 1812 as a musician. The mother still survives and makes her home in Sappington, Mo.

The oldest in a family of four children, all of whom are living, Francis Perry Sappington was born in the town of Sappington, September 8, 1871. He was brought up on his father's farm and educated primarily in the public schools and Kirkwood Military Academy under Professor Haight. He then entered the medical department of Washington University, from which institution he was graduated in 1893 with the degree of M. D. Locating in Sappington, he practiced medicine there for nine years. In November, 1902, he came to California and in Whittier engaged in the lumber business in partnership with A. G. Clabaugh, the firm name being Clabaugh & Sappington. Six months later he sold out his interest in this enterprise and returned to Missouri, where he settled up his business and in January, 1904, once more located in the Pacific state. In El Monte he purchased a fifteen-acre ranch on Tyler street, erected a handsome residence, and at the same time established a lumber business and the first lumber yard in the town. He now owns an acre on the railroad, where he has put up sheds, etc., and is carrying on an extensive and constantly increasing business.

In St. Louis, Mo., Dr. Sappington married Miss Fannie Walls, a native of that city and a daughter of William C. Walls, a broker. They have three children, Thomas Jefferson, and twin daughters, Mildred Halpain and Joyce Harbison. Fraternally the doctor was made a Mason in Whittier Lodge No. 323 and now belongs to Lexington Lodge No. 104, of El Monte. He is also identified with the Independent Order of Foresters and Modern Woodmen of America. In religion he is a member of the Episcopal Church, and politically is a Democrat.

GEORGE ELLIOT. An instance of a man who has gone out to meet opportunity, who has had the alertness to grasp it and the ability to develop it, is found in George Elliot, a rancher engaged in strenuously promoting the grain and bean industry in the neighborhood of Santa Maria. Mr. Elliott possesses the steadfastness of purpose and perseverance of the Scotchman, and that determination which minimizes obstacles and rises upon defeat. He was born near Edinburg, Scotland, October 11, 1850, the son of Francis and Jane (Douglas) Elliot, who, in 1862, brought their family to America and settled on a farm in Delaware county, N. Y. The elder Elliot was an experienced dairyman, and he continued to follow this occupation until a few years before his death, at the age of eighty years. His wife died in 1877, at the age of forty-four. She was the mother of eight children, of whom one daughter died at the age of thirty-seven years, and of whom three sons live in California.

George Elliot was twelve years old when his youthful activities were shifted from Scotland to Delaware county, N. Y. There he learned all about dairying from his father, and at irregular intervals attended the public schools. In 1873 he came to California to seek the rewards of an independent life, settling in San Jose, where he found employment for a couple of years. In 1875 he came to the Santa Maria valley, rented a ranch for two years, and then engaged in the stock business in the mountains for four years. For the following two years he was employed on a ranch in the valley, and in 1886 purchased the farm of two hundred acres which formed the nucleus of his present large property. From general farming and stock-raising he eventually changed to grain and beans, and these crops proved so profitable that in 1903 he added two hundred acres to his farm, the majority of it under these two products. Excellent improvements have resulted from his occupation of this large estate, and all are of a practical and enduring nature. The owner has studied well the economic side of agriculture, and is quick to adopt the new order of things.

The family of Mr. Elliot consists of his wife, formerly Ellen Bradley, a native of California, and whom he married in 1886, and a son, Francis. His political affiliations are with the Republican party, and as its chosen representative he has served as a member of the board of education. Fraternally he is connected with the Santa Maria Lodge No. 340, F. & A. M., and the Knights of Pythias. He finds a religious home in the Presbyterian Church. The life and labor of Mr. Elliot, as an expression of earnest and praiseworthy resolve, is entitled to enrollment among those adopted sons of the state who are adding to its material, intellectual and moral wealth.

SAMUEL H. FLINT is one of the highly respected pioneers of Ventura county who has been very successful in his ranching projects. He was born January 22, 1834, in Clinton county, N. Y., being a member of a family of ten children, nine of whom grew to maturity, but only two are now living: Samuel H. and John, the latter living in Iowa. The father, Samuel Flint, was born in New Hampshire, and the mother, who was Ann Dominy before her marriage, was a native of Long Island, N. Y., and was married in Clinton county. In 1835 the father went to Ohio with his family and there he remained until his death, at the age of fifty-five years. He was a Democrat in politics and belonged to the Masonic fraternity. The mother also died in Ohio, when forty-five years old.

Samuel H. Flint was less than two years old when his parents took him to Ohio and in that state he received a part of his education in the early subscription schools. From Ohio he went to La-Salle county, Ill., with an older brother and there finished his schooling, after which he engaged in farming. He later was the owner of a fine farm, but he finally sold it and came to California in 1875. He went to Santa Barbara county, living near what is now Montecito, where he remained one year. He then came to the Santa Clara valley of Southern California and bought his present ranch, upon which he has resided ever since. Besides the fifty-two acre ranch near Santa Paula he also owns fifty-five acres near Saticoy, which is devoted to farming purposes. The home ranch is planted to corn and barley, and the fact that Mr. Flint has always given his attention to farming and not divided it with other pursuits may be one reason why he has met with the success that has been his. Practically all the improvements on his ranch are of his own making.

In 1857 Mr. Flint married Miss Eliza J. Sinclair, a native of Kentucky. Six children were born to them, three of whom died in infancy, and the three living are Henry A., Lizzie and Clara. Politically Mr. Flint affiliates with the Democratic party on national issues, being a Cleveland Democrat.

JACKSON FREER, son of William H. Freer, who is represented elsewhere in this work, was born April 6, 1870, in San Jose, Santa Clara county, Cal. In 1875 he was brought to Southern California by his parents and was reared to young manhood on the parental ranch, receiving his preliminary education in the public schools and completing it in St. Vincent's College. He remained at home with his father until he was twenty-three years old, assisting in the cultivation of the ranch, when, in 1893, he located on his present property, of forty-six acres, which he had purchased upon attaining his majority. This he began to improve and cultivate, installing a pumping plant, building a house and barn, and setting the land to walnuts, the grove now being pronounced one of the finest in this district.

In El Monte Mr. Freer married Miss Eliza Jane Schmidt, a native of El Monte, whose father, Henry Schmidt, was born in Lorraine, France, October 15, 1842. Her grandfather, Henry Schmidt, was born in Bordeaux, France, and was superintendent of the Count of Hamburg's dominion in Lorraine until his death in 1866. His wife, Margaret, also died in that location. They were the parents of sixteen children, of whom fifteen attained maturity. Henry Schmidt was the ninth in order of birth; in boyhood he was apprenticed in Luxemburg to learn the trade of blacksmith. After completing his apprenticeship he traveled throughout France,

John C. Olmsted

Belgium and Holland, and finally went to Poland, returning thence to Paris in 1863 and making that city his home for three years. In 1866 he came to California via the Nicaragua route, and from San Francisco went to San Jose, where he worked at his trade for a time. He was next located in Marysville, then Virginia City, Nev.; then to Winnemucca, same state; thence went to Silver City and Boise City, Idaho; and from the last-named place overland to Alaska. Forced back by the snow he returned south and located for a time in Salt Lake City, thence went to White Pine, then Lincoln county, Nev., and in 1869 came to El Monte, Cal., where he established a blacksmith shop and has ever since followed his trade. He married in El Monte Eliza Slack, a native of Cole Creek, Utah, and a daughter of William Slack, mentioned at length in the sketch of his son, George Slack, found elsewhere in this volume. They had the following children: Eliza Jane, wife of Jackson Freer; Victoria, wife of Thomas Freer; Frank, a butcher located in Arizona; Maggie, wife of William Chambers, D. D. S., of Los Angeles; and Camilla, who became the wife of Herman Platt, and whose death occurred in Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. Freer had three children, only one surviving, Delma. Mr. Freer is a member of the Ancient Oder of United Workmen, while politically he is a stanch Democrat. He is a charter member of the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association.

JOHN CROSBY OLMSTED is remembered in Southern California as one of the noblest pioneers whose aims and purposes were always for the upbuilding of his adopted state, the development of its resources, the promotion of great public enterprises, rather than for personal gain, while his hand was ever held out to assist those less fortunate than himself, his death in 1891 removing from the community a man, citizen and friend whose place could never be filled. His sterling traits of character were an inheritance from an old New York family, members of which had been prominent in public affairs for generations. His father, John Olmsted, was president of the First National Bank of Yonkers, to which place he had removed from New York City, where John Crosby Olmsted was born, the oldest son of his parents. He was reared in Yonkers, receiving his preliminary education in its public schools, after which he graduated from Williams College, then he went south and engaged as a tutor for a short time. The west held out great attractions to a young man of energy and ambition and accordingly in 1864 he turned his face toward California, making the journey to San Francisco via the Isthmus of Panama and upon his arrival engaging with A. Rowan, the most extensive book and stationery dealer in that city. His education and scholarly tendencies made of Mr. Olmsted a very successful man in this line, and it was not much later that he became a partner in a similar business with a Mr. Cohn, the firm name being known as Olmsted & Cohn, located on Kearney street. In 1877 he disposed of his business interests in San Francisco and came to Los Angeles, where under the firm name of Olmsted & Wales he conducted a book and stationery business on First street between Main and Spring streets, and later was located on South Main street. Some time after this his partnership was dissolved and alone he established a similar enterprise on South Spring street, where he remained occupied until his death, which occurred January 6, 1891. He had been active in religious work ever since his location in Los Angeles, being a member of the Third Presbyterian Church in which he officiated as elder many years. Politically he was an ardent Republican and gave his support to the advancement of these principles, although locally no man could be counted upon more to further public welfare, regardless of party affiliations.

Mr. Olmsted was married in San Francisco June 17, 1868, to Miss Millicent Marshall Hickcox, a native of Cleveland, Ohio. She boasts an ancestry which has given to her some of the best blood of the eastern states, Massachusetts and Connecticut being the home of the name originally, her paternal grandfather, Benjamin, born in Durham county, Conn., in 1736, having married Miss Hannah Clark, of Norwich, Mass., whose direct ancestor was mate on the Mayflower in its memorable voyage. Benjamin Hickcox became a pioneer of Oneida county, N. Y., and was postmaster at Clinton, and there Edward Y. Hickcox, the father of Mrs. Olmsted, was born. He was a merchant in Buffalo for many years, later was located in Cleveland, Ohio, in the management of a furniture business under the firm name of Chas. & D. A. Shepard. In 1863 he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama in search of the health which the state has since given to countless numbers of the world's seekers. He lived but three years, dying in San Jose in 1866. He was survived by his wife, formerly Sophia L. Scott, who was born in Mayville, Chautauqua county, N. Y., her mother being a member of the Holmes family. Orsamus Holmes, a great-uncle of Mrs. Olmsted, was a soldier under Washington in the Revolutionary war. She afterward made her home with her daughter in Los Angeles, where her death occurred in 1893, at the age of eighty-five years. She was the mother of the following children: Sophia, wife of Judge James Cary, who came to California in 1852. She died in San Francisco; Edward, who came to California in 1853, and engaged in mining, his death occurring in Idaho in 1863; John S., of Washington, D. C., who served as superintendent of the Senate folding room for over twenty years; Harriet, who died at the age of nine years; Benjamin, who died in infancy; Seth H., of El Monte; and Millicent M., Mrs. Olmsted, who was born January 18, 1844, in Cleveland, Ohio. She was educated in the Cleveland seminary and in 1863 accompanied her parents to California, where in San Francisco she was married to Mr. Olmsted. In 1877 she came to Los Angeles and after the death of her husband she continued to make that city her home for about ten years, when she came to El Monte and about a mile and a half north of the town purchased the property where she now resides. This consists of forty acres devoted to walnuts. She is also interested in real estate in Los Angeles, with her brother owning a building which was erected at No. 452-454 South Main street, also Los Angeles street property, as well as residence property throughout the city. Mrs. Olmsted is a member of the Central Presbyterian Church, of Los Angeles. She is a woman of rare worth of character, eager to give of the best of her life to others, rather than to keep for herself, glad of her ability to lessen some of the trials and troubles of the world. Her chief aim and ambition is the founding of a hospital, and for this purpose she placed in the hands of Dr. Hugh Walker the power to select a board of trustees for the erection of such a building, but this has later developed into a Presbyterian Hospital. This is to be conducted on humanitarian principles, and will be the foundation of a substantial building to be conducted as a Presbyterian Hospital, constructed and supported by donation and endowments of those who desire to assist such a worthy enterprise. One of the main objects which Mrs. Olmsted has in mind is that this enterprise be not wholly for physical needs, but will prove of untold benefit spiritually, in her donation requesting that it be conducted on spiritual grounds and that all the nurses be Christian women. This will at its consummation be one of the noblest and far-reaching influences in the upbuilding of physical and moral betterment, and will forever perpetuate the name of its donor—rich in the Higher things, broad in the truest conception of Christianity, and gladly holding out her influence to extend beyond "life's little day."

E. W. SELBACH is a successful business man of El Monte, Los Angeles county, where he is conducting a fine meat market, modern in all its appointments, a refrigerator of considerable capacity, a three-horse power gasoline engine, all appurtenances for the manufacture of sausage, lard, etc., and since his establishment of this enterprise he has built up a wide custom. Mr. Selbach is a native Californian, born in Pleasanton February 7, 1871; his father, A. Selbach, was born near Hamburg, Germany, became a butcher by trade, and in the early '50s came around the Horn to California, arriving in San Francisco and starting a butcher business, owning two stalls in the old California market for many years. He established his home in Pleasanton. Later in life he went on the stock exchange and lost the greater part of his accumulated fortune. He then returned to the butcher business and worked for wages, first in San Felipe, then in Lemoore, Kings county, in the latter place establishing a market which he conducted for fifteen years. His death occurred in that location. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow, and politically cast his ballot for the Republican party. His wife was formerly Pauline Botsford, a native of Michigan and daughter of a pioneer of California; her death also occurred in Lemoore.

From the age of six years E. W. Selbach was reared in Lemoore and in that place received his education through the medium of the public schools. His business education was obtained in the Chestnutwood Business College, of Santa Cruz, through which he worked his own way. He continued with his father until attaining his majority, when in 1892 he came to Los Angeles and engaged in the butcher business, which he had learned from early boyhood. He was employed by Vickrey & Hines until they went out of business, when he went to Wilmington and continued for George Hines, and in time became manager of the Wilmington department. Upon the death of his father he resigned this position to look after the interests of the estate, which was finally sold and settled up, when he returned to Los Angeles. He was then identified with the business of John Briner, of Pasadena, with whom he remained but a short time, however, when he purchased a ranch in the peet lands, consisting of forty acres, which he improved for two years. Disposing of this property at a good figure, he then went to Monrovia, Cal., and engaged at his trade until 1900, when he located in El Monte. He here established a meat market, which has since grown to lucrative proportions, a wide trade growing up throughout the country, and an equipment modern and up to date in every way following in order to respond to the large demands made upon the business.

Mr. Selbach has built two residences here, and has also improved a lot with a store building, which he still owns. He was married in Los Angeles to Miss Mariette Teague, who was born in Uniontown, Kans. He is one of the original stockholders of the First National Bank of El Monte, and in other ways has taken every interest in the upbuilding of the town. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and a charter member of the Lemoore Parlor, N. S. G. W. Politically he is a Republican.

CHARLES M. STONE. Not a few of the men now prominent in commercial and financial circles in Pomona are those whose initial training in these lines was obtained in the east. Such is the record of Charles M. Stone, cashier of the First National Bank of Pomona, the oldest and most influential financial institution in the Pomona valley. Under its original charter, granted in May, 1886, a flourishing, though conservative, business was carried on for twenty years, when, in May, 1906, a new charter was granted. The bank is capitalized for $100,000, with surplus and profits amounting to the same figure, and has a record for reliability and conservatism unequaled by any similar institution in Southern California. The First National occupies its own building, known as the First National Bank block, and is the only bank in the city able to make this boast. Besides doing a general banking business the bank has a fine equipment of steel vaults, of the most modern construction, where valuables of all kinds may be stored with perfect safety.

The Stone family was represented in New England by at least three generations, and the grandfather, Micah Stone, founded a settlement in Vermont which in his honor was named Stoneville; it is now a part of the town of Enosburg. There he reared his family and carried on a manufacturing business throughout his active years. Among his children was Micah H., who was born and reared in Enosburg, Vt. In his young manhood he was assistant postmaster of the city of Burlington, Vt., and later established himself there, in the general merchandise business, making that his home throughout the remainder of his life, although his death occurred in Pomona, while visiting his son. His marriage united him with Mary Converse Gilmour, who like himself was born in Vermont, and was a daughter of Duncan Gilmour, who was born in Scotland and became well known in mercantile circles in Burlington. The mother passed away in Burlington in March, 1906, having become the mother of six children, of whom Charles M. is next to the oldest and the only one in California.

Born in Burlington, Vt., August 4, 1863, Charles M. Stone was given good school advantages and was a diligent student in the public and high schools of his native city. A desire to put his education to practical use, and at the same time establish himself in the business world, led him to accept the position of bookkeeper with a lumber firm. Later he secured a position with the Merchants National Bank of Burlington, but after remaining with them for a few months as assistant bookkeeper he resigned his position and came west, reaching Pomona in December, 1887. For two years thereafter he was with the Pomona Land and Water Company as cashier, giving this up, however, to accept the position of assistant cashier of the People's Bank, an institution which was founded as a state bank in 1887. Upon the death of J. H. Dole, the cashier, Mr. Stone was elected to that position, in 1898, filling the same creditably until the People's Bank was consolidated with the National Bank of Pomona in 1901. His connection with the latter bank as cashier continued uninterruptedly until January of 1904, when he resigned to accept the cashiership of the First National Bank of Pomona, a position which he still holds. His broad knowledge along financial lines makes him a valuable assistant in the management of the bank, to which is added a charm of personality which makes friends with all who are brought in contact with him. As a member of the Board of Trade of Pomona he is actively interested in all measures that come before that body which will enhance the welfare of the community, in fact his support is given freely and unstintedly to all helpful and uplifting undertakings. Besides holding the position of cashier in the First National Bank he is treasurer of the Del Monte Irrigating Company, and has interests in other business enterprises in his home city and surrounding country.

In Pomona, June 1, 1895, Mr. Stone was married to Miss Mabel Wilcox Buffington, who was born in Onawa, Iowa, and three children have been born to them, Edmund, George and Marian. The family are communicants of the Pilgrim Congregational Church of Pomona, of which Mr. Stone is treasurer. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Pomona Lodge No. 246, F. & A. M., and at this writing is filling the position of treasurer of his lodge, likewise holding the same position in the chapter and commandery, in both of which he is a valued member. He is also identified with Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and with the Woodmen of the World. Coming to Pomona at a time when it was little more than a village Mr. Stone has seen it rise and take rank as one of the prominent cities of the Pacific coast, and in its transformation he has taken more than a passing interest, for many helpful measures have originated and been carried to completion through his personal efforts.

WILLIAM J. BUTLER. One of the oldest settlers in San Diego county is William J. Butler, who first crossed the plains to California in 1856, but did not become a permanent resident of the state until 1876, some years later settling in San Diego county and from that time until the present identifying himself with the upbuilding of this section. The Butler family is of English and Welsh descent, and the early members who came to this country were pioneers in Virginia. The grandfather, Joel Butler, was born in South Carolina, early settled on a farm in Tennessee and later removed to Kentucky, where he died. The father, B. F. Butler, was a native of Lincoln, Tenn., and in 1840 removed to Springfield, Mo., where he conducted a carriage and wagon shop. In 1856 he came to California with his family, making the trip with ox teams, and bringing a herd of cattle to the new country, the journey from Springfield, Mo., to Marysville, Cal., requiring exactly five months. In 1857 he located in Napa county, where he purchased and improved a ranch upon which he raised grain and stock. It was later decided that this land belonged to one of the Mexican grants and Mr. Butler was obliged to vacate it. He then went to Salinas and made that city his home until his death, when sixty-two years of age. His wife, who was before her marriage Harriet Shipp, was a member of an old Virginia family and a native of Lincoln, Tenn. She survived her husband many years, and passed away January 9, 1902, having attained the advanced age of eighty-four years.

William J. Butler was a member of a family of five children and is the only one now living. His birth occurred November 18, 1842, in Springfield, Mo., and on the trip across the plains in 1856 he rode a mule and drove the cattle. Four years later he resolved to return to the east and in 1860 left Napa, came down through Southern California, taking the old Butterfield stage route via Sherman to Springfield, Mo. After arriving there he entered Carrollton College. In 1861, at the outbreak of the Civil war, he enlisted in Campbell's Battalion of Missouri State Guards, subsequently joined Cornell's Regiment, which later consolidated with the Second Regiment of Missouri Cavalry under Price, and served until the close of the war. Going to New Orleans at the close of his military service he was employed by a commission merchant for a time, and afterwards carried on farming near Warrensburg until 1876, when he returned to California. Locating at Salinas he entered the employ of Vanderhurst, Sanborn & Co., a hardware firm, as a boy having learned the wheelwright's trade. He continued here until 1887, in which year he came to San Diego and engaged in the real estate business. Later he purchased ten acres of raw land at La Mesa, which he improved and upon which he engaged in raising berries. In addition to carrying on this industry he also took building contracts in San Diego county and city. In July, 1905, he sold the ranch and removed to No. 3742 Third street, San Diego, and is now devoting his entire time to contracting and building.

By his marriage in Johnson county, Mo., Mr. Butler was united with Miss Lavinia Irwin, a native of that state, and of this union six children were born, and all of those living make their home in San Diego. Named in order of their births the children are as follows: Julia, now Mrs. A. P. Johnson, Jr.; Hattie, Mrs. Q. C. Crane; Mary, Mrs. Burt Watkins; Martha, who died in San Diego; Thomas I., a draughtsman; and Belle, deceased. Mr. Butler is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which he supports liberally with both his means and personal service, being at the present time a member of the board of trustees. As a citizen he is active and progressive and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

DAVID POWELL. For more than ten years David Powell, now a successful real-estate dealer of Long Beach, has been actively identified with the business interests of this thriving city and aided in its upbuilding and development. He was born May 27, 1861, in Michigan City, Ind., the son of William and Jane (Crandall) Powell, the former a native of Ontario, Canada, and the latter born in Illinois, of an old New England family. Her father, David, was a farmer and trapper of the typical pioneer frontier type, and his death occurred in Missouri. William Powell, who was left an orphan when young, located with his foster-parents in Michigan City, where he cleared a farm for himself and lived the remainder of his life. His wife still lives in the old home.

E. Clintons

The only son of a family of four children David Powell spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, was educated in the grammar and high schools of Michigan City, and after his graduation from the latter was occupied for a time as a farmer and dairyman. Later he conducted a men's furnishing establishment, disposing of it, however, to deal in real estate, a business which he followed until 1893, when he came to Los Angeles as a merchant. One year later, in 1894, he took up his residence in Long Beach and conducted a grocery on Pine street near Ocean avenue for over three years. He then sold out and returned to Indiana, where he still owned a farm of eighty acres within the limits of Michigan City and proceeded to plat it, forming two additions, which he named Powell's and Powell's Gardena additions. It took three years to finish the work and dispose of the lots and after its completion he returned to Long Beach. He bought a berry ranch at Signal Hill and for three and one-half years engaged in horticultural pursuits. In 1906 he sold the ranch and established himself in the real-estate business again, buying and selling property for himself and transacting a general business.

Mr. Powell was married in Michigan City to Miss Grace Boothroyd, a native of that city, and five children have been born to bless the union: Lee is paying teller in the Long Beach National Bank; Ralph is a special officer of Long Beach; Harry is a barber here; Guy is employed in the Long Beach National Bank; and Mildred lives at home. Mr. Powell is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and both for his personal worth and superior qualities as a progressive and public-spirited citizen is highly esteemed and respected.

EXUPERE SENTOUS. A very successful business man and one who enjoyed a wide esteem throughout Southern California, was Exupere Sentous, a member of one of the families of this section whose best interests have always been parallel with the upbuilding and development of the general welfare. He was a resident of this section just twenty-five years, having emigrated from his native land at the age of twenty-two years and made this place his home until his death at the age of forty-seven. He was born in Haute-Garonne, France, March 22 1859, a son of Francisco and Marie (Fadeuill) Sentous, lifelong residents of that section, where the father engaged as a prosperous farmer and stockman. There were eight children born to his father (who was married twice), and all are located in California. The first to emigrate was John Sentous in 1852; then Louis in 1855; Vincente in 1874, and finally, in 1881, Exupere Sentous left his native land and coming to Los Angeles made this place his home the remainder of his life.

In the common schools of France Exupere Sentous received his education, after which he engaged with his father in stock-raising, in which he learned much that proved of benefit to him in Southern California. Following his brothers to the western world in 1881 he entered into partnership with his two brothers, Louis and Vincente, and for fifteen years the firm of Sentous Brothers carried on business on San Fernando street. At the expiration of that period Louis Sentous retired from the enterprise, and the two left removed their business to the corner of Los Angeles and Aliso streets and continued in partnership for nine years.

Desiring at that time to give more of his personal attention to his ranch at Lemon, Exupere Sentous disposed of his business interests and removed to the country in the fall of 1903. He owned eighteen hundred acres of land, of which nine hundred acres were devoted to grain and the balance was a stock range. He raised sheep, cattle and horses and was one of the prominent farmers of Southern California. Politically he was a Republican and although never desirous of personal recognition gave his efforts toward the advancement of the principles he endorsed. In religion he was a member of the Catholic Church. His death occurred June 10, 1906, through a stroke of apoplexy.

December 4, 1894, in Los Angeles, Mr. Sentous was united in marriage with Miss Anna Goaillardeu, born in the Pyrenees, France, a daughter of Francois and Marian (Higeue) Goaillardeu, her father a farmer and builder of that section, where they both died. They had six children, two daughters and four sons, of whom four are in America. Mrs. Sentous was next to the oldest in the family and came to California in 1891. She is the mother of four children, namely: Zoe, Alphonse, Francois and Antoinette. She is a member of the Catholic Church. Since her husband's death she has removed to Los Angeles and now makes her home on Berendo street.

ISAAC D. STOCKTON. Among the active, progressive and substantial ranchers of Ventura county is Isaac D. Stockton, of Moorpark, who is carrying on general farming, including the raising of beans and fruit, with excellent pecuniary results. He possesses strong individuality, a hearty and genial disposition, is patriotic and public-spirited, and has an enviable reputation as a straightforward and upright man and a loyal citizen. A son of Dr. I. D. Stockton, he was born March 11, 1859, in Sonoma county, coming from distinguished ancestry, being a cousin twice removed of General Stockton, prominent in the early history of California, while on the paternal side he also had eleven great-great-uncles in the Revolutionary war.

Dr. I. D. Stockton was born, reared and educated in Illinois, and there married Louisa M. Spiller, a native of Tennessee. He subsequently removed to Kansas, where he was engaged in the practice of medicine until 1856. Coming then to Sonoma county, Cal., he continued his professional labors, and was also engaged to some extent in horticultural pursuits and in raising grapes. Moving from there to Kern county in 1872, he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, and there continued as a physician and a farmer, building up a lucrative professional practice and improving a good property, which he called Lakeside ranch. He was an able and successful physician, during his fifty years of active practice being well patronized and traveling many miles through valleys and over mountains. He attained the venerable age of eighty-three years, dying in 1900. His wife died in Los Angeles, Cal., when fifty-six years old, having borne him nineteen children, fifteen reaching maturity and fourteen of whom are still living. While in Illinois he served in the Black Hawk war in 1832. He was a member of the Christian Church, and was a member of Santa Rosa Lodge, F. & A. M., which he served as worshipful master, and was an active member of the Republican party.

Acquiring his education in Kern county, where his father settled in 1872, Isaac D. Stockton remained at home until about seventeen years old, when he began life for himself. Going to Montana, he was for a while employed in freighting and blacksmithing, and then, after living for a year in Los Angeles, he traveled on horseback through Arizona, Idaho and Montana, becoming thoroughly familiar with that part of the country. Locating in Ventura county in 1888, he farmed for two years in El Rio, and then, in 1890, purchased one hundred acres of his present home ranch. It now contains two hundred and eighty-three acres of rich and fertile land, and in addition to its management he has also leased one hundred and fifty acres. He makes a specialty of raising beans, having two hundred acres, which yield on an average ten sacks to the acre, besides which he raises considerable hay. He also has a valuable apricot orchard of twenty acres.

April 17, 1886, Mr. Stockton married Ida B. Duncan, a native of Kansas, and a daughter of William Duncan, who removed from that state to California, locating in Mariposa county with his family. He died there in 1903, when seventy-three years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Stockton became the parents of ten children, namely: Nellie E., Isaac Denton, Jr., Robert Ivan, Louis M., William Allen, Mary Belle, and an infant, N. Duncan; the others dying in early childhood. Politically Mr. Stockton supports the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he belongs to Ventura Lodge No. 201, I. O. O. F.

HARVEY EVANS. A pioneer settler of Ventura county, Harvey Evans, of Oxnard, has for many years been actively identified with its industrial interests, and is recognized as one of its most intelligent and thorough-going farmers, being the owner of as comfortable a homestead as can be found in this locality. During his long and busy career he has pursued the even tenor of his way as an honest man and a good citizen, advancing the interests of his community as he has had opportunity, and is now reaping the reward of his persistent toil and enjoying the confidence and respect of his neighbors and friends. A son of the late Thomas J. Evans, he was born March 29, 1847, in Platte county, Mo.

Thomas J. Evans was a Kentuckian by birth and breeding. After his marriage to Catherine King, a Virginian, he went with his wife to Missouri, migrating to that state at the time of the Platte purchase, and there began the improvement of a farm from the forest-covered land. In 1852 he crossed the plains with ox-teams, taking his family to Linn county, Ore., where he took up six hundred and forty acres of wild land and embarked in general farming. Removing in 1858 to Jackson county, Ore., he spent a year in that locality, and the ensuing ten years was a resident of Sonoma county, Cal. Coming to Ventura county in 1869, he located at Saticoy, and was there engaged in tilling the soil until his death, in 1887, at the age of four score years. His good wife preceded him to the better land, dying in 1886, at the age of seventy-eight years.

Spending the days of his boyhood and youth in Oregon and in Sonoma county, Cal., Harvey Evans completed his early education at the Santa Rosa Academy. In 1867 he located in Monterey, Cal., where he followed farming for two years. In 1869 he came with the family to Ventura county, and for a year assisted his father in the management of the home farm at Saticoy. Purchasing then the farm which he now owns and occupies, he labored energetically, and in his struggle with nature has been successful, his eighty acres of land being well improved and finely cultivated, yielding abundant crops of beets, beans and barley.

A B Hancock

March 9, 1873, in Napa county, Cal., Mr. Evans married Nancy Eliza Montgomery, a native of Oregon, and into their home three children were born, namely: Frances Josephine, wife of Archie Hart, of Ventura county; Mrs. Lillian V. Mitchell, of Los Angeles; and Clarence Harvey, who died, at the age of seven weeks, in 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have also an adopted son, Albert W., whom they love and cherish as their own. Mrs. Evans is a member of the Christian Church, in which she is a faithful worker. Mr. Evans has never cared for public office, but has served as trustee of the Springville schools.

ALVIN B. HANCOCK. The name of Alvin B. Hancock, deceased, is inseparably connected with every detail of the development and upbuilding of the community surrounding San Bernardino, in which section he spent his life from the age of four years. He was the son of Joseph Hancock, who was born near Cleveland, Ohio, in 1822, the latter's parents being Solomon and Alta (Adams) Hancock, born in Massachusetts in 1793 and Vermont in 1795 respectively, both being of English descent. The great-grandfather was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and the great-grandmother was a daughter of General Ward of Revolutionary fame. Thomas Hancock, the grandfather of Joseph, enlisted in the Revolutionary army when but fourteen years of age and fought valiantly for the freedom of his country.

When Joseph Hancock was ten years old his father removed to Clay county, Mo., where he lived three years and experienced many hardships. Some of his neighbors were less fortunate than he, however, and upon one occasion the son gave his shoes to another boy who had none. Four years later the family went to Adams county, Ill., and remained there for three years, after which they resided a like period in Hancock county, that state. In 1846 they left Illinois and from that time until 1851 made their home in Council Bluffs, Iowa. That year they pushed on further west and became early settlers of Utah. The trip on this occasion was fraught with many dangers and privations, and in crossing the Missouri river they barely escaped drowning. After stopping a short time in Salt Lake City they finally resumed their journey to California. During the early part of the journey Mr. Hancock was very sick with chills and fever, and while crossing the desert between Salt Lake and Bitter Springs nearly perished for want of water, the entire train being almost without that precious commodity. Although burning with a raging fever Mr. Hancock refused to drink, insisting upon saving the scant supply for the children. A Mr. Thorn, who with his family was a member of the train, ran entirely out of water about this time, and athough Mrs. Hancock had but a scant pint left she divided it with his children, who were crying pitifully from thirst. It is needless to say that the train was devoutly thankful when Bitter Springs was reached. On this part of the trip Mrs. Hancock had walked and driven the team.

The first piece of land which Mr. Hancock purchased upon his arrival in San Bernardino consisted of five acres, and he later added to this holding fifty-six acres, upon which he built a new house, thereafter the family homestead. He had many interesting stories to tell bearing on his life's exciting experiences, and possessed numerous interesting relics of bygone days, among them being a board which was used as their table when crossing the plains, and a powder horn used in the war of 1812 by an ancestor who took part in that conflict. The first marriage of Mr. Hancock occurred in Hancock county, Ill., and united him with Miss Harriet Brook, a daughter of Samuel Brook, of Pennsylvania. Her death occurred in Council Bluffs, Iowa. In 1848 he wedded Miss Nancy Bemis, and of this union seven children were born: Alvin B., who married Elizabeth Nish and is now deceased; Solomon, who married Eudora Hammock; Elenora, the wife of George Miller; Jerusha, wife of Charles Tyler; Lucina, wife of George Lord, Jr.; Foster, who married Kate Mapstead; and Joseph.

The birth of Alvin B. Hancock occurred January 13, 1850, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and in 1854 he was brought by his parents to San Bernardino county, where he received a common school education. After the completion of his studies he ranched with his father on the home place until he attained his majority, when he began his independent business career. In 1882 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Nish, who was born in San Bernardino. Her parents, William and Isabelle (Henderson) Nish, were both natives of Scotland and immigrated to this country when very young, living with their parents in Iowa and Missouri before their marriage, which occurred in the former state. Mrs. Hancock's father received a good education in Scotland, where he was engaged as a contract miner, and her mother attended the public schools of the United States. They came to San Bernardino county in 1856 and lived there the remainder of their lives, the father dying in 1872, at the age of forty-two years, and the mother in 1890, at fifty-five years. Mrs. Hancock became the mother of seven children, namely; Robert, who married Eula Hamilton, has one child and lives in San Bernardino; William, Lester, James, Beauford, Earl and Clyde. Mrs. Hancock is the owner of a fine ranch of sixty-acres, upon which is grown grain and hay, which yield her a very comfortable income. Mr. Hancock was a stanch advocate of the principles of the Republican party during his lifetime and fraternally was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at San Bernardino.

THOMAS H. SIMONTON. Among the highly respected and esteemed citizens of Santa Monica is Thomas H. Simonton, who by his industry, thrift and business ability, has acquired enough of this world's goods to enable him to live retired from active life. A son of Hamilton Simonton, he was born October 2, 1827, in Frankstown, Pa. A native of Perry county, Pa., Hamilton Simonton spent the earlier part of his life in that vicinity. Subsequently removing with his family to Indiana, he carried on a large business as a canal contractor until 1837, when the state, from whom all contracts were let, suspended payment, and he stopped work. The ensuing three years he was employed as a miller. The state then settling for fifty-five cents on a dollar, he purchased five hundred and sixty acres of land in Miami county. Embarking in agricultural pursuits, he met with marked success, continuing thus employed until his death, in 1852. He was a member and an elder of the Presbyterian Church, and a man of sterling character. His wife, whose maiden name was Keziah Woodburn, was born in Perry county, Pa., and died in 1895, aged eighty-two years.

The oldest of a family of eight children, Thomas H. Simonton attended first the public schools, completing his early education at a private school in Peru, Ind., and at the Gambia school in Ohio. While in the latter institution, in 1850, he had an attack of the California fever, and after a short visit at home started for the gold fields. Going to St. Joseph, Mo., he paid $200 to Jerome, Hanson & Smith, who conducted a train of twenty-eight wagons across the plains. The train broke up at Salt Lake City, where Mr. Simonton remained nineteen days. Continuing then his journey, he and his comrades had a fight with the Indians, but none of the party were seriously injured. Arriving in Hangtown, now Placerville, he mined successfully until stricken with the cholera, with which he was sick the entire winter. He was then engaged for some time in mining along the Feather river, after which, with three companions, he located twelve miles west of Marysville, where he put up hay, hauling it to the Marysville market. Subsequently purchasing mule teams, he was engaged in freighting to the mines northeast from Sacramento, from 1851 until 1854, when he returned east. For a short time thereafter he remained on the old homestead, and then went to Peru, Ind., where he speculated in grain, hogs and produce for two years, carrying on a profitable business. In 1859 he outfitted, and went to Denver, Colo., and later to Redcliff, Eagle county, where he engaged in farming, stock-raising and mercantile pursuits, having two stores in that place. In each of these vocations he met with success, staying there until 1900. Coming from there to California for the sake of his wife's health as well as his own, they took up their residence in Santa Monica, and are now respected citizens of this community.

In Indiana, Mr. Simonton married Frances M. Reed, a native of that state, and they became the parents of five children, namely: Clara, at home; George and Frank, merchants in Victor, Colo.; Jennie, wife of Newton Riley, of Victor, Colo.; and Fannie E., who died aged twenty-one years. Politically Mr. Simonton is a steadfast supporter of the Republican party.

OSCAR D. STEWART. Not far from Camarillo, Ventura county, lies the ranch of ninety-eight acres which has been the home of Mr. Stewart for nearly forty years. Born at Battle Creek, Calhoun county, Mich., August 20, 1845, he is a son of Enoch and Nancy A. (Oscar) Stewart, both of whom claimed the Empire state as their birthplace. Following the life to which he had been reared the father immigrated to Michigan at an early day in the history of that commonwealth, and upon the farm which he established there made his home for many years. His later life, however, was spent under the sunny skies of California, his death, February 1, 1896, closing a career of seventy-nine years of usefulness. After the birth of their three children the wife and mother was taken from them, Oscar D. at the time being a very small child.

Calhoun county, Mich., was the scene of the early life of Oscar D. Stewart, in fact he was about twenty years old when he severed connections with his surroundings in that state and struck out boldly for the west in 1864. After remaining in California for one year a strong desire to see his old home and kinsmen once more caused him to return to Michigan, but the following year found him ready to return to the west permanently. For about two years he was located in the vicinity of Sacramento, but in 1868 he came to Ventura county, and with the exception of two years spent in Oregon he has made his home in this county continuously. For a few months he worked as a farm hand on ranches in the county, but in the fall of the same year located on the ranch which he now occupies, which fell as an inheritance to his wife. The greater part of the ranch is in beans, which form his principal crop, and yield from twelve to fifteen sacks to the acre.

W. E. Hofman

A marriage ceremony performed on his ranch in 1869 united the destinies of Oscar D. Stewart and Fredericka Lucy Sip, the latter a native of Iowa. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart was blessed and brightened by the birth of five children, all of whom are now grown and established in homes of their own with the exception of the youngest, who although married still remains with his parents. George, born June 11, 1870, married Lilie Shields and resides in Camarillo; Edward J., who was born September 24, 1871, chose for his wife Lucy Russell, and he too lives in this vicinity; Walter O., born July 16, 1873, married Anna Sebastian, their home being near Oxnard; Clara A., born February 19, 1875, is the wife of George Hughes; and Arthur Clyde, born October 30, 1883, and who married Catherine Schmitz, still makes his home on the old homestead. During the long period of his residence in this county Mr. Stewart has won and retained the respect of associates and has a large circle of friends among the pioneers of this part of the state. His political views coincide with the principles laid down in the platform of the Democratic party, and its candidates rarely fail to receive his vote.

CAPT. WILLIAM EDWIN HOFMAN. California is a favorite location for retired army officers who seek a place of rest and comfort for their declining years after a life of nomadism and active campaigning. Capt. William Edwin Hofman, who spent more than twenty-five years of his life in military service, has been living in Elsinore since 1897 and has a nicely improved home in this city. He was born on Christmas Day, 1836, in Mansfield, Ohio, the son of Jacob and Jane W. (Caruthers) Hofman, the father being a native of the Shenandoah valley, Va., and the mother of Mansfield, Ohio. On his father's side Captain Hofman is descended from German ancestors and from his mother he received Scotch-Irish blood. The elder Hofman was an early settler in Ohio and was occupied as a jeweler in Mansfield until 1840, when he removed to Mt. Carmel, Ill., and from there to Olney, where for twelve years he filled the office of clerk of Richland county, after which he retired. Both parents died in Olney. There were six children in the family, three of whom are now living. One son, John, who was a railroad man, was killed by accident in Kansas City, while Rudolph, who served in the Civil war in the same company and regiment as his brother, Captain Hofman, was wounded at Big Shanty, Ga., and died from the effects nine days later.

The education of Captain Hofman was received in the public schools of Illinois and when a young man the congressman from their district offered him a cadetship. His mother objected to his accepting it, however, and it was then given to Wesley Merritt of Salem, Ill., who afterwards became major-general. He then served a four-years' apprenticeship to the manufacture of tin, copper and sheet iron, and in 1859 left Olney for Pike's Peak, traveling by team from Leavenworth, Kans. Locating at Central City he mined in Russell and California gulches until 1861 when he returned to his home in Illinois. In 1862, after the breaking out of the war, he assisted in raising Company B, Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, was mustered in at Centralia on September 3, and was commissioned by Governor Yates as first lieutenant of his company. After the battle of Stone river the regiment was mounted the same as the mounted cavalry and took part in the engagement at Hoover's Gap and in the Tullahoma campaign, which ended with the battle of Chickamauga. Following this he took part in the Georgia campaign until the capture of Atlanta. He was in Girard's cavalry which was dismounted in order to turn the horses over to Kilpatrick for use in Sherman's march to the sea, and was then sent to Louisville, Ky., for new mounts and outfits, when the regiment was sent in pursuit of Morgan. They did not meet him, however, and were ordered back to Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama. From then until the close of the war he served under General Wilson, took part in Wilson's raid and the capture of several cities in the south, while a portion of his regiment assisted in the taking of Jefferson Davis. He had in the meantime been promoted and commissioned as captain, and when mustered out at Nashville, in August, 1865, he was the senior captain of the regiment.

Returning home Captain Hofman began to look about for a business opening. Following the suggestion of his cousin, Col. Mc. E. Dye, he decided instead to enter the regular service. Six months after making his application he was commissioned as a first lieutenant, June 12, 1867, and was later assigned to Company K, Thirty-first United States Infantry. Going to Ft. Totten, N. Dak., he was a participant in the Turtle Mountain Indian troubles until 1869, when he was sent to Ft. Sully, S. Dak. About this time the army was reduced in numbers but he was retained and assigned by General Hancock to the Ninth Infantry as first lieutenant of Company H, and sent to Ft. Russell, Wyom. Later he went to Ft. Saunders and in 1873 escorted the surveying party which ran the preliminary line for what is now the Northern Pacific Railroad from the Missouri river to Yellowstone. From there he was stationed at Ft. Omaha, Neb., and subsequently sent to various points, including Ft. McKinney, Wyom., Ft. Russell, and Ft. Bridger, then was promoted to a captaincy and returned to Ft. Russell to accompany an expedition to Crisfield, Kans., in 1885. In 1886 he was sent to Ft. Wingate, N. Mex., and was in command of three companies from his regiment in the Geronimo campaign until that warrior was captured. Upon his return to Ft. Wingate he applied for sick leave in order to come to the western coast, but when his application reached General Howard he ordered Captain Hofman's company from Ft. Wingate to San Diego, Cal. This was in 1887, and after remaining there for six months Captain Hofman was retired in 1888 for disability. He remained in San Diego for a time, then removed to Murrietta, and in 1897 came to Elsinore.

Captain Hofman was married in Clay county, Ill., to Miss Sarah Hance, and they became the parents of one daughter, Alice, who is now the wife of E. Michener of Elsinore. Captain Hofman is a member of the T. B. Stevens Post, G. A. R., at Elsinore, of which he is past commander, and politically affiliates with the Republican party. He served his city one year on the board of trustees and in every way has proven himself a valuable citizen, interested in every cause tending toward the upbuilding of the community in which he resides.

GIDEON EDWARDS THURMOND. A fine type of the southern gentleman of that school which is rapidly passing away is G. E. Thurmond, one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Santa Barbara county. Both his father, Thomas J. Thurmond, and his mother, who was Sarah Franklin before her marriage, were born in North Carolina. There were seven children in the family and two of the sons were killed during the Civil war while doing active military service in the Confederate cause. The father died before the commencement of the war, at the age of forty-five years, and his wife survived him but a short time, she also dying at the same age. Thomas J. Thurmond was a member of the Masonic fraternity and during his lifetime occupied a prominent place as a leading and highly respected citizen of his home community.

G. E. Thurmond was born in Hardeman county, Tenn., November 27, 1843. His preliminary education was received in the common schools, after which college preparatory work was done at Wilson Hall in Mississippi for entrance into the University of North Carolina. When war was declared between the north and south Mr. Thurmond enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment of Mississippi Infantry, and became a member of the Featherstone Brigade. His gallantry, bravery and worth as a soldier were recognized in his appointment to the position of first lieutenant of Company B during the first two years of his service, and during the last two years of the war he filled the higher office of captain of the same company. With his regiment he took part in the battles of Bull Run, Balls Bluff, Seven Pines, and the seven days' engagements before Richmond, and later in the Fredericksburg campaign, and other minor engagements. At the close of the war he returned to Tennessee and taught school near Bolivar for two years, and after that he removed to Texas and engaged in the merchandising business for a like period. In May, 1868, he decided to follow the then popular road to the west, and reached San Jose, Cal., as his first stopping point. He remained there for a short time only, however, before removing to the Carpinteria valley, which has ever since been his home. For a number of years he owned and managed a store in Carpinteria, finally disposing of it to devote his time to the duties of the office of county superintendent of schools of Santa Barbara county, which office he held for nearly a quarter of a century. At the time of assuming the duties of this position in 1874 there were eleven districts and fifteen teachers, and at the end of twenty-five years there were fifty-six districts and one hundred and forty teachers. Mr. Thurmond held the office longer than any other incumbent of the same office in Southern California. When it is remembered that Santa Barbara county is a strong Republican district and Mr. Thurmond is an equally strong Democrat, the long period during which the people continued him in office is a flattering tribute to the personal popularity and official efficiency of the man. After this long term of office holding Mr. Thurmond retired to private life, feeling that he had given a just share of his years of active work for the good of the schools in his section—and no work is of more importance and far-reaching influence. He now resides on his ranch, which consists of about thirty acres of land, a third of it being planted to walnuts. He takes a deep interest in matters of public import, and throughout the county claims the admiration and respect of all who appreciate what he has accomplished.

Fraternally Mr. Thurmond affiliates with several lodges, among them the Knights of Pythias, the Maccabees and Fraternal Brotherhood. He is an adherent of the Episcopal faith and his wife is a Presbyterian, a liberal support being given to all religious benevolences and charitable causes in Carpinteria. The marriage of Mr. Thurmond to Miss Ellen Dickinson of Glade Spring, Va., occurred November 23, 1870, and four children have blessed the union: Hunter, who has charge of the commercial department in the Oxnard high school; Gwyn, who married Edith Shepard and has two children; Mary, who married Ben Bailard and is the mother of five children; and Mildred, a student in Pomona college.

MILETUS HENRY SNOW. The prosperity of any community depends upon its business activity, and the enterprise manifest in commercial circles is the foundation upon which is builded the material welfare of town, state and nation. The most important factors in public life at the present day are therefore the men who are in control of successful business interests, and such a one is Mr. Snow, well known as the manager of the Pomona Lumber Company, which has one of the largest lumber yards in the Pomona valley, and is located at No. 491 East Second street.

A native of Kansas, Mr. Snow was born in Winfield, Cowley county, the eldest of five sons born to his parents, A. B. and Marietta (Brown) Snow, the former a native of Illinois. Before leaving his native state the father had become interested in the lumber business and upon his removal to Kansas during his young manhood he established himself in that business in Cowley county. After continuing there for several years he transferred his business to the adjoining territory of Oklahoma, and still later removed further south into Indian territory. The locality in which he located was almost a wilderness as compared with present activity, and among those who were instrumental in organizing the settlement now known as Chickasha, none was more active than A. B. Snow, for it was he who put up the first building, it being portable and hauled in with cattle; he also put in the first stock of lumber. With his wife he is now living in Long Beach, among whose citizens he is classed as one of her active business men, for he is still engaged in the lumber business.

Born in Winfield, Kans., October 9, 1877, Miletus H. Snow attended school first in his native state and later in Oklahoma and Indian territory. As far back as his memory can carry him he recalls associations connected with his father's lumber yard, and in fact when he was fourteen years old he entered his father's employ. So thoroughly did he learn the details of the business that he became an invaluable assistant, the two working harmoniously together for a number of years in Chickasha, I. T. In March, 1904, Mr. Snow came to California and the following June located in Pomona. In 1904 his father and brother organized the Pomona Lumber Company, Inc., of which A. B. Snow is president, and Miletus H. Snow is manager. Besides lumber of all kinds usual to an establishment of this kind they carry a full line of shingles, sash, doors, lath, lime and cement, and under the capable management of the son a flourishing business has grown up which distinguishes it as one of the thriving institutions of the Pomona valley.

In Chickasha, I. T., Miletus H. Snow was married to Miss Nellie Ellis, a native of Texas, and two children have come to add brightness to their home life, Pearl and Gladys. Mr. and Mrs. Snow are consistent members of the First Presbyterian Church of Pomona and are active in the various departments of benevolent work carried on by the local church. While in Indian territory Mr. Snow became identified with the Odd Fellows organization, being initiated into Chickasha Lodge, and since coming to California has transferred his membership to Pomona, and he also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. Politically he gives his support to Republican principles, and is a member of the Board of Trade.

EARLE CARR. The magnificent section of country in Southern California has been developed and improved by some of the most stirring and enterprising men of this day and age, no part of the globe having been more quickly transformed from its original wild condition into a beautiful garden spot, rich with bloom and harvests, than that portion of Ventura county lying in and around the town of Oxnard. One of the leading spirits in this wonderful transformation is Earle Carr, an active and progressive agriculturist, and one of Oxnard's most influential citizens, occupying a position of prominence in industrial, business and social circles. A son of P. S. Carr, he was born December 24, 1878, in Kalamazoo county, Mich.

A native of Michigan, P. S. Carr was brought up on a farm, and for many years was engaged in agricultural pursuits in that state. In 1888 with a view to bettering his financial condition, he came to California, settling in Ventura county, where he has since been prosperously employed in his chosen calling. He is a man of strict integrity, and is very prominent in Masonic circles, being a Scottish Rite and a York Rite Mason, and belonging to Ventura Commandery, K. T. He married Mary Ann Earle, who was born in England, and they became the parents of three children, all of whom are living.

Coming with his parents to Southern California when ten years of age, Earle Carr was educated principally in Ventura county, attending first the common schools, and afterwards the Ventura Business College. While remaining at home he assisted his father in the management of his ranch, acquiring in the mean time valuable agricultural knowledge. In 1896 he began the battle of life for himself as a ranchman, and by dint of perseverance, thrift and wise judgment has succeeded almost beyond his most sanguine expectations. In 1901 he took possession of his present ranch of three hundred acres, and has since placed all of the land under a high state of cultivation, devoting twenty-five acres of it to beets, and two hundred and seventy-five acres to beans. Both are profitable crops to raise, the latter yielding on an average nineteen sacks to the acre. In the care of his farm, Mr. Carr takes genuine pride and pleasure, sparing neither time nor expense in his efforts to improve it, his ranch in its appointments being one of the best in the neighborhood.

In 1896 Mr. Carr married Winnifred Fairbanks, who was born in Hueneme, Cal., a daughter of E. B. Fairbanks, for twenty-five years foreman of the wharf. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Carr, namely: Philetus Sprague, Robert and Earle Edward. Politically Mr. Carr upholds the principles of the Republican party by voice and vote. Fraternally he is a member of Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M.; of Oxnard Chapter No. 86, R. A. M.; of Ventura Commandery No. 18, K. T.; and of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles. He is highly esteemed in Masonic circles, and is now serving as worshipful master of Oxnard Lodge.

NOAH R. SMITH, D. D. S. Prominent among the leading professional members of the industrial community of Santa Monica is Noah R. Smith, D. D. S., who has a large and remunerative patronage, his natural talents and industry placing him among the most noted and successful dentists of this part of the county. A native of Missouri, he was born in Pike county, February 11, 1874.

Having completed his preliminary education in the common schools of his native state, Noah R. Smith was graduated from La Grange College, in La Grange, Lewis county, Mo. He afterwards went to Kansas City, Mo., there entering the Western Dental College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1896. Immediately opening an office in Howard county, Mo., Dr. Smith remained there five years, being successfully engaged in the practice of his chosen profession. Desiring a complete change of climate, he came to Los Angeles county in 1901, locating as a dentist in Santa Monica, where he has built up a splendid practice, his professional knowledge and skill having won for him the confidence and esteem of his numerous patrons.

In Howard county, Mo., Dr. Smith married Roberta M. Todd, a native of that county, as was her father, H. M. Todd. She came of pioneer ancestry, her grandfather, Joshua Todd, having been a pioneer of Howard county, and also being distinguished as having been the first settler of Omaha, Neb., getting his grant from the old Council Bluffs Ferry Company. The doctor and Mrs. Smith have three children, namely: Nelson R., John Robert, and an infant unnamed. The doctor is domestic in his tastes and practices, his home being far more to him than any club, and is a valued member of the Baptist Church.

THOMAS McCORMICK. One of the industrious and thoroughgoing ranchers of Ventura county is Thomas McCormick, whose well-appointed and productive ranch is pleasantly and conveniently located two miles from Camarillo. Becoming a tiller of the soil from choice at an early age, he has followed that vocation ever since, and since locating on his present ranch has made a specialty of raising beans and barley.

Of foreign birth and antecedents, Thomas McCormick was born in County Longford, Ireland, July 9, 1867, and is a son of James and Catherine (McCormick) McCormick, both of whom were also natives of the Emerald Isle. Mr. McCormick has no personal recollections of his father, for the latter died when he was an infant. His mother, however, endeavored to supply the loss to her family by giving them the care and protection of both parents, with the result that the children were trained to lives of usefulness and high ideals. The death of the mother occurred in 1904, when she was about fifty-six years of age. Prior to coming to the United States in 1888 Thomas McCormick had taken advantage of every opportunity offered in his native county for obtaining an education, and the foundation there laid has been greatly added to in the later years by intelligent reading and careful observation. Landing in New York City, he soon made his way across the continent, coming at once to what is now Oxnard, Ventura county, where for seven years he worked in the employ of others, an experience which was of great advantage to him, in that it gave him an excellent opportunity to learn the methods of farming in this country. Before becoming a land owner, however, he tested his ability as a rancher by starting out for himself on rented land, operating leased land from 1895 until 1902, in which latter year he came to his present location. Besides owning a tract of one hundred and twelve acres, he leases one hundred acres of land adjoining, the entire acreage under his control being devoted to the raising of beans and barley exclusively. The raising of beans constitutes his chief industry, and in harvesting twenty-three sacks to the acre he is exceeding by far the average yield for that commodity.

Forrest M Erskine Alice E Erskine

October 27, 1901, Thomas McCormick and Elizabeth McGrath were united in marriage, the ceremony taking place in El Rio. The three children born of their marriage are, Mary Josephine Dolores, Thomas Hubert and James Dominick. The family are adherents of the Roman Catholic faith, and worship in the church of that denomination at Oxnard. Politically Mr. McCormick is a Republican, and the only fraternal order with which he is connected is the Knights of Columbus. Few citizens of the county enjoy to a greater extent than does Mr. McCormick the confidence and esteem of his fellowtownsmen, nor are any more in touch with the needs, aspirations and successes of the community.

FORREST MANLEY ERSKINE. The success which has accompanied the efforts of Mr. Erskine since his location in California has been such as to place him among the representative citizens of the vicinity of Bryn Mawr, win him a competency, and establish his fortunes on a firm basis. A native of Stoughton, Mass., Forrest Manley Erskine was born February 4, 1850, a son of Robert, of Abingdon, that state, a shoemaker by trade, and who lived to the age of eighty-one years. His mother, in maidenhood Joan Whitmash, was born in Abingdon, Mass., where she also passed away at the age of seventy-two years. They were the parents of eight children, of whom seven are now living, a son, Frank, having served in the Civil war in a Massachusetts regiment.

The fourth in his father's family, Forrest Manley Erskine was reared in his native state and educated in its public schools, after which he learned the trade of shoemaker, engaging first as heeler and then as heel trimmer on the machine with various companies in Stoughton and Brockton. He was employed by the Stacy Adams Company and made $100 per month as heel trimmer. He came to California in October, 1891, with $1,500, the entire amount that he had been able to accumulate in the passing years, and secured a position with Isam Mitchell, acting as foreman on his ranch for ten years. During this time he had become interested in horticultural pursuits and had purchased ten acres of land and set it out in navel oranges; three years later he bought ten acres adjoining, and later bought twenty acres of raw land, now owning twenty acres in full bearing. He made all the improvements on the property and about five years ago began to devote his entire time and attention to his groves and now has one of the finest properties of this section.

In Stoughton, Mass., Mr. Erskine was united in marriage with Miss Alice Eldora Madan, a native of that place, and they have one child, Gladdys Wayne, now Mrs. V. G. Klienberger, of Los Angeles. She was educated in private schools. Politically Mr. Erskine is a true blue Republican.

STEPHEN LENTON. A central figure in commercial and agricultural affairs in Long Beach was the late Stephen Lenton, whose death in 1905 removed from the community an enterprising and able citizen. He was a native of England, his birth having occurred in the vicinity of Birmingham in 1847. He there grew to manhood and after serving an apprenticeship in landscape gardening engaged in that business for some years. Deciding to locate in the United States he brought his wife, formerly Mary Fluck, also a native of England, and their two children across the Atlantic in the year 1873, and after locating in the state of Mississippi followed farming for a livelihood. Later he went to New Jersey, where he engaged as a florist for seven years, meeting with success in his efforts. His next move found him a resident of Elgin, Ill., where the same business offered him opportunities for advancement, and in that section he remained until his final location in California. He first settled in Piru, Ventura county, where he engaged for a time on a ranch, in the nursery department, after which he embarked in the nursery business, following the same for the period of eight years. During this time his wife died at the age of fifty-five years. Coming to Los Angeles in 1896, he established a floral store and also raised many varities of flowers and plants. In April, 1899, he came to Long Beach and on the corner of Fourth and Alamitos avenues conducted a nursery and floral establishment. At the time of his death there were four and a half acres in the home place, which has since been subdivided.

In 1899 Mr. Lenton was united in marriage with Mrs. Jennie (Braly) Hargrave, the widow of Judge J. P. Hargrave, of Prescott, Ariz., and she now makes her home in Long Beach. By his first marriage he had the following children: Rose, widow of E. V. Lawson, of Long Beach; Albert, also of Long Beach; Ada, wife of A. Martin of Ventura, Cal.; Lavinia, a teacher; and Alice, a trained nurse.

Albert Lenton, the only son, was born in England, May 6, 1872, and was brought to America when only one year old. In the schools of New Jersey and Illinois he received his scholastic training, graduating in the Elgin schools. He learned the trade of landscape gardener and florist under the instruction of his father, with whom he worked a considerable portion of his time, remaining in Fullerton, Orange county, Cal., where his father had located after leaving Los Angeles, prior to his settlement in Long Beach. Following his father to this city he engaged as foreman in the ornamental department of the Orange County Nursery in Fullerton, during which time he was offered the position of foreman of the University grounds in Berkeley, Cal. After thirteen months in that location he returned to Long Beach on account of his father's failing health, and here took up the duties of his father's business. For about two years he held the Fourth street nursery independently, but since his father's' death he has removed to Fullerton in the employ of the Orange County Nursery.

ARTHUR PINCKNEY NELSON, supervisor of the Fifth Supervisoral district, is a well known horticulturist and is superintendent of the Whittier ranch at Redlands Junction, in which work he has met with great success. Of southern lineage, he was born in White county, Tenn., July 22, 1848, and was thus a lad of nearly thirteen years at the time of the breaking out of the Civil war. His father, Jesse T., was born in Virginia and reared in North Carolina, when he removed to Tennessee and engaged at his trade of wagon and carriage maker, and also was occupied in farming. At the breaking out of the war the family was located in Spencer, Van Buren county, where Mr. Nelson was prominent in public affairs, serving as justice of the peace and in other positions of importance, his livelihood at that time being obtained as a miller. Because of his avowed Union sympathies he was constantly threatened by the Secessionists, and finally in 1863 he started his family for Illinois by team, and with his son (who was then reaching an age when he would be forced into the Confederate army) traveled at night to Kentucky, and thence to Illinois. Up to this time they had acted in the interests of the famous underground railway, Arthur P. Nelson assisting as conductor in aiding the Union men to escape from Tennessee to the Federal lines in Kentucky, piloting them by night from his father's house over the mountains to their next place of refuge. In Olney, Richland county, Ill., the father located his family, and there engaged in farming until his death, which occurred in 1866. His wife, formerly Sarah Barckley, was born in North Carolina and died in Illinois, leaving a family of seven children.

The eldest in his father's family, Arthur Pinckney Nelson, received his preliminary education in the district schools of Tennessee and also attended Burrett College at Spencer one term, when the war interrupted educational pursuits. In February, 1865, after his escape from his native state, he enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, was mustered in at Springfield and served in Tennessee within sixty miles of his old home. He was honorably discharged in August of the same year and soon after his return home his father died, leaving him the head of the family at the age of seventeen years. He engaged in the management of the home farm and until 1875 cared for his mother, brothers and sisters, and then, having previously learned the trade of carpenter, worked at this pursuit for two years. He then accepted a position in the department of bridges, buildings and water supply for the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad, now the Baltimore & Ohio, and retained his connection with the road until 1887. Coming to California in this year he looked about in Riverside and San Bernardino, and finally accepted employment as a carpenter on the Mound City buildings. The bench at that time was covered with sage-brush, where he shot jack rabbits and quail. He worked in Southern California until February of 1889, when he decided to go to San Francisco, and from there continued to Portland, where he followed the building business until fall. He then returned to California and worked at his trade in Berkeley until April, 1890, and then came again to San Bernardino county, as he had previously become interested in the nursery business in Mound City and felt it necessary to return to attend to his interests. After locating here in 1890 he took charge of the work himself and in the fall of the year bought property and continued the work, improving first four acres and later adding fifteen acres, the latter property still being in his possession and now devoted to oranges. In 1894 Mr. Whittier called upon him to accept the management of his ranch of one hundred and seventy acres, of which one hundred and sixty-five acres are in oranges and grape fruit, being set out by Mr. Nelson and thoroughly improved by him, irrigated, etc., the residence, barns, outbuildings, wells, pumping plant, all being his own work. He has made a success of his work and is one of the most successful horticulturists of this section.

Mr. Nelson has been twice married, the first ceremony being performed in Richland county, Ill., and uniting him with Miss Mary L. Bowen, who was born in Ohio and died in Illinois. In San Bernardino county he married Miss Lou Perkins, a native of Michigan. Mr. Nelson was made a Mason in Olney, Ill., and now belongs to Redlands Lodge No. 300, F. & A. M. Politically he is a stanch Republican, and in 1904 was elected supervisor of the Fifth Supervisoral district, and is now discharging the duties of that position. For years he has served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee. As a member of the Redlands Board of Trade he is active in advancing the business interests of this section.

JOSEPH E. WILSHIRE. The name which heads this review is one well known in Southern California and held in the highest esteem by those whose pioneer efforts toward the development of the state left nothing to be desired in the present generation but the same self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of their forefathers. Joseph E. Wilshire is a native of California. His father, George T., was born in England and emigrated to America in young manhood. After spending some time in Boston, Mass., he located in the middle west, married in St. Louis, Mo., and from thence in 1855 he crossed the plains to Salt Lake, where he followed farming for the period of two years. In 1857 he came to San Bernardino county by means of ox-teams, and purchasing a farm on Worm creek, he there began its cultivation and improvement. He remained in that location for seventeen years, when he went to the vicinity of what is now Riverside and engaged in the raising of alfalfa and became a horticulturist. Locating at Oak Glen in 1882, he bought a farm on the upper Yucaipe and followed general farming and stock raising for the period of two years, thence to Cucamonga, where he engaged as a horticulturist, finally retiring from active business and making his home with his son for about twelve years, his death occurring in Colton in September, 1905, at the age of eighty-two years. His wife was formerly Susan Edes, a native of Boston, whose death occurred in Colton at the age of eighty years. They were the parents of seven children, of whom two are living, the fourth in order of birth being Joseph E. Wilshire.

Born in what is now Colton, April 12, 1858, Joseph E. Wilshire was reared in San Bernardino county and educated in its public schools, after which, in line with his early training, he followed farming with his father. His first independent venture was made at the age of eighteen years when he went to Los Angeles county and engaged in the stock business in Laguna cañon just below Newport, remaining in that location for one year, when he went to Lake Elsinore and there on unsurveyed land engaged in the cattle business. One year later he returnd to Jumpa, the home of his parents, sold his cattle and went to school for a time. His next employment was with Judge Arthur Parks on his farm, after which, in 1877, he located at Oak Glen and bought a claim and engaged again in general farming and stock-raising. He with others built a ditch from the little San Gorgonia creek, from which they obtained their water supply for irrigation; he set out an apple orchard of thirty-five acres, and seven acres of cherries, pears and peaches, and devoted the remainder of the land to the raising of cattle. He has six hundred acres of land at an altitude of forty-five hundred feet, with two and a half miles of stone and concrete flume to his orchard, where he raises the finest apples in Southern California.

In the fall of 1906 he located in Redlands and purchased a comfortable residence at No. 103 Sonora street. Mr. Wilshire has been twice married, the first ceremony being performed in Yucaipe, when he was united with Miss Rosalia Webster, a native of San Bernardino. She died in Yucaipe leaving three children, namely: Mary, wife of George Parks, of Riverside; Eva, wife of A. E. Carter, of Lodono Beach; and Earl, of the United States army, serving in the Philippines. His second marriage occurring in San Bernardino, united him with Miss Melissa Week, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of the following named children: Ida, Clarence, Alice, Ruth, Emma, George and Susie. Mr. Wilshire has taken a keen interest in all matters of public import and is especially active in educational affairs, having served as a member of the school board of the Yucaipe district for the period of ten years, and officiated as clerk for the greater part of that time. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; politically he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

F. C. RUSCONI. The successful management of a dairy, stock and grain ranch of twenty-four hundred acres demonstrates the possession of broad agricultural knowledge, combined with business and executive ability of a high order. That these requirements are realized in F. C. Rusconi, for the past three years in charge of the M. D. Tognazzini ranch, admits of no doubt in the minds of those familiar with ranching conditions in Santa Barbara county. Mr. Rusconi augments the colony of capable Swiss-

Americans who have brought to this state their invaluable lessons in dairying, and who, more than the representatives of any other immigrating nation, have behind them the example of generations of forefathers similarly employed.

Frank and Liberata (Prescom) Rusconi, parents of the Santa Barbara county rancher, still occupy the old home in Switzerland, where their son was born February 20, 1870. The latter left his mountain home at the age of twelve years, a fact not surprising, since there were fourteen children dependent upon the resources of a comparatively small farm. Arriving at his intended destination in California, the youth at once entered upon his dairying career, finding employment with a ranch owner near Napa, Napa county, with whom he lived for several years. His labor thenceforth was along dairying lines, and his experiences amply qualified him for the responsible position he has held the past three years. Of the seven hundred head of cattle on the Tognozzini ranch, three hundred and fifty are milch cows, and the chief product is cream, although formerly the dairy produced large quantities of butter. Thirteen men are required the year round and additional recruits during the harvesting of the twelve hundred acres of grain. A new creamery has just been completed, which, for completeness, surpasses anything of the kind hitherto found in the county. All of the buildings of the ranch are kept in excellent repair, and many of them are of recent and costly construction. It is a property which fulfills expectations, no matter how ambitious, of those most interested in the growth and reputation of the county, and that this is so is in large measure due to the energy, resource and intelligence of its present manager.

In May, 1905, Mr. Rusconi married Josie Tognazzini, who is distantly related to M. D. Tognazzini, and who was born in Sidney, Australia. Mr. Rusconi is a Republican in political affiliation, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Solano county, and the Druids of Guadaloupe. He is a man of strong character, fine education, and pronounced views upon subjects which engage popular attention. He is personally popular, and has the faculty of infusing his subordinates with that earnestness and enthusiasm which spells success in all lines of human endeavor.

ERNEST RONSSE. Conspicuous among the substantial citizens of San Diego county who selected agriculture as their vocation in life, and who, judging from all appearances, have realized their most sanguine anticipations, is Ernest Ronsse, a general farmer and stockman, residing near Bonsall. His large, highly cultivated ranch is well improved, the fine set of buildings which he has erected being made more attractive by the artistic arrangement of flowers around and near them, while the practical work is greatly facilitated by the use of the most approved patterns of modern machinery, the estate, with its appurtenances, being one of the most noteworthy in the neighborhood. A son of Leonard Ronsse, he was born, April 9, 1858, in France, not far from the beautiful city of Paris.

Born and reared in Belgium, Leonard Ronsse settled as a farmer in France when a young man, and was thus engaged until 1871. Immigrating to the United States that year, he taught for three years in the agricultural college at Rochester, N. Y. In 1889 he came to California, and is now a resident of Watsonville. He is a man of great worth, a stanch Democrat in politics, and a member of the Catholic Church. His marriage united him with Mary Vackman, also a native of Belgium, and of the four children that blessed their union all are living.

After his graduation from the high school Ernest Ronsse worked first in a factory in France, and was subsequently for a short time employed as a traveling salesman. In 1880 he came to the United States, and after a brief stay in Philadelphia joined his parents in Kansas, settling near Topeka, where for five years he assisted his father in farming. Embarking then in agricultural pursuits on his own account, he carried on general farming in Kansas until 1888, when he came to the Pacific coast in search of a favorable location. After visiting San Diego and San Francisco, he returned to Kansas, but not quite satisfied with his financial prospects there, removed to Flagstaff, Ariz., where he was engaged in the lumber business for eight years. In the mean time, about 1892, he made a trip to Southern California, and while in San Diego county purchased his present ranch, lying near Bonsall, and began its improvement by setting out many trees. Taking up his residence on this ranch in 1896, he has since managed it most successfully, carrying on general farming and stock-raising with profitable results. He has three hundred and sixty-five acres of rich and fertile land, and in its improvement takes genuine pride and pleasure.

In 1884, in Kansas, Mr. Ronsse married Helen Verschalden, who was born in Belgium, and into the pleasant household thus established eight children have been born, namely: August; Henry; Julius; Charles and Joseph, twins; Mary and Martha, twins; and Helen. In politics Mr. Ronsse is an independent voter, reserving the right to support the man whom he considers the best qualified to serve the interests of the people, and in religion both he and his wife are members of the Mission Catholic Church.

H. B. Carson

HENRY C. CARSON. Prominent among the prosperous agriculturists and substantial business men of Compton was the late Henry C. Carson, whose success in life was largely self-acquired. For many years he had been actively identified with the industrial interests of this part of Los Angeles county, and had taken an intelligent interest in all matters that concerned the welfare of the community at large. A son of John Carson, he was born December 8, 1835, in Jordan, N. Y., where he grew to man's estate. His father was born in Salem, N. Y., and spent his life in his native state. He married Sophia Cady, and of the six children that blessed their union all are deceased excepting Mrs. J. M. Smith, of Santa Maria, Cal. On the maternal side Mr. Carson came from a family noted for its longevity, his Grandmother Cady having attained the remarkable age of one hundred and three years.

After leaving the district school, Henry C. Carson learned the harness-maker's trade, serving an apprenticeship of five years. Starting for himself in 1854, he migrated to Illinois, locating in Freeport, where he was for a time engaged in railroading. Going thence to Savanna, Ill., he established himself in the harness business, which he carried on successfully for six years. The following nine years he was similarly employed in Winona, Minn., from there going to Missouri and becoming a resident of Hannibal. Not content with his financial prospects in that region, he came to California, arriving in Compton July 26, 1872, joining his brother George, with whom he was for awhile engaged in general ranching, making a specialty of raising sheep. Turning his attention then to mercantile pursuits, he established himself here as a butcher, and for thirty years carried on a large and lucrative meat business, running wagons all through this section of country. About 1900 he retired from this business, and until his death, April 8, 1906, devoted his attention and energies to the care of his home ranch of twenty acres. He was an extensive stock raiser, keeping horses and cattle, and in his agricultural operations was successful. A man of much ability and practical judgment, he was exceedingly prosperous, and invested considerable money in real estate, owning five ranches, aggregating in all ninety-five acres of rich and valuable land.

In Savanna, Ill., in 1856, Mr. Carson married Leonora E. Pierce, a daughter of Aaron Pierce, a pioneer of Illinois, and one of the original settlers of Savanna. Two children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Carson, namely: Harriet, who was born in Savanna, Ill., and died in Winona, Minn.; and Frank Henry, born in Winona, Minn.; during boyhood he came with his parents to Compton, married Mae Palmer, and died here at the early age of twenty-six years. Politically Mr. Carson was a straightforward Democrat.

HON. FRANK PIERCE MESERVE. The advantages of foreign travel have been added to education and culture received at home, which have made of the Hon. Frank Pierce Meserve a personality both pleasing and entertaining, and his close observation and retentive memory have combined to give him the best that could be obtained through such intercourse with the world's geography. He is now located in Redlands, one of the most beautiful cities of Southern California, and here he has contributed of all of his gifts to add to the growth and prosperity of the community, no movement calculated to advance the general welfare lacking his support. Mr. Meserve comes of an old New England family whose ancestry can be traced to the Isle of Jersey, whence emigrating ancestors located the name on American soil. Here they have been prominent in public affairs, many serving as eminent jurists of their day. In New Hampshire his paternal grandfather served as colonel in the war of 1812; in that state his father, Samuel, was born, reared and educated, and there engaged as a brick and stone mason until his death. By marriage he allied his fortunes with those of another old New Hampshire family, his wife being before marriage Mary A. Hanson, a native of that state and daughter of John Hanson. They were the parents of six children, all of whom are now living. Two sons served in Company A, First Regiment New Hampshire Infantry, and one in the Confederate army.

The youngest in the family of his parents, Frank Pierce Meserve was born in Rochester, N. H., November 30, 1852, and there received his preliminary education through the medium of the public and private schools. He later became a student in Lebanon Academy, in Maine, which he attended to the age of nineteen years, and was then apprenticed to learn the trade of tailor. A year later he purchased the business where he was an apprentice, this being in Newport, and he there continued his efforts for the period of thirteen years. In 1888 he disposed of this business and in the same year brought a carload of merchandise to California and in Redlands opened a clothing business on Monday morning after his arrival here Saturday. Ever since that date he has conducted this enterprise here and has been very successful in the work. In 1900 he incorporated the Meserve Clothing House, of which he is acting as president, and they are now located at

No. 10-12 East State street, where they carry one of the best lines in Redlands, and also conduct a branch store at Beaumont. Mr. Meserve has taken a prominent part in public affairs of Redlands and is a prominent factor in many enterprises of merit. He is now serving as treasurer of the Home Gas & Electric Company and for many years was a director in the Redlands National Bank. He was instrumental in the organization of the Home Realty Company, in which corporation he is now serving as president, they owning many valuable orange groves throughout this section. He was one of the organizers of the Redlands Library Association, when it was a private library and served for the period of three years as a trustee. Three different times he has been a member of the city council, and was a member of the school board for three years; he is now a member of the Board of Trade and is director and vice-president, and chairman of the membership committee. It will thus be seen how active has been his championship of matters of public import. This impression of his loyalty and the strength and power of his citizenship became so generally a matter of public sentiment that in 1898 he was elected on the independent ticket to the state legislature, serving his constituents in the session of 1899, and again in the special session of 1900. He has never disappointed those who have put their trust in him, both as to his fidelity and ability, and as such no man is held in higher esteem in the city of Redlands than is he.

Mr. Meserve has been twice married, the first union occurring in 1878 in New Hampshire, when he married Minnie A. Harvey, who was born in New Hampshire and died in Sacramento in March, 1899, when her husband was attending the legislature as a member. In Los Angeles on December 25, 1904, he married Helen Crossman, a native of Pennsylvania and born of this union are two children, Frank P. Jr., and Harold Arthur. In his fraternal relations Mr. Meserve is prominent, having been made a Mason in Mt. Vernon Lodge No. 15, and was its youngest master; here he assisted in the organization of Redlands Lodge No. 300, and was its first master under the dispensation; having been raised to the degree of Royal Arch in New Hampshire he assisted in the organization of the Redlands Chapter, of which he was the first high priest; he is also a member of St. Bernard Commandery No. 23, K. T., of San Bernardino; Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles; and also belongs to the Scottish Rite bodies in Los Angeles. He is also identified with the Order of Eastern Star, of which he is past worthy patron and an honorary member of the Daughters of Isis. He was likewise active in the Odd Fellows, having been made a member of this organization in New Hampshire and there officiated as past grand and is associated with the Encampment, Canton and Rebekahs, in all of which he is past officer, and is a director in the Odd Fellows Hall Association, which he helped to organize. He is a charter member of the lodge of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in Redlands, and was its first exalted ruler, and has been to four Grand Lodge sessions. He is also identified with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor; the Uniformed Rank of the K. of P., of which he is past captain; the Rathbone Sisters; the D. O. K. K., of Los Angeles; and the Woodmen of the World, of which he is a charter member here and its first C. C. He belongs to the Royal Court and the Fraternal Union. In religion he belongs to the Unitarian Church, and officiates as a member of its board of trustees.

The travels of Mr. Meserve have taken him practically into every corner of the world, in 1904 taking a trip around the world which lasted eighteen months, spending six weeks in India, traveling seven hundred miles up the Nile, visiting every country and famous city of Europe, and in fact, leaving nothing unseen that he had set out to see on his magnificent tour. Previous to this he had visited in every state and territory in the Union, had made several trips to Alaska and to Honolulu, and is thus familiar with the manners and customs of every civilized country in the world. He is endowed with mental gifts which have made his advantages of vast importance in his life; he retains a vivid impression of countries he has visited, can give in detail their manner of living, their habits and customs, and as an entertaining companion has no superior in Southern California or indeed in the state. He has been broadened by his contact with the world and brought into closer understanding and sympathy with its problems. He is always liberal and enterprising, holding out his hands to uphold the efforts of those who seek to advance the material prosperity of the place. He is justly named among the representative citizens of Redlands.

REMIE CALLENS. Although a young man who has been engaged in business for himself but a few years Remie Callens has already attained a success which gives him a position among the most prominent ranchmen of Ventura county. He was born in Menin, Belgium, October 25, 1881, the son of August and Leona (Martens) Callens, both of whom were born in Belgium, the former in Mynde and the latter at Besseghem. The elder Callens was engaged as a farmer in his native land and when he immigrated to this country in 1888, settling in Ventura county, Cal., near Hueneme, he spent the two years preceding his death in the same pursuits. They were the parents of six children, two of the five sons now residing in France and the remainder of the family living in California.

Shortly after her husband's death Mrs. Callens purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land in the Ocean View district and on this ranch the son, Remie, was reared, and now lives. His education was received for the most part in the public schools of Ocean View and when he came to choose a life work he naturally decided upon that in which his father engaged and in which he had received his training. He helped his mother until reaching his majority, when in 1902, he rented the place from her and conducted it as an independent venture. This proved very successful and in 1905 he took in his brother, Rene, as a partner and they continued business as Callens Brothers, cultivating in addition to the acreage in the home ranch a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of rented land. The lines which they follow are stock-raising and the cultivation of grain crops, beans and beets.

Remie Callens was married in Oxnard to Miss Mary Callens, a native of Belgium, and they are the parents of one child, Henry. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus of Oxnard, and is a loyal adherent of the Democratic party in politics. He is energetic and ambitious and there is no doubt but that the future holds still greater success for him than has the past.

WILLIAM THOMAS MORRIS. Remembered throughout San Bernardino county as one of its early and successful pioneer settlers, William Thomas Morris was born in Lewis County, Mo., March 8, 1838. His father, Robert Morris, was born near Louisville, Ky., the descendant of a prominent family of that state, and in young manhood located in Lewis county, Mo., where he engaged as a farmer and stockman until his death at the age of fifty-two years. His wife, formerly Eliza Price, was born in Kentucky, a member of the same family to which Gen. Sterling Price belonged. She also died in Missouri, leaving nine children, of whom four daughters are now living. William T. Morris received his education in the public school and the Academy at St. Francisville, Mo., after which he engaged in teaching for a time, and finally embarked in the mercantile business. He was located in Monticello, Mo., where he attended school for a time and from which point in 1859 he started to Pike's Peak, and thence returned to Missouri. Of southern tendencies he served for a time in a Missouri regiment in the Confederate army, participating in several important engagements, among them the battle of Wilson's creek. In 1863 he came to California, a member of the same train in which his future wife traveled with her parents. He engaged in mining in Arizona, and later engaged in the raising of grain and hay until 1866, after which he came to California and in San Bernardino was married August 14, and following this began horticultural pursuits with his father-in-law on a tract of two hundred and twenty acres, devoted to a vineyard, orchard and the raising of alfalfa. In 1871 he disposed of his California interests and returned to Lewis county, Mo., and there farmed for a time and then engaged as a merchant in the grocery and hardware business, being located in Williamstown. Because of asthma Mr. Morris returned to California in 1884 and purchased the property owned by his widow, fifteen acres located at the foot of the Terracina bluff, and improved the place until his death, which occurred in 1899, at the age of sixty-four years. He was a member of the Christian Church and an earnest and upright citizen. Fraternally he was identified with the Masonic organization, and politically was a Democrat.

The wife of Mr. Morris was in maidenhood Miss Lucynthia McCoy, who was born in Osage, now Maries county, Mo. Her father, David McCoy, was born in North Carolina, where the paternal grandfather, Hugh, located upon his emigration from Scotland, having come to America as a member of the British army and was wounded in the engagement which was the scene of Burgoyne's defeat. He was taken from the battlefield to the house of John Franklin, and was nursed by the family, a daughter, Jemima, falling in love with him and marrying him. They settled in Burke county, N. C., where Mr. McCoy engaged as a farmer. Later he returned to Scotland for some property and was lost at sea. His wife and family eventually removed to Kentucky, where David McCoy married, and from that state went to Indiana and improved a farm. Locating in Osage county, Mo., he spent eighteen months, thence going to Iowa for a time, and then returning to Missouri farmed in Lewis county until 1863. In the last named year he brought his family to California across the plains with mule and horse teams, the journey made in less than four months to Marysville, Yuba county. They remained in northern California for three years, when they came to San Bernardino and in Crafton Mr. McCoy purchased a farm in conjunction with his son-in-law, Mr. Morris, and together the two engaged in its cultivation until 1871, when they both took their families back to Missouri. After thirteen years Mr. McCoy returned to California and made his home with his daughter until his death in 1895 at the remarkable age of one hundred and four years and eleven months. He served in the war of 1812 under General Harrison and was present at the battle of the Thames when Tecumseh was killed. He was a Democrat politically. He was a man of strong integrity of character, of personal worth, and was justly named among the respected and helpful citizens of whatever community he made his home. His wife was formerly Lucynthia Davis, a native of Casey county, Ky., and a daughter of Robert Davis, who died in that state. Mrs. McCoy died in Missouri at the age of eighty years. She was the mother of seven children, of whom six attained maturity. Mrs. Morris was the youngest and was educated in the public schools of Missouri, and three years after going to California was married and located at Crafton. Since her husband's death she has sold a part of the property, retaining nine acres, of which six are in oranges. She has two children, Emma B., wife of Stephen Bedford, of Fort Worth, Tex., and Lucy M., wife of W. H. Bedford, of Los Angeles. Mrs. Morris is a member of the Christian Church.

JOHN J. STRATTON. Although Mr. Stratton has been a resident of Pomona only since June of 1905 his skill as a contractor and builder in Los Angeles had given him a wide reputation and paved the way to success for him in his new location. In connection with his building interests he also owns a five acre orange grove on East Second street, which is in fine bearing condition.

On both sides of the family Mr. Stratton comes of southern antecedents, his parents, John and Sarah (Lansdowne) Stratton, both claiming Kentucky as their birthplace. After the close of the war, in 1865, the parents removed to Muscatine county, Iowa, and it was during the five years spent on a farm in that locality that our subject was born. From Iowa they removed to Jefferson county, Kans., in 1870, and after about sixteen years of farm life in that state the father sold out his holdings and came to California. Here as in the middle west he continued to follow agricultural pursuits for a time near Los Angeles, but is now living in Bonsall, San Diego county, owning an interest in the Mount Fairview hotel. Mrs. Stratton died in San Diego county in 1898.

Of the eight children born into the parental family seven are living, John J. being next to the youngest of the family. He was born in Muscatine county, Iowa, December 23, 1866, but as he was only about four years old at the time his parents transferred their home into the adjoining state of Kansas his earliest recollections are of the latter state. His boyhood and youth were spent on the parental farm in the vicinity of Williamstown, Jefferson county, Kans., conning his lessons in the schools of the latter city. When he was eighteen years old he determined to carry out his plans for future business life, having in the mean time decided upon the carpenter's trade as the most congenial, hence the most promising financially. Two of his older brothers, W. A. and S. M. Stratton, had been established in the west as builders and contractors for some time, and hither he came in 1884 and placed himself under them as a carpenter's apprentice. Both of the brothers are now well known in building circles in Los Angeles, and for a time after completing his apprenticeship John J. also worked at his trade in that metropolis. In 1889 he located in Seattle, Wash., and during the time he spent there working at his trade the city was visited by a destructive fire. Locating once more in Los Angeles in 1891, he resumed work at his trade and continued to follow carpentering exclusively for about six years, when, in 1897, he branched out as a contractor and builder. Many of the finest residences, flat buildings and blocks in that metropolis stand as an evidence of his skill and ability, and among the number we mention the Hinman, the Donohue flats and the Fremont Avenue school. It was with a record as a finished and successful master of his calling that he came to Pomona in June of 1905, and as his reputation had preceded him he found opportunities awaiting him of which he had little dreamed.

The family residence on East Second and Reservoir streets is the embodiment of Mr. Stratton's artistic skill and practical workmanship, and is one of the most modern residences in Pomona. The home is presided over by his wife, who before her marriage was Miss Kate Thomas and was born in Texas. Three children have added sunshine and happiness to their marriage and are receiving every advantage which it is in the power of their parents to bestow. Named in order of birth they are as follows: John J. Jr., Wesley Lincoln and Leonard Thomas. Mr. and Mrs. Stratton are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Pomona, both being stanch supporters of its various benevolent departments. Mr. Stratton is an active worker in the Sunday-school, being assistant superintendent, and he is also a stanch Prohibitionist.

JULES HUGUES. Since locating in Pomona in 1901 Mr. Hugues has made a specialty of raising wine grapes, which he manufactures into wine, his plant being located on South Garey street between Crow avenue and Phillips road.

Jno Frank Reynolds

Born in Gap, Hautes-Alpes, France, April 20, 1875, he is a son of Van Zant Hugues, the latter carrying on a farm in that country during his entire life, both parents now being deceased. Of the four children born to them one is deceased and two are residents of California. As his father was a farmer it was natural that Jules should become familiar with the duties of the home farm, and when his school days were over to follow in his father's footsteps in the choice of an occupation. This he did for a number of years in his own country, and upon coming to the new world in 1899 he also sought a similar occupation. His first location was at Cucamonga, San Bernardino, county, there entering the employ of J. B. Lafercate, a large manufacturer of wine, and during the eighteen months of their association Mr. Hugues thoroughly learned the process of wine manufacture. In 1901 he removed to the Tisnerat ranch, which he ran as a winery for three years, when, in 1903, he bought his present vineyard of fifteen acres on South Garey street, between Crow avenue and Phillips road. All of the improvements now seen on the place are the result of Mr. Hugues' own efforts, he having built the house, large barn, and also the distillery, which is 52x82 feet, with an excellent storage cellar. Taken all in all the plant is one of the finest in Southern California and in the light of his past accomplishments, with youth and health at his command, failure is impossible.

In Los Angeles Mr. Hugues was married to Miss Elizabeth Gambot, who like himself is a native of France. Three children have come to add brightness to their home—Grace, Jean Baptiste and Jean. Politically Mr. Hugues is a Republican. Much credit is due him for what he has accomplished since coming to Pomona, and as a business man and citizen he is highly esteemed.

IRA FRANK REYNOLDS. Frank Reynolds, one of the substantial ranchers of the Puente district, is a man who has made his own way in the world and by his own personal efforts has acquired a competence, while at the same time he has won the distinction among his fellow citizens of being a business man of ability, keen judgment, and an integrity in his dealings with others which places him prominently in the citizenship of this section of Los Angeles county. Mr. Reynolds is a native of Illinois, his birth having occurred in East St. Louis, June 21, 1862; his father, Ira J., a native of New York and his mother, Mary (Davis) Reynolds, a native of Ohio, were married in East St. Louis. The father was a railroad man, working as conductor on the Alton & Terre Haute line, but he gave this up to cross the plains to California in 1849, driving an ox-team, and upon his safe arrival in the state he engaged in the mines at Feather river, in Yuba county. His mining claims he sold out to his two brothers who had accompanied him, and in 1850 he returned east via Cape Horn, and after two years in his Eastern home, once more crossed the plains, driving a herd of cattle. While in California the second time he was with Kit Carson in his Indian expeditions. Finally returning to his home he remained until 1875, in which year he brought his family to California over the Union Pacific Railroad, and both father and mother still survive, he at the age of eighty-five and she seventy-six. Mr. Reynolds is a Democrat in politics and both himself and wife are members of the Baptist Church. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom eight are now living.

Reared to the age of thirteen years in his native place, I. Frank Reynolds received his education in its schools, and also the schools of San Luis Obispo, where his parents located after spending the first winter in Woodland, Yolo county. When his schooldays were over he came to Southern California and locating in the vicinity of El Monte began raising grain and hogs. In 1889 he bought ten acres of land and to this purchase he added forty acres in 1900, the first property being in eighteen year old walnut trees in full bearing, and which he recently sold for $9,000 cash. The forty-acre piece he sold for $15,000. In 1892 he came to his present property, and since that time has given his best efforts toward its improvement and development. He generally carries on grain farming with his horticultural interests, leasing from six to eight hundred acres, upon which he raises wheat, barley and oats.

In 1887 Mr. Reynolds was united in marriage with Miss Rosa Alexander, a native of California, and a daughter of John Alexander, now deceased, her mother still surviving and making her home in El Monte. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds are the parents of the following children, two, Frank and Francis dying in childhood: George A., Edith, Cora, Foster and Della. Politically Mr. Reynolds is a stanch adherent of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and although never desirous of personal recognition by his party has still given every effort toward the advancement of the principles he endorses. He has served as school trustee for several terms. In addition to his farming interests he also conducts a meat market in Puente, and runs a wagon through the country. His business sagacity and judgment, combined with his straightforward, honorable methods in the conduct of his enterprises, have won for him a large circle of friends and patrons, who are glad to witness his unusual success. In 1907 he was appointed by the board of supervisors as road overseer of the Rowland district.

HERVEY EBENEZER SHAW. For twenty years Hervey Ebenezer Shaw, city engineer of Long Beach, has been a resident of this section of Southern California and has been actively identified with its development. He is a thoroughly experienced practical worker and fulfills the duties of his office with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public. That branch of the Shaw family of which he is a member is of Scotch extraction, his great-great-grandfather, James, having been born in Aberdeen, Scotland. He came to America in 1743, settling first in New Jersey and later removing to Virginia, where he became a large planter. Both he and his son, John, who was born in Virginia, were loyal patriots and served in the Revolutionary war. His grandson, Ebenezer, was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., but in 1802 removed to Ohio, which territory at that time belonged to Virginia, and settled first in that section now embraced in Stark county, later removing to Savannah, Ashland county, where he engaged in farming and lived the remainder of his life. His son, Dr. William S., became the father of Hervey Ebenezer. He was a graduate of the Western Reserve College, from which he received his medical degree, and was engaged as an active practitioner in Ashland county, Ohio, during his entire lifetime. Politically he was an ardent advocate of Republican principles and was a member of the original Whig party. His wife, Elizabeth Hanna in maidenhood, was the daughter of Rev. Archibald Hanna, a pioneer Presbyterian minister of Ohio, in which state the daughter was born and also died.

The only child of his parents, Hervey E. Shaw was born in his father's native home near Canton, Stark county, Ohio, April 24, 1849, and was reared in Savannah, Ashland county, where he received a preliminary education in the public schools and later entered Savannah Academy, taking a college preparatory course. After finishing his studies he learned the carpenter's trade, although he followed that occupation but a short time, later engaging in the drug business at Ashland. Subsequently removing to Virginia he then took up surveying and civil engineering for a time, and on his later removal to Mansfield, Ohio, became a contractor and builder. It was while residing in that city that he lived as next-door neighbor to Senator John Sherman, of whom he can tell many interesting anecdotes.

In 1886 Mr. Shaw came to California, his first home being in Altadena, where he entered the employ of Woodbury Brothers as general overseer in the construction of improvements of the Woodbury ranch, and at the same time was engaged in contracting and building in Altadena. It was during this time that his employers built the road from Pasadena to Altadena now owned by the Salt Lake, and he rode on the first train that passed over the new line in 1887. In that year he also made a survey of a road to Mt. Lowe, the line which he marked going by way of Millard Cañon, across to the present line, and on to Mt. Wilson. In 1889 he located in Pasadena and was occupied as a contractor until 1896, when he continued the business in Long Beach, which city has since been his home. After two years he again took up surveying and did considerable work in San Bernardino county. Entering the Long Beach city engineer's office in 1901 as assistant he continued in that capacity until 1906, when, upon the resignation of W. A. Foster, he was appointed by the city council as city engineer, his long experience in the office having given him the confidence of the people who look for efficient service from its officials.

The marriage of Mr. Shaw occurred in Chase City, Va., uniting him with Miss Mary E. Ramsey, a native of Pennsylvania, and to them have been born three children. The daughter is now the wife of Dr. Austin, of Long Beach; Ray is a surveyor in Long Beach; and Clark is assistant city surveyor. Fraternally Mr. Shaw is a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M., and religiously is an active member of the Presbyterian Church. He is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and in the development and upbuilding of the city is one of the most enthusiastic workers.

CHARLES EDWARD BECK. The family to which Charles Edward Beck belongs was one of the earliest to locate in Southern California, Thomas, a native of Coventry, England, coming hither in 1853 and about 1858 locating in San Bernardino county. He had been brought to America by his father, also Thomas Beck, the elder man coming to New York City with his two sons, Thomas and Joseph. In that city Thomas Beck, Jr., learned the trade of baker, after which he went to sea and followed this life for about four years, his last voyage being around Cape Horn to San Francisco, where in 1850 he left the vessel. Three years later he came to Southern California and in San Bernardino county was employed as a ranch hand. In that location also he married Caroline Singleton, she too being a native of England. Her father, Robert Singleton, brought his family from England to Philadelphia, then across the plains over the old trail, via Salt Lake City and San Bernardino. In her girlhood Mrs. Beck was educated in the public schools of this section. In 1860 Mr. Beck came to Los Angeles county and remained for a time in the vicinity of El Monte, but finally returned to San Bernardino county, where he purchased a place and made his home until his death. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Beck: Charles E., of this review; Thomas and George, both of whom died in childhood. Mrs. Beck subsequently became the wife of James Cleminson, and died in El Monte in 1880.

S. E. Kennedy

Reared in San Bernardino county, where he was born January 8, 1862, Charles E. Beck was fourteen years old when he was brought by his parents to El Monte, and here he completed his education in the public schools. He remained at home until he was eighteen years old, when he returned to San Bernardino and entered the employ of an uncle, E. P. Clyde, again in 1886 locating in El Monte, where he farmed the old Cleminson place. He was married in El Monte, in 1887, to Miss Lulu McGarvin, a native of Missouri. He continued farming in this section, purchasing and improving farms in the vicinity, and then selling and at the present writing is engaged in the dairy business on the old W. L. Hinman place, where he has twenty-eight Jerseys, and twenty-six acres in alfalfa. Mr. and Mrs. Beck have four children, Harold E., James Ivor, Hazel M. and Clyde E. Mr. Beck served for a time as school trustee in the Bassett district and is otherwise interested in the general welfare of the community. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Foresters of El Monte, of which he is past chief ranger, and also the Modern Woodmen of America, being a member of its board of directors. Politically he is a stanch Republican.

SILAS E. KENNEDY. The name of Silas E. Kennedy is familiar to most of the residents in the southern part of Los Angeles county, and carries with it an impression of influence, large undertakings and unquestioned integrity. His identification with Wilmington dates back to the year 1876, at which time he and a brother left their home in the east and came directly to this town, with whose activities and industries the life of Silas E. has since been closely connected. As proprietor of a meat market here he enjoys a success far above the average, but not more than is his just due, for years of training in the butcher business have made him a connoisseur in the selection and curing of meats, and this, taken in connection with tactfulness and fair dealing, is the secret of his high standing in the community.

Born in Centerbridge, Bucks county, Pa., October 31, 1861, Mr. Kennedy is a son of William and Sarah (McCourt) Kennedy, both of whom came from Ireland and settled in Pennsylvania during the early days in the history of that commonwealth. The father is still living, making his home in the same locality in which he first settled with his wife upon coming to this country. The wife and mother passed away in 1906. As their circumstances were exceedingly limited it was not possible for the children to consume much time in acquiring an education, and it was on this account that Silas E. began to earn his own living when a lad of nine years. Until fifteen years old he worked as a farm hand in return for his board and clothes, but the work was hard and not altogether satisfactory, so when the opportunity was offered him to come to California and work for an uncle he was not long in making up his mind to take the journey. For about four years he and his brother, who had accompanied him across the plains, were in the employ of their uncle, George Hinds, who was the proprietor of a butcher shop in Wilmington. Going to Los Angeles in 1880 Silas E. continued work in this line for two years, when he once more located in Wilmington, working in a meat market until 1893. It was during this year that he gave up work at his trade to devote his time to the ranch near Redondo in which he had an interest. This did not prove to be a wise move, however, for three dry years which prevailed from then until 1896 made the ranching business unprofitable. This turn in his affairs led him to return to Wilmington and establish the meat market of which he is now the proprietor, and thus what seemed a hardship had proved a blessing in disguise. Besides his commodious home, which is surrounded by spacious grounds, he also owns several fine lots in Long Beach and a small ranch in the vicinity of Redondo, which is a part of the Meadow Park tract.

Mr. Kennedy was married October 27, 1887, to Carrie Venable, a daughter of J. W. Venable, who is well known throughout Los Angeles county for the prominent part he has taken in political matters. He is a Virginian by birth and came to California during the early days of its settlement. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are the parents of three children, Mary, George and Silas E., Jr. In fraternal relations Mr. Kennedy holds membership in Wilmington Lodge No. 198, F. & A. M.; Long Beach Chapter No. 84, R. A. M.; and also belongs to the Eastern Star Chapter No. 173, of that place. Perhaps in no respect has he rendered his city more signal service than through his work as a member of the school board, of which he has been clerk for the past six years. He is also treasurer of the Masonic Hall Building Association. In his political sympathies he is a stanch Democrat, is chairman of the board of trustees of Wilmington, and religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is one of the solid, reliable men of the community, and as such merits the many friendships and blessings which have come to him.

LEANDER LODGE. In the part of Redlands district known as Greenspot, Leander Lodge is engaged in horticultural pursuits on one of the fine ranches of this section, highly improved and cultivated, although he makes his home in Long Beach for the greater part of the year. He was born in West Greenville, Pa., December 21, 1840, a son of Samuel, a native of Westmoreland county, and grandson of Benjamin, born in the vicinity of Philadelphia. The grandfather served in the Revolutionary war as a civil engineer with the rank of lieutenant under the direct command of General Greene. Upon the close of hostilities he settled in Westmoreland county, Pa., surveyed and laid out the town of Greenville, Mercer county, making his home in Westmoreland county, where he came to his death by drowning. He came of an old English family of Quaker ancestry, and early settlers of Philadelphia. Samuel Lodge was a tanner and currier by trade, he and his brother having operated a tannery in Greenville for some years. In 1852 he removed to Henry county, Ill., and located at Geneseo where he was killed in a runaway. His wife, formerly Jane McCord, was born in Mercer county, Pa., a daughter of James McCord, of Scotch ancestry, a patriot in the Mexican war. Mrs. Lodge died in Iowa; of her eleven children five are now living, of whom three sons served in the Civil war, Oscar and Albert in an Iowa regiment, and George in an Indiana regiment.

Leander Lodge was reared for the first twelve years of his life in his native county, after which, in 1852, he accompanied his parents to Henry county, Ill. He was there reared on the home farm and educated in the common schools, from boyhood working on the farm and acquiring a practical experience in life. In 1863 he taught school in Illinois. Removing to Iowa in 1867, he located near Wilton, Cedar county, and engaged in the dual interests of teaching and farming. He was married in Cedar county in 1869 and two years later removed to Pottawattamie county, same state, and there purchased a farm and began its improvement and cultivation. Eight months later he opened a general merchandise store in Walnut, erecting a building in which he continued operations for the period of twelve years. For the greater part of this time he held the postmastership of the place, and was one of the principal upbuilders of its interests. In 1884 he located in Neola, same county, and engaged in the banking business, the institution being known as the Bank of Neola. He remained at the head of this enterprise for five years, when he sold his interests and spent three years in Nebraska and Boston for rest and the better education of his children. Deciding to locate in the remote west he came to Seattle, Wash., and there engaged in the brokerage business for the period of two and a half years, in December, 1892, locating in Greenspot, San Bernardino county, Cal. Here he purchased forty acres of land, cleared it and set it out in oranges, became connected with the Mentone Water Company and brought the water to the place. During the dry years when they could not get water he dug a well eighty-five feet deep, after a depth of forty-five feet being compelled to put in a gasoline engine to sink the remainder of the well. He now has a centrifugal pump with a capacity of thirty inches, operated with a Weber gasoline engine. Mr. Lodge now has twenty-five acres in oranges, composing as fine an orchard as is to be found in Southern California.

Mr. Lodge built a residence on East Ocean avenue, Long Beach, and spends his summers in that city. His wife was formerly Miss Sarah M. Woodhouse, a native of New Hampshire, who was engaged in educational work. They became the parents of the following children: Leta A., a graduate of the Boston University and now principal of a school in Los Angeles; Helen H., who took a course in the Boston Conservatory of Music, and wife of Leland Lyons, of Crafton; Elizabeth L., graduate of Stanford University; and Freda M., a student in the Marlborough School, of Los Angeles. With his family Mr. Lodge is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Redlands, and is active in its work. Politically he is a stanch Republican.

WILLIAM HENRY LYON. A pioneer of California and an upbuilder of the state, William H. Lyon came to Redlands in 1888, where his brother, Isaac L., had already begun the development of what is now known as the Lyon orange grove, and ultimately he improved a two hundred acre orange grove, which was one of the finest properties in Southern California. He was born in Ogdensburg, N. Y., September 27, 1818, the eldest of three children born to his parents, Stephen S., a native of New Jersey and a lumber manufacturer of New York, where he died, and Eliza (Wheeler) Lyon, who was born in Connecticut and died in New York. He was reared in his native city and educated in the Ogdensburg Academy, and at the age of seventeen years went to Buffalo, N. Y., and with a letter to the city surveyor obtained a position in his office. When the Illinois Central Railroad was built Mr. Lyon worked on the first survey in its location, and also on the construction had charge of a subdivision of ten miles. He was next on the survey of the Rutland & Burlington Railroad, in Vermont, and was also resident engineer during its construction. In 1850 he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama and with five others engaged in mining in Placer county. He was very successful and with his accumulated earnings established a brewery in San Francisco which later grew to extensive proportions on Jessie street in the rear of the Palace hotel. The firm was known as Lyon & Co. Because of a severe illness in 1877 he closed out his business and in 1880 returned east again (having made the trip several times after the transcontinental railway was completed) and deciding this time to make the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. He finally concluded to locate in Paris, France, and accordingly he spent eight years and three months in Europe, after which he returned to America and with his brother, Isaac L. Lyon, he came to Redlands and has ever since made this place his home. His brother died in December, 1901, when Eldridge M. Lyon, his brother's son, assumed charge of the vast interests.

J. E. Apsey.

In San Francisco Mr. Lyon was made a Mason in California Lodge No. 1, F. & A. M., of which he is still a member, and also belongs to California Chapter No. 5, R. A. M., California Commandery No. 1, K. T., and San Francisco Consistory. He was made an Odd Fellow in New York and also holds membership with this organization at the present writing. He is numbered among the California pioneers of San Francisco. Politically he is a stanch Republican.

JOB EDWARD APSEY. When a man spends nearly a half century in active labor it is but just that the rewards of his industry represented by the accumulation of property should enable him to live in rest and retirement in his later years. J. E. Apsey, a leading citizen of Arroyo Grande, is thus situated and enjoys great popularity and the possession of a host of friends who congratulate him on his success in life. He is of English parentage, both his father, Isaac Apsey, and his mother, who was Jane Long before her marriage, having been born in England. They emigrated to America in 1836 and made a home in Iowa when it was far out on the frontier, living there until 1853, when they continued their journey across the continent and became pioneers of the state of California, where four years later the father died, at the age of sixty-four years. The mother lived ten years longer and was the same age as her husband at the time of her demise. Mr. Apsey was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal denomination and a man of strong principles and integrity of character. Of the five children in the family one son now lives in Nevada and a daughter near Red Bluff, Cal.

J. E. Apsey was born in Jones county, Iowa, July 9, 1847, and came to California with his parents in 1853, Tehama being the point at which they settled. In this location Mr. Apsey attended the common schools, after which he acquired a practical business education and in young manhood engaged in cattle raising in Tehama county. Following this occupation until 1867, he then came to San Luis Obispo county with cattle; however, he soon engaged in the livery business, which he conducted for a time and then had charge of the San Simeon wharf for two years. After retiring from this position he began his career as a hotel keeper, having charge of the Cambria house for several years. Disposing of his interest in that place he came to San Luis Obispo, where he engaged in business and in 1891 settled in Arroyo Grande and conducted the Ryan house for the ensuing nine years. After that he had charge of a threshing outfit for three years, and at the end of this time gave up active business.

In 1871 Mr. Apsey was married in Cambria to Mrs. Mary Gross, a native of Ohio, and a widow with three children. Fraternally he is a member of the Cambria Lodge and Hesperian Lodge No. 181, I. O. O. F., which he joined in 1876. In politics he has always taken a deep interest and is a firm believer in the tenets advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He has repeatedly served in official capacities and among other offices has held that of constable several times and has also been a deputy sheriff. He was recently honored with the appointment by the governor to the office of supervisor of the Fourth District of San Luis Obispo county, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Patrick Moore. No man in the community is held in greater esteem, being appreciated especially for his demonstrated integrity and ability.

DANIEL SMITH JORDAN. The section about the city of Redlands is particularly adapted to dairy products, which are of such quality and quantity as to have won a distinction throughout Southern California, and among the many citizens thus occupied mention may be made of Daniel S. Jordan, whose proprietorship of the Glen Dairy has resulted in its upbuilding and financial prosperity. Mr. Jordan came to California in January, 1891, and was variously occupied for some years before venturing upon his present enterprise, when he did, however, bringing to bear in his work such intelligence and perseverance that he quickly systematized his plans and soon accomplished satisfactory results.

Born in Bourbon, Ind., August 9, 1857, Mr. Jordan was a son of David K. Jordan, a native of Virginia and a farmer in Indiana, where his death eventually occurred. The mother was in maidenhood Nancy Wood, a native of Lexington, Stark county, Ohio, and her death also occurred in Indiana. They became the parents of ten children, of whom three are living, two sons, William Henry and Jesse, Jr., having served in the Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry in the Civil war and the latter was killed at Atlanta. Daniel S. Jordan was reared on the paternal farm in Indiana and when fourteen years old went to St. John, Putnam county, Mo., where he attended the public school in pursuit of an education. When twenty-one he spent two terms in the Wasioja Seminary in the town of that name in Minnesota. Following this he went to Redfield, So. Dak., and there homesteaded a claim and also took up a tree claim, improving in all a farm of two hundred and forty acres. He finally returned to Minnesota and in Nobles county engaged in a mercantile enterprise in the town of Rushmore, and there remained until 1891. In the last named year he came to California and in Rialto engaged in a nursery business and horticulture, setting out a ten-acre orange grove. In March, 1895, he sold out and coming to Redlands located in San Timoteo cañon, where he farmed until 1896, purchasing in that year a part of his present property, forty acres of which he later set out in peaches and apricots and finally grubbed out to make room for alfalfa; he added to his purchase until he now owns two hundred and forty acres located three miles from Redlands, given over to the raising of grain, hay, alfalfa and stock, and the management of the Glen Dairy. This last is supplied by a herd of twenty-five cows of high grade stock, the product being retailed in the city of Redlands. Mr. Jordan is interested in the Lower Yucaipe Water Company, and also has a pumping plant on his own property, which supplies a part of his irrigation.

In Minnesota Mr. Jordan was united in marriage with Miss Ermina Bedford, a native of Sullivan county, Pa., and born of this union are the following children: Winifred Alice, a student in the Los Angeles Normal School; Ernest W.; Ramona; Ruth; Willard; and Helen. Mrs. Jordan is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Jordan is associated fraternally with the Odd Fellows of Redlands and with his wife belongs to the Rebekahs. He takes an active interest in educational affairs and for six years has served as a member of the board of trustees of the railroad district. Politically he votes the Republican ticket.

HARRY LEE MARTIN. The first representative of the Martin family in America became a pioneer of Maryland, but later generations established themselves in North Carolina and Georgia, from which states they scattered through the south and west. Robert Martin, a native of North Carolina and a soldier of the Revolution, was the father of James, who was born and reared in South Carolina and settled upon a farm near Cuthbert, Randolph county, Ga. By his marriage to Hester Bogan he had seven sons, all but one of whom became ministers in the Baptist denomination. Among the six preachers was Rev. Isaac Martin, a native of South Carolina and for some years a farmer in Georgia, where he earned a livelihood by farming and donated his services to the church. Eventually he removed to Texas and settled at Rusk, Cherokee county, where his death occurred. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Pruitt, was born in Wilkes county, Ga., of an old family in that state, and her death also took place at their Texas home.

In the family of Rev. Isaac and Mary Martin there were eleven children, all but one of whom attained maturity and four are now living. Two came to California, these being Isaac T. and William Purnell, who engaged in the furniture business in Waco, Tex., and also were together after coming to the Pacific coast. Isaac T. died September 19, 1904, at the age of fifty-five years. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while in religion he was of the Baptist faith. William Purnell, who received his name from the Purnell family of Maryland (relatives of the Martin family), was born near Cuthbert, Ga., March 8, 1839, and passed the years of boyhood on a Georgia farm, during the winter months attending a subscription school in the home neighborhood. At the age of twenty years he left the old associations and started out in the world for himself, his first location being in Columbia county, Ark. When the Civil war began he was among the first in the locality to offer his services as a soldier and was accepted as a private in Company E, Eleventh Arkansas Infantry, in which he remained until the close of the war, meantime receiving a commission as first lieutenant. After the first year of service the regiment was mounted and served as cavalry during the balance of the struggle.

Upon the close of the war William Purnell Martin joined his father in Texas and soon afterward secured employment with an uncle, Col. James Diamond, proprietor of the Houston Journal. Next he went to Waco and found employment in the furniture store of William Anderson. Meanwhile he sent for his brother, Isaac T., whom he sent to school and when his education had been completed, the brothers embarked in business under the title of W. P. Martin & Bro., continuing together in the furniture trade for twenty years. During 1887 they disposed of their store and in 1888 removed to California, settling in Los Angeles, where in a short time they opened a furniture store on Third street near Hill, later removing their establishment to Spring street. In a short time they had established a growing trade in the line of their specialties. During 1893 W. P. Martin disposed of his interest to his brother and turned his attention to the dairy business, establishing a dairy on the west side of the city and continuing the business for about six years. On selling out the dairy he became city salesman for the Standard Oil Company and later for six months acted as superintendent of the Inglewood Water Company's ranch. Upon the death of his brother he became administrator of the estate and conducted the furniture business until February, 1905, when it was sold to the Gem Furniture Company.

The marriage of W. P. Martin was solemnized at Gainesville, Tex., and united him with Mildred Washington Walker, who was born in South Carolina and is a woman of exceptional education and culture. They are the parents of three children now living, namely: Harry Lee, whose name introduces this article and who is secretary of the Inglewood Water Company; Mary Nina, principal of the Inglewood high school; and Mildred Purnell, now a student in the Los Angeles high school. While living in Texas, Mr. Martin was initiated into the Masonic order. In religion he believes in Baptist doctrines. He is a Jeffersonian Democrat and a member of the Los Angeles Home League. Of late years he has acquired various property interests in Los Angeles, which the general rise in real estate values has made quite valuable. Loyalty to his country is one of his predominant traits, and it comes to him by inheritance from patriotic ancestors. On both sides he had five great-grandfathers in the Revolutionary war. His wife's mother was a Miss Dean, descended from Major Thomas Farrow, a Revolutionary officer. His father-in-law, William Walker, was proprietor of the Pacolet iron mills near Spartanburg, S. C., now one of the largest iron mills in the south.

The eldest of three children now living, Harry Lee Martin was born in Waco, Tex., January 24, 1875, and received his primary education in his native town. After coming to the Pacific coast he attended the Baptist College in Los Angeles and for a year was a student in the academic department of the University of Southern California, after which he entered the classical department of the institution, from which he was graduated in 1896 with the degree of A. B., and with the first honors of his class and the appointment of valedictorian. After completing his education he spent two years in the employ of his uncle, I. T. Martin, and then bought what was left of the Union iron works on First street, where he began to work up a business in the manufacture of foundry supplies. A year later he sold the plant to D. P. N. Little, the present owner. Shortly afterward he joined with others in organizing the Guarantors Investment Company, Incorporated, of which he was the first president and still holds that office, although since the spring of 1904 he has given the management of the organization into other hands.

The Inglewood Water Company, of which H. L. Martin was one of the incorporators, bought the holdings of A. C. Freeman at Inglewood, comprising seventeen hundred acres of land and the water supply for Inglewood. In January, 1903, Mr. Martin began the management of the company's property, since which time the water capacity has been doubled by means of an increased supply of wells. The Orpington tract, the Inglewood Poultry Colony, and three other subdivisions comprising in all some one hundred and twenty-five acres, have been laid out by the company and the ground is sold to home-seekers. Mr. Martin aided in the organization and is a director of the First State Bank of Inglewood, besides being secretary of the James Cook corporation, owners of a wool-pulling factory in Los Angeles.

The residence erected in Inglewood by Mr. Martin in 1904 is presided over by Mrs. Martin, formerly Miss Daisie E. Cook of Los Angeles, daughter of James Cook, and a native of Marysville, Cal. There are two daughters of the union, named Virginia Lee and Winifred Louise. Though not a partisan in his opinions Mr. Martin has the courage of his convictions and never loses an opportunity to cast his ballot for the candidates and principles of the Republican party. At one time he was honored with the presidency of the Alumni Association of the University of Southern California and also he has been actively associated with the work of the Sigma Chi fraternity. Among the people of his county, where so much of his active life has been passed, he has a host of friends who possess every confidence in his ability and his prospects for increasing success.

MRS. KATE C. McCORMICK. One of the show places of Los Angeles county is the famous grape vine at San Gabriel, the largest in the world, covering nearly five thousand square feet, and over five feet in circumference, its roots extending more than two hundred feet in every direction. It is composed of one root and three branches and in the early days was known as "El Paron de la Trinidad" (Trinity vine—three in one). It never receives irrigation or cultivation and owing to this and its dense foliage the grapes are small but a large crop is secured each year. The grapes make excellent medicinal wine, and also jelly; the leaves, some of which measure twelve inches across, are used by the natives for fevers and headaches. This vine, which grows in the "patio" of the San Gabriel adobe hotel, one block from the mission church, is said to have been a full grown plant as early as 1750, it being an impossibility to estimate its age with any degree of accuracy.

This property is owned by Mrs. Kate McCormick, a most estimable lady, whose residence in this section has been prolific of much practical help and sympathy to those who needed friends, for that she is to all who call upon her. She was born in Keenansville, Canada, near Toronto, and when three years old was taken to the United States by her parents. Her father, John Ponsonby Bayly, located his family in Wisconsin, from which state with a son, Robert Bayly, he joined the famous Van Veet party and came overland to California in 1852, and after their arrival in Downieville engaged in the mines in the northern part of the state. He remained on the Pacific coast for five years, when in 1857 he returned to Wisconsin. Some time later, with a government surveying party, he again started westward, and neither he nor the party were ever heard from afterward. It was thought that they had been destroyed by the Indians, although nothing definite was ever learned. Mr. Bayly had always been a great traveler, visiting many points of interest in Africa and South America. His wife was Mary Keenan, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, and born of this union were six children, four of whom are now surviving: Mrs. Elizabeth Hannon, of Chicago; Mrs. Margaret McClave, of Benton Harbor, Mich.; William T., of Duluth, Minn.; and Mrs. Kate C. McCormick, of this review. By a previous marriage Mr. Bayly had two children, Robert and Frances. Robert Bayly, who came west with his father in 1852, drifted to the southern portion of the state and here pre-empted a government claim, which in 1869 he sold to a Mr. Hastings, the property known today as the Hastings ranch. He then purchased the grapevine property in San Gabriel, where he made his home until 1884, when he returned to Chicago, then the home of the family, and on account of his impaired health he brought back to California his sister, Kate C. The brother dying in 1895 the sister became the owner of this well known property, which she now owns.

On the 24th of December, 1870, Kate C. Bayly became the wife of Joseph T. McCormick; he was born in La Fargeville, N. Y., and received his education in the public schools of Watertown, same state. In 1869 he left his native state and going to Chicago became associated with a job printing firm. After the Chicago fire he became a partner in the Illinois Staats Zeitung Job Printing Company, and after several years, he with Franz Gindele withdrew, establishing The Gindele & McCormick Job Printing Company. In 1879 on account of failing health he went to Colorado and the following year his death occurred in that location. He was taken back to Chicago for interment. Mrs. McCormick has three sons, Cyrene, William T. and Edgar Bayly. Besides the property in San Gabriel, Mrs. McCormick is also interested in real estate in Glendora, Monrovia, Santa Monica and Chicago. She is a member of the Catholic Church at San Gabriel, and gives of her means and time freely to all its charities and upbuilding enterprises. She is a woman of rare worth, intelligent and educated, and qualities of heart equal to those of mind. She is a friend to all who are in need and nothing gives her more happiness than to minister to those in distress. To know her is to hold her in highest esteem.

JOHN LEMBERGER. Among the prominent citizens of Redlands mention belongs to John Lemberger, who is now engaged as a horticulturist in the vicinity of this place. He is a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, his birth having occurred near Schoendorf February 17, 1821; his father, John G. Lemberger, was a civil engineer who brought his family to America in 1832 and in the vicinity of Philadelphia followed farming. Later he was similarly engaged in Darke county, Ohio, where his death eventually occurred. His wife was formerly Elizabeth Magdalene Hottman, a native of Germany also, her death occurring later in Iowa. They were the parents of five sons and one daughter, of whom John Lemberger is the fourth in order of birth and the only one now living.

About ten years old when brought to America, John Lemberger received his education in the public schools of Pennsylvania. At the age of eleven years, however, he was apprenticed to learn the trade of a tobacconist and completed the work in four years, after which he worked as a journeyman until 1847. He then engaged for himself in Cambridge, Ind., remaining in that location for about nine years, when in 1856 he became a farmer in Boone county, same state. Two years later he removed to Beardstown, Ill., and there worked at his trade of tobacconist until 1878. In the last named year he went to Pana, Ill., and followed a similar enterprise, then disposing of his interests in 1893 he came to California and purchased a ten-acre ranch which had just been set to navel oranges, and since that time has been actively identified with the horticultural interests of this section. He is interested in the Crafton Water Company, from which he receives water for the irrigation of his property.

John Clemmson

In Cambridge City, Ind., Mr. Lemberger was united in marriage with Miss Caroline Chartel, a native of Pennsylvania, and they became the parents of the following children: Susan, Mrs. Rucher, of Crafton; Nina, wife of a merchant of Poplar Bluff, Mo.; Frank, of Reno, Nev.; Lillie, who died in Redlands; Katie, at home; Annie, Mrs. Glasgow, of Pana, Ill.; Ella, Mrs. Wheeler, of Ladd, Ill.; and Charles, of Pana, Ill. Mr. Lemberger is identified fraternally with the Odd Fellows, of Beardstown, Ill., and politically inclines to the principles of the Republican party, although he reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man he considers best qualified for official position.

JOHN CLEMINSON. The Cleminson family are prominent citizens of Los Angeles county, where the pioneer, John Cleminson, established the name at an early date in the history of California, two succeeding generations serving to keep alive the records and deeds of their ancestor, who proved himself worthy to cope with the trials and hardships of a new land. The pioneer, John Cleminson, Sr., was a native of England, who, in 1812, came with his father to St. John's, New Brunswick, whence they made their way to the United States, and finally located in Louisville, Ky. Later, in Lexington, Lafayette county, Mo., he engaged in teaching school, then worked as a cabinet-maker and carpenter. Removing to Galena, Ill., he made his home in that section until 1852, when he came to California and engaged with his older son, James, in farming, first in San Bernardino county, then in El Monte, his death occurring in the latter place in 1879, at the age of eighty years. His wife, formerly Lydia Lightner, was born in Lancaster, Pa., and went to Missouri with her parents. Her death occurred in 1873, at the age of seventy-three years. She left a family of four daughters and two sons, of whom two daughters and the two sons are still surviving.

John Cleminson, Jr., was born in Hancock county, Ill., December 8, 1842, the youngest in the family of his parents, and was but ten years of age when he accompanied the family across the plains. Leaving Illinois in the fall of 1851, they went to Missouri, where they wintered, and in the early spring the company collected their belongings and outfitted for the tedious journey. Their route lay through the Indian Territory, Socorro, N. Mex., and Arizona. Just before they reached the latter place the Apaches stampeded their cattle, leaving but half enough to draw their wagons, and three days later one of the number was murdered while gathering fuel. They remained a few days at Santa Cruz to rest up, then moved on to San Xavier Del Sac Mission and on to Tucson, one of the largest towns they passed through. This was a post for Spanish soldiers, who kept on the watch for the Indians. Here was witnessed the crude method of grinding corn with stones. The only money in circulation was a copper cent about the size of a twenty-five cent piece. They remained in Tucson several months, then came on by the Pemos Indian Village, Maricopa Wells and crossed the Gila river about the point where it empties into the Colorado. Here they had to give nearly everything they possessed to be ferried across and waited on the opposite bank until a government train came along, when they were taken to San Diego. Thence they made their way to San Bernardino county, where they were established on a farm for five years.

Mr. Cleminson received but one year of schooling in that place, his services being required in the improvement and cultivation of the home farm. He accompanied his father to El Monte in 1857 and there took up farming. Finally becoming dependent upon his own resources he engaged in general farming and dairying on the property which he now occupies, consisting of thirty-six acres, all of which is tillable land and devoted to alfalfa and corn. Like his father and brother, James, he is one of the leading citizens in the upbuilding of the country, seeking every avenue for the development of the section, giving time, money and personal effort to promote the general progress of the community. He gave the right-of way to the Pacific Electric Railway, which will give to this section its greatest impetus toward development. Mr. Cleminson is a Republican, his first vote having been cast for Lincoln. The highest esteem of the community is given to this gentleman for his citizenship, as well as his personal character, which is such as to have won the friendship of those with whom he has had business or social intercourse throughout the long years of his residence in this section.

JOSEPH DeWOLF KING. The horticultural interests of San Bernardino are well represented by Mr. King, of Craftonville, where he is rounding out the years of a well spent life among the pleasant surroundings of a California home. He is the representative of one of the old eastern families of Irish descent, his birth occurring in Ravenna, Portage county, Ohio, March 21, 1836; his great-grandfather, Dr. Robert King, came from Ireland to Massachusetts and there practiced his profession, married and reared a family. His son, William, removed with his family to Ravenna, Ohio, and engaged as a farmer and a hotel keeper until his death. John B. King, the father of Joseph D. King, was born in Massachusetts and accompanied his parents to Ohio, where he followed farming and also acted as proprietor of King's Tavern. Later he was a member of the banking firm of Robinson-King & Co., and also organized the Second National Bank, of Ravenna, and served as an officer until his death. He married Miss Caroline Mary Selby, who was born in Canandaigua, N. Y., a daughter of Ira Selby, of English descent, and who removed to Ohio and became a judge in Portage county. Mrs. King died in Ohio, leaving a family of six children, one son, Ira S., serving in the Civil war as hospital steward, surviving the struggle, and making his home in Michigan until his death, which occurred in 1903.

Joseph DeWolf King was reared in Ravenna and educated in its public schools and the Mount Union Seminary, from which institution he was graduated, and then took up the study of law under John L. and H. C. Ranny, continuing so occupied until he had exhausted his supply of funds. He then taught school for one year, and at the end of that time (1858) went to Texas because of ill health, and in Galveston engaged in the cotton commission business. Six months later he sold out and in Navasota, Tex., engaged with a commercial house until he was driven out by the yellow fever, when he returned north and after his marriage in Vassalboro, Me., in 1860 he engaged in farming near Ravenna. His work was interrupted by the call to arms in 1861, and he immediately set to work to raise a battery, known as the Twelfth Ohio Battery, he being in command, and this was later consolidated with the First Ohio Artillery, Battery I, and he then became first lieutenant. He was taken prisoner in Virginia on the upper Potomac in 1862, and for two and a half months he was imprisoned in Lynchburg, Salisbury and Libby. He was then paroled and was stationed at Camp Lew Wallace, at Columbus, Ohio, in command of paroled artillery, and after remaining there for several months became impatient for his exchange, and then resigned his commission.

Returning to Ravenna he followed farming until 1888, when he went to the Sandwich Islands via California, and there accepted a position as principal in a government school on Kauai Island and continued thus occupied for the period of three years. Resigning in 1891 he returned to the United States and locating in Redlands, Cal., purchased the property he now owns, consisting of twenty acres devoted to valencia oranges. He has built a residence here, barns, etc, and also owns ten acres at Crafton Station. His home is in Craftonville, on King street, between Highland and Fifth avenues. His wife was formerly Miss Lucy L. Homans, a native of Vassalboro, Me., and a daughter of Benjamin Homans, a native of that state also. The paternal grandfather, Stephen Gray Otis Homans, was born in England, and after coming to America located in Boston, where the family owned the long wharf. Later he removed to Maine and engaged as a merchant in Vassalboro, which business Benjamin Homans also followed. The younger man married Elizabeth Bunker Weeks, a native of Nantucket, and daughter of Capt. Reuben Weeks, commander of a whaler as were his sons, Edward and Daniel. He died in Iowa at the advanced age of eight-five years. Of their three sons and one daughter, three are now living, Mrs. King having received her education in the Coney Female Academy, and later the Tappan Female Seminary of Ravenna, where she completed the course.

Mr. and Mrs. King are the parents of two children, Stephen Gray Otis, a graduate of the Western Reserve College, of Ohio, and now manager of an oil refinery in Oakland, Cal.; and Fred Bunker, a jeweler in Redlands. Fraternally Mr. King is identified with the Knights of Pythias and belongs to Bear Valley Post No. 126, Grand Army of the Republic, of Redlands. He is a Universalist in his religious beliefs, and politically he is a Republican. He is a member of the Board of Trade of Redlands, the Redlands Fruit Exchange, and a director in the Southern California Fruit Exchange. He is a member and one of the organizers of the California State Audubon Society, and is on the membership committee. He is one of the esteemed and able citizens of this section and is justly named among the representative men who have brought this portion of Southern California to rank with the most highly developed and improved of the state.

CLARENCE EVERETT IVESON. Born at Addison, Lenawee county, Mich., December 27, 1868, Clarence Everett Iveson is the son of Benjamin and Jane (Abbott) Iveson, both natives of New York state. The father was a contractor and builder and died a middle-aged man, while the mother is residing in Redlands and is now Mrs. Cleveland. Of their ten children Mr. Iveson is the youngest and lived in Addison until nine years of age, when the family removed to a farm in Wheatland, Hillsdale county, Mich., where he had the advantages of the public and high schools. In November, 1887, he came to Redlands, Cal., where for some time he followed carpentering and later began the pursuit of horticulture and was for seven years superintendent of the E. C. Stirling ranch. In 1902 he was appointed superintendent of streets of Redlands and held the office for twenty months. His next appointment to the same position was in April, 1906, since which time he gives it all his attention and best efforts and is filling the position with credit and satisfaction.

In Redlands June 12, 1894, Mr. Iveson was married to Miss Lucie Underwood, a native of Palmyra, Mich., and by this union there are three children, namely: Alethea, Charles and Ellen. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America and Independent Order of Foresters. He is a member of the Redlands Board of Trade and politically is a Republican. Mr. Iveson is a young man who has worked his own way, is a self made man in the best sense implied by the term, and is well and favorably known in the community where he has passed so many years of his life.

HON. WILLIS E. PUTNAM. Now retired from the active cares of business life, Hon. Willis E. Putnam is making his home in Redlands and participating in the development and advancement of the city's interests. He was born in Germantown, Juneau county, Wis., September 6, 1857, the second in a family of seven children, of whom six are now living. His father, T. W. Putnam, was born in Centralia, N. Y., where the paternal grandfather, Gilbert (a grand-nephew of Israel Putnam), engaged as a farmer. T. W. Putnam removed to Wisconsin in an early day and engaged as a farmer; later locating in Wabasha county, Minn., he followed a similar occupation. In Missouri he engaged as a merchant and in Iowa as a builder, and finally removing to Dodge county, Neb., he improved a homestead. He is now retired and makes his home in Redlands. His wife, formerly Lucretia Towne, a native of New York, is also living. She is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and active in its charities.

Willis E. Putnam was thirteen years old when taken by his parents to Nebraska, and he there completed his education in the public schools. He was twenty years old when he left home to become dependent upon his own resources, in April, 1878, going to the Black Hills, where he followed mining and prospecting for about nine years. A part of this time he was located in Idaho, in the Coeur d'Alene mines. Returning to Dakota he entered one hundred and sixty acres of land, homesteaded a similar acreage, and took up a tree claim also of one hundred and sixty acres. This was in Lawrence county (now Meade), and there he improved his property, erecting a residence, barns, outbuildings, etc., and engaged in general farming and the raising of cattle. Returning to Nebraska in 1892, he purchased a farm of two hundred acres in the Elk Horn valley and engaged in the raising of corn and cattle for a number of years, when he once more located in Dakota and rented land. Disposing of his farming interests in the fall of 1906 he came to Southern California and has since made Redlands his home, having previously come here in 1902 and purchased the property which he now owns at No. 120 Stillman avenue.

While a resident of Dakota Mr. Putnam was elected to the state legislature from Meade county, on the Republican ticket, being a member of the second assembly; the close of the term found him in Nebraska. In January, 1906, he was appointed a member of the board of trustees of Redlands to fill a vacancy. In the same year he became a candidate on the good government ticket and was elected to the position, which he is now filling. He is a member of the Board of Trade and active in his interests to advance the general welfare of the community. He has always voted the straight Republican ticket and is thoroughly imbued with its principles, although he is too loyal a citizen to let politics interfere with his ideas of good government.

In South Dakota, February 18, 1888, Mr. Putnam was united in marriage with Miss Grace Lewis, a native of Springfield, Mass., and a daughter of Samuel A. Lewis, born in Montpelier, Vt. The paternal grandfather was a native of Vermont and a pioneer settler of Minnesota; later in life he returned to New England and located in Massachusetts. Samuel A. Lewis was in a Minnesota regiment during the Civil war and served against the Sioux Indians, and after the close of this strife he returned to Massachusetts and engaged in a mercantile enterprise. Later he followed the stock business in South Dakota, and finally returned to Massachusetts, and is now living retired in Athol. His wife, formerly Cynthia Childs, a native of Vermont, died in South Dakota. They had two children, of whom Mrs. Putnam was the elder. She is the mother of the following children: Harold, Meryl, Clyde, Ross, Edgar and Majorie. Mrs. Putnam is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Putnam was made a Mason in Scribner Lodge No. 132, in Nebraska, and both himself and wife are members of the Order of Eastern Star in Redlands. He is also identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

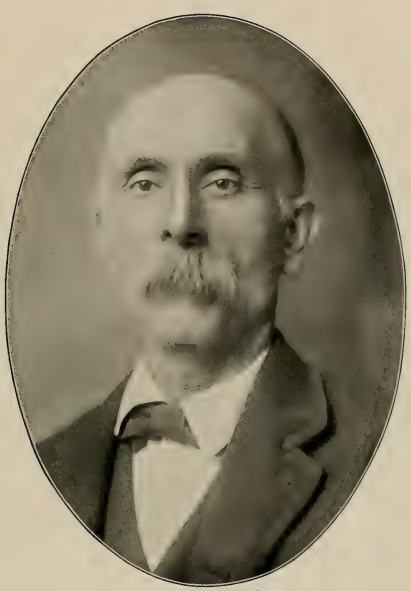
RICHARD P. McINTOSH. A pioneer of Mentone and one of its upbuilding factors is Richard P. McIntosh, who came to California in 1887 and entered the ranch of one hundred and sixty acres which he now owns and operates. He is a native of Ontario, Canada, where he was born August 11, 1856; his father, Peter McIntosh, was born in the same place as was also his grandfather, Donald, the descendant of Scotch ancestry. Peter McIntosh was a bailiff or deputy sheriff for thirty years and also engaged as a small farmer during that period, his death occurring some time after his retirement from this work. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and one of its stanch supporters. His wife, formerly Annie McBain, was born in Ontario, where she died late in life. They were the parents of nine children, six sons and three daughters, of whom six children are still living.



Richard Peter McIntosh was the youngest son in his father's family. He was reared in Ontario and educated in its public schools, and in young manhood he followed his early training and engaged as a farmer near Cornwall, Ontario. Later he purchased a fifty-acre farm there which he gave to his sister in 1875, when he left his native land and came to Nevada and in the vicinity of Carson City engaged in lumbering with the Sierra Nevada Wood & Lumber Company. During the summers he flumed lumber and wood to Virginia City and Gold Hill, and in the winters superintended the water supply for the Virginia City and Gold Hill Water Company. He remained in that state until 1887 when he came to Redlands and entered the ranch which he now owns, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres, and being joined by his wife the following year he began its improvement and cultivation. Later he sold off all but ten acres on Mentone avenue, devoted to navel oranges, and where he has a pumping plant with a capacity of twenty inches. He also purchased five acres in the Greenspot district, all of which is in navel oranges.

In Carson City, Nev., Mr. McIntosh was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Thompson, of Ontario, the ceremony being performed December 3, 1876. She was a daughter of Robert John Thompson, a native of Ontario and a farmer and merchant there, where he still resides. Her mother, formerly Mary Ann Bender, a daughter of Richard Bender, died in Ontario. She is the youngest living of the four children born to her parents, of whom three are surviving. To Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh were born nine children, of whom six are still living, namely: John, farming in Crafton; George; Alice; Leland; Kate; and Edith. Fraternally Mr. McIntosh is a member of the Woodmen of the World, his wife being affiliated with the Women of Woodcraft; she is also a member of the Crafton Club, and both are identified with the First Presbyterian Church, of Redlands, which receives an active support from them. Politically Mr. McIntosh is a Republican, and through the influence of this party he has served for the past six years as road overseer of the Fifth supervisoral district, and has also acted as school trustee of the Greenleaf district for several years.

OLO J. CHAMBERLAIN. A successful rancher is named in the person of Olo J. Chamberlain, who is located in the vicinity of Norwalk, Los Angeles county, and engaged in the management of a forty-acre ranch and a large tract of leased land, and although he has been in this section a comparatively brief time he has already established his position among the representative citizens. Born in Lincoln, Neb., October 12, 1880, he is a son of Joseph and Ella (Stone) Chamberlain, natives of England. They located in Nebraska and made that state their home until 1882, when they immigrated to California and in Santa Barbara engaged in farming and the cultivation of a fine orchard. The mother was accidentally killed in that county, where the father is still living and engaged in his work. During the Civil war Mr. Chamberlain served his adopted country in an Ohio regiment, and in memory of that time is now affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. He is an independent voter, but a patriotic and conservative citizen. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The six children comprising the parental family are as follows: Glenn S., who married Edith Dotty; Clarence Z., of Bakersfield, Cal.; Roy W., who married Hattie Marritt and lives in this vicinity; Olo J., of this review; Mary E., with her father; and Ella L., a resident of Tehachapi, Cal.

John Lawelte

David Cavelti

Olo J. Chamberlain was only two years old when brought to California by his parents, and in this state he received his education, attending the common schools of Santa Barbara county, first in Cathedral Oaks and later in Goleta, where he completed the course. His education was supplemented by a commercial training in the Santa Barbara Business College, under E. B. Hoover. He then learned the blacksmith's trade, following this in Goleta for several years, when, in 1903, he came to Los Angeles county and near Norwalk purchased a ranch of twenty acres. This he finally disposed of and purchased the one he now owns, consisting of forty acres devoted to grain and corn and general products, while he also leases from W. D. Woolwine, one hundred and forty-three acres, of which one hundred and twenty acres are in grain and twenty in alfalfa. Mr. Chamberlain has a comfortable residence on his property and also improved it with other necessary buildings and equipment. In his fraternal relations he is identified with the Fraternal Brotherhood of Norwalk, Enterprise Lodge No. 19, K. P., of Santa Barbara, and Castle Rock No. 151, also of Santa Barbara. Politically he follows the example of his father and reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man he considers best qualified for official position.

DAVID CAWELTI. Numbered among the industrious, practical and successful agriculturists of Ventura county is David Cawelti, who is carrying on general farming near Somis, his ranch being under an excellent state of cultivation. He has made substantial improvements on the place, his buildings being comfortable and convenient, and well adapted for his purpose, while his stock and machinery are of first-class description, everything about the premises being indicative of the thrift, skill and good management of the owner. Of excellent German ancestry, he was born, June 27, 1853, in Cincinnati, Ohio, a son of John and Catherine M. (Wagner) Cawelti.

John Cawelti was born in Germany, and when fifteen years of age came to the United States. Learning the trade of a butcher, he worked at the same in Cincinnati, Ohio, for eleven years. Removing then to Iowa, he was for two years employed in farming, after which he was a butcher in Clayton county, that state, for a number of years. In 1864 he made another westward move, coming to Sonoma county, Cal., where he carried on general farming about four years. In November, 1868, he located in Ventura county, and having purchased twelve hundred and fifty acres of grazing land was here engaged in farming and stock-raising until his death, in 1893, at the age of sixty-eight years. He was held in high respect as a man of integrity, and was an active member of the Democratic party. His wife survived him, passing away in 1905. Their children consisted of five sons and four daughters, all of whom are living.

Beginning his studies in the common schools of Iowa, where he lived until eleven years old, David Cawelti completed his early education at Healdsburg, Sonoma county, where the family settled in 1864, after their long and tedious journey across the plains. He subsequently came with the family to Ventura county, where, with the exception of six years spent in San Bernardino county, he has since resided. When ready to establish himself as a householder, he purchased land near South Camarillo, and by dint of sturdy and judicious labor has improved a valuable estate, his ranch of two hundred and fifty acres being under good cultivation and very productive.

In 1879 Mr. Cawelti married Mary E. Fay, who was born in California, and of the nine children born of their union, one died in infancy, and eight are living, namely: Norman D.; Sadie E.; Chester L.; Edith L. and Effie L., twins; John C. and Lucy C., twins; and Ernest E. In his political affiliations Mr. Cawelti is a steadfast Democrat, and religiously he and his wife attend the Presbyterian Church.

RUFUS THOMAS CLYDE. One of the enterprising and progressive native sons of San Bernardino county is Rufus Thomas Clyde, who owns a ten-acre ranch and residence in Highland, besides a ranch in the Yucaipe valley. He was born in San Bernardino May 20, 1864, a son of Edward Prentis Clyde, the latter a native of New York; he removed to Salt Lake City in the early '40s and thence in 1852 crossed the plains to California and in San Bernardino county purchased a farm on the Base Line, where he now resides. The mother was Mary Singleton in maidenhood, who came from England to Salt Lake City, thence to San Bernardino, where she was married. They are the parents of two other sons, William R., farming on the Base Line, and George E., who resides on the Base Line.

Rufus Thomas Clyde was reared on the paternal farm and at the same time that he attended the public schools in pursuit of an education he received a practical training along agricultural lines, which has proven of benefit to him in more mature years. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he entered into partnership with his father in general farming, remaining so occupied until 1889, when he came to the Yucaipe valley and still with his father and brothers carried on farming. Later he purchased an interest with his brothers in the tract of six hundred and forty acres of land, where they farmed for some years, finally dissolving partnership. Mr. Clyde now owns one hundred acres of bench land where he has built a residence and necessary outbuildings, while he leases two hundred acres adjoining and carries on the raising of grain and hay. He also owns ten acres two and a half miles southwest of Highland, where he has a residence which is the home of the family during the school year. He was married in San Bernardino to Miss Geneva V. Hawse, a native of San Bernardino county, and they have one son, Robert S. For five years Mr. Clyde served as trustee for the Pass school district and was clerk for three years of that time. Fraternally he is a member of San Bernardino Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F.

FREDERICK H. ROBERTS. The four hundred acre tract forming the homestead of Mr. Roberts comprises land as fine as any that the San Pasqual valley boasts and has been improved with a substantial residence of thirteen rooms equipped with hot and cold water, bath and other modern conveniences. The larger part of the estate is under cultivation to grain, but there is also considerable pasture land for the grazing of milch cows and the other stock kept on the farm. A noticeable feature of the ranch is the creamery, in which Mr. Roberts is one of the principal owners. With the exception of the years from 1893 to 1898, when he was engaged in the hardware business in Escondido, he has followed agricultural pursuits throughout his active life, and without any one to aid him in getting a start he has reached a position of independence and prestige.

The birthplace of Mr. Roberts was in the town of Nauvoo, Ill., once the stronghold of the Mormons and the headquarters of Joseph Smith. One of the elders of the Mormon Church at Nauvoo was Calvin A. Beebe, who witnessed many of the exciting scenes connected with the history of the church in Hancock county. After the killing of Smith and the expulsion of the Mormons from Illinois, Mr. Beebe started westward with Brigham Young, intending to follow the Mormons to their new home. However, he became disgusted with some of Young's methods and accordingly returned to Illinois, where he and his wife remained until death. Among their children was a daughter, Harriet, who was born in Sandusky, Ohio, and in young womanhood became the wife of Nathaniel R. Roberts, a native of Maine, but about 1862 an emigrant to Hancock county, Ill., where he followed the stonemason's trade. While living there his son, Frederick H., was born January 27, 1865. In 1874 the family came to California and made a brief sojourn near Bakersfield, but in the spring of 1875 came by team to San Diego county, passing through Los Angeles, then merely a hamlet of insignificant proportions. After his arrival in the San Pasqual valley the father bought a claim and embarked in ranch pursuits, remaining on the farm until his death, September 4, 1902, at the age of seventy-two years. The mother did not long survive him, her death occurring in February, 1904, at the age of sixty-nine years.

When the family came to California Frederick H. Roberts was a lad of nine years, and afterward he attended the schools of San Diego county, also took a course of study in Healdsburg College. At the age of twenty-one years he bought one hundred acres in the Escondido valley and subsequently he there located the gold mines, which in the spring of 1900 he sold, together with the land, to the Orofino Mining Company. Immediately afterward he bought four hundred acres near Escondido and erected the elegant country house now occupied by his family. The ranch possesses especial interest because it is the site of the San Pasqual battle. Formerly Mr. Roberts acted as a director of the Escondido irrigation district and at this writing he fills the office of school director. Though a Democrat in national affairs, locally he votes for those whom he considers best qualified to promote the welfare of the people. His marriage was solemnized in San Diego November 1, 1892, and united him with Mrs. Elizabeth Judson Hardy, who was reared in California and has many friends in San Diego county. In religion she is identified with the Advent Church, and her children, Charles Henry, George Beebe and Helen, are being trained in Christian doctrines and kindly deeds. The sketch of her father, J. B. Judson, gives the family history and appears elsewhere in this volume.

LORENZO DOW TWEEDY. The Tweedy family, represented in California by several pioneers, among whom is Lorenzo Dow Tweedy, is of English extraction, the immigrating ancestor having located in Alabama in the early part of the nineteenth century. Later members removed to Missouri, where occurred the birth of Robert Tweedy, who became in young manhood a farmer and merchant. He married Mary Holyfield, a native of South Carolina, the two later establishing their home in Arkansas. Attracted to the west by the glowing reports of the California gold fields, Mr. Tweedy outfitted with ox-teams and necessary provisions and equipment, and in 1852 with his wife and children began the perilous journey across the plains. Several months later they reached California in safety and located at the Twenty-six Mile House, near Stockton, where they spent the ensuing year. In 1853 they came to Los Angeles county and engaged in farming and stock-raising for a time, when Mr. Tweedy established a store in San Bernardino and conducted the same successfully until 1857. Returning to Los Angeles county he purchased a large tract of land, known as the Tweedy ranch and for many years engaged in its cultivation and improvement. Some years prior to his death (which occurred upon the ranch) he leased the land for farming and stock-raising purposes. He is survived by his wife, who is now in her eighty-seventh year. She makes her home upon the ranch with her daughter. She is the mother of seven sons and one daughter, the fourth in order of birth being Lorenzo Dow Tweedy, whose birth occurred in Conway, Ark., October 2, 1850.

But two years old when he was brought to California by his parents, practically the entire life of L. Dow Tweedy has been passed in this state. His education was received in the common schools of Los Angeles county, and at the same time he received a practical training along agricultural lines. In young manhood he took up the work in which he had been so thoroughly trained, devoting his time principally to the cultivation of fruit in the country adjacent to Rivera and Downey. He has met with success in his work and acquired considerable property, now owning three hundred acres of land near Downey; twenty acres of this is devoted to English walnuts, while the balance is largely given over to the cultivation of alfalfa and garden vegetables. For several years the family made their home in Long Beach, where Mr. Tweedy was prominent in public affairs, but they are now living in their new home on the ranch near Downey. Mr. Tweedy is a member of the First Baptist Church of Long Beach, and is a liberal contributor to all its charities. Politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

In Downey, in 1874, Mr. Tweedy was united in marriage with Emily Stanley, a native of Arkansas, and born of this union are four sons and three daughters, as follows: Eugene E., Louis L., Angie E., H. Burtis, L. Dow, Jr., Vieva V. and Alma L. The Tweedy family are known throughout Southern California and held in the highest esteem for their qualities of citizenship; they have built up positions of financial independence for themselves and at the same time have become citizens of prominence and worth. Personally L. Dow Tweedy is a man of broad character, is liberal minded and enterprising, and can always be counted upon to further any movement advanced for the benefit of the general community.

HON. FRANK WILES BARNES. The collector of customs for the port of San Diego is a descendant of ancestors who came from Holland to America during the colonial epoch of our national history and settled on Long Island near the present site of Flushing. After becoming identified with American colonization the original family name of Barness was changed to its present form by the dropping of the final "s." The genealogical records show that from Long Island certain members of the family drifted to Dutchess county, N. Y., while that region was still a forest primeval. During the Revolutionary war William Barnes laid aside his plow and shouldered a rifle, with which he went to the front and served in the patriotic army. A son of this Revolutionary soldier, Josuah, of Dutchess county, was the father of Capt. Henry M. Barnes, who was a supervisor of Dutchess county, a farmer near Poughkeepsie and a member of the state militia. It was he who established the family in the further west, when he settled on a bleak prairie farm in Madison county, Neb., and took up the task of transforming a raw tract into a fertile farm. At the time of his arrival the county had not been organized and little attempt had been made to build up towns or develop farms, but in the years that elapsed between his arrival and his death he witnessed the gradual improvement of that section of country and himself contributed thereto.

While still living in the east Captain Barnes married Sallie Ann Lockwood, who was born and reared in Dutchess county, the daughter of an eastern farmer and the granddaughter of a Revolutionary soldier. Spared to a venerable age, she passed away at eighty-nine years in New York. Of her five children four are living, of whom F. W., the youngest, is the only one to settle in California. Born on the home farm in Dutchess county, N. Y., September 10, 1850, he was a youth of sixteen years when the family removed to Nebraska, and there he took a high school course. After having studied civil engineering under a preceptor he became deputy United States land surveyor, later served for one term as county surveyor and one term as county judge. In 1870 he entered the land and laid out the village of Madison, which became the county seat of Madison county, Neb., and in 1874 he organized the Madison County Savings Bank, the first institution of its kind in the county. By a re-organization in 1885 he established the First National Bank of Madison, of which he acted as vice-president and with which he is still identified. The city which he had platted and founded always commanded his aid and influence. Movements for its permanent upbuilding received his stanch support. For many years he served as its mayor, in which position he used his influence for the development of local enterprises. At the time of the building of the branch railroad from Columbus to Madison he donated ten acres as site for a depot and grounds. In 1883 he aided in the establishment of the Northern Nebraska Normal at Madison and was chosen chairman of its board of trustees, a responsible position in which he displayed tact, energy and keen sagacity, besides all of his other interests he owned land near town and engaged in the stock business.

An arduous and long-continued devotion to the demands of his business interests undermined the health of Mr. Barnes, who was therefore obliged to seek a more genial climate and an occupation permitting of considerable outdoor exercise. These reasons constrained him to remove to California, and in 1886 he settled at the present site of Pacific Beach, where he planted a lemon orchard and carried on a packing house. By the gradual purchase of adjoining tracts he acquired seventy acres, but in time all of this land was laid out as Pacific Beach. In the fall of 1890 he came to San Diego, where later he was one of the organizers of the Security Savings Bank and the San Diego Title and Abstract Company. Both in San Diego and Lajolla he has acquired property holdings of considerable value.

For two terms Mr. Barnes was president of the city council. In 1900, on the Republican ticket, he was elected to represent the Seventy-ninth legislative district in the lower house of the state legislature, his majority being more than one thousand. During that term he served as chairman of the committee on banks and banking and a member of the committees on irrigation and public buildings and grounds. At the expiration of his first term he was again elected to the legislature, and during the session following he served as chairman of the committee on public buildings and grounds, also as a member of the committees on public printing and banks and banking. Elected for a third term in 1904, he was honored with the chairmanship of the committee on public buildings and grounds, and served on three committees as a member, viz.: banks and banking, revenue and taxation, and commerce and navigation. After a long and honorable service as the people's representative in the halls of legislature, he resigned February 1, 1906, in order to accept the appointment as collector of customs for the port of San Diego, tendered him by President Roosevelt. When first nominated for the legislature it was on a platform favoring an appropriation to complete the state normal school building. Such a bill was passed in 1901 but vetoed, but was again passed in 1903, duly signed, and the building completed, and in 1905 an additional appropriation was granted for the improving of the grounds. In 1903 he gave his support to United States Senator Perkins and in 1905 voted for United States Senator Flint. In addition to his many other helpful services to his party he has been frequently a delegate to local and state conventions, and there, as in every other circumstance and surrounding, he has given his voice and vote toward measures of undoubted value to his county and state.

The marriage of Mr. Barnes took place at Madison, Neb., and united him with Miss Phoebe, daughter of Michael Bauch, who in 1870 established his home among the pioneers of Madison county, Neb., having previously made his home in Kankakee county, Ill. (her native locality). Three children comprise the family of Mr. and Mrs. Barnes. The older son, Edward Y., is a graduate of the Northern Nebraska Normal School at Madison and is now junior member of the Doyle-Barnes Company. The second son, Theodore L., graduated as a mining engineer from the University of California and is now superintendent of mines in Lower California. The only daughter, Mary Ruth, is a graduate of Leland Standford University. The family hold membership in the Presbyterian Church and Mr. Barnes officiates as an elder of his congregation. The San Diego Chamber of Commerce has long numbered him among its leading members and active workers. Since coming to this present home town he has become identified with Masonry through membership in San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M., and is further allied with the chapter and commandery at San Diego and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles.

JOSEPH A. COLE. The name of Cole is synonymous with progress and development in the vicinity of Downey, for it was in this section of Southern California that the immigrating pioneer first located at a time when there was no promise of future productiveness to induce settlement here. This ancestor was George W. Cole, the father of Joseph A., whose name appears at the head of this article. For more complete details concerning his life refer to his biography, which appears on another page of this volume.

MARY KOHLER HERMAN KOHLER

The seventh child in order of birth in the family of his parents Joseph A. Cole was born December 10, 1865, near Downey, Los Angeles county, Cal., on his father's farm, and in that vicinity attended the public schools until he was ten years old, when his parents located on a ranch near Whittier. He became a student in the Los Nietos schools and completed the course, after which he prepared to enter upon the work for which he had been so thoroughly trained. Prosperity followed his efforts and he soon became known throughout this part of the county as an enterprising and progressive rancher, fully in touch with all modern methods and improvements, and intent upon advancing the best interests of the business he follows. He owns considerable property, forty acres of the old Cole homestead now belonging to him and being fully improved with all modern buildings (among them a beautiful residence in which he makes his home), and substantial barns adequate for the protection of stock and machinery. He also owns a walnut orchard of twenty acres near his home, and twenty acres in the frostless belt of La Habra valley, which is very productive for the raising of vegetables throughout the entire year. Mr. Cole belongs to the Los Nietos and Ranchito Walnut Growers' Association, one of the oldest associations of its kind in the world, and is serving as a director in the same.

Mr. Cole was married to Nola L. Landreth, one of the prominent ladies of Whittier, who was educated in Whittier College. Their union has been blessed by the birth of two sons, Roy Kenneth and Cawthern Chester. In his political affiliations Mr. Cole is a Democrat.

HERMAN KOHLER. From Germany the United States receives some of her best and most enterprising citizens. Herman Kohler, one of the most highly respected ranchmen in Ventura county, was born October 6, 1853, at Brailingen, Burgdorf, Germany, the son of Henry and Mary (Gerke) Kohler, both natives of Germany, where they died several years ago. They were the parents of ten children, nine of whom are living and two of whom have homes in California.

Herman Kohler received his education in the public schools of his native country, and was also married there at Shernbustel, in 1875, his wife being Mary, a daughter of Henry and Sophia Boedeker. The parents of both Mr. and Mrs. Kohler were farmers and so it was but natural that the younger generation should follow the same calling. They remained in the old country until 1883, when, attracted by the opportunities offered to ambitious young people in this new country, they immigrated to America, coming to Ventura county, Cal., where Mr. Kohler located on a ranch and engaged in farming and stock-raising. As he had only $50 when he arrived it was necessary for him to work by the month for a short time and he was in the employ of Anton Maulhardt until the opportunity presented itself to rent a farm. By careful management and the employment of good business methods he was soon able to buy a place of his own and now owns two hundred acres of land located two and a half miles from Hueneme on the Conejo road. He has seventy acres planted to beets, the remainder being devoted to beans and hay. The property is very finely improved with modern buildings and all necessary appliances and Mr. Kohler may well be proud of the success he has achieved.

Politically Mr. Kohler affiliates with the Democratic party. There are three children in his family, Otto, Albert and Louis, and both parents are members of the Lutheran Church at Oxnard. In 1904 Mr. and Mrs. Kohler attended the World's Fair at St. Louis and also returned to Europe for a visit at the old home and other points of interest in Germany. They were absent three months and enjoyed their well-earned outing.

FRANK L. TROXEL. A wide-awake, keen-sighted, enterprising business man, Frank L. Troxel, of Fernando, is prominently identified with one of the leading industries of Southern California, and as manager for the Stewart Fruit Company of Los Angeles is carrying on a flourishing business. He is an expert horticulturist and fruit grower, and owns and occupies a finely improved ranch, situated a mile and a half west of Fernando. He was born February 5, 1864, in Seneca county, Ohio, but was reared and educated in St. Joseph, Mo., whither his parents removed when he was but a year old.

Brought up on a farm, Mr. Troxel became familiarly acquainted with the various branches of agriculture while young, and until after attaining his majority was engaged in farming in Missouri. Migrating then to the Pacific coast, he settled in Elmira, Solano county, Cal., where he was for two years engaged in the culture of fruit. Going then to Placer county, he was in business at Auburn for two years, and from that time until 1901 was associated with the development of the fruit industry, residing during the summer seasons in Sacramento, and making Los Angeles his headquarters winters. Purchasing ten acres of land in Fernando in 1901 he at once erected a fine residence, and has made other improvements of an excellent character, his home estate being one of the best in its appointments of any in the neighborhood. In 1906 he added seven acres of adjoining land to his ranch. Ten acres of the estate is in walnuts and the balance in oranges. In addition to caring for his own ranch Mr. Troxel is now manager for the Stewart Fruit Company of Los Angeles, having control of the Fernando district, and in this capacity is meeting with undisputed success. This company owns four hundred acres of land, the greater part of which is devoted to the raising of oranges, although lemons are raised to some extent.

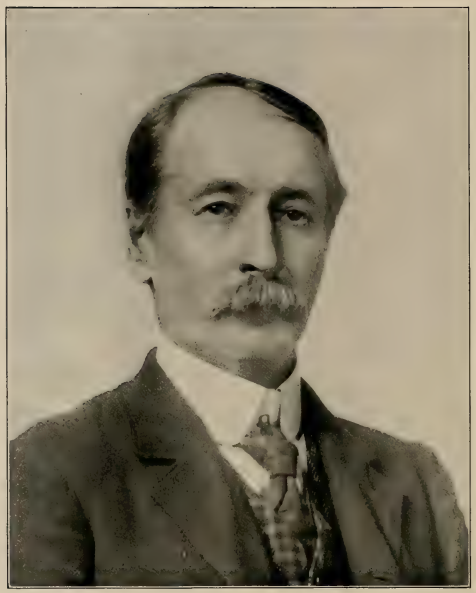
In Missouri Mr. Troxel married Louie Cooper, who died in Auburn, Cal., leaving one child, Clayton C. Troxel. Mr. Troxel married for his second wife Ella Eslick, a native-born Californian. Politically he is an earnest supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member and the treasurer of Fernando Lodge No. 343, F. & A. M., is a Scottish Rite Thirty-second Degree Mason, belonging to Al Malaikan Temple, A. A. O. U. M. S., and a member and past officer of Fernando Lodge No. 365, I. O. O. F. Both Mr. and Mrs. Troxel attend the Presbyterian Church, and are willing contributors towards its support.



JOHN HUGH BARCLAY. One of the influential and successful business men of Fernando is John Hugh Barclay, a real estate dealer and insurance agent, who, as justice of the peace, is actively associated with the administration of public affairs. He is well known throughout this section of the county, and is held in respect as a man of integrity, faithful and trustworthy in every relation of life. The earliest recollections of Mr. Barclay are of a modest home in the town of London, province of Ontario, Canada, where his birth occurred November 20, 1844, and where he spent his early life.

After graduating from the London high school, John H. Barclay learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in his native province for about ten years. His health failing, he came to California in 1869, hoping in this land of sunshine to recover his natural physical vigor. After spending a year in San Luis Obispo county, and about one-half that length of time in Marysville, he located in Los Angeles county, and for a number of seasons was engaged in the hotel business, first at Wilmington, and then in Los Angeles. Coming then to Fernando, he subsequently entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, which he served as a bridge and tunnel carpenter from 1886 until 1896. Resigning his position in the latter-named year he has since carried on a prosperous business as a fire and life insurance agent and a dealer in real estate, and has become the owner of valuable property in town and county. He has been prominent in local matters, and since 1894 has served most acceptably to all as justice of the peace, his decisions being invariably fair and just.

In 1878, in Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Barclay married Ellen Collins, a native of Canada, and they have two children, namely: Richard J., of Los Angeles; and Margaret J., living at home. Politically Mr. Barclay is a zealous supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member of Fernando Lodge No. 343, F. & A. M., and a member and past officer of Fernando Lodge No. 365, I. O. O. F.

JACOB HARPS. One of the active, prominent and enterprising residents of Fernando is Jacob Harps, who has ably performed his full share in promoting and advancing the upbuilding and growth of the village in which he lives, his contributions in this line being fully recognized and appreciated by his fellow-citizens. A man of excellent judgment and fine business capacity, he has labored earnestly and wisely, and his fortune has grown with the town and county. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born, April 24, 1849, in Mercer county, where he received his education, remaining there until twenty years of age.

Learning the trade of bridge building when young, Mr. Harps worked for wages for a few years, after which he started in business for himself, taking contracts for building railroad and county bridges. He was subsequently for four years road superintendent for the Smith Bridge Company of Toledo, Ohio. Leaving that city in 1872, he located in San Francisco, and the ensuing two years was superintendent for the Pacific Bridge Company. From 1874 until 1876 he was engaged as a contractor in San Francisco. Giving up that business then, he came to Los Angeles county, settling about three miles east of Fernando. Buying a tract of wild land, he cleared and improved a ranch, and for twelve years was there successfully employed in raising small fruits and bees. Moving then into the village, he opened the first lumber yard in the community, and for ten years carried on a substantial business as a lumber manufacturer and dealer. Disposing of his interests in that line, he spent the next two years in Klondike, making two trips to that region. Since that time he has lived practically retired for active pursuits, although he devotes some time to the raising of poultry, supplying to some extent the local markets with eggs and chickens, having a well-appointed and finely equipped poultry yard. He erected a handsome residence in the village, and also built a substantial block, known as Harps' hall, in which are office rooms, a store and a good auditorium.

Jasper N. Conner

In California, in 1876, Mr. Harps married Lillian Nickerson, who was born in this state, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Beulah, wife of J. O. Jenifer, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; Clarence, who is employed in the signal service department of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; and Harry, who is employed in the surveying department of the Santa Fe Railroad Company. Politically Mr. Harps is a sound Democrat, but has never been an aspirant for public honors, having held no office excepting that of school director. Fraternally he is a member of Fernando Lodge No. 343, F. & A. M. He belongs to no religious organization, but contributes towards the support of the Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Harps is a consistent member.

JASPER NEWTON CONNER. One of the many worthy citizens and capable and industrious agriculturists of Los Angeles county, Jasper Newton Conner is prosperously engaged in his independent occupation at Fernando. He has had a varied and busy career, during which he has pursued the even tenor of his way as an honest, hard-working man, ever advancing the interests of his community as opportunity offered, and wherever he has resided has enjoyed the respect and esteem of his neighbors and friends. A son of Richard Conner, he was born, January 1, 1854, at Mount Vernon, Ohio. His grandfather, Robert Conner, a native of West Virginia, moved from there to Ohio with the early pioneers, cleared and improved a farm, and afterwards settled in Knoxville, Ill., where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death.

Born and reared in Ohio, Richard Conner was first engaged in farming in his native state, and was subsequently similarly employed in Knox county, Ill., having a farm near Knoxville. He moved from there to Missouri, and spent the closing years of his life in Kansas City. He married Cynthia Furgeson, who was born of Scotch ancestors in Ohio, and is now residing in Fernando, with her son Jasper. She is a most estimable woman, and a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She bore her husband nine children, seven of whom are living, Jasper N. being the fourth in order of birth.

But a child when the family removed to Illinois, Jasper N. Conner was brought up on a farm, obtaining a practical education in the district schools and remaining at home until becoming of age. Starting life for himself in 1875, he went to the Black Hills, where he was engaged for about a year in mining, when, on account of the frequent raids of the Indians on lone miners, he left that region, going to Butte City, Mont. After mining in that locality for a short time he purchased horses and wagons and engaged in freighting on a large scale, running ten four-horse wagons, keeping forty of his forty-six horses working every day. He carried freight from the Anaconda and Garrison mines, hauling ten thousand pounds to a team, averaging four loads a day, and many days, receiving $1 a ton for freighting, made $200 a day. In addition to this work, he was also engaged to some extent in mining and prospecting, discovering two good mines, the Bluebird and the Black Rock, both of which he sold. The railway companies laying tracks to the mines in 1893, Mr. Conner sold his freighting outfit and located at Great Falls, Mont., where he purchased six hundred and eighty acres of land, on which he was engaged in farming and stock raising for two years.

In 1895, on account of the ill health of his wife and children, Mr. Conner sold his Montana farm and came to California, locating in Fernando, where he continued as a tiller of the soil for two years. In February, 1898, he went to Alaska on a prospecting trip, going up Copper river, and up to the divide. He found some of the largest copper deposits known, but would not locate claims on account of the dangers incurred in getting to them, the fording of deep rivers and rough rides over precipices and chasms being exceedingly risky, so much so that he wondered that he got out alive. In 1900 he returned to Fernando, glad enough to be back in "God's own country." He has since resided in this place, owning his home, but is engaged in farming just outside the city, renting land, which he is carrying on successfully.

In Lacygne, Kans., Mr. Conner married Mary Kendall, who was born in Kansas, a daughter of David Kendall, a soldier in the Civil war. She had a frail, delicate constitution, and it was hoped that the genial climate of California might prove of great benefit to her health, but the family were doomed to disappointment, her death occurring in Fernando in November, 1896. Four children were born to them, and these, too, have passed to the higher life, Daphine and Dallas dying in this city, Pearl passing away in Montana, and Walter dying at Colorado Springs. Although Mr. Conner devoted himself to the care of his family, sparing neither time nor expense in trying to alleviate their sufferings, that dread disease, consumption, proved fatal to his wife and children. For a second wife he married in February, 1904, in Fernando, Helen Wisner, a native of Iowa, but a resident of California since 1902; by this marriage one child, Daphine, has been born. In national affairs Mr. Conner invariably supports the principles of the Democratic party, but in local matters he supports the best men and measures. He is a man of sterling character, honest and upright in his dealings, and is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HON. CHARLES MACLAY. Conspicuous among the pioneer Methodist preachers of California was the late Hon. Charles Maclay, who came to the Pacific coast in 1851, and for many years thereafter was actively engaged in religious work, proclaiming glad tidings of great joy to multitudes of people. A man of strong personality and much force of character, he toiled with faithful zeal in his Master's vineyard, his conscientious labors being legitimately rewarded by the establishment of numerous churches and the conversion of many souls to the true Christian faith. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born, November 9, 1822, in Concord, Franklin county, where he was brought up and educated. Of a deeply religious nature, he early determined to devote himself to the special work of spreading the gospel, and in 1844 joined the Baltimore Conference. Soon afterward when Bishop Bowman founded the Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, Pa., he was appointed its agent and was also licensed to preach.

Coming by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California in 1851, Mr. Maclay began his labors as a preacher in that city, and was subsequently very active in denominational circles, presiding at the first Methodist Episcopal Conference held in the state, and being influential in the founding of the California Christian Advocate. Subsequently removing to Santa Clara, he built the first Protestant church erected in that city and was practically one of the founders of the town. He was very popular with the general public, being elected as one of the trustees of the first college established on the Pacific coast, and as a loyal and patriotic citizen he rendered appreciated service as a member of the vigilance committee. In local affairs he took a prominent place, and it was largely through his efforts that the state purchased land and built the old toll road between Santa Clara and Santa Cruz. He served two terms as representative to the state legislature, to which he was elected in 1861 and 1862, and from 1864 until 1868 was a member of the senate. While in the legislature he was instrumental in having a state normal school located at San Jose, and in having passed the bill, under the old constitution, exempting church and school properties from taxation. He was always among the foremost in the inauguration of state improvements, giving freely of his time and money to promote beneficial movements, and especially while a resident of both San Francisco and Santa Clara was his influence apparent.

Coming to Fernando in 1873, Mr. Maclay, with two other men, purchased the north half of the Fernando ranch, which consisted of fifty-six thousand two hundred and seventy-six acres of land, with scarce any improvements, paying the sum of $40,000 for it. The partnership being dissolved in 1881, he took as his third of the property the land lying east of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and north of Pacoima, and this he soon afterward put on the market. In 1885 he established and endowed the Maclay chair and theology in Fernando College, in which the appointment of the faculty was subject to the bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The cornerstone of the college building was laid in 1888, but after a few years the school and the chairs were moved to Los Angeles, being merged with the University of Southern California. The college building is now owned by the Seven Day Adventists, who use it for educational purposes.

March 2, 1851, Mr. Maclay married Kate P. Lloyd, who was born at Williamsport, Pa., and into their household six children were born, namely: Thomas Lloyd, who died at the age of fourteen years; Arabella, who is the widow of the late A. B. Moffitt, and resides in San Francisco; Robert Holmes, of whom a brief sketch may be found on another page of this volume; Mary, of Fernando, the widow of the late H. W. Griswold; Kate Paxton, wife of H. C. Hubbard, of Fernando, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; and Josephine Lloyd, wife of T. J. Walker, of Fernando. When Mr. and Mrs. Maclay came with their family to Fernando there was no church of their denomination in this part of the county, but largely through the strenuous efforts of this godly couple a Methodist Episcopal Church was erected, and for a time Mr. Maclay saw to it that the building was well cared for. They were truly generous, hospitable people, keeping open house for both strangers and friends, and often having it filled to overflowing with ministers, laymen and politicians. They were Christians in the highest and best sense implied by the term, benevolent and charitable, and in their every day life were guided by the highest moral principles. Both have passed to the bright world beyond, the death of Mr. Maclay having occurred at his home in Fernando, July 19, 1890, and that of Mrs. Maclay, July 2, 1898. Their deaths were a loss to the entire community, and were mourned by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. Politically Mr. Maclay was a stanch Republican, and during the second election of Abraham Lincoln to the presidency his name was on the state electoral ticket. Fraternally he was made a Mason when young.

A. Connelly

ARCHIE CONNELLY. A pioneer settler and a veteran of the harvest fields, Archie Connelly is one of the best known and most highly esteemed men of Ventura county, distinguished for his honesty, integrity, industry and kindheartedness. The owner of two valuable ranches, he gives close attention to the development and improvement of his land, and in his agricultural labors is meeting with noteworthy success. He is prudent in the management of his affairs, strictly honorable in his dealings, and is recognized by his fellow-men as a true and loyal citizen of his adopted country. A native of Ireland, he was born March 10, 1845, in County Monaghan, being one of the seven children of Owen and Ann (Duffy) Connelly, who were life-long residents of the Emerald Isle. One of his brothers resides in California, and one of them is now living in Ireland, occupying the farm on which his great-grandfather spent the larger part of his long life.

Beginning the battle of life for himself when a lad of eleven years, Archie Connelly spent some time in Scotland and England, working at any honorable employment. Not satisfied with his future prospects on British soil, he immigrated to the United States at the age of eighteen years, and for the next two and one-half years worked at the trade of a stone and brick mason in New York City. Going then to New Jersey, he was employed on a farm for several seasons, there acquiring a fair knowledge of general farming as carried on in the Atlantic states. In 1869 he came to California, locating first as a ranchman in Sonoma county, later going to Contra Costa county, where he remained about a year. Coming then to Ventura county, he worked for James Leonard for three years, receiving good wages. Wise in his expenditures, he accumulated quite a sum of money, and with it in 1876 purchased his home ranch, lying near Oxnard, and has since been here profitably engaged in the cultivation of beets and beans, two of the best crops that can be raised in this part of the county, the land hereabout yielding on an average twenty sacks of beans to the acre. He has also acquired other property of value, owning three hundred acres of land in the Conejo valley, upon which he raises large quantities of hay, wheat and barley.

In 1877 Mr. Connelly married Lizzie Kline, a native of Ireland, their marriage being solemnized in Ventura county. Thirteen children were born of this marriage, three of whom have passed to the life beyond. Those living are as follows: John T. of Los Angeles county, Annie, Mary K., Joseph, Frank, James, Peter, Charles, Thomas and Raymond. Mrs. Connelly died on the home farm in 1899, at the comparatively early age of forty years. Politically Mr. Connelly is a Democrat in national affairs; fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Columbus; and religiously he and his family are members of the Catholic Church.

IRA EZRA MILLS. One of the most enterprising men of Crafton is Ira Ezra Mills, whose residence is located in Crafton, at the corner of Fourth avenue and E street. His attention is given over to horticultural pursuits in the vicinity, where he located in 1890, and since that time he has accomplished notable results in this line of work. Born in New Haven, Vt., June 7, 1867, he is the representative of an old and honored New England family; his father, Ira, and grandfather, Ralph, were both natives of that state, where they engaged in farming throughout their entire lives. Ira Mills served as a musician in the Civil war, as a member of Company B, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry. His death occurred in 1867, being survived until 1873 by his wife, formerly Adelaide Gulley, a native of Addison, Vt., and daughter of Erasmus Gulley, a farmer.

The only child of his parents, Ira Ezra Mills was orphaned at the age of six years. He was reared on the home farm and received a preliminary education in the district school, after which he completed the course by two terms at Beeman Academy. In July, 1888, he came to California and in Los Angeles secured a position as conductor on the Central avenue street-car line. He remained in this work for two years, when he came to Crafton November 14, 1890, and began horticultural pursuits the same year. He purchased the property which he now owns located at the corner of Fourth avenue and E street, then raw land, began improvements, and set out an orange grove and since that time has devoted himself to that interest. He has finely improved his place by the building of a fine residence, cement flumes, barns and outbuildings, and in the meantime has also become the owner of twenty acres devoted to navel and valencia oranges, located at E and Citrus streets, also five acres corner of Crafton street and Highland avenue. He has demonstrated his ability in this work and has set out about forty acres of orange groves for others in this section.

In Crafton, January 31, 1894, Mr. Mills was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Johnson, a native of California, whose birth occurred in Port Harford, San Louis Obispo county. She was the eldest of four children born to her parents, N. A. and Kittie (Upchurch) Johnson, the others being Nathan R., Mabel and Charles J. Her father was a native of New York from which state he enlisted in Sixteenth Battery New York Artillery, for service in the Civil war. His father, Solomon Johnson, was born in Greene, N. Y., a son of Barent, whose ancestors, Hollanders, had made their home in New Jersey, emigrating thither about the year 1700. Solomon Johnson became a farmer in Greene, Chenango county, where his death eventually occurred. He married Hannah Jane Reynolds, a native of New York, where her death also occurred. Nathan A. was their only child, his birth occurring March 11, 1845. He was reared on the home farm and educated in the district school. He volunteered in 1862 and served in Virginia and North Carolina, for the greater part of the time acting as clerk of the battery. After the close of the war he was mustered out at Elmira, N. Y., in July, 1865, after which he attended school during the following winter, and then going to Omaha, Neb., joined a government expedition to lay out a direct road from Sioux City, Iowa, to Virginia City, Mont., whence he came on to San Francisco via Portland. In old Sonoma he engaged at farm work until 1868, when he came to San Luis Obispo county and there followed general farming and stock-raising for about twenty years, and for a number of years managed a lumber yard in Port Harford. Removing to Palm Springs, San Bernardino county, in 1888, he spent one winter there, and then came to Crafton, where he set out an orange grove at the corner of Citrus avenue and Crafton. He then sold and purchased his present property which is all in navel oranges. He is a member of the Crafton Orange Growers' Association and is director in same, is a member of the Redlands Board of Trade, and active in the advancement of his adopted city. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Paso Robles and is now identified with Redlands Lodge No. 300, F. & A. M. Politically he is a stanch Republican. He was married in San Luis Obispo county to Miss Kittie Upchurch, who was born August 30, 1853, near Nevada City, Cal., while her parents were en route to California over the old wagon road across the plains, and was reared in Napa county. Her father, Richard D. Upchurch, was a native of North Carolina, and his ancestors were active participants in the Revolutionary war, being engaged in most of the skirmishes and battles which were fought in the southern states.

Mr. and Mrs. Mills became the parents of the following children: Raymond, Karl, Herbert, Maude, Frank and May. Mr. Mills is a director, president and manager of the Crafton Orange Growers' Association, of which he was one of the organizers, and in the building of the packing house of this concern was one of the most potent factors. He is also interested in the Crafton Water Company, is a member of the Redlands Board of Trade, and for years has served as a member of the Board of Education of the Redlands district. Politically he is a stanch Democrat and is an ex-member of the County Central Committee. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America, while his wife is associated with the Order of Eastern Star, Ladies of the Maccabees and the Women's Relief Corps. Mr. Mills is a thoroughly liberal and enterprising citizen, public-spirited and progressive, actively interested in the development and upbuilding of Southern California.

BERNARDO FELIPE ROWLAND. Three generations of the Rowland family have contributed to the well-being and upbuilding of Southern California, the first of the name to locate here being the grandfather, John Rowland. An Englishman by birth and training, he learned the miller's trade in his native country and followed it there some time before coming to America. On coming to the new world he went direct to Taos, Mexico, where he engaged in millwrighting and also in the milling business until 1840, when he came to California. Locating at Puente, Los Angeles county, he erected the first mill in this entire section of country, and manufactured all of the flour used in the country round about for many miles. In partnership with Mr. Workman he bought La Puente rancho, which consisted of forty-eight thousand acres, upon which for years they were associated in raising stock, making a specialty of horses and cattle. Mr. Rowland was also the first one to erect a brick building in this country, this being his own residence, which was completed in 1855, and is now the property of J. W. Hudson, of Puente. The death of John Rowland in Puente at the age of eighty-two years removed from the community one whose influence had been far-reaching and invaluable to both county and state.

No less influential and notable was the son of this old settler, Thomas Rowland, who was born in Taos, Mexico, in 1838, and was a child of only two years when brought by his parents to Los Angeles county in 1840. He too became a large land owner, at the time of his death owning twenty-four hundred and thirty-nine acres on La Puente rancho, one of the most valuable and remunerative stock ranches in Southern California. Like his father he was a broad-minded and influential citizen, entering heart and soul into any enterprise whose object was toward the betterment of conditions or that would uplift or assist his fellowman. This latter characteristic was nowhere more distinctly brought out than in the enthusiasm he displayed along educational lines. He not only built up the Rowland school, but was an important factor in the erection and maintenance of the schools at Lemon and also the one at Puente mill. He was indeed a valuable citizen in his community, and his death in 1900, at the age of sixty-three, was mourned as a public loss. Politically he was a believer in Democratic principles. His wife was before her marriage Senobia Yorba, who was born in Yorba, Orange county, Cal., the daughter of Bernardo Yorba, a native of Castile, Spain. He was the owner of the well-known Yorba rancho in the vicinity of Fullerton, and there his death occurred. Mrs. Rowland passed away at the comparatively early age of forty-nine years, in 1892. Eleven children were born to this worthy couple, all of whom are still living, those besides Bernard Felipe being as follows: Samuel P., a rancher at Puente; Thomas, who is engaged in the butcher business in Los Angeles; Fidel, an engineer in Puente; Aurelia, Mrs. Vejar, of Pomona; Ernest, David and Alejandro, all of whom are farmers near Puente; Albertina, who also resides in Puente; Alesandro, an engineer in Los Angeles; and John B., who is a resident of the city of Mexico.

Bernardo F. Rowland was born on the parental homestead in Los Angeles county, May 19, 1864, and was reared to a practical knowledge of farm duties. He was educated in the Rowland school, which was named in honor of his father, who gave three-quarters of an acre from his ranch for the school site. Subsequently he matriculated in St. Vincent's College, in Los Angeles, and after his graduation therefrom returned to the home locality and took up farming and stock-raising. His grandfather had been the pioneer miller in this part of the country, and his father bore the distinction of building the first school house, but it was left for him to sink the first deep well in the valley. His initial venture in this line was in 1898, at which time he sunk the well at the east end of his ranch. This well has a depth of two hundred and fifty feet, the water being pumped by means of a forty horse-power gas engine. From this pumping plant water is furnished to about four hundred acres of the Rowland tract, besides which the Rowland ditch, which is under the management of the Puete Irrigation Association, waters about two hundred acres of the ranch. The pumping plant is owned by the Thomas Rowland heirs, after whose death his son Bernardo, who was administrator of the estate, apportioned the ranch among the children. The family also own a stock ranch of six hundred and sixteen acres in the hills. Mr. Rowland's portion of the old homestead lies on Walnut street, where he has ten acres in walnuts, besides thirty acres at the pumping plants also in walnuts. To him belongs the distinction of setting out the first strawberries in the valley, a fruit which up to that time had not been grown successfully outside of Tropico and Gardena. He has made a careful study of this particular fruit and can now produce a better quality than is obtainable in either of the aforementioned cities. In consequence his trade in this commodity has grown to large proportions, his entire crop of strawberries being marketed in Pomona, Riverside and Colton. He also owns an eight acre ranch south of the railroad which is also in strawberries and walnuts.

In Los Angeles Mr. Rowland was married to Miss Caroline Sanchez, who is a native of the same city. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Foresters, and politically he is a Democrat, and at one time was a member of the county central committee of his party. Like his father he is deeply interested in educational affairs, and has done much to continue the good work inaugurated by his father. At this writing he is school trustee and clerk of the board of Rowland district. Throughout this part of the state there is probably no other one family that has contributed more largely to its well-being than have the Rowlands, grandfather, father and son, the accomplishments of the latter comparing favorably with either of his predecessors. He is a man of pleasing personality, which is equal to saying that he is popular and well liked by all who are fortunate enough to know him.

REUBEN W. HILL, M. D., was born November 27, 1845, in Arlington, Bennington county, Vt., the native state of both his father, Abner Hill, and his mother, who before her marriage was Marian Webb. There were eight children born to them, three of whom still survive, a son and daughter who are residents of the east, and Reuben W., of Carpinteria. The father died in Salem, N. Y., at sixty years of age, the mother having died at the early age of thirty-eight years. The elder Hill was a Whig in politics, was captain of the militia company and lived as a neighbor to Ethan Allen at one time. Reuben W. Hill received his early education in the schools at Salem, after which he attended the Salem Washington Academy for his preparatory work and received his medical degree from Belleview Hospital Medical College. His determination to thoroughly prepare himself for his profession induced him to spend ten years for that purpose, and his later success as a practitioner is due to his thorough knowledge of the medical science.

In 1876 Dr. Hill located in Santa Barbara county, practicing here for two years, then went to Ventura, where he remained nineteen years, building up in that time a large and lucrative practice. His fine education, as well as professional ability, enabled him to gain the entire confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens, who regretted their own loss when he retired from the greater part of his extensive practice and responded only to local calls. He is broad minded and liberal in policy, a Republican in politics, and has been honored with the office of coroner in Ventura county and county physician in Santa Barbara county, and is clerk of the Punta Gorda district school board. In the line of his profession he is a member of the Santa Barbara Medical Society and fraternally he serves as master workman of the lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workman, and is a member of the Masonic Lodge at Ventura.

The fifty-acre ranch upon which Dr. Hill lives was purchased in 1889, and while he has raised some large harvests of grain, the principal crop is fruit. There are oil prospects upon the land, however, and it is his intention to begin operations on an oil well which he says will be at least three thousand feet deep, as the deposits are admittedly very deep. He considers the prospects very bright for a strong flow of oil of a high grade, as the oil already found is of the twenty gravity grade.

In 1875 Dr. Hill was married to Mary C. Gutierrez, a member of the Catholic Church, and a native of Santa Barbara city. Twelve children were born to them: Louis, who married Alice Henry and has two children; Ruby, the wife of B. O. Clark, of Berkeley; Benigno, who married Juanita Hayes; Edwin, who married Bertha West; Jessie, Carmelita, James, Isolina, Grace, Abner, Newton and Emmet.

WILLIAM C. CAMPBELL. The pioneer life has held great attractions for William C. Campbell, the larger portion of whose career has been spent among the primitive surroundings of a beginning civilization, his retirement at the present writing on the fruits of personal labor placing him among the honored and representative citizens of the beautiful little town of Whittier. Born in Huron, Wayne county, N. Y., July 26, 1839, he is a son of William C. and Silence (Demmon) Campbell, both natives of Vermont and representatives of old and honored New England families. His parents moved to New York in their young married life, and later to Wisconsin, the death of the father occurring in Iowa, his last home, at the age of sixty-three years. The mother died after coming to California, when seventy-four years old. Paternal ancestors were represented in the Revolutionary war, while various members of the family were active in the public affairs of their native state.

When five years old William C. Campbell accompanied his parents to Wisconsin, where in the vicinity of Milwaukee they spent three years, thence located in Washington county for a time, and then removed to Sheboygan Falls, in the public schools of which Mr. Campbell received his education, studying in the common schools and with a private tutor. After completing his normal education he began the study of medicine but because of his father's wishes gave it up and returned home, where he assisted in the cultivation and improvement of his parent's farm, which consisted of one hundred and sixty acres devoted to general farming and also a well equipped dairy. The father finally disposed of this interest and moved into Dickinson county, Iowa, about six miles from Spirit Lake, and there their home remained for thirteen years. Mr. Campbell then located in Mitchell county, Kans., and during the fourteen years of his residence there accumulated large properties, owning one thousand acres of land, and still retaining the six hundred and forty acres of land he owned in Iowa.

His health becoming impaired by the rigorous climate and hardships of the frontier, Mr. Campbell decided to seek a milder climate and accordingly came to California and in Santa Ana, Orange county, purchased a grain ranch upon which he now makes his home. When he came to Los Angeles county and in the vicinity of Whittier bought the five-acre ranch upon which he now makes his home. This is devoted to walnuts and is well improved in every way. His home is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Jeanette Patterson, a native of New York, whom he married in 1863. They became the parents of the following children: George W.; Frank; Nettie, wife of Harry Covell; Minnie, wife of John Wright; Lillie, wife of A. N. Jackson, of Whittier; Herbert; Sylvia. In his political convictions Mr. Campbell is a stanch Republican, and fraternally has been identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife is a member of the Holiness Church. During his residence on the Kansas frontier Mr. Campbell found himself called upon to use his knowledge of medicine in an attendance of those families who were so far removed from medical aid that it was almost impossible to secure a physician in time of need. The success he achieved in this desultory practice was such as to demonstrate the ability he possessed in this line, which would, no doubt, if perfected by study and research, have placed his name among the prominent physicians of the country. Personally he is such a man as to win and hold the confidence and friendship of those with whom he comes in contact, either business or social affairs, and it is by reason of these qualities that he is today ranked among the representative citizens of this section.

Jean Cazaux

JEAN CAZAUX. Among the many settlers of Southern California who came from France, there is none that came of a more distinguished family than the subject of this sketch, whose family is one of the oldest of the nobility of France, who have held important military and political positions under the government. His father was Guilliame Cazaux, an extensive farmer, who for many years served as mayor of Cier de Riviere in Haute-Garonne. His wife was formerly Jeanne Maubie and both were highly esteemed and led useful and appreciative lives. They were the parents of thirteen children, ten of whom grew up, namely: Piaretta, Jules, Firman, Omer, Osmin and Jeanne, all of whom died in France; Marie resides in France; Auguste in the City of Mexico, and Serine and Jean in California. The brother Osmin was a very prominent man in the city of Cier de Riviere, where he served as mayor and was consul-general de la Haute-Garonne, and chevalier de la Legion d'Honneaux.

Mr. Cazaux was born in Cier de Riviere, September 19, 1839, where his childhood was spent and where he received his education in the public schools. In 1868 he left Havre, his destination being California, coming via New York and Panama to San Francisco, thence by steamer to San Pedro, where he took a stage for Los Angeles. After working for Jean Sentous for three months, he began the dairy business, which he continued successfully for about twenty years at the following places: Jefferson street between San Pedro and South Main, Agricultural Park, Elysian Park, Hyde Park and Westlake Park. In 1879 he purchased the present place where he is now engaged in farming and viticulture. Also owns eighty acres near Aston, Cal., nineteen acres in the city of Hollywood, house and lot on Belmont avenue, Los Angeles, a house and lot in Sherman, three acres on Western avenue and two acres on Melrose and Hartford streets, Los Angeles. The farm is fifty-seven acres located on Gower and Melrose street just south of Hollywood and the growth of the city has now made it very valuable.

The marriage of Mr. Cazaux occurred in Los Angeles November 23, 1876, uniting him with Celestine Sentous, who was born in Hous, Haute-Garonne, France, a daughter of Francisco and Maria (Fadeiulle) Sentous and came to Los Angeles in 1874. They have four children: Guilliame, Jennie, Blanche and Victor. The latter is attending St. Gaudens College, France, class of 1907.

Mr. Cazaux has always been a Republican, but never sought office. He has helped to develop and improve the farm lands of Southern California, has been a hard worker, ever ready to help build up the country of his adoption and of which he became a citizen as soon as possible after his arrival. Mrs. Cazaux is a most excellent wife and has been the helpmeet of her husband in the caring for and upbuilding of their home.

JACOB H. BATES. A thorough-going horticulturist, well skilled in the art and science of fruit growing, Jacob H. Bates, of Fernando, is actively identified with one of the leading industries of Los Angeles county, and as an orchardist is meeting with eminent success. His home estate, bordering on Griswold and Fifth streets, compares favorably in regard to its improvements with any in the vicinity, his residence and other farm buildings being models of comfort and convenience, with their attractive surroundings evincing the thrift and prosperity of the owner. He comes of substantial New England ancestry, and was born, March 4, 1837, in Connecticut, where he lived until four years of age.

Accompanying his parents to Western New York in 1841, Jacob H. Bates lived there six years, when, in 1847, the family removed to Whiteside county, Ill. From that time until attaining his majority he resided in Illinois, either in Whiteside or Henry county, obtaining a practical common school education, and becoming proficient at the carpenter's trade. Leaving Illinois about 1858, he followed his trade in Nebraska until the fall of 1861, when he enlisted in Company I, Second Kansas Cavalry, as a private, and was assigned to the Department of the Mississippi. He took part in many engagements, serving the greater part of the time in Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Missouri and Alabama. He was slightly wounded in one battle, his old Colt's revolver being struck by a bullet which knocked off the sight, the latter flying up and hitting Mr. Bates on the left cheek. September 29, 1865, Mr. Bates was honorably discharged from the army, having served from November 11, 1861, until that date.

Locating then in Nebraska, Mr. Bates was there employed in general farming for a number of years. In 1880 he moved to Kansas, where he continued as a farmer for six years. Deciding then upon a complete change, he came to California, locating in San Jacinto, where he purchased land that was in its original wildness, on which he made good improvements, building a house, setting out trees, and placing the major part of the remainder in a tillable condition. He met with success in his agricultural operations while there, and as a carpenter carried on a substantial business. Disposing of his interests in Riverside county in 1894, he came to Fernando to reside. Purchasing ten acres of land he set out a grove of orange trees, and in two years from that time he bought seven acres lying on the opposite side of the street, and this he devoted to oranges, having one of the finest improved and best-bearing orchards in this part of the county. He sold the greater part of his ranch in June, 1906, retaining only three and one-half acres.

August 8, 1865, in Nebraska, Mr. Bates married Rebecca Matilda Hobson, a daughter of Stephen B. and Mary A. Hobson, who came to Fernando in 1894, and here spent the remainder of their lives. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Bates, six children were born, two of whom are living, namely: George W., a clerk in the Maclay store, who married Dolly Cressap; and Carrie L., the wife of Elmer Boaz, a policeman in Los Angeles, and they have three children, Muriel, Gilbert and Eveline. Politically Mr. Bates is a Prohibitionist; fraternally he is a member of N. P. Banks Post No. 170, G. A. R., of Tropico, Cal., and religiously he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which he united many years ago.

JOHN OLIVER JENIFER. A man of much enterprise and ability, John Oliver Jenifer is actively identified with the agricultural advancement of Fernando, being prosperously engaged in general farming. Distinguished as a native-born citizen of California, his birth occurred May 14, 1870, at Hueneme, Ventura county. His father, the late John M. Jenifer, for several years engaged in the livery business, died at his home in Fernando, October 14, 1904, his body being laid to rest in Morning Side Cemetery. His wife survives him and is living in Fernando.

A boy of seven years when he came with his parents to Fernando, John Oliver Jenifer was here educated, attending the public schools. Beginning life for himself when a young man, he was employed in teaming and ranching until the death of his father, in 1904, when he succeeded to the latter's business, becoming proprietor of the Buckhorn Livery and Feed Stable, which he conducted with characteristic forethought and energy until disposing of it. Besides owning property in the village he is engaged in agricultural pursuits, renting a ranch in this vicinity.

In 1897, in Fernando, Mr. Jenifer married Beulah Harps, a daughter of Jacob Harps, of whom a brief sketch may be found on another page of this volume, and they have two children, Clarence and Ida. Politically Mr. Jenifer is Democratic in his views. Fraternally he is a member of Fernando Lodge, I. O. O. F., and was one of the charter members of San Fernando Lodge, M. W. A., which has since been transferred to Los Angeles. He attends the First Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Jenifer is a member.

J. ALEC CATE. A native Californian and one imbued with the progressive and enterprising spirit which has distinguished the advancement of the state in the past half century, J. Alec Cate is engaged in the management and improvement of the ranch where he was born, June 15, 1880. His father, Daniel W. Cate, was a native of Illinois, born in Quincy, September 1, 1856, there reared to the age of seven years, when he was brought to California in 1864 by his parents, James W. and Eliza (Henderson) Cate, natives respectively of New Hampshire and Indiana. The elder man died in 1900 at the age of seventy-three years, while his wife still survives at the age of seventy-nine. He was a stanch Democrat politically, and in religion a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to which denomination his wife also belonged. Daniel W. Cate was reared on this ranch in the vincinity of Rivera, and educated in the district schools, and after attaining his majority he engaged in ranching for himself, leasing his father's land of one hundred and fifty acres. Of this property eighteen acres were in walnuts and the balance in general farm products. He married in 1879 Miss Emma Pierce, a native of Texas, who was brought to the state of California at the age of one year. Five children blessed their union: J. Alec Cate, of this review; Harlan, who married Maud Gilman; Earle; Glenn; and Dean. Mr. Cate is independent in his political views; in religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He served as school trustee for a number of years, and is a director of the Cate Ditch Company.

Reared on the paternal ranch, J. Alec Cate received his preliminary education in the public schools, after which he attended Woodbury Business College in Los Angeles. Returning to the ranch, he made his home with his parents until his marriage, which took place in January, 1906, and united him with Miss Laura Graham.

She is also a native of the state, born in Los Nietos, a daughter of Thomas Graham, an early settler of this section of Los Angeles county, now deceased, her mother still living. Mr. Cate owns this ranch of sixteen acres upon which he has erected a fine cottage and made many other improvements, setting out walnut trees and devoting the remainder of the land to gardening. He is a member of the Independent Order of Good Templars, and is chief Templar of Southern California; in his political views, like his father, he reserves the right to cast his ballot accordingly to his own convictions of the possibilities of the candidate.

MRS. MARCELLINA BERNASCONI. Among the many notable things which attract the attention of those who travel in California is the large number of women who are displaying their great business ability as managers of important business enterprises throughout the state. One of the most successful of these is Mrs. Marcellina Bernasconi, whose ranch of two hundred and eighty-four and one-eighth acres, which was formerly a part of one of the Mexican grants, is supplemented by three hundred acres of rented land, and who conducts the Southern hotel at Perris, where she now lives in order that her children may receive the advantages of the schools there. She was born at Tessin, Switzerland, the daughter of Jack and Marianna Ossi, her father also being a native of that land, where he died November, 1904, at the age of eighty-five years. There were sixteen children in the family the most of whom came to the United States and reside here. Among them we name: Ponpeo Orsi, of Santa Cruz; Jack, a large wholesale paint dealer of San Francisco; Felix, who was a painter in New York City, and was killed by accident in 1876, at the age of twenty-four years; John, a stockman of Perris; Daniel and Teodolinda, residing in Paris, France; Eliseo, living at San Francisco; Felicita, who became the wife of Mr. Bacelli, and died November 12, 1888, at the age of twenty-six years; Mary, who lives at Eldorado; Carolina, Virginia and Amalia still in Switzerland; and Marcellina, who is now Mrs. Bernasconi. At the age of ten years Mrs. Bernasconi was by death deprived of a mother's loving care and at the age of eighteen, being of an energetic and ambitious nature, she came to the United States, arriving in New York City in 1877. She remained there for a year and a half and then removed to the Pacific coast, making her home in San Francisco during the following four years.

Her marriage to Bernardo Bernasconi, who was born in Switzerland, and came to America in 1871, occurred at San Francisco, September 1, 1883, and three weeks later her husband brought her to Perris, where he was engaged in ranching near Lakeview, and which enterprise he now conducts. The premises connected with it have a great historic interest, for when she first built the house there was a four-acre plot surrounding it enclosed by an adobe wall, the place having formerly been called Corral Pilares and being used in the early days by the people at San Luis Rey and San Juan Capistrano missions as a place in which to brand their stock. In 1888 Mrs. Bernasconi built the Southern hotel at Perris. Since 1903 she has lived in Perris and had charge of the hotel which she manages with flattering success. She is a woman of energy and good business tact and ability. While Mrs. Bernasconi conducts the hotel Mr. Bernasconi is engaged in the management of the ranch on which large crops of grain are raised, they owning a third interest in one of those wonderful thirty-two horse-power combined harvesters and threshers. They have a family of six children of whom they are justly proud: Matilda, wife of Virgil Roberts, who lives on the home ranch; Felicita, Joseph, Stella and Ernest, all residing at home; and Edith whose death occurred in 1900 at the age of nine years. Mrs. Bernasconi is also the proud grandmother of her only grandchild Dorothy Helen Roberts, who was born September 25, 1906. Mrs. Bernasconi is a member of the Catholic Church.

HOWARD C. BURMISTER. Throughout Southern California and Central Arizona the name of Burmister is synonymous with thrift and prosperity, in mercantile circles especially standing pre-eminent, H. C. Burmister being one of the foremost grocers in Ocean Park, Los Angeles county, while his father, R. H. Burmister, has been for upwards of thirty years a prominent merchant in Prescott, Ariz., which is the central trading point for a large territory.

After his marriage with Margaret Bashford, R. H. Burmister was for a few years engaged in business at San Diego, Cal. Deciding, however, to change his field of operations, he left that city in 1871, going by boat up the Colorado river to Needles, thence by teams to Prescott, Ariz., where in partnership with his wife's uncle, the late Levi Bashford, he embarked in mercantile pursuits. Enterprising and progressive, he built up an extensive trade, both retail and wholesale, and is still carrying it on, being one of the best-known and most highly respected merchants of that locality.

Born in Prescott, Ariz., Howard C. Burmister was educated principally in California, attending a preparatory school in San Mateo, and afterwards entering Leland Stanford, Jr., University, from which he was graduated in 1899, having taken the full course in the department of mines. After his graduation he entered his father's store, remaining there until he had mastered the details of its management. Leaving Prescott in the spring of 1905, he located in Ocean Park, and on March 1 of that year opened the largest, best equipped and most up-to-date grocery in this section of the county. It is furnished with all the modern improvements and conveniences known to the trade, its furnishings being unique, its mode of shelving entirely new, the store in all of its details comparing favorably with any like establishment in the state. Carrying a complete assortment of anything and everything in this line of merchandise, he has won an excellent patronage since he has been in Ocean Park, and is meeting with great success. Energetic, progressive, of honest, upright character, he is highly esteemed, and is fast winning for himself an enviable reputation in both social and business affairs.

In San Francisco, September 19, 1900, Mr. Burmister married Virginia Breeden, daughter of H. C. Breeden, a prominent business man in Portland, Ore., and they have one daughter, Virginia Margaret. Politically Mr. Burmister is a sound Republican; he belongs to the Sigma Nu fraternity of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University.

HOWARD B. SMITH. The financial interests of Colton, as represented by varying commercial, professional and railroad activities, furnish to the First National Bank of the town an abundant field for the building up of an extensive and increasing banking business, and give to the towns-people an advantageous opportunity for the safe deposit of their funds. The history of the bank dates back to the year 1886, when it was organized by J. W. Davis, Sr., and J. W. Davis, Jr., both of whom are now deceased. From the start the institution has enjoyed the confidence of the people, its conservatism in investments and the wise judgment of its officials having given it a place of importance among similiar concerns. With a capital stock of $50,000, the bank transacts a general banking, loan and exchange business, and still shows the same caution and prudence in investments and the same dislike for speculation that characterized earlier officers. The board of directors comprises the following gentlemen: Edward D. Roberts, M. A. Hebbard, W. W. Wilcox, J. E. Davis of Redlands, and Howard B. Smith, while the officers at this writing are: Edward D. Roberts, president; Howard B. Smith, vice-president; and C. W. Curtis, cashier.

The vice-president of the bank, who has been connected with the institution from a period very shortly after its organization, is a native of Wisconsin and was born at Sparta, that state, in 1863. The family came from the east, his father, Robert, having been born and reared in New York, but ultimately removing to Wisconsin, where he became a prosperous farmer. The early education of Howard B. Smith was obtained in common schools and later he matriculated in the Wisconsin State University at Madison, from which he was graduated with the class of 1885. Immediately after his graduation he left home to make his own way in the world and came direct to California, where he secured employment in a short time as bookkeeper with the First National Bank of Colton. In 1888 he was promoted to be cashier and continued in that capacity until 1905, when he was elected vice-president of the bank. Besides his connection with this institution he owns stock in the San Bernardino County Savings Bank and the San Bernardino National Bank, and is a member of the board of directors of the latter institution.

Remaining a bachelor for some years after coming to California, Mr. Smith in 1890 married Miss Virginia, daughter of J. A. Van Arsdale, a prominent citizen of Colton, where she was reared and educated. Born of their union were two sons, Robert L. and Howard V. Fraternally Mr. Smith holds membership with Ashland Lodge No. 306, F. & A. M.; Keystone Chapter R. A. M.; St. Bernard Commandery, K. T., and Los Angeles Consistory, and in the philanthropies of these various degrees he has maintained a keen and continued interest through all the period of his association with them. At no time has he displayed a spirit of partisanship. Indeed, he is not a politician in any sense in which that word may be used. His opinions are not moulded by either of the two great political organizations, but he maintains an independence of opinion and party allegiance. While refusing to take part in politics, he is public-spirited in his support of worthy measures for the benefit of the town, and is recognized as one of the most progressive citizens of Colton.

JAMES THOMAS MARTIN. Prominent in public affairs in San Pedro, James Thomas Martin is justly entitled to the position of respect and esteem which he holds in this place as one of the foremost and enterprising citizens and a promoter of all worthy projects. Mr. Martin is a native of Cornwall, England, his birth having occurred near Plymouth, October 18, 1858. His father, William Martin, was also a native of that locality, where he engaged as a carpenter and builder until his death. He married Mary Benney, also born in Corwall, and she survives her husband, still making her home in the vicinity of Plymouth. Six of her eight children are living, a son, Lewis, being located in San Pedro, where also a daughter, Mrs. Pidwell, made her home until her death.

R. W. Dawson

The eighth in order of birth in the family of his parents, James Thomas Martin was reared to young manhood in his native country, receiving his education through the medium of the common schools. He learned the trade of carpenter and engaged in the prosecution of the same. In 1883 he married Elizabeth Cosmer, who was born in St. Clear's Parish, England, and in the same year migrated to America, where in Tombstone, Ariz., he followed his trade. He remained in that location for four years, when, in 1887, he came to California and in San Pedro entered the employ of the Wilmington Transportation Company, with whom he remained successfully engaged for six or seven years. Following this connection he became associated with the Ganahl Lumber Company, and in 1897 with the San Pedro Lumber Company, with whom he has since remained as order clerk. He has prospered in his work and won a place among the enterprising citizens of San Pedro. He owns a home on Sixteenth street, near Palos Verdes, where his family are located, two children having blessed the union of himself and wife: Marian A. and William J. C. Mr. Martin is charter member of the first Methodist Episcopal Church of San Pedro, in which he officiates as a member of the Board of Trustees, treasurer and steward. He has been a member of this denomination since he was seventeen years old, having united in England, and in San Pedro has taken a most prominent part in the work, serving on the building committee and on others equally important. In his political convictions he endorses the principles of the Republican party, but advocates prohibition. For four years he served as school trustee and was clerk of the board, the Sixteenth street school being built during his term of service. In 1896 he was appointed a member of the city council to fill an unexpired term and in April, 1902, was elected to the position, where he is a factor in the Building and Land Committee, and Light Committee. He is a man of energy, ability and strong principles and as such commands the respect of all who know him either socially or in a business way.

ROBERT W. DAWSON. Attracted to the Pacific coast by the manifold advantages this section of the country offers to its residents, Mr. Dawson has made his home in California since 1894 and after an experience of eight years as a rancher he relinquished agricultural cares in order to enjoy the rest his years permitted. However, being a man of active temperament, he is not satisfied to join the ranks of retired citizens, and accordingly we find him conducting a real-estate business as a member of the firm of Dawson & Sherman at Long Beach, where he erected and now occupies the residence at No. 445 Pacific avenue. In addition he built two other dwelling houses and owns other lots in the town, his investment in real estate proving the faith which he holds in the future of the thriving town where he makes his home.

Of English birth and ancestry, Mr. Dawson was born in Lancashire, November 3, 1833, and at ten years of age accompanied his parents to the United States, settling in New England, where he was educated in the schools of Massachusetts and Connecticut. For ten years he made his home near the city of Hartford. In 1857 he became interested in photography, which for years he made his principal occupation and in which he acquired a skill that made his name the synonym of local success in his art. During the year 1860 he became a photographer in the city of Elgin, Ill., where he conducted a studio for seven years, and then removed to Blair, Washington county, Neb., where he carried on a photographic establishment. The year 1878 found him a resident of Little Rock, Ark., where he conducted a studio and gained a reputation for skill in his chosen art. After a long career in photography in 1892 he sold out and returned to Nebraska, where he lived at Blair for a short time. Meanwhile, having heard much concerning the climate of California, he decided to remove to the coast, and in 1894 he settled on a nine-acre tract one and one-half miles east of Long Beach, removing from there into the town, where six months later he opened the real estate office of R. W. Dawson & Co. For a time he conducted business alone, but since then he has had three different partners, and with each he has made a specialty of the sale of real estate and the renting of houses and other properties.

In the early years of manhood Mr. Dawson married Miss Lucy Freeman of Wisconsin, and they became the parents of four children, two living, viz.: Nelson, of Texas; and Clara, living in Little Rock, Ark. The wife and mother died in Little Rock, and in that city Mr. Dawson was again married, his wife being Laura Stillwell, who also died in the same city. The only child of that union died at the age of two years. After coming to the west Mr. Dawson was united in marriage with Sue

V. Neil, of Los Angeles, who shares with him the esteem of associates, and with him is an earnest member of the Christian Church, in which he holds the office of trustee. In politics he has voted with the Republican party ever since its organization and had the distinction of casting his vote for John C. Fremont.

JOSEPH H. SPECHT is one of the old settlers of the Ojai valley and is a progressive and successful rancher, who during his long years of continuous residence in the same community has made no enemies and is highly spoken of by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was born on the high seas March 19, 1856, while his parents Thomas and Anna (Helcal) Specht, were journeying across the ocean toward New York harbor from their home in Germany, where they were born. Upon their arrival in this country they settled in Hamilton county, Ill., where the father died when the son was only four years of age. His early education was received in the common schools of Hamilton county, where he resided until he had attained the age of twenty years. The family gained their livelihood on a farm in Illinois and when Mr. Specht came to California he resolved to continue in the business for which he was best trained and equipped. He filed on the land in Ventura county which is now his home, in due time receiving his title to it from the government, and now owning a ranch comprising seventy-eight acres of as good land as there is in the state, and which is planted to all kinds of fruit, especially apricots, prunes and almonds; another fruit farm of fifty-four acres is also among his possessions.

Mr. Specht is unmarried and his mother makes her home with him at the present time. He was her only child by her first marriage, but she married a second time and to this union were born four children, three sons and one daughter. Mr. Specht is a man with progressive ideas on all social and economic subjects and is a great reader, his political affiliations being with the Socialist party, in the tenets of which he is an enthusiastic believer.

A. J. SWIFT. Actively identified with the industrial advancement of Ocean Park is A. J. Swift, who was until recently one of the proprietors of a general repair shop, but since purchasing his partner's interest has given his attention to following his trade as an electrician. A son of Barnabas and Amelia (Balcomb) Swift, he was born, November 7, 1874, in Juniata, Adams county, Neb.

The descendant of one of the early colonial settlers of New England, Barnabas Swift was born in the historic town of Plymouth, Mass., not far from the rock on which the Pilgrim fathers landed in December, 1620. In 1870 he migrated westward, becoming a pioneer of Adams county, Neb., where he followed his trade of a carpenter and builder for a number of seasons, and was also engaged to some extent in agricultural pursuits. Coming to California in 1889, he purchased two lots at Pico Heights, where he resided for about fifteen years. Since January, 1905, he has lived retired from life's activities in Ocean Park.

Brought up and educated in Nebraska, A. J. Swift came with the family to Los Angeles county in 1889, and subsequently, in the city of Los Angeles, learned the trade of an electrician, which he followed successfully for awhile. Starting in business for himself, he located at No. 1040 Main street, Ocean Park in April, 1905, forming a partnership with F. A. Jennings under the name of the Novelty repair and electric work. Later Mr. Swift bought out his partner and has since carried on an extensive business as an electrician.

Mr. Swift is a young man of great energy, enterprise and ability, and is held in high regard in business and social circles. He resides with his parents, his home being at No. 147 Dwight street. Politically he casts his vote for the best men and measures, regardless of party restrictions, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

BAZIL T. ROZELLE. Devoting his attention principally to farming, in which he is quite successful, Bazil T. Rozelle is actively identified with the agricultural interests of Los Angeles county, and is contributing his full share towards advancing and promoting the prosperity of the community in which he resides. His ranch, lying near Compton, is well improved and judiciously cultivated, constituting one of the model farms of the neighborhood. A son of Miles M. Rozelle, he was born, September 13, 1864, in Anderson, Ind., and was there reared and educated. His father, a native of Indiana, married M. M. Tillson, who was born in Ohio, and they became the parents of eight children, four of whom have passed to the life beyond, and four are living, namely: Bazil T., the subject of this sketch; Charles J., of Anderson, Ind.; Miles A., of Compton, Cal., and Chester A., of Anderson, Ind.

After his graduation from the Anderson, Ind., high school, Bazil T. Rozelle took a course in stenography in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was subsequently in the employ of the Big Four Railway Company for four years. In 1894 he came to Los Angeles county, locating near Compton, where he has since been prosperously engaged in general farming, on his finely cultivated ranch of one hundred and fourteen acres raising large crops of alfalfa.

Previous to coming here, in 1891, Mr. Rozelle married Edith Owens, a daughter of Dr. William Owens, a physician of prominence of Cincinnati. William Owens, M. D., was born in Trumbull county, Ohio, and as a young man traveled extensively, for two years residing in South America. Returning home, he learned the cooper's trade, after which he entered, in 1843, Woodward College, from which he was graduated in 1846, with the degree of M. D. Enlisting in Company E, First Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, he served in the Mexican war, and during the Civil war was a surgeon in the army. Dr. Owens married Sarah E. Wilcox, of Cincinnati, and they have six children. Politically the doctor is a true blue Republican, and in religion he is a Unitarian. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Rozelle six children have been born, namely: Walter M., William Owens, Mabel, Raymond F., Elmer D., and Edwin Glen, and all are natives of California with the exception of the oldest child, whose birth occurred in Ohio. Politically Mr. Rozelle sustains the principles of the Republican party. Religiously he is a Baptist, and Mrs. Rozelle is a Unitarian.

WILLIAM S. SMITH, M. D. Very early in the colonial history of America representatives of the Smith family crossed the ocean from Holland to seek the opportunities offered by the new world. Several generations lived and died in Pennsylvania, the majority of them making Union county the scene of their labors. During the latter half of the nineteenth century John Smith, who was a native of Union county, drifted from the home of his ancestors into the south and settled in San Antonio, Tex. In early manhood he married Winnifred Taylor, who was born in Ireland and at the age of two years accompanied her parents to the United States, settling in New York City and receiving a common-school education in its excellent schools. While they were living at San Antonio their only son, William S., was born March 11, 1879. The family came to California in 1885 and settled at San Diego, but later removed to San Fernando, where the father was stationed in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Since his death, which occurred in Los Angeles, the mother has made her home with her son.

While still a mere boy William S. Smith showed himself to be the possessor of a fine mind and a keen aptitude for study. After he had completed the studies of the San Fernando high school, graduating with the class of 1898, he entered the University of Southern California and took the regular medical course, graduating from that department in 1902 with the degree of M. D. The first experience which he gained as a practicing physician was in Prescott, Ariz., where he built up a growing practice during the three years of his sojourn there. However, though enjoying a gratifying share of the patronage of the people, he found the environment less satisfactory than in California and in three years returned to this section. Since then he has had his office in the Keller block in Santa Monica, where he is known as a capable representative of his profession. His talents seem to adapt him especially for surgery and he is making a specialty of that department, although by no means diminishing his interest in the regular practice of medicine.

The marriage of Dr. Smith was solemnized in Los Angeles and united him with Mabel Wilson, whose father, J. S. Wilson, is a retired citizen of Santa Monica, well known to the residents of the place. As a progressive citizen, it has been Dr. Smith's policy to keep posted concerning the problems affecting our national welfare and a careful study of the political situation has made him a stanch supporter of Republican principles, yet he displays no sentiment of narrow partisanship, but concedes to others the same privilege of independent thought which he demands for himself. To discharge his duty as a patriot, to aid in movements promoting the welfare of town, county and state, and to give his influence toward plans for the benefit of his fellowmen, this is the measure of responsibility which he places upon himself and this his ideal of citizenship.

M. SWEENEY. One of the largest ranches in Santa Barbara county is owned by M. Sweeney, a leading dairyman of this section of the state. He is a native of Ireland, and was born on his father's farm in 1856. The father, James Sweeney, and the mother, Mary (Sweeney) Sweeney, were both born in Ireland and lived there until their death, the former at the age of sixty-three years, and the latter at the early age of forty years. Mr. Sweeney was one of a family of seven children, and was ten years old when he was left motherless. He is the only member of the family in this country, two of the children still remaining on the old homestead in Ireland, and the others living either in New Zealand or their native land. The father had during his entire lifetime been engaged in farming and cattle raising, and the son was from childhood trained to the work. His education was received in the schools of the Emerald Isle and at the age of nineteen he decided to immigrate to the United States and make his fortune in the golden land of promise which offers so much opportunity to the vigorous and industrious young man. He came directly to California, arriving in San Francisco, where he remained one year, and from there came to Lompoc, where he has since remained. It was necessary for him to begin at the very bottom of the ladder, and this fact makes his success all the more flattering, for today he is independent in fortune, is well posted in the stock industry and the details of the dairy business, and is popular in the community.

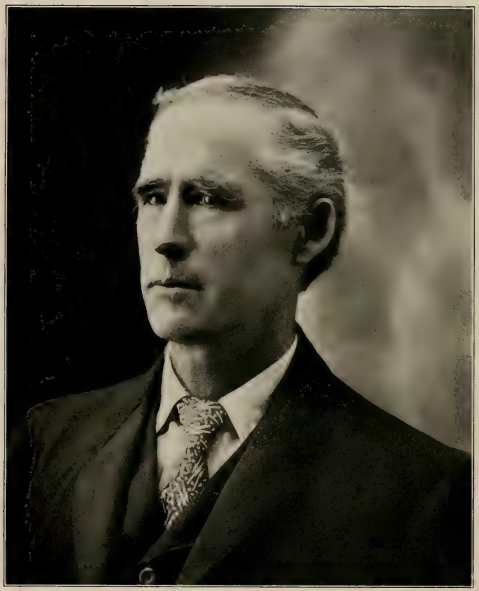
The ranch upon which Mr. Sweeney lives and which he owns comprises ten hundred and forty acres, eighty acres of which is farm land, and the remainder is devoted to pasturage for the three hundred head of cattle and general stock, including one hundred head of high grade dairy cows. It is necessary to employ two additional men to conduct this immense ranch and keep up its high state of improvement and cultivation. He has been at his present location for nine years, and in addition to the other branches mentioned also gives some attention to the raising of horses.

In the fall of 1877 Mr. Sweeney was married to Miss Isabell Rogers, a native Californian, and to them have been born four children: Hugh, now in business with his father; Sylvia, who became the wife of Frank Callis, of Lompoc; Lena and Vernon. Politically Mr. Sweeney is a strong believer in the principles of the Democratic party, and is a member of the Cathoiic Church at Lompoc.

PHILLIP DOERR, one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Carpinteria, has for eleven years been engaged in the hotel and livery business in this village and the wants of the public in his line are ably attended to. Mr. Doerr is a member of a family of fourteen children, four of whom are living, John, one of the brothers, making his home at Santa Ana. The father, Phillip Doerr, a native of Germany, immigrated to Missouri in the early half of the nineteenth century and died in that state in 1861; the mother, in maidenhood Theresa Michaels, was a native of Belgium and had attained the age of sixty-five years at the time of her death.



Phillip Doerr was born in Perry county, Mo., March 12, 1853, and received his education in the common schools of that county. After his school days were over he filled a position as clerk in a store for six years, and in 1880, when twenty-seven years of age, left Missouri and came to Carpinteria, Cal., where he worked on a ranch for his step-father. He then removed to Santa Barbara, where he worked at the carpenter's trade two years and was employed on the old street railway for two years. Following this he returned to Carpinteria and accepted a position in the warehouse of the S. P. Milling Company. Aside from his hotel experience, as proprietor of the Doerr hotel at Carpinteria, he spent four years in the business at the Asphalt mines.

May 30, 1885, Mr. Doerr was married to Miss Lizzie B. Gay, a native of Minnesota, and to them two children have been born. Lewis H., born November 8, 1886, lives at home, and belong to the Modern Woodmen of America. Lawrence R. was born January 14, 1889, and works at the plumber trade in Los Angeles. Mr. Doerr is a member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge of Carpinteria, and with Mrs. Doerr, belongs to the Rathbone Sisters. Politically he affiliates with the Democratic party, and while he is a firm believer in its principles and does his full duty as a public citizen interested in good government, his business forms his chief interest and occupies the greater part of his time. Mrs. Doerr is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

GEORGE T. STONEHAM. Prominent among the leading citizens of Ocean Park is George T. Stoneham, a man of superior business qualifications, who has met with success in his active career, and wherever he has lived has fully established himself in the confidence and esteem of his friends and associates. A son of John Stoneham, he was born, April 25, 1843, in Elizabeth City, N. J., where the first two years of his life were spent.

Moving with his family to Illinois in 1845, John Stoneham became a pioneer of Chicago, settling there at the time when Fort Dearborn was occupied by a garrison. There were neither railroads nor docks in Chicago at that date; there were no sidewalks, and on Randolph and other now prominent business streets there were signs on which was printed in bold letters the words "No bottom here." For a number of years he had what was called the Railroad eating house, near the landing place for boats, at the foot of State and Water streets, where he also kept a supply store until burned out by the fire that likewise destroyed the first theater erected in that city. This was subsequently replaced by Rice's theater. He married Elizabeth Muddell, and they both spent their last years in Chicago.

Receiving his early education in Chicago, George T. Stoneham attended a school on Madison street, just opposite the present site of McVicker's theater. He subsequently learned the trade of carriage manufacturer, but instead of following that long engaged in the manufacture of fire apparatus, being foreman for a number of years for the Babcock Fire Extinguisher Company in Chicago. While thus employed he made the aerial hook and ladder trucks for Los Angeles, and also manufactured fire apparatus for foreign countries, including England and Russia. During the memorable fire of 1871 he lost nothing, being located south of the fire zone. He subsequently moved to the west side of the city, and giving up his manufacturing business became a successful dealer in real estate, making much money in his operations.

G. M. Doane Sr.

Coming to California May 1, 1899, Mr. Stoneham resided for three years in Sierra Madre, Los Angeles county, where he was engaged in the cultivation of oranges, having a grove of twenty-five acres in the heart of the town. Disposing of that at an advantage, he speculated in real estate in Pasadena for a year, meeting with good success. Locating in Ocean Park in April, 1903, he purchased twelve acres of land, lying between Fourth and Sixth streets, and this, known as the Stoneham tract, he has since sold at a profit. On Fourth street he erected a fine residence, which he now occupies, and has since been identified with the best interests of his adopted city. He possesses great financial and executive ability, and for seventeen years was officially connected with the Union Savings Loan and Building Association, of Chicago, serving as director, vice-president and president, in the latter capacity carrying it safely through with its real estate dealings.

In Chicago, Ill., Mr. Stoneham married Sarah F. Vest, a native of Illinois, and they have one child, Charles J. Stoneham, of Ocean Park. The son married Bertha Richardson, and they have two children, Ada and Sarah.

G. M. DOANE, Sr. The active and enterprising people of Santa Maria who have done so much to promote the industrial prosperity of Santa Barbara county have no more worthy representative than G. M. Doane, Sr., a leading contractor and builder and an esteemed citizen. As a boy he was noted for his thoroughness, self-reliant energy and persistency of purpose, and these traits of character, strengthened by his honesty and fidelity, have been the leading factors in winning him success in the business and social circles. A son of M. M. Doane, he was born September 27, 1849, in Winnebago county, Ill.

A native of Canada, M. M. Doane crossed the border when a young man, locating first in Michigan, then in Illinois, from there going to Wisconsin. He subsequently settled on a farm in Iowa, and there resided until his death, at the venerable age of four score and four years. During his earlier years he was a miller, but later in life confined his attention entirely to agricultural pursuits. He was a Republican in politics, and although an active party worker was never an office seeker. In religion he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Jane Albright, who was born in Indiana, and died in Iowa, at the age of fifty-two years. They were the parents of ten children, of whom G. M., the subject of this sketch, is the only one residing on the Pacific coast.

Taken when a small child by his parents to Wisconsin, G. M. Doane, Sr., lived there until eleven years of age, when the family removed to Iowa. Completing his early education in the public schools, he began as a youth to learn the carpenter's trade, serving an apprenticeship in Elgin, Fayette county, Iowa. He subsequently followed his trade in Iowa for a number of years, in addition carrying on a lively business as a dealer in real estate. Coming to California in 1880, he located at once in Santa Maria, and as a contractor and builder has since built up an extensive and lucrative business. He has had charge of the erection of some of the largest and most notable buildings in this vicinity, for the past six years keeping about twenty men steadily employed. In addition to his work in this line he also carries on a substantial mercantile business, handling all the supplies necessary in building, including doors and moldings, and finishing materials of all kinds.

In 1869, in Iowa, Mr. Doane married Mary M. Hatfield, a native of Pennsylvania, and into their home seven children have been born, namely: George M., Jr., of Santa Maria, who married Jennie McFall, by whom he has three children; Mary G., wife of W. A. Mattocks, of Santa Maria, and the mother of one child; Clarence M., of Santa Maria, who married Gloria Frates; Milford L., also of Santa Maria, who married Sadie Bloomer, by whom he has one child; Perry; Oscar; and Richard. Although an independent voter in local matters, Mr. Doane is a stanch Republican in national affairs, and fraternally he is an active member of Hesperian Lodge, No. 264, F. & A. M., which he has served as junior warden and as senior deacon.

ROCK SARRAIL. Among the old settlers of Southern California who deserve special mention in this work is the subject of this article, Rock Sarrail, who was born in Basses-Pyrenees, October 12, 1839, the son of Pierre and Madelena Cassou, who were the parents of five children, four of whom grew to maturity.

Rock Sarrail was the third of the family and was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools. Having heard of the great advantages of the Pacific coast, he determined to cast his fortune in California, and with that end in view, in the spring of 1859, then in his twentieth year, he left Havre on the sailer Besan, and, after being tossed about on the waves for five months and three days, came around Cape Horn and landed in San Francisco with only five dollars as his worldly possession. With a courage and determination to succeed he immediately sought employment, and the next day after arrival went to work in a dairy, but a few months later obtained a place as gardener, and followed that occupation and mining for several years, and then leased a small farm in San Francisco across from the old race track, where he had floral and vegetable gardens. In 1870 he came to Los Angeles and in 1871 purchased a band of sheep, ranging them in different places in San Diego, Orange, and Los Angeles counties for nineteen years. Meantime in 1877 he purchased eleven acres on West Jefferson and Durango streets; this property he improved with a vineyard and still owns, and on it he has erected seven residences, fronting Jefferson street, a property that has become very valuable.

His estimable wife was Madelena Cassou, also from France. She passed away in 1889 at the age of forty-three years. They had a family of eight children, as follows: Mary, now Mrs. John Cassou of Anaheim; Pierre, proprietor of the Ramona Bottling Works of Los Angeles; Leona, now Mrs. John Massalin of this city; Jennie, Mrs. Albert Blanchard, died in Los Angeles; and Joseph, Louis and Silvan, all engaged in feed and fuel business on West Jefferson street, Los Angeles, under the firm name of Sarrail Bros.; and Julius, also of Los Angeles.

Mr. Sarrail is a Republican and is a member of the French Hospital Association, has always assisted in various ways in the upbuilding of his community and has great faith in the growth and future of the state of his adoption.

JUSTIN E. PATTERSON. The family represented by the above-named citizen of Pomona was established in Crawford county, Pa., by the grandparents, and there their son, James H., was born, near Meadville. Reared to an agricultural life on the Crawford county homestead, James H. Patterson further followed the example set by his father and pushed out into the frontier, during young manhood, settling on new land in Boone county, Ill., which he had taken up from the government. The land responded readily to his careful cultivation, and in the course of the years spent on that farm he became financially independent, finally retiring from active life. His last days were spent in Pomona, Cal., where he passed away in 1904, at the age of eighty-six years. Politically he was in sympathy with Republican principles, and was a faithful member of the Baptist Church, to which denomination his wife also belongs. She was formerly Rhoda Moss, born near Ripley, Chautauqua county, N. Y., the daughter of James Moss, and is now living in Pomona, aged over eighty years. Nine children originally gathered around the family fireside, but of the number only six are now living.

The fourth in order of birth was Justin E. Patterson, who was born in Belvidere, Boone county, Ill., October 17, 1856, and was brought up to an intimate knowledge of farming on the family homestead in that vicinity. Unlike many farmer lads he had fairly good opportunity for securing an education, and when he had exhausted the resources of the schools of Belvidere he took up the higher branches of study in Chicago. This equipment qualified him as a teacher and thereafter he followed teaching in Boone county for five years. During this time he had formed definite plans to take up the furniture and undertaking business, and upon relinquishing his position as teacher entered upon the work with a will. After learning all departments of the business he followed it for about four years in Belvidere, Ill., and in 1891 came to Pomona and opened undertaking parlors on Main street. From that location he subsequently removed to West Second street, and still later, in 1903, erected the building which he now occupies at No. 151 East Second street. The building is 23½x120 feet, two stories in height, the lower floor being occupied as office and chapel, while in the warerooms are displayed the fine line of caskets and other needful accessories to a first-class undertaking establishment. Since locating in Pomona he has also erected a fine family residence at the corner of Holt and Garey avenue.

In Belvidere, Ill., Mr. Patterson was married to Miss Carrie Bement, who was born there, and two children, Millicent and Donald, have been born to them. Besides his associations of a business nature, being a member of the State Funeral Directors' Association and a member and president of the Southern California Funeral Directors' Association, Mr. Patterson is well known in fraternal circles, holding membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Foresters, Woodmen of the World, Woodmen of America, Fraternal Aid, Fraternal Brotherhood and Knights of Pythias. He is an enthusiastic worker in behalf of the welfare of his home city and is an active member of the Board of Trade. Politically he is a Republican, and with his wife is a member of the Baptist Church, both taking their places among the active and zealous workers of that organization, which they also support liberally in a financial sense.

ROBERT C. KIRKPATRICK

ROBERT C. KIRKPATRICK. The true though trite saying that in union there is strength is nowhere better exemplified than in the Menifee valley, Riverside county, where the four sons of the pioneer, Robert C. Kirkpatrick, and one of his grandsons own and operate one of the largest ranches in the county. When Menifee valley was still a part of San Diego county the father came to this part of the country in 1879 and located in the center of the valley, taking up three quarter-sections of land from the government, besides buying railroad land. Some idea of the newness of the country may be formed when it is told that between his ranch and Box Springs (a distance of twenty-five miles) there was only one house. Robert C. Kirkpatrick, the inspirer of the enterprise which has since grown up around his pioneer undertakings, has passed to his reward, and his estate has fallen to his four sons, John A., Amos G., Claudius M., and William T., who are no less ambitious and enterprising, and in carrying out the wise policy of their father are meeting with a success no less gratifying. Robert H. Kirkpatrick, a grandson and the son of William T. Kirkpatrick, is also interested in the ranch, as is a daughter, Keziah Teel, of Long Beach, who accompanied the family to the coast.

The sons well recall the appearance of the property when their father first assumed control of it in 1879 and have not only witnessed its transformation from a desert to one of the finest ranches in the county, but have taken no small part in the work which this involved. They now control over three thousand acres of land, the greater part of which is in barley and wheat, the harvesting of which requires two large twenty-six horse-power combined harvesters. These are drawn over the fields by seventy-five head of work horses, which are fine animals of their own breeding and raising. All of the grain raised on this immense tract is shipped direct to the Globe Mills in Colton.

Robert C. Kirkpatrick and his four sons were all natives of Tennessee. Leaving the south in 1874 the father and sons made their way across the plains to the Golden state and settled in Orange county, remaining there for five years. The next removal brought them to San Diego county, where besides buying railroad land they took up three quarter-sections of land from the government. Since they settled here the county lines have been changed, so that their property now lies in Riverside county. Together the sons own fifteen hundred acres, besides which they lease land which brings the acreage under their control up to three thousand acres, all in grain. The machinery and stock necessary to conduct this large ranch represent $10,000, besides which they have money to their credit in the bank. The wonderful success which has come to the Kirkpatrick brothers is due in a great measure to the excellent water facilities with which their ranch is supplied. Varying in depth from seven to twenty feet water may be bored for in any part of the ranch. What is true of this part of the valley holds good throughout this portion of the county and is rapidly bringing it into prominence as one of the best grain-raising sections of the state.

The wife and mother, who in her maidenhood was Elizabeth Thompson, died in Tennessee in 1864, ten years before the removal of the father and sons to the west. The father passed away upon the homestead ranch in Menifee valley, Cal., near Perris, in 1904, at the good old age of eighty-five years. Claudius M. and William T. are married and have families, while John A. and Amos G. are still single. In their political opinions the brothers are united, all voting the Democratic ticket. They are held in the highest respect wherever known and are foremost in assisting any project for the betterment of the community. Too much praise cannot be accorded them for what they have accomplished, and both their lives and their accomplishments are excellent examples for the younger generations to take as their patterns.

WILLIAM MERRITT PIERSON. The resort of Skyland was largely the result of the efforts of Mr. Pierson, who gave it the name, built the hotel, and in other ways took a most active interest in its upbuilding. He is now residing at Bryn Mawr in a delightful home overlooking the San Bernardino valley and engaged in horticultural pursuits. He is a native of Cedar county, Iowa, where he was born September 15, 1856, the oldest of four children, all of whom are living, born to his parents, George and Deborah (Smith) Pierson. They were both natives of New York, the father being born in Cattaraugus county and the mother in Erie county; they became early settlers of Cedar county, Iowa, where the father engaged as a farmer until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted in Company K, Thirty-second Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and died in service in 1863. The mother passed away in Highgrove and was interred in Pasadena, Cal.

Reared in Cedar county, Iowa, William Merritt Pierson was educated in the public schools of that state, and also in Gowanda, N. Y., where he lived with his paternal grandfather from the age of seven years to twelve. He then returned to Iowa and worked out on farms until he was seventeen, when he was apprenticed to learn the trade of carpenter, and after its completion entered the Davenport Business College for a term. Following he taught school for three winter terms and worked at his trade during the summers. Removing to Kansas in 1877 he purchased a farm near Osage City, but rented it and made his home in the town, where he secured a position as bookkeeper in the Osage County Bank. In December, 1885, he came to California and in Pasadena engaged in the building business for two years, then in the real estate business in Santa Ana, and El Modena for three years. At the expiration of that time he went to Portland, Ore., and followed his trade for two years, then returned to Southern California and in Riverside purchased a home and followed his trade. He resided in Riverside until 1901 and then purchased one hundred and sixty acres up Waterman cañon, where he built a hotel and called the place Skyland, one of the scenic places of beautiful Southern California. He set out an apple orchard of four acres and otherwise improved his property, continuing the management of the hotel for five years, when he sold out at a good profit, and coming to Bryn Mawr purchased twenty acres of land, of which ten acres are in full bearing navel oranges. In Riverside Mr. Pierson was united in marriage with Miss Olive Bayley, a native of Illinois, and born of this union is one son, Hartley B. Fraternally Mr. Pierson is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees of Riverside, and politically is a stanch advocate of Republican principles. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Redlands, and liberally supports its charities.

WALTER L. PECK. A keen-sighted, progressive agriculturist, Walter L. Peck is carrying on an extensive and lucrative business as dairyman and farmer, his ranch being advantageously located three-fourths of a mile southeast of Compton. His land is under good cultivation, with improvements of a substantial character, the estate being a credit to his industry, enterprise and wise management. A son of the late Sedley Peck, he was born in Trumbull county, Ohio, October 26, 1862, and was there reared and educated.

Sedley Peck was for many years a leading citizen of Trumbull county, Ohio, and an important factor in promoting its growth and prosperity. Possessing good business ability and judgment, he was quick to take advantage of all offered opportunities, and was among the first of the '49ers that staked a claim in the California gold fields. Returning to Ohio, he remained in business there for several years, making, however, three more trips to the Pacific coast before coming here permanently in 1890. Disposing of his Ohio property in that year, he resided for two years in Los Angeles. In 1892 he bought land in Compton, and was engaged in ranching for two years, when he sold out and thenceforward made his home with his son Walter L. until his death, in February, 1905, at the ripe old age of eighty-two years. He was a man of great prominence, filling most of the offices within the gift of his fellow-citizens, and was an active member and an officer in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Mary Hazen, who died in Compton, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Levitt. She bore him nine children, all of whom were a credit to their parents.

Having acquired his rudimentary education in the common schools, Walter L. Peck was graduated from the high school in Mesopotamia, Trumbull county, Ohio; subsequently worked on a farm four years, after which he spent a year in Florida. Returning to Ohio, he stayed there a short time, and then came to California, settling in Los Angeles in 1886. Engaging in the sidewalk, cement and grading business, he was for the next thirteen years actively engaged in adding to the city improvements, working both for individual property owners and for the municipal government. Giving up that work he invested his money in land, buying his present ranch, and since that time has been prosperously employed as a farmer and dairyman with the exception of 1904, when he again engaged in cement contracting in Long Beach, Los Angeles and Compton. He has twenty-five acres of his land in alfalfa, and is carrying on a profitable dairy business, meeting with well deserved success in his undertakings.

October 4, 1886, Mr. Peck married Kathryn Heaton, who was born in Illinois, a daughter of William Heaton, now living retired in Los Angeles. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Peck two children have been born, namely: Sedley, a student in the Compton high school; and Mabel, born in 1896. Mrs. Peck is a woman of culture and refinement, a graduate of the high and Normal schools. Both she and her husband are good musicians, and for the greater part of their lives have belonged to the church choirs, Mr. Peck singing bass, while Mrs. Peck has a strong, sweet contralto voice. Both are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Peck is a Republican, and is a member and president of the Fraternal Aid Society of Compton. He is widely and favorably known as a man of unquestioned worth, and both he and his estimable wife are very highly esteemed throughout the community.

Jas. D. Knox

JAMES D. KNOX is known as the efficient mayor of the city of Colton, and as a prominent and successful contractor and builder. He is a descendant of a well-known Southern family, tracing his lineage directly to John Knox who came to North Carolina in 1730 and left an indelible impress on the history of that state. His parents, Joseph S. and Mary E. (Carlock) Knox, were both natives of Tennessee and the father was an enrolling officer under General Lee during the Civil war. He was captured and sent to Camp Chase, where he was held about six months, and after his release returned home a life invalid. He died at the age of fifty-four years. There were nine children in the family, six of whom are living, and the mother also survives, being now sixty-four years old, and living in Colton. Of the children, Mrs. Fuller lives in Colton; Mrs. John P. Isbell lives in Whittier; Clarence M. is a commercial agent for the Southern Pacific at Santa Ana; Dr. Charles H. is a surgeon at Decatur, Tex., and Mrs. W. H. Mann, whose husband is agent for the Santa Fe at Wickenburg, Ariz.

The birth of James D. Knox occurred September 18, 1861, in McMinn county, Tenn., and at the age of fourteen years he removed with his parents to Decatur, Tex., where he attended the common schools, the country at that time being but sparsely settled, and he found it necessary to carry a revolver to school. As a young man Mr. Knox worked on his father's ranch for several years, then started on an independent career, engaging in the stock business for another period. He afterwards secured employment with the bridge building department of the Fort Worth & Denver Railroad, working on bridges and stations for three years, then was given a position as baggage master at Decatur, and was also at one time check clerk at the same place.

In 1885 Mr. Knox came to Downey, Cal., and was first engaged in the erection of the depot at Downey for the Southern Pacific, then superintendent of the signal service for the same company near Whittier. Later he was postmaster, clerk of the board of school trustees and notary public for five years. He was then in Los Nietos, Los Angeles county, for a time, after which he secured the position of commercial agent for the Southern Pacific at Whittier, retaining the place for four years. Following this he was a brakeman on the line between Los Angeles and Yuma, Ariz., for one year and resigned the position to engage in the fruit business, buying and shipping oranges. For four years he was agent for the Fay Fruit Company and in 1902 settled in Colton, purchased a ranch of three acres planted to oranges and carried on a fruit business. About a year ago he again took up his old business of contracting and has been engaged therein since that time.

In 1881 occurred the marriage of Mr. Knox to Miss Nancy Graves, a native of Illinois, and they have become the parents of six children: Minnie Lee is the wife of Mathew Moss, of Rivera, and has two children; James O. married Lowell Rounds, of Selma, and resides in Colton; Jodie C. is the wife of R. W. Curtis, of Colton, and has one child; Elizabeth G., Charles E., and Loma E. complete the family. Mr. Knox is prominent in fraternal circles and has been a member of nineteen different secret societies. He now belongs to the Ashlar Lodge No. 306, F. & A. M.; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Knights of Pythias; the Woodmen of the World at Whittier; Fraternal Aid at Whittier; Independent Order of Foresters at Norwalk; Knights of the Maccabees at Norwalk; Fraternal Brotherhood; and both he and his wife are affiliated with the Eastern Star and Rebekah lodges. They are also active members and liberal supporters of the Christian Church and their influence is given to the furtherance of all charitable and benevolent enterprises. Politically he follows the teachings of his father and adheres to the beliefs of the Democratic party. He is especially interested in educational matters and has at various times served on the board of school trustees. As mayor of Colton, to which office he was elected in the spring of 1906, Mr. Knox has proven himself an able executive and conscientious public servant and the duties of the office were never more satisfactorily administered than under his direction. He is public spirited and energetic and in all matters exercises an intelligent caution that makes his judgment valuable.

CHAUNCEY E. CARPENTER is one of the oldest settlers and best-known ranchers in San Luis Obispo county, he having been the first man to locate in the valley which now bears his name. He has an exceptionally well-improved ranch of fifty-six acres of as fertile land as can be found in the county, which is devoted principally to beans and potatoes, with a few acres planted to vegetables and small fruit, including blackberries, dewberries and Loganberries. As a citizen and neighbor he is well liked and highly esteemed, and enjoys the reputation of being strictly a man of his word in every particular. Mr. Carpenter was born in Herkimer county, N. Y., May 29, 1845, his father, Halsey C. Carpenter, being a native of Rhode Island, and his mother, Sarah Van Natter, was a direct descendant of one of the old Dutch families who settled in New York state in the early days. Both parents are now deceased, the father having reached the age of eighty-three years, while the mother was of still greater vitality and survived her ninetieth birthday, all of the ten children of her family being yet alive at the time of her demise. There were seven sons and three daughters, and the youngest of the children is now forty-six years and the oldest seventy. The mother was a woman of deep religious convictions and during her lifetime was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

When Chauncey E. Carpenter was but ten years of age his parents removed to Wisconsin, in which state he received his education through the medium of the public schools, subsequently learning stationary engineering in Galesburg, Ill., where he worked four years in the engine manufacturing establishment of Frost & Co. He then returned to Wisconsin and engaged in farming for two years, after which, in 1870, he removed to Kansas, and purchased a piece of school land upon which he farmed and raised stock until the spring of 1888. He then put into execution his plans to cross the plains and mountains and locate in California, and was so favorably impressed by the climate and quality of soil found in San Luis Obispo county that he chose a location in what is now Carpenter valley and bought the ranch which has ever since been his home.

On the 10th of March, 1866, Mr. Carpenter was united in marriage with Miss Fannie Handey, and of this union eleven children were born, two dying in infancy. Lorena, who resides in Kansas, became the wife of Riley Underwood, by whom she has thirteen children; DeWayne, living in Oregon, married Lida Bell, and they have five children; Mina, who became the mother of eleven children by her marriage with William Dowel, of Arroyo Grande, died December 21, 1905. Nellie died in 1889, at the age of seventeen years; Eva, who married Fred Iversen, of Paso Robles, has two daughters; Adda became the wife of Dow Wood, of Paso Robles, and is the mother of three children; Edith married Dean Laughlin, of Santa Maria, and has one son; Cliffie, unmarried, lives in Los Angeles, and Theresa, also unmarried, makes her home with her parents. Politically Mr. Carpenter affiliates with the Socialist party, and he serves his district officially in the capacity of school trustee. He is a member of the Church of the Latter Day Saints.

ROBERT OSBORNE HURSEY. Conspicuous among the more active, keen-sighted and progressive business men of Compton is Robert O. Hursey, who is identified with the foremost interests of this part of the county, and in its industrial and financial progress is an important factor. A son of the late Adam Hursey, he was born February 25, 1852, in Licking county, Ohio, coming from substantial ancestry on both sides.

A native of Ohio, Adam Hursey was a merchant during young manhood. Migrating westward in 1857, he settled in Illinois, where he engaged as a farmer for many years, living first in Dewitt county, afterwards being a resident of Woodford and McLean counties. On retiring from active pursuits he located in Normal, Ill., where he died at the venerable age of eighty-three years. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Melick, also lived to an advanced age, and died at Normal, Ill. In politics he was a Democrat, ever loyal to his party.

About six years old when his parents moved to Illinois, Robert O. Hursey attended first the district schools, completing his early education at the Normal school in Normal. He subsequently taught school during seven winter terms, being quite successful in his pedagogical labors. In order to further fit himself for a business career he then took a course at the Woodberry Business College in Bloomington, Ill., from there going to Bellflower, McLean county, where he was engaged in mercantile pursuits for two years. The ensuing year he had charge of a grocery in Fairbury, Ill. Coming then to California, he became interested in the various branches of agriculture and horticulture, and for eight years had charge of ranches for other people. Locating permanently in Compton in 1896, he resumed mercantile affairs, and has since been manager of the Co-operative Association which was organized in 1891 with a paid-up capital of $30,000, and under his efficient management is carrying on a flourishing business. The association has large financial interests outside of its large store, having stock in the Compton Water and Lighting Company. Mr. Hursey owns forty acres of land near Compton; twelve acres near La Verne; and two hundred and fifty-one acres in the vicinity of Bakersfield, Kern county. By means of thrift and good management he has accumulated money, and is a stockholder, a director, and the assistant cashier of the Bank of Compton, a well-established financial institution, having a large list of depositors.

In 1881, at Le Roy, Ill., Mr. Hursey married Eliza Kinsey, who was born in Indiana, where her father, the late Henry Kinsey, was born and reared, and spent a large part of his life. Her mother, whose maiden name was Mary Stanley, survived her husband, and is now a resident of Redondo, Cal. Politically Mr. Hursey is in sympathy with the Prohibitionists, but in local matters he is an independent voter. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs, and since coming to Compton has been a member of the school board. Fraternally he belongs to Compton Camp, M. W. A.

NEWTON EMMETT MAY, secretary of the United Syndicates Company Limited, ranks among the most enterprising and progressive men of Long Beach, who is taking an active interest in the upbuilding and increasing the importance of the city by the sea. Mr. May was born in Galveston, Texas, June 28, 1866, and was the fourth in order of birth of a family of eight children born to David R. and Hattie (Lindsey) May, natives respectively of Kentucky and Pennsylvania. The father was a stock raiser in Texas and a cotton planter in Mississippi, and both parents spent their last days in the latter state.

Mr. May received his education in the public schools of Mississippi until the age of seventeen, when he began for himself, doing newspaper work in New Orleans, La., on an industrial paper, then on the Times-Democrat until 1888, when he came to the Pacific Coast. The first four years were spent in Washington and Oregon and in 1892 he located in San Francisco, where he engaged with the New York Life Insurance Company as a solicitor. In 1876 he located in Los Angeles as manager of the Germania Life Insurance Company for Southern California. In 1897 he removed to Honolulu as manager of the same company for the Hawaiian Islands and built up a business for them at the rate of $50,000 per year in premiums. In the spring of 1903, having become interested in real estate and general business affairs on the islands, he gave up the management of the Germania and devoted all his time to personal affairs. However, in 1904 he closed up his business and returned to Los Angeles, where he began operating in real estate. In 1906 he organized and incorporated the United Syndicates Company, Ltd., with a capital of $200,000, of which he was elected secretary and assumed the management, launching the enterprise in Long Beach, where he has built up a successful business. They are at present using the debenture system of syndicating property, although he has copyrighted five different plans of syndicating real estate. Mr. May promoted and organized the United Building Company, with a capital of $200,000, of which he is secretary. They have valuable patent rights of America's greatest invention, a disappearing bed and apartment house plans, thus saving and utilizing every bit of space, and destined to become very popular and universal.

The marriage of Mr. May occurred in Honolulu, uniting him with Miss Rose Roth, who was born in that capital city and chief seaport of the Hawaiian Islands. They have one child, Newton Emmett, Jr. Mr. May is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is an ardent and stanch Republican. He is an active member of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce and was chairman of the committee and the main factor in raising the $100,000 bonus for the securing of the Craig shipbuilding plant for Long Beach, chairman of the Harbor Charter Day committee which made that celebration a success. Since coming to Long Beach he has aided in every public enterprise that has been started, sparing neither time nor money to make it a success, and he is much appreciated by the men of affairs, who esteem him for his many excellent qualities, integrity, worth and enterprise.

J. E. STONES. One of the oldest settlers in this part of the country and a citizen well known and highly esteemed, is J. E. Stones, who has witnessed the development of the state from the days of its infancy. He was born in St. Louis, Mo., October 23, 1845, a son of William and Mary Stones, natives of England, where they were married, thence emigrating to the United States in 1843. They made their home in St. Louis until 1850, when they crossed the plains as far as Ogden, Utah, there spending two years, and again starting on a perilous overland journey which landed them in California. They located first in Amador county, where the death of the mother occurred at the age of thirty-five years; later in life the father removed to the vicinity of Artesia, Los Angeles county, and there he passed away at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. He took a keen interest in the development of the country, was a Republican in politics, seeking the advancement of that party's principles. He had eight children, of whom five are still living.

J. E. Stones was but seven years old when they finally arrived in California, he but dimly remembering the portion of two years spent in Ogden, Utah, where his father put in a crop of wheat. In the spring of 1852 they arrived in Sacramento, and thence went to Amador county, where the father took up a government claim. He received his first educational training in that county, more or less limited, and after completing the course of the common schools in 1857 he came to San Bernardino county, in Southern California, where his father had in the meantime become the owner of a small ranch. Mr. Stones remained at home until he was twenty-two years old, when he started out for himself, ranching and working in the lumber mills of that section, where he continued to make his home until 1876, when he came to Artesia, Los Angeles county, rented land, and began farming operations. He finally purchased twenty acres of land and engaged in general farming, later purchasing the five acres which constitutes his home, where he carries on the raising of poultry and also a small dairy, which is supplied by eight cows. Throughout the years he has also been interested in other kinds of work—well-boring, the conduct of a threshing machine, hay press, etc.

In July, 1870, Mr. Stones was united in marriage with Miss Emily C. Bingham, a daughter of H. T. Bingham, located on Twenty-fifth street, in Los Angeles, and born of this union are the following children: Emma, wife of H. Robinson; Mary, wife of Edward Trapp; Ida, wife of Claude French; Annie, wife of Bert Hillebert; Herbert; and George. Mr. Stones is identified with the Fraternal Aid, and his wife is a member of the Woodcraft. He is an independent voter, reserving the right to cast his ballot for the man he considers best qualified for official position. His wife is a member of the Christian Church, to which he gives a liberal support.

ADOLPH D. DIAZ. The agricultural interests of Adolph D. Diaz extend throughout San Bernardino and Riverside counties, where his name is well known as belonging to that of one of the upbuilders and enterprising citizens of this section. Mr. Diaz is the representative of one of the old families of Southern California, his father, Manuel Diaz, being a native of Cadiz, Spain, where his grandfather, Fernando, engaged as an extensive merchant and also had large land holdings in both Spain and Cuba. Manuel Diaz went to Havana, Cuba, to look after his father's interests and from that point came to Mexico and enlisted in the Mexican army, serving as paymaster and lieutenant. He was given a grant of land known as the San Vicente grant, in Lower California, and there he built up a large farm and stock ranch, and also owned the Santo Thomas ranch, located on the border. In 1853 he commanded the soldiers that drove Walker out of Mexico. Some years later the Indians rose against the white settlers and practically exterminated them, Mr. Diaz being saved only through his wife's ability to speak the Indian language, and because of their paying of a ransom. He made his escape to San Diego with a friend named Jose Maria Necochea. On the way Mr. Diaz lost his horse and the friend decided to journey on alone and not wait for him to make his way on foot, whereupon he drew his revolver and killed Necochea's animal, and then together they made the balance of the journey unmounted. The wife brought the family by ox-cart to San Diego and that city remained their home for a time, finally removing to San Jacinto. About 1859 Mr. Diaz located in San Timoteo cañon, where he purchased the grant known by this name, the Rofle brothers owning it at that time, and there he at once established a small store and also engaged in the raising of stock. Later he lost by suit the grant of land he had purchased, but not daunted by the misfortune he immediately purchased other property, that which is now owned by his son—El Cañon San Timoteo—and later obtained the title to two hundred acres of the valley land. Here he engaged in a mercantile enterprise and the raising of stock, also later entering the Diaz Springs, in the Moreno valley. He finally sold his interests to the Van Luvens, and in 1889 passed to his reward, being then eighty-one years old. His wife was in maidenhood Encarnacion Bermudez, a native of Lower California, and a daughter of a prominent cattleman of that section. Her death occurred January 17, 1906, of her eight children, three surviving: Adolph D., of this review; Nettie, Mrs. Disdier, of Los Angeles; and Inez, Mrs. York, of Los Angeles.

Adolph D. Diaz was born in Lower California, on the Santa Thomas ranch, December 19, 1856, and being brought to California in his childhood received his educational training in San Bernardino county, where he was reared, and at the state normal school of Los Angeles, then under the direction of Prof. I. M. Sylva. Returning to San Bernardino he engaged as a clerk in that place and later was so occupied in Los Angeles. He was next employed as a manager of a mercantile enterprise in Julian, and later superintended a branch store at Banner, San Diego county. In 1878 in San Bernardino he was united in marriage with Miss Mattie Le Barr, a native of northern California, and a daughter of John Le Barr, a pioneer miner of the state, of French origin; he was murdered in Phoenix by a man by the name of McCloskey, who was lynched the following morning.

After his marriage Mr. Diaz removed to Phoenix, Ariz., and there engaged in business until the excitement in Tombstone attracted him thither, after which he soon engaged in mining in Santa Rita, where he also opened a general merchandise establishment. The Skaget river gold excitement in British Columbia attracted him north, and after mining in that location for a time he returned to Arizona and in Tucson engaged as a clerk until he raised a stake, when he returned to San Bernardino, there following a different line in the management of the Santa Fe stables and the Opera House Parlor for the period of seven or eight years. Finally disposing of these interests, he returned to the ranch, until the Alaska excitement induced him once more to try his fortunes in a mining camp, and accordingly in 1900 he took passage on the South Portland, a steamer bound for the frozen north. After spending one year in Council City, he, in a partnership with a Mr. Hansen, started out to buy the Big Hurrah mine; during their trip to see it they got lost and wandered for four days with nothing but salmon berries to eat, and with never a moment for rest. They finally found their way out and also discovered the mine to be absolutely valueless. Returning to Solomon by way of the Solomon river, thence to Nome, they took passage on the Oregon, bound for Seattle, their journey occupying thirty-seven days, during which they were shipwrecked and so nearly ran out of provisions that for a time but one scant meal a day was allowed, until they crossed the track of the Empress of Japan, from whom necessary provisions were obtained.

Chris Krumpal

Upon his return in 1901 Mr. Diaz went to Sonora, Mexico, and there obtained a concession from the Mexican government which will permit the development of two mines which he has in his control. Upon the death of his mother he became administrator of the estate, and has himself purchased the home farm, which is devoted to alfalfa, grain and fruits. In 1906 he obtained a postoffice for this section, built upon his property, known as Diaz, where he is now serving as postmaster. He is a stanch Republican politically and seeks to advance the principles he endorses.

CHRIS KREMPEL. The opportunities for acquiring financial independence which have brought large numbers of Germans to America were the principal inducements leading to the emigration of Mr. Krempel from his native land. The family to which he belongs is among the oldest in the Rhenish provinces, the father, John P., having been born in Rhenish Prussia, while the mother, Susanna Stocker, was born in Worms, in the province of Rhein-Hessen. As a brick manufacturer and contractor the father attained considerable prominence in his native land, and died there in 1887, his wife following him in 1902. Of the nine children born to them all are living with one exception, four sons and four daughters, and of the number only two are in America, Chris and John P., the latter an architect in Los Angeles.

The eldest child in the parental family, Chris Krempel was born in Kreuznach, a town and watering place in Rhenish Prussia, eight miles from Bingen, the date of his birth being October 8, 1857. His childhood and youth were spent in Kreuznach, where he attended the primary schools and later was a pupil in the gymnasium. Following the custom which prevails in Germany he was obliged to learn a trade, but instead of taking up his father's trade, as is very often the case, he apprenticed himself to a banker, and for three years was associated with the firm of Beckhardt & Sons. His apprenticeship over, he became a member of Company 3, Eightieth Regular Army, and served for three years, thus fulfilling another obligation which the strict laws of his native country lays upon her citizens. When he was once more free to engage in commercial life, for which he had peculiar adaptation, he entered the employ of a fruit and grain firm, and from 1880 to 1883 gave praiseworthy and conscientious service to his employers. To a young man of Mr. Krempel's ambitious temperament the inducements offered in America far outstripped those which his own country had to offer, and he determined to take advantage of them. Suiting the action to the word he debarked from Hamburg, Germany, in 1883, and in due time cast anchor in the port of New York. Coming at once to Los Angeles, he soon found a position as bookkeeper, and served in this capacity with various firms, in the mean time learning the language of his adopted country and familiarizing himself with both her business and social customs.

It was a fortunate step in the life of Mr. Krempel when he accepted the position offered him with the Maier & Zobelein Brewing Company, and during the twelve years which he represented them as salesman and collector he not only rendered valuable services to his employer, but acquired a business training which was of inestimable value to him in later years. Filled with the conviction that he was capable of managing a business of his own, in 1902 he bought out the business and good-will of the San Pedro Wholesale Company, an enterprise founded by M. W. Tilton, from whom he purchased the stock. With himself as president and Richard Mahar as secretary and treasurer business has since been carried on under the old name. Besides dealing in wholesale wines, liquors and cigars, the company manufacture sodas, seltzer, syrups and cordials, and are sole agents for the Union Ice Company, Maier & Zobelein, and John Wieland, and handle all kinds of eastern beer.

In Los Angeles, October 16, 1886, Mr. Krempel was united in marriage with Miss Anna Bauermann, who like himself was a native of Kreuznach, Rhenish Prussia, Germany. Since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Krempel has studied the political platforms of the two great parties and now gives his allegiance to the Democracy. While in Los Angeles he was made a Mason in Los Angeles Lodge No. 42, F. & A. M., and he also belongs to the Red Men and the Sons of Herman of that city, and the Eagles of San Pedro. Socially he is an active member of the Turner Society, and he is also identified with the Chamber of Commerce in San Pedro. When it is considered that he came to America less than a quarter of a century ago without friends or capital the success with which he has since been blessed bespeaks an intelligent mind, a determined will and a persevering disposition, and it is largely to these attributes that his present standing is due.

EDWARD W. DURANT. One of the oldest settlers in Riverside county is Edward W. Durant, who is located on a twenty-acre ranch, seven acres of which is devoted to a peach orchard, four acres to alfalfa, and the remainder being planted to potatoes and garden vegetables. He was born May 19, 1857, in Darke county, Ohio, the son of E. W. and Susanna (Cook) Durant, the father being a native of Mississippi and the mother of West Virginia. In early life the parents removed to Ohio, and later, in 1884, came to California, buying a ranch near Los Angeles, on which they lived for two years. In 1886 Mr. Durant sold the place and removed to the San Jacinto valley and the raw land which he bought and cleared was the first piece improved on the Mesa. In 1887 he was hooked by a cow and from the injuries received died October 11 following, at the age of fifty-seven years.

The education of Edward W. Durant was received in Ohio, and he came with his parents to California and lived with them until the death of the father, when he took charge of the home place. He had two brothers, Blakely, a resident of Riverside county, and Sumner, who died in Ohio, in 1888, at the age of twenty-six years. Mr. Durant was married in August, 1893, to Angie Swope, who was born in Indiana, and they have one child, Mary Fred, aged twelve years. Mrs. Durant is a member of the Baptist Church. Politically Mr. Durant is a strong believer in the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and he is now serving the public as fruit inspector of the third supervisoral district in which he lives. He is a man of good business ability and progressive public spirit and is interested in all matters tending toward the upbuilding of the community in which he resides, and where he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

THOMAS A. FREEMAN. Though a recent acquisition to the list of land-owners in the northern part of San Diego county, Mr. Freeman is by no means a newcomer in this part of the state; on the other hand, almost the entire period of his active life has been passed within the limits of the county where he now resides, and he has a large circle of acquaintances among its miners, ranchers and business men. It was during the year 1904 that he bought the ranch of eighty acres near Bonsall and established his home on the property, which has since been increased to one hundred and sixty acres. The improvement of the ranch is now engaging his attention. It is his ambition to bring the tract into a condition where it will compare favorably with the best ranches of this locality, and he is sparing no pains in an effort to attain that result.

The Freeman family is of southern extraction, and Mr. Freeman is a Texan by nativity, born in Collin county July 20, 1865, his parents being Alfred and Amelia (Freeman) Freeman, both natives of Missouri. His father was a blacksmith by trade and during the entire period of the Civil war was engaged in shoeing horses for the cavalry regiments. Afterward he returned to the same occupation under the more favorable environment of peace, and for ten years he remained in the south laboring with diligence and skill in his little shop. Removing to California in 1875 he settled at San Luis Rey, San Diego county, and opened a shop, which he conducted as long as his health and strength permitted manual toil. Since his death, which occurred in 1901, his widow was made her home near Vista, San Diego county.

When the family came to California Thomas A. Freeman was a boy of ten years, active, robust, energetic and capable, a willing helper in the shop and the home. Though he did not receive superior educational advantages, yet he was sent to the San Luis Rey schools and gained a thorough knowledge of the common branches. At the age of seventeen years he began to earn his livelihood as a farm hand and for a long period he worked by the month on ranches. With the money earned by his industry and saved by his economy he invested in the property which he now owns. For some time he has been interested in mining, and in 1904 located the Mountain Belle mine, a very profitable proposition, in which he owns one-half interest, and Godfrey G. Thatcher owns the remaining one-half. In addition he owns interests in about eight other claims, almost all of which give promise of large returns upon their development.

The marriage of Mr. Freeman took place at San Luis Rey in 1881 and united him with Miss Nola Gooden, a native of Texas. Seven children bless their union, namely: Clarence, Edward, Asa, Rupert, Verna, Evelina and Pearl. The family are identified with the Christian Church and Mr. Freeman is a regular contributor to its current expense fund and to its missionary interests and charities. Though he has never connected himself with any party and votes independently, this is not the result of indifference to the problems faced by our government nor does it indicate neglect of duty as a citizen; with him independent thought is the result of his mental attributes and where parties show weaknesses and a desire to divide the spoils his lack of sympathy with their failings throws him into the camp of the independents. With the oversight of his mining claims and the improvement of his land he finds little leisure for participation in public affairs, nor do his tastes incline in that direction. Of a domestic nature, he enjoys the society of wife and children, and is happiest when occupied with promoting their welfare. Since he came to his present farm near Bonsall he has made needed improvements, has secured an equipment of stock and machinery, has established a colony of bees of seventeen stands, and has shown an interest in every department of agriculture.

JACOB WATSON. The earliest recollections of this native son of California are associated with the stirring scenes of pioneer days. His father, Henry, a Virginian by birth and in early life a teamster engaged in the Santa Fe trade, came to California in 1849 as captain of a train of three hundred wagons drawn by oxen and occupied by hundreds of emigrants seeking the El Dorado of their dreams. After the arduous journey had reached a peaceful termination he engaged in teaming to the mines, and while he and his wife, Mathilda (Cox) Watson, a native of Missouri, were making their home at the mines on the Feather river their son, Jacob, was born December 19, 1850. After a time the family settled on a tract of raw land on the San Joaquin river and for some years Watson's ferry was the popular mode of crossing that river by emigrants and farmers.

In addition to general farming and the raising of sheep, Henry Watson also at one time was interested in the milling business. During the year 1869 he removed to Olive, now in Orange county, and there he bought a large tract of land and bought, bred and sold sheep. With the incoming of settlers the sheep business ceased to be as profitable as when the ranges were unlimited in extent, and he then concentrated his attention upon general farming. Surviving to the age of eighty-six years, he peacefully passed away after a strenuous life, and his wife, who lived to be fifty, also died at their Olive homestead. Both were faithful members of the Christian Church. They were the parents of ten children, of whom six still survive, Jacob being next to the youngest and the only one to settle in San Diego county. Reared on the San Joaquin river near the present site of Fresno, he attended the common schools of Fresno and Monterey counties, and also for a short time after coming to southern California he studied in the schools of what was then Los Angeles county.

After having gained a thorough practical knowledge of agriculture through helping his father on the home farm, in 1876 Jacob Watson came to the San Luis Rey valley and purchased from O. H. Borden the land which since has been the center of his activities. On the knoll he built a farm house which is the home of his family and which commands an attractive view of the surrounding country. The ranch comprises three hundred and twenty acres, all of which may be irrigated as needed. In former years the raising of sheep was the owner's principal occupation, but more recently he has given his attention to stock and has made a specialty of the dairy business. The property lies five and one-half miles from Oceanside on the Southern California Railroad and is adjacent to the village of San Luis Rey, memorable in the early history of the state. Besides his important farm and dairy activities, Mr. Watson is a director and stockholder in the San Luis Creamery Company and has the office of president in the San Luis Rey Irrigating Company, in addition to which he gives his influence and support to other enterprises for the upbuilding of his community. Religious movements have felt the impetus of his encouraging aid, and he has been particularly active in the work of the San Luis Rey Christian Church, in which he is a leading member. Though he has never been a leader in politics and has not solicited official honors, he has always been stanch in his support of the Democratic party.

The marriage of Mr. Watson took place at Olive, this state, and united him with Miss Ellen J. Borden, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of O. H. Borden, who was a pioneer of the San Luis Rey valley, but now resides at Lakeside, San Diego county. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Watson consists of four children now living, and in addition they lost a daughter, Laura, at the age of four years. The daughters now living are Mrs. Clara L. Woodruff and Flora May, Mrs. Charles Libby, both residing in the San Luis Rey valley. The sons, Roy and Percy, are assisting their father in the management of the home ranch.

CHARLES J. BARNES was born in Smithfield, R. I., the youngest child of James A. and Abby N. (Bishop) Barnes, and was educated in the schools of East Providence, R. I. From his youth he gave much time to the piano and then spent three years abroad studying at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Leipsic. On his return to the United States he located in Chicago and later attended the Massachuetts Institute of Technology, where he made a specialty of the study of chemistry. Desiring to engage in horticulture he came to Redlands in 1897, where he has become much interested in orange culture. He now owns forty acres in Bryn Mawr, of which twenty acres are in oranges. The residence and place are well improved and modern in every way. It is located on a gentle slope with a most magnificent view of the valley and mountains and is sufficiently high to be frostless, which fact is illustrated by tomato vines growing the year around. Mrs. Barnes was Miss Jean M. Brophy, of Chicago, and they have two children, Florence and Charles J., Jr. Mr. Barnes is an active member of the First Congregational Church of Redlands, a member of the Board of Trade, and takes an active part and gives liberally of his means toward enterprises that are launched with a view to promoting the welfar of Redlands and its people.

ANTHONY J. HAPPE. The proprietor of the Pony Stables of Redlands is one of the enterprising and progressive citizens of the place, and as such he has added no little impetus to the advancement of the general welfare. Mr. Happe is a native of Germany, his birth having occurred in Westphalia, September 17, 1876; his father, Anthony Happe, brought the family to America in 1880 and located them at Little Rock, Ark., where he engaged as a farmer for the period of seven years, at the expiration of that time coming to Southern California and spending the ensuing two years in San Bernardino county. In 1890 he went to Perris, Riverside county, and there improved a farm, in connection with which he followed quartz mining. He is now about sixty-three years of age, retaining health and mental faculties. While a member of the Fatherland he served in the Franco-Prussian war and was severely wounded. He is one of the respected citizens of Riverside county and takes an active interest in the developments of the community, being especially active along educational lines. His wife, formerly Annie Hunstich, a native of Germany, is also living. They are the parents of seven children of whom six are living.

Anthony J. Happe is the third child in the family of his parents, and was but four years old when the journey was made to America, and eleven when he came to California. In this state he received his education through the medium of the public schools, after which he remained at home and assisted on the paternal farm. In February, 1896, he located permanently in Redlands where he had spent a portion of every year since 1888, and here engaged as a horticulturist, each adding to his interests until he was cultivating a large acreage. In conjunction with J. H. Garretson he purchased in 1902 the pony stables owned by J. T. Bennett, which was then but a small enterprise. This he continued to enlarge from time to time until in May, 1905, he moved into new and more commodious quarters at the corner of East State and Sixth streets, a brick building 80x120 feet in dimensions, where he has a capacity for fifty head of horses. He also carries on a livery, feed and transfer company, the latter meeting all trains, and in all these various lines he has met with deserved success. In 1906 he became sole owner of the enterprise, purchasing his partner's interest and has since conducted it independently. His methods of conducting his business have won for him the esteem and respect of all with whom he has had business dealings.

In Redlands Mr. Happe was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Gessmann, a native of Iowa, and their home is now located in this city. Mr. Happe is interested in the Redlands Driving Association, which was formed for the purpose of caring for the tourist trade which comes to the city annually, providing carriages for their accommodation. In his fraternal relations Mr. Happe is identified with the Odd Fellows here and also the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Board of Trade, and active in his efforts to advance the general welfare of the city.

Jacob Miller

JACOB MILLER. After twenty-four years of successful ranch life Mr. Miller has retired from the active duties which once engaged his attention, contentment and the joy of living in this favored country being enhanced by the fact that the wife of his youth is also spared to share the benefits and luxuries which have been made possible as much by her assistance and co-operation as by his exertions. When he came to Los Angeles county in 1869, and purchased the tract of sixty acres to which he brought his family, Indians had but recently left the region. Bare spots in the cacti showed where their tents had been pitched, and their fireplaces and cooking utensils were scattered about the fields. Many curious Indian relics have been unearthed during the many years that Mr. Miller has made his home here, these now being the property of the Chamber of Commerce and on exhibition in their rooms. It was under the foregoing conditions that Mr. Miller settled on his ranch in Miller's cañon, as it was called, and undertook to cultivate what up to this time had been a cactus field. His first improvement was the erection of a small house 18x20 feet. From year to year as his means would permit he made additions to the original structure until he now has a very comfortable and attractive home. The city of Hollywood has practically grown up around him, and as a consequence his property has become very valuable. Recently he disposed of twenty-three acres to a realty company, he still owning thirty-seven acres for his own use. This is located on the west side of the cañon, besides which he owns three acres on the east side.

A native of the Fatherland, Jacob Miller was born in one of the Rhine provinces August 5, 1833, and was educated in native schools until he was sixteen years of age. Leaving home and parents at this tender age he set sail for the new world on an old-fashioned sailing vessel which dropped anchor at New Orleans forty-seven days later. From New Orleans he went up the Mississippi river to St. Louis, where for about four years he was employed in a marble shop. While in his native country he had devoted two years to learning the marble business, and for two years during the time he was employed in St. Louis he continued his studies along this line, thus completing the course which made him a full-fledged marble-cutter. For one year following this he worked at his trade in Nashville, Tenn. The year 1852 again found him in New Orleans, whither he had gone to set sail for California. The dawning of the New Year, 1853, found him on the Isthmus, and also on the very summit which today is being cut for the canal which is to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. While there he cut his name and New Year's greetings upon a tree. In company with several others he was rowed up the Chagres river by natives as far as Gorgona, where the crew became intoxicated and were no longer responsible or safe companions. From Gorgona to Panama they made the trip on foot, a very dangerous undertaking for any one, much more so for those with no knowledge of the country whatever. However, they arrived in safety and debarked on a vessel bound for San Francisco, arriving in January, 1853. From there Mr. Miller went to Mariposa county and took up several mining claims which he worked alone for three years, when, in 1856, with a few companions, he went into the Yosemite valley, they being the first white men to pass over the new trail from Mariposa to that country. His companions became fearful of the dusky neighbors who surrounded them and left for safer quarters. For four days Mr. Miller remained alone with a large tribe of Indians, whose confidence he gained and consequently he was not molested. His mining venture in the valley proved an especially fortunate one, and he remained there until 1869, when he came to Los Angeles and established the pioneer marble works in the city. In the interests of his business he traveled over the hills between Los Angeles and San Bernardino and in so doing learned of the rich quarry at Lytle creek. Besides opening a quarry at the latter place he also opened one on the Slova mountains, and some of the marble which he quarried from these places may still be seen in the cemetery at Los Angeles. Subsequently he discontinued working the quarries on account of the heavy expense attached to it. After twelve years of successful business life in Los Angeles Mr. Miller sold his business and good will and came to Hollywood, with which city his name has been identified for the past twenty-four years.

In Los Angeles, Cal., in October, 1878, Jacob Miller was married to Dorothea Grelck, who like himself was born in Germany. She has been a resident of the United States ever since her twenty-fifth year. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller, as follows: Emma, Mrs. Otto Glardy, of Los Angeles; Elise, Mrs. Lyman E. Hathaway, a resident of Hollywood; Theressa, who for two years taught school in Hollywood and in August, 1906, entered Stanford University to complete her education; and Dora, William A., and Edith, the three last mentioned at home with their parents. Until recently Mr. Miller was a member of the school board of Hollywood, to which he gave faithful service for thirteen years. While in Los Angeles he joined the Independent Order of Foresters, but of late years he has not been as active in the ranks of the order as formerly. Although he is not a member of any church, he gives liberally toward the support of all denominations, and has the good-will and veneration of all who have lived and labored with him in Hollywood for nearly a quarter of a century.

DOLORES M. VEJAR. A skillful, intelligent and capable ranchman, the late Dolores M. Vejar was actively associated with the advancement of the agricultural prosperity of Los Angeles county, owning large tracts of land, which he managed successfully. In his boyhood days the now attractive city of Los Angeles, in which he spent many years, was very sparsely settled, the only residences being the adobe houses of the early settlers. He was of Spanish descent, and was born, June 22, 1845, in Los Angeles, a son of John Christopher Vejar.

Coming from Spain, his native country, to California, John Christopher Vejar served as a soldier in the Spanish army, after which he received as a grant Conejo rancho, a tract of one thousand six hundred acres of land in Ventura county. He also owned extensive and valuable interests in Los Angeles, which city he made his home for a number of years. He engaged extensively in stock raising in the Ventura locality, although resident in Los Angeles, where he was a man of distinction, having served as councilman and as mayor. He was a man of wealth, at the time of his death at the age of sixty-two years, leaving a handsome property to his family. He married Mary Grace Reyes, the descendant of a prominent Spanish family. She was born in Los Angeles, and died, at the venerable age of eighty-six years, in that city.

Educated in the public schools of Los Angeles, Dolores M. Vejar learned much of the various branches of agriculture while young, and at the age of twenty-one years acquired by inheritance the old Vejar ranch, lying between Los Angeles and Ventura, and containing six hundred and thirty-five acres of land. He followed stock raising during his life, but a number of years ago moved into Los Angeles in order to give his children better educational advantages, buying the ranch now owned and occupied by his widow and children. In addition to this ranch of thirty acres, Mr. Vejar also owned two hundred and forty-five feet of land on Flower street, Los Angeles, a valuable residential property. He was very active and enterprising, and in addition to operating both of his ranches he rented large tracts of land, and was successfully engaged in general ranching until his death, which occurred March 22, 1904, after a brief illness of only two weeks.

In 1883 Mr. Vejar married Mary E. Goss, who was born, June 22, 1855, in Onetis, Mariposa county, this state, a daughter of Willis G. Goss. A native of Georgia, Mr. Goss came overland with ox-teams to California in 1852, settling as a miner in Mariposa county, where he resided, an honored and influential citizen, until his death, at the age of sixty-two years. His wife, Elizabeth Petty, was born in Texas, and came across the plains with her father in 1852, in the same train with her future husband, Willis G. Goss. Mr. Goss died March 19, 1870, and his widow then removed to Los Angeles, where she spent the remainder of her life, passing away at the age of thirty-nine years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Vejar seven children were born, namely: Theodore J., Beatrice E., Mary Grace, Victoria G., Annie Ray, Dolores R. and Rudolph G. Vejar. All living at home.

ELGAR REED, M. D. A successful exponent of the medical profession is named in the person of Elgar Reed, who has been located in El Monte since 1893, and has built up an extensive practice. He is a native of Ohio, his birth having occurred in the vicinity of Cincinnati, December 13, 1865; his father, Garrett R. Reed, was born in 1827 in Franklin, Ohio, while his grandfather, Gilbert, was born in New Jersey in 1796 and became a pioneer settler of Ohio, where he engaged in farming until his death. He came of fine old eastern stock, being related to the Van Shaicks and also to George Read, the signer of the Declaration of Independence, the spelling of the name being changed by himself. Garrett R. Reed attained years of maturity in Ohio, where he learned the blacksmith's trade, after which he settled in Iowa at an early date in the history of the state, and in Louisa county engaged as a farmer and blacksmith. Later he engaged in the hardware business for a time, finally removing to Carmi, Ill., where he became a lumber manufacturer. In 1882 he made a trip to Southern California and spent some time in Los Angeles, but returned to Carmi because of his business interests and remained there seven years. In Los Angeles, where his death occurred in 1904, he was interested in the Los Angeles Box Company. He is survived by his wife, formerly Elizabeth Weller, a native of Ohio. Her father, Tobias Weller, was born in Preble county, Ohio, in 1801, and in manhood engaged as a farmer in that state until 1875, when he came to Los Angeles and purchased a ranch upon which he made his home until his death in 1892, when nearly ninety-one years old.

Mrs. Reed makes her home in Los Angeles, and is the mother of two sons and one daughter.

Elgar Reed was the youngest in the family and was reared in the states of Iowa, Illinois and California, his preliminary education being received in the schools of the two former states before his removal to Los Angeles. In this city, in 1884, he entered the preparatory department of the University of Southern California and graduated therefrom in 1890 with the degree of B. S., later receiving the degree of M. S. In the same year he returned to Ohio and entered the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, from which institution he was graduated in 1893 with the degree of M. D. He at once located in El Monte and began the practice of his profession, which has since absorbed his entire time and attention. He has built up an extensive practice and is looked upon as a physician of unusual ability, whose most conscientious efforts are given wherever his services are required.

In Los Angeles Dr. Reed was married to Miss Mary Sawyer, who was born in Colorado. Dr. Reed is prominent in fraternal associations, having been made a Mason in Lexington Lodge No. 104, of El Monte, and is also associated with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Independent Order of Foresters, Fraternal Brotherhood and the Modern Brotherhood. Politically he casts his ballot for Republican candidates.

CHARLES POWERS. A citizen of worth and ability is Charles Powers, who first saw San Pedro in 1880, and has witnessed much of the growth and development which have marked the city's history. Mr. Powers is a native of Sweden, his birth having occurred at Oskersham September 19, 1863. His father, Olander Powers, also a native of Sweden, spent his entire life in that country with the exception of a short time in Chicago, Ill., where he located in the early days of that city. Of the five children born to his parents Charles Powers is the only one in America, and his residence here is probably due to the fact that his travels as a seaman brought him to the Pacific shores of this country. From boyhood he followed the sea, becoming cabin boy and in time a sailor before the mast. In 1879 he shipped on the McMillan of Glasgow, rounding the Cape of Good Hope and in September of the same year touching at the port of San Diego, Cal. He disembarked and for a few months remained in that location. In January of the following year he came to Los Angeles county and in Wilmington engaged with the Wilmington Transportation Company, with whom he continued until 1889. He then secured employment with the Kirckhoff Cuzner Lumber Company as shipping clerk, and in 1891 became the foreman of their yards in San Pedro, the wholesale and distributing point for the company, and since that time he has remained so occupied, being located permanently in this city. He thoroughly understands his business and is successful in his work.

After his location here Mr. Powers married Mercy J. Crocker, a native of Wilmington, Cal., and the daughter of Henry Crocker, a pioneer of this section. They have one son, Charles Waldo. In his political affiliations Mr. Powers is a Democrat, but is liberal and broad in his views, reserving the right to cast his local ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for official duty. As a trustworthy citizen he was elected a member of the city board of trustees, which position he held until removing beyond the city limits, when he resigned. Fraternally he is prominent, being a member of the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past officer; the Eagles, and Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Until 1905 he was also associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which he officiated as an officer, but in the last named year withdrew from the organization.

GEORGE BAY. When George Bay first came to California, like many others it was in search of good health and he has gained not only that, but a very generous material prosperity as well, as a progressive and energetic man who adopts up-to-date methods cannot fail to do in the fertile Ojai valley. His father, William Finley Bay, a native of Ohio, was one of the early Oregon pioneers who crossed the plains in 1850 and settled in that western coast state. He conducted a ranch in Oregon, where he died at the age of fifty-six years, being survived by his wife, formerly Nancy J. Kirkpatrick, a native of Quincy, Ill., and who is still residing on the old homestead at the advanced age of ninety years.

Of the family of ten children George Bay is the only member residing in California and he came to this state when a young man of twenty-two years. He was born July 30, 1853, in Oregon, and was educated in the common schools of that state. Impaired health induced him to come to California and to Ventura county in particular. In April, 1875, he settled on a piece of government land which is now a part of his homestead, owning at the present writing one hundred and twelve acres of land upon which he raises fruit and hay, and in addition rents and cultivates a grain ranch of two hundred acres. The Ojai valley has some of the best apiaries in the state located in the foothills and Mr. Bay owns four hundred stands of honey bees which net him a handsome income during the season. Upon one occasion ninety-six of the stands made the splendid record of producing nine tons of that clear white honey for which the state is famous.

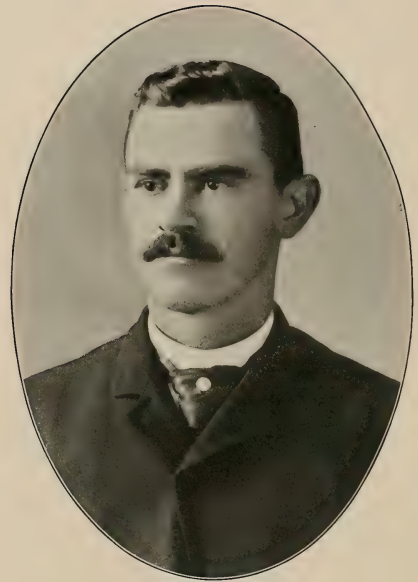
In 1878 Mr. Bay was married to Maggie Vancuren, a native daughter of Iowa, and to them were born four children: Guy Ora, who married Bertha Whitney; Nellie Agnes, the wife of Frank T. Brooks; James W., who is fourteen years old; and Fred Leo. Mr. Bay is well versed in social and economic subjects and after a careful study of the policies to which the old-line parties are pledged he believes that they do not stand for the best and most progressive ideas and so gives his allegiance to the Socialist party. He has always taken an active interest in all affairs of interest to the public welfare and as an intelligent and leading citizen he is accorded a high esteem throughout the Ojai valley.



JOHN W. SPEED. Prominent among the earlier settlers of the Santa Maria valley is John W. Speed, an influential resident of the city of Santa Maria. He has won his own way through life, by his honesty and upright dealings establishing a reputation for integrity that any man might well covet, and gaining an assured position among the business men of this part of the county. A native of Missouri, he was born August 4, 1849, in Morgan county, being one of a family of five children born of the union of James H. and Lucy A. (Maroni) Speed. His parents were both born and reared in Virginia, and both died on the home farm in Missouri, the death of the mother occurring at the age of fifty years, while the father, who survived her, attained the age of seventy-two years. John W., of this review, is the only member of the family living in California.

John W. Speed labored hard to acquire an education, and after leaving the public schools of Morgan county spent three years at the State University, in Columbia, Mo., taking the regular scientific course, by his own efforts paying all of his college expenses. At the early age of sixteen years he began to be self-supporting, and after leaving college embarked in agricultural pursuits, for two years having charge of a grain ranch. Leaving home in 1875, he came to Santa Barbara county, and for a while was employed in ranching in this valley. Returning to Missouri, he resumed farming, remaining there until 1879, when he again came to the Santa Maria valley, settling as a farmer in Santa Barbara county. Leasing land near Guadaloupe, he carried on dairying and stock-raising for eleven years, meeting with satisfactory success in his operations. In 1890 he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land in the upper part of the valley, and, with the exception of two years that he spent as a hay and grain dealer in San Francisco he was for fourteen years engaged in horticultural pursuits, making a specialty of apricots. He subsequently bought his home ranch, which consists of forty acres of valuable land, and is advantageously located in Santa Maria. Besides this ranch he owns one hundred and sixty acres of land near the Sunset oil fields of Kern county; has title to thirty acres of land in the district near Orcutt; is a stockholder in the Brookshire Oil Company; and is a shareholder and the president of the Meridian Oil and Land Company, that is developing oil in the Santa Maria fields.

In 1884 Mr. Speed married Fannie Herndon, who was born in Carrollton, Mo., in 1857, and died in Santa Barbara county in 1890, at the age of thirty-three years, leaving two children, James H. and John W., Jr. The former took a preparatory course in the academic department of the Missouri Valley College, at Marshall, Mo. In 1893 Mr. Speed married for his second wife Mary Bocay, who was born and educated in England. In politics Mr. Speed is independent, using his own judgment in casting his ballot, instead of blindly following any political leader, or giving unqualified adherence to any party.

JOSEPH B. ROBISON. Ten miles northwest from Santa Monica, in the Garapatos school district No. 10, lies the stock ranch on which Mr. Robison resides, and which he owns in partnership with his father-in-law, Benjamin F. Berkey. The ranch includes one hundred and eighty acres, of which about fifty acres are under cultivation, while the remainder of the land forms a range for the cattle. Stock-raising is the principal industry engaged in, although they also conduct a small dairy and raise fruit and nuts.

Mr. Robison is a native of the middle west, born in Vernon county, Mo., not far from the village of Harwood, October 13, 1871. His father was born in the adjoining state of Illinois, and was reared on a farm there until removing to Missouri during young manhood. There also he established himself on a farm, and in addition to its management also conducted a sawmill and owned threshing machines, with the latter assisting farmers throughout the locality during the harvest season. His active and well-planned course in life has resulted in making him fairly well-to-do, so that he is now practically retired from business cares, although to keep his mind occupied he still manages a small farm near Harwood, Mo. The wife of his youth is still spared to him and together they are spending their later years in the enjoyment of the competency accumulated through hard work and frugality. Mrs. Robison was before her marriage Elmira Hodgson and like her husband was born in Illinois.

J. F. Moore

Vernon county, Mo., was the scene of the early life of Joseph B. Robison, and by the time he was nineteen years old his school days were over and his business career was fairly begun. It was at this age that he crossed the plains to the west and located in California, coming direct to Santa Monica, where he worked as a farm hand for about nine months. With commendable ambition to become a land owner he squatted on railroad land in Antelope valley, but after holding it about a year he sold the property. Coming to the Garapatos school district in November, 1894, he bought a squatter's right to his present ranch, filing on the same in 1896. Since his marriage he and his father-in-law have combined their interests, their landed possessions aggregating one hundred and eighty acres, upon which they raise cattle, horses, hogs and poultry.

In November, 1900, was celebrated the marriage of Joseph B. Robison and Miss Ethel Berkey, the latter of whom was born in Nebraska, where for six years she taught school. She has been a resident of California since she was twenty-three years of age, and after coming to this state also taught school for a time. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Robison, Irma Eleanor, Florence Edna and Bertha Blanche. Mr. Robison's political views are in harmony with the Democratic party, which he stanchly upholds. For two years he was a member of the board of school trustees of his district.

JOHN F. MOORE. The versatile ability of John F. Moore, one of the successful ranchers of the vicinity of Norwalk, Los Angeles county, has enabled him to make a success financially and at the same time build up for himself a position of respect and esteem among the citizens of whatever community he has made his home. He boasts a California birth, for his parents were both pioneers of the state, the father, Henry Moore, a native of Ohio, having come to the Pacific coast in 1855 via the Isthmus of Panama and in the mines near Camptonville was engaged for seven years. He then followed freighting to various California and Nevada points, and at the same time purchased a ranch in Yuba county, Cal. Later he sold this and took up a government claim in Colusa county, but eventually had to give it up. He then went to Orland, Glenn county, Cal., and there purchased three hundred and twenty acres, sold it in 1891, and then in Oregon bought a ranch of two hundred and fifty-one acres. His death occurred in that location in 1892 at the age of sixty years. He was a man of public spirit and energy. A Republican in politics, he was called upon by this party to discharge the duties of supervisor of Colusa county for twelve years. Fraternally he was a Mason. He came of a loyal and patriotic family, two of his brothers serving valiantly in the Civil war. He married Adaline Andrews in California and she is still living on the old homestead. She was the mother of six children, of whom four are still living, besides John F., the eldest, being Retta, wife of John Sexton, of Los Angeles county; Edward, who lives on the home place in Oregon; and Charles, a student in a divinity school in Oregon in preparation for the Christian ministry.

Born in Marysville, Yuba county, Cal., September 21, 1866, John F. Moore spent the first three years of his life in that place, when he was taken by his parents to Colusa county, and five years later to Orland, Glenn county. He received his education in the common schools of that place, and after his schooldays were over he went to work at Marysville to learn the trade of harness maker. He was then but eighteen years old and henceforth he was dependent upon his own resources. He also started to learn the trade of blacksmith but because of defective eyesight had to give this up. He ranched for his father for a time following this, and finally, in the fall of 1890, he went to Oregon. He was married in that state and there rented land and farmed for about seven years. At the expiration of that time he came south and in Santa Barbara county spent one year, then came to Los Angeles county and in the vicinity of his present property rented land and engaged in general farming. He again rented land here and then with his brother-in-law purchased forty acres, Mr. Moore now owning the north twenty acres of the tract, of which fourteen acres are devoted to alfalfa, three acres to a fine family orchard, and a dairy business being supplied by five cows. He has made his own improvements, built residence, barns, outbuildings, and installed a pumping plant equipped with a fifteen horse power gasoline engine. He is also interested in poultry breeding. It may also be added that Mr. Moore is a natural carpenter and has added to his income at times because of this ability.

Mr. Moore's wife was in maidenhood Rosa Newlan, the ceremony which united them in marriage being performed July 3, 1892. She is a daughter of J. N. Newlan, whose personal history also appears in this work. They became the parents of the following children:

Maud, aged fourteen; Roy, aged thirteen; Joseph, aged eleven; Ethel, aged eight; Lester, aged six; Ada, aged three. Both Mr. Moore and his wife are members of the Christian Church. Politically he is a stanch Republican and fraternally is associated with the Woodmen of the World, while both himself and wife are members of the Fraternal Aid. Mr. Moore is much esteemed in the community and is justly named among the representative citizens.

SYLVESTER KINCADE SMITH. In the vicinity of Beaumont, Riverside county, is located the ranch operated by Sylvester Kincade Smith, one of the enterprising and successful farmers who have assisted materially in the upbuilding of the best interests of this section of Southern California. He was born in Yates City, Knox county, Ill., January 12, 1854, among the youngest in a family of fifteen children of whom thirteen are now living. His father, Seth Smith, was born in North Carolina, a son of William, also of that state, whence he removed to Hillsboro, Ohio, and engaged as a farmer until his death. Seth Smith engaged in farming in Ohio, where he attained manhood, and later located in Yates City, Ill., and there followed farming and also the trades of stone and brick mason, carpenter, wagon maker and blacksmith, being gifted with natural mechanical ability. In 1869 he removed to Iowa and in Adams county improved a farm and spent the remainder of his life. His wife, formerly Mary George, was a native of Virginia and a daughter of William George, who removed to Ohio, thence to Yates City, Ill., where he engaged as a farmer until his death. A son, John, served in the Eighty-sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and is now a resident of Iowa; and also William Smith, served in the Fourth Regiment Iowa Battery, and is now a resident of Williamsfield, Ill.

Reared on the paternal farm in Illinois, Sylvester Kincade Smith received his education through an attendance of the public school in the vicinity of his home, after which he went to work for his father. He accompanied the family to Iowa in 1871, and remained with his father until attaining his majority, when, in May, 1885, he came to California because of his health. He spent the first summer at El Monte, Los Angeles county, and in the fall came to San Gorgonia Pass and secured employment on various farms in the section. In the summer of 1887 he engaged in freighting lumber from the mountains, and following this in the spring of 1888 began farming operations with H. J. Roberts, with whom he continued for two years. At the close of that time they dissolved partnership and Mr. Smith purchased the farm upon which they have been operating, and it is that which he owns at the present writing. He has since added to the original purchase a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, the greater part of which is devoted to the raising of grain, and in addition to this he leases eleven hundred acres for the purpose of raising grain, hay and stock. He owns three six-horse teams and carries on an extensive business, in which he has been very successful, acquiring a competence and at the same time a place in the estimation of his fellow citizens.

In Beaumont Mr. Smith was married to Miss Catherine Adams, a native of Maine who died in California July 20, 1902. She was a member of the Episcopal Church and devoted to its interests. Mr. Smith was made a Mason in San Jacinto Lodge, F. & A. M., and in the same place was raised to the degree of Royal Arch. Politically he is a Republican.

GEORGE W. CAMPBELL. A broad-minded citizen and one of the progressive and up-to-date ranchers of this section of Los Angeles county, George W. Campbell is located in the vicinity of Whittier and engaged in the management and improvement of thirty-eight acres of land, which he purchased about five years ago. He was born in Sheboygan, Wis., April 27, 1868, a son of William C. Campbell, the latter a pioneer of California and for many years previous a frontiersman in Iowa and Kansas, where he endured the hardships and privations of a beginning civilization. For more complete details concerning his career refer to his personal sketch which appears elsewhere in this volume. Taken by his parents to the Iowa frontier, George W. Campbell spent his boyhood years in Dickinson county, and later in Mitchell county, Kans., where the father improved a farm in Solomon valley. He had engaged with his father on the home farm and also attended the public schools in pursuit of an education, after coming to California in 1890 completing the course in the state Normal school at Los Angeles, and University of California at Berkeley, where he spent two years. He then engaged in teaching and for two years was located at Portersville, Tulare county, Cal., where he built up a reputation for thoroughness of work and breadth of education. For a time he also labored in San Fernando, the Mill district and Carmenita, pursuing the course which has brought him success in his efforts. In 1902 he decided to locate on a farm, following the bent of his early training, and he then purchased the ranch above mentioned, consisting of thirty-eight acres, of which fifteen acres are devoted to the cultivation of walnuts and twenty-three acres to the raising of alfalfa. He has improved his property in every possible way, his home being presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Ella Newlin, whom he married December 18, 1904. She was born in Indiana, a daughter of J. E. Newlin, a resident of Norwalk. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have one son, Chester. They are members of the Christian Church, which receives their most liberal and helpful support. Mr. Campbell is a Republican in politics and it is in this connection that he is most prominent in Los Angeles county as well as the state, serving as county delegate to conventions and giving time, means and personal attention to the advancement of the principles he endorses. He is a man of high intellectual attainments, broad in thought and comprehension, and has brought to bear in all his efforts the qualities which bespeak the citizen of worth and helpfulness. He takes the keenest interest in the higher education of the California schools and seeks to promote all movements calculated to advance the standard. He has served for some years as school trustee. All in all he is a citizen whose efforts speak eloquently of his worth.

Herman Eckelkamp

HERMAN ECKELKAMP. In the vicinity of Norwalk is located the ranch of twenty acres owned and operated by Herman Eckelkamp, one of the enterprising ranchers of this section. He was born in St. Louis, Mo., June 26, 1847, a son of Henry and Mary (Brinker) Eckelkamp, both natives of Germany, and who came to the United States and finally located in St. Louis, where the father worked at his trade of baker, conducting a bakery and grocery in that city. During the war the family moved into the country, the father still conducting a general merchandise store, but lost heavily by robbers, who carried away three wagon loads of goods. The father died in 1902, at the advanced age of eighty-two years, the mother having passed away when sixty-four years old. They were the parents of seven children, of whom two died in infancy.

Herman Eckelkamp received a substantial education in the public and high schools of St. Louis, after which he attended the Jonathan & Kelly Business College, where he took a course in bookkeeping. In 1873 he came to California and in San Francisco spent the ensuing two years, and while there worked on a pile driver in the harbor and also drove a transfer team. He then returned to Missouri and engaged in farming, purchasing a fine farm of forty acres, of which twenty acres was in fruit and twenty acres in vegetables. This he later disposed of but still owns a twenty-acre farm near St. Louis. In 1905 Mr. Eckelkamp came back to California and purchased his present property, which consists of twenty acres near Norwalk, which is devoted entirely to gardening, while he also owns a fine residence in Artesia, being the first to build after the town site was located and platted. Mr. Eckelkamp's first marriage united him with Miss Mary Finn, a native of Missouri, and born of this union were two children : Josephine, wife of Ted Ryan, of St. Louis; and Annie, who died at the age of twenty-two years. His wife died in Missouri, and in 1892 he married Miss Alice Finn, a sister of his first wife, and born of this union are two children: Alice and Julius. Mr. Eckelkamp is associated with the Democratic party in his political affiliations, and in religion is a member of the Catholic Church.

WILLIAM B. COVINGTON, a successful horticulturist and dairyman of San Bernardino county, was born in Calhoun county, Miss., July 5, 1869, the oldest son in the family of P. H. Covington, a pioneer of Southern California, whose biography is given at length in another part of this volume. But seven years old when he was brought to the state, William B. Covington is practically a Californian, having been reared on the farm where he now lives, and educated in the public schools and the Redlands Academy. In 1891 he married Miss Mattie Reed, a native of Nebraska, and immediately afterward he began farming this property, then raw land, with no cultivation nor improvement. He built a residence, substantial barns and outbuildings, set out an orchard of peaches and apricots, and began an intelligent farming that was soon productive of large returns. He eventually dug out his peaches and apricots and set out eleven acres in an orange grove, which is now in full bearing and produces the fine fruit that this section of the country is famous for. At the present writing Mr. Covington has just sold his orange grove. In 1902 he started the Tremont Dairy farm on his father's place, farming two hundred and fifty acres of the home ranch, and this property he has since bought outright, while he rents eighty acres adjoining, and owns seventy-five acres besides, making a ranch of over four hundred acres under his management. He has forty acres in alfalfa, raised by irrigation from the Lower Yucaipe, and also a pumping plant which has been installed on the ranch, while the balance is given over to grain and pasture. His dairy herd consists of ninety head of cows, of Jersey, Holstein and Durham stock, the product being retailed in Redlands and delivered to the customers twice per day. He has a separator and all modern methods for conducting his enterprise. The Edison Electric Co. supply the power for running the separator, pumping plant and various other work to which it can be applied on the premises. The dwelling, barns and grounds are lighted by electricity furnished by same company. All these improvements have been made at large outlay, but have proven a financial success, while making his farm an ideal one.

To Mr. and Mrs. Covington were born the following children: Irma, Carl, Henrietta, Ralph and Ibel.

Mr. Covington is a school trustee for the R. R. district. He is prominent fraternally, being a member of the Odd Fellows lodge of Redlands and the Woodmen of the World, of the same place. Politically he is a stanch Democrat. He takes an active interest in all upbuilding movements of the section and can always be counted upon to further any plan with both time and means. It can safely be said that it was through the influence of Mr. Covington, and his alone, that after six months' negotiating the Edison Electric Co. poled their power into the San Timoteo cañon. At the present writing he is serving as secretary and treasurer of the Lower Yucaipe Water Company, one of the developing resources of the section.

EUGENE MACLOVE VAN DEVENTER. In his work as an agriculturist Eugene M. Van Deventer has brought to bear a general intelligence as well as an unusual perseverance and energy, which have resulted in the accomplishment of his aims and ambitions and have placed him high among the ranchers of San Timoteo cañon. He is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in Napa county, November 15, 1857. The name is an old and honored one among the Knickerbocker families of New York, where the emigrating ancestor located in 1620 from his home in Germany. His father, Michael F. Van Deventer, was born in Buffalo, N. Y., whence the paternal grandfather, Christopher, removed with his family to Michigan in the early days of that state. Later he went to Louisville, Kans., and engaged as a pioneer farmer until his death. Michael F. Van Deventer was reared in Kansas and there followed his early training and engaged as a farmer; he participated in the Mexican war as sergeant and received a severe wound. In Mexico he met and married his wife, formerly Francisca Diaz, born in Chihuahua, Mexico, and a daughter of Francisco Diaz, one of the old Spanish families. In 1854 Mr. Van Deventer came to California and first engaged in the mines. He finally located on a ranch in Napa county, thence moved to Oak Glenn in 1865, where he entered land which is now the farm owned by Joseph Wilshire, one of the pioneers of this section. Following this he engaged in freighting to Arizona, and in 1868 was attacked by the Indians while crossing the desert, being wounded with two poisoned arrows, from the effects of which he never fully recovered. He managed, however, to stampede the Indians with a gun, and unhitching one horse left the others and rode this one to Aqua Caliente, under attack the greater part of the way and bleeding profusely from his wounds. He located in San Timoteo cañon and engaged as a farmer until his death, which occurred in 1871. His wife survives him and makes her home with her son. They were the parents of eight children, four of whom are living.

The second child in the family of his father, Eugene Maclove Van Deventer was reared on his father's farm in Southern California and educated in the public schools until he was thirteen years old, when by the death of his father he and his older brother took charge of the home farm of one hundred and sixty acres. He remained at home until his marriage, which took place May 17, 1881, uniting him with Miss Martha Jane Singleton, a native daughter of San Bernardino county; he then purchased his present property, consisting of one hundred and fourteen acres adjoining the James Singleton property, and on this made all the improvements, set out an orchard of six acres in prunes and two acres in apricots, ten acres were devoted to alfalfa, and the balance of the ranch, since increased by eighty acres, is given over to the raising of grain and hay. His ranch is located eleven miles from Redlands, where he has an excellent market for all his produce. To himself and wife have been born three children, Cyrus E., who graduated from the high school in 1905; Arthur, who will graduate in 1908; and Grover, who will graduate in 1909. He takes a keen interest in educational affairs, and has served for years as a trustee of the San Timoteo district, officiating for a time as clerk of the board. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and in politics votes the Democratic ticket. Mrs. Van Deventer died November 6, 1903.

JOHN TERRIBILINI. As proprietor of the Live Oak dairy in the Yucaipe valley John Terribilini is one of the successful and enterprising citizens of Riverside county. He is a native of Tessini, Switzerland, where he was born May 12, 1873; his father, Joseph, was born there as was also his mother, Julia (Garbani) Terribilini, and there both passed away, the father having engaged all his life as a farmer and merchant. They had four children, of whom two are living, the only one in California being John, the subject of this review. He was reared in his native county and educated in its common and high schools, after which, in the spring of 1889, he came to California. He located in Winchester (now in Riverside county), and secured employment in a dairy, and followed a similar employment in the Martin dairy of Riverside. Two years later he went with H. D. Noland, and there managed his employer's dairy for seven years, after which he purchased the interests of Mr. Noland, who retired from business. He followed this business for a number of years and built up a large dairy, having as many as one hundred and twenty cows at a time, the product being retailed in the city, and also utilized in the creamery which he established, where he manufactured butter and cheese. In 1903 he sold this enterprise and locating in the Imperial country entered three hundred and twenty acres of land, placed it under irrigation, and began the raising of alfalfa and the conduct of a dairy. Leasing his ranch in October two years later he returned to Riverside county and purchased the Bonita dairy, which he conducted until July, 1906, then sold it, and in August sold his farm in Imperial, and in Riverside county purchased a ranch of one hundred and twenty acres, where he has a pumping plant, a twenty horse-power gasoline engine, with a capacity of one hundred and sixty inches. This ranch is devoted exclusively to the raising of alfalfa. He also owns business property in Long Beach, where he has invested for future profits. In January, 1907, he leased the Live Oak dairy in the Yucaipe valley and here has one of the largest enterprises of its kind in this section, milking one hundred and seventy-five cows, and retailing the product in Redlands.

E. D. Mosher

In Riverside Mr. Terribilini was united in marriage with Miss Bonnie Woolfolk, a native of Texas, and born of this union is one son, John Horace. Fraternally Mr. Terribilini is identified with the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World, of Redlands, and politically he is a stanch Republican.

EZRA DAVIS MOSHER. A career which began in Bradford, Pa., February 3, 1837, and closed in Pomona, Cal., June 20, 1897, represented a life of over sixty years of busy usefulness, of which four had been spent in the latter city. His father, Erastus Mosher, was a native of the Empire state, but during his younger years he removed south into the adjoining state of Pennsylvania, where a number of his children were born. It was in 1848 that with his wife and children he removed to Wisconsin, settling on a farm near Argyle, Lafayette county, where he later died, as did also his wife, formerly Polly Smith, she too being a native of New York state. Two of their nine children sacrificed their lives in their country's cause, Frank and Dallas dying on the field of battle.

Of his parents' large family Ezra D. Mosher was the third in order of birth, and could clearly recall the interesting journey which brought the family from Pennsylvania to Wisconsin, he then being eleven years of age. He attended the common schools of the latter state and to prepare himself for business life he learned the carpenter's trade. It was in 1860, when twenty-three years of age, that he struck out for himself independently, removing that year to Neosho Rapids, Lyon county, Kans., following his trade there for some time. Subsequently he put to practice his knowledge of agriculture. He began in a modest way with only forty acres, adding to it from time to time as his means would permit, until he finally laid claim to four hundred acres of the finest land in the state. As he was a carpenter as well as a farmer it goes without saying that his buildings were of the best, and taken all in all he had one of the finest farms in the state. During the Price invasion in that part of the country he assisted in the restoration of peace and quiet as a member of the state militia.

After thirty-three years of successful farming in Kansas Mr. Mosher sold out his entire holdings in that state and removed to California, coming at once to Pomona, where the remainder of his life was passed. Two miles south of the town he purchased a ranch of fifty-five acres which he devoted to raising alfalfa and otherwise improved the property, making it one of the fine estates for which this part of California is noted. In the family residence which he erected at the corner of Palomares and Holt avenues his earth life came to a close June 20, 1897, when in his sixty-first year, and when it would seem that many years of usefulness yet lay before him.

In Neosho Rapids, Kans., Mr. Mosher formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Sarah Jane Harper, the ceremony being performed October 28, 1866. She was born near Madison, Ind., the daughter of George R. Harper, who was born in Crawford county, Pa. The grandfather, George Henry Harper, was also a native of that state, and throughout his life followed farming and stock-dealing, first in Pennsylvania, later in Indiana, and still later in West Union, Iowa, where he died. His son, George R. Harper, was a merchant in that place until 1857, in which year he removed to Neosho Rapids, Kans., where as captain of a local militia company he did valiant service during the border ruffian difficulties, taking a prominent part in the Quantrell and Price raids. After relinquishing his mercantile interests in Neosho Rapids he removed to Hartford, where his death occurred at the age of sixty-two years. In his young manhood he married Miss Mary Jane McCullough, who was born in Ripley county, Ind., the daughter of John McCullough, a native of old Virginia. Removing from the south he took up farming in Indiana, later was likewise engaged in Iowa, and finally removed to Lyon county, Kans., and there both himself and wife passed away. Of the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. Harper six are living, Mrs. Mosher being the next to the oldest of the family. She was educated in Kansas. Of the thirteen children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mosher we mention the following: Achsa Jane became the wife of Arthur Roach and they reside in Pomona; Ella Dora is a teacher in Glendora; George Erastus is a graduate of dental surgery and is practicing his profession in Pomona; Emma Nora is the wife of Frank W. Johnson and resides in Pomona; Mabel May is the wife of Ernest Morgan, they making their home in Honolulu; Orra Ruth married Charles Carter, of Pomona; Eva Laura, with her husband, Arthur Waters, lives in Ontario; and Maude E., Blanche O., John A., Ezra Davis, Frank R. and Helen Elaine are still at home with their mother. Mr. Mosher was an active member of the Christian Church, with which his wife and family are also associated, and like him too Mrs. Mosher is a liberal contributor to all noble causes which tend toward the uplifting of mankind. With her six youngest children she makes her home on the ranch on the corner of Philadelphia avenue and Reservoir, and in its management carrying out the wise policy maintained by Mr. Mosher during his life. A kind husband and father, his death was deeply lamented, and though he has been gone from their midst nearly ten years, his memory is still held in the deepest reverence.

JACOB STERN. One of the largest general merchandise establishments in Orange county, Cal., is that owned by Mr. Stern and his partner, Mr. Goodman, and located in Fullerton. They make the claim of handling anything from a pin to a threshing machine, as well as from a canary bird to milk cows and other live stock, and from a town lot to a multitudinous parcel of acres. Starting in business in 1889 in an unpretentious way, they first carried a small stock and occupied a building with a frontage of twenty-five feet. Seventeen years of activity has worked a wonderful change in the aspect and no one would recognize their present emporium as having any relation to the humble beginning. As the growth of the business demanded, additions have been built to the nucleus, until the store now has a frontage of two hundred and seventy-five feet, and the amount of capital involved is $500,000. Mr. Goodman takes entire charge of the store in Fullerton, while Mr. Stern has under his supervision the hay and grain business and the real estate business, and makes his headquarters at No. 404 Huntington building, Los Angeles. Three-fourths of the hay and grain business of Orange county passes through Mr. Stern's hands. Much of the real estate handled and owned by the firm lies in Orange and Los Angeles counties, also some outside property located in the east, north and west. Personally Mr. Stern owns land in Imperial, San Diego county, also considerable property in the northern part of the state, and with that in other towns in Orange and Los Angeles counties aggregates over twenty thousand acres. He also owns several buildings in Los Angeles, and is interested in the firm of Stern Brothers, Anaheim, being associated with his brother in the merchandise business. Besides the interests already enumerated the firm owns a store building in Placentia, and oil wells in Olinda, Orange county, where they also conduct a general merchandise business.

Jacob Stern is a native of the Fatherland, born in Saxony September 20, 1859. Considering his parents' circumstances, he was given a good education, attending first the common schools and later a business college in his native country. From the time of leaving school until reaching his twentieth year he assisted his parents on the homestead farm, marketing the livestock and produce. In 1884 he determined to emigrate to America. Embarking from the German port of Hamburg, in June, 1884, in due time his vessel dropped anchor in the harbor at New York. Making his way to Cleveland, Ohio, he obtained a position in the wholesale clothing store of Lehman, Richman & Co., filling it for five years, at the end of which time, in 1889, he came to Fullerton and formed the partnership with Mr. Goodman, as previously stated.

In Los Angeles, in 1891 Mr. Stern was married to Miss Sarah Laventhal, a daughter of E. Laventhal, a pioneer settler in the county. During the earlier years of their married life Mr. and Mrs. Stern made their home in Fullerton, Mrs. Stern's native city, but in July, 1904, they purchased Colonel Northam's beautiful home in Hollywood on the corner of Vine and Prospect streets, where the family have since lived. Four children add brightness and cheer to the home, as follows: Harold, Elsa, Helen and Eugene.

Mr. Stern joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Fullerton an is also identified with the Fraternal Aid, while in his political preferences he is a Republican. Mr. Stern is a fair representative of the men that have accomplished so much in the advancement of all the enterprises of this great western country—energetic, forceful, progressive. Starting out in this new world a total stranger and with little means, what Mr. Stern has accomplished in the meantime is little short of marvelous and displays the quality of his mettle as no mere words can.

ENOCH K. PARRISH. The late Enoch K. Parrish is remembered as one of the upbuilding factors in the life of San Bernardino county, to which section he came in the pioneer days of the state. He was born in Brownsville, Jefferson county, N. Y., August 6, 1835, a son of Ezra and Susanna (Sherwin) Parrish. The father was born in Jefferson county, N. Y., May 4, 1804, and there grew to manhood, becoming a ship calker at Sackett's Harbor and also followed farming. He eventually removed to Missouri, thence to Illinois and to Council Bluffs, Iowa, from there crossing the plains in 1852 to Salt Lake City, where he engaged as a farmer. His last days were spent in California with his son, his death occurring at the age of seventy-nine years. The mother was a native of the same place in New York state and a daughter of Azariah Sherwin. She died in San Bernardino at the advanced age of eighty-six years. They became the parents of seven children, of whom three are now living.

The youth of Enoch K. Parrish was spent in Missouri, Illinois, Iowa and Utah, in all of which he attended the public schools in pursuit of an education. Early in the '50s he crossed the plains to Salt Lake with his parents, and remained at home until 1857, when he came to San Bernardino by mule-teams and engaged in farming on Mill street. In December, 1867, he purchased the property now owned by his widow, and in March of the following year he located with his family in Yucaipe. He improved the place and built a residence, barns, etc., and also homesteaded a place, and added by purchase until he owned three hundred and twenty-seven acres. His death occurred in Redlands July 5, 1904, removing from the community a helpful and practical citizen and one whose efforts were always given toward the upbuilding of the country. He was a Democrat in politics and gave his influence to support this party.

In Beaver City, Utah, December 7, 1863, Mr. Parrish was united in marriage with Miss Susan M. Merchant, who was born in New South Wales, Australia. Her father, Richard Merchant, was born in England and became one of the first settlers of New South Wales, making the trip to Australia on one of the first ships that carried free citizens to that country. He leased land and engaged in farming and improved property, making that place his home until his death. He married in Australia Elizabeth Barnes, a native of England, and after the death of her husband she brought her family to America in 1856. They located in San Bernardino and in December of the following year went to Utah, where she resided until her death, which occurred in June, 1863. Of the family of twelve children born to her parents Mrs. Parrish was among the youngest; she was reared to the age of twelve years in Australia, after which she accompanied her mother on the boat Jennie Ford to America, coming via Honolulu to San Pedro, where they landed in August, 1856. Since her husband's death she has resided on the old home place, and has continued to add to its improvements, the land being irrigated by running water. A large apple orchard contributes to the income from the place, where they deal largely in the raising of potatoes.

She is the mother of the following children: Esther M., wife of Stephen Covington, of Beaumont; Ezra K., teaming in Redlands; Charles H., a carpenter of Redlands; William E., of Dixon, Cal.; Maude S., wife of Hugh Livingston, of Redlands; John Chester, a farmer of Yucaipe; Frank M., in charge of the home place. Two children, James L. and George R., died aged respectively twenty and thirteen years.

JOHN N. SMITH. A pioneer of Los Angeles county and one of its successful ranchers and fruit growers, John N. Smith holds a high place in its citizenship. He is a native of Ohio, his birth having occurred in Cuyahoga county December 21, 1832, his parents being John G. and Nancy (Burnside) Smith, natives respectively of New York and Ohio, the mother a cousin of the famous General Burnside of Civil war fame. A more complete history of the Smith family will be found in the biography of James A. Smith, which is found elsewhere in this volume. In the common schools of Ohio John N. Smith received his education and then went to work with his father in a steam sawmill. During the six years in which he was so occupied he also learned the moulder's trade, and followed it for a time in Ohio, and later in South Bend, Ind., eventually returning to the sawmill business and giving that the greater part of his attention. He finally became interested in farming and was located for a time in Ohio; going to De Kalb county, Ill., he rented land for four years, and then went to Nebraska and took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres. He improved this property and farmed there for eleven years, raising broom corn extensively, the first car of this product shipped from the state being from his farm. He finally decided to locate on the Pacific coast, and accordingly came to California and in Sacramento engaged in ranching for two years, and in 1879 located in Norwalk. In the same year he returned to Nebraska and sold out his interests in that state and with the proceeds purchased his present ranch in 1881, originally consisting of eighty acres, of which twenty acres have since been given to his son. The property was a sheep camp without improvements, and this part of the work has devolved entirely upon Mr. Smith, who has built a residence, barns and outbuildings, and set out trees for shade and fruit. He now has thirty-five acres in a vineyard and has his own winery, in 1906 turning out nine thousand gallons of wine. The balance of the property is devoted to the raising of grain, corn and alfalfa.

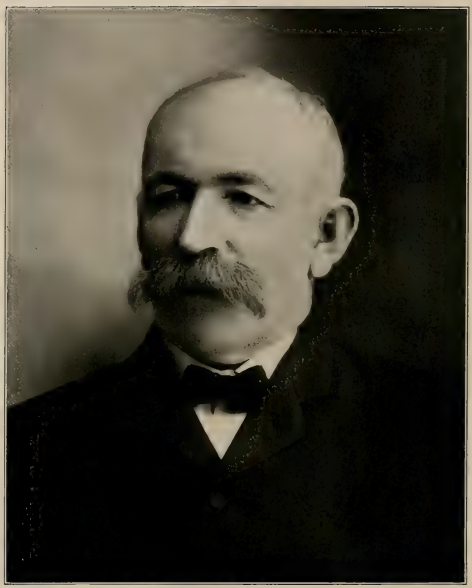
In 1860 Mr. Smith was married to Miss Asenath Cooper, a native of Ohio, and they have three children, namely: Nelson A., married; Theron; and Nancy, wife of John Clanton, of Norwalk. In his political affiliations Mr. Smith is a stanch adherent of Republican principles.

WILLIAM DUNFORD. A name well known in Perris valley is that of William Dunford, who until recently conducted a six hundred acre ranch there, raising hay and grain, and owning a stacker and other haying machinery. In November, 1906, however, he sold out his holdings there and removed to Riverside, where he has associated himself with John Garner in the raising of hogs.



Born August 29, 1872, in St. Joseph, Mo., the son of E. J. and Mary (Shields) Dunford, William Dunford spent his younger boyhood days in his native city. His father was a native of Georgia and his mother of Indiana, and Missouri was one of the frontier states when they removed there in 1853. The senior Dunford was engaged in the hotel business and for many years was proprietor and manager of the Dunford house. In 1883 he removed with his family to Washington county, Kans., and six years later, in 1889, came to the western coast, locating in Perris county, Cal., and adopting the occupation of ranchman. He lived to be a trifle more than four score years, his death occurring December 19, 1905, at the age of eighty-one. His wife survives him and now resides in Perris valley, being at the present time fifty-eight years old. It was in the public schools of St. Joseph, Mo., that William Dunford received his education, and when his father removed to California he came with him, the two being partners in a ranching enterprise until the death of the father. For almost a year thereafter the son continued the business alone, when, as previously stated, he sold the ranch in November, 1906, and removed to Riverside, where he is associated with John Garner in the raising of hogs.

May 23, 1899, William Dunford was married in Los Angeles to Miss May Reynolds and they have become the parents of one child, Edna, who is four years old. The family attends the Congregational Church and liberally supports the charitable and benevolent enterprises of the community in which they reside. Politically Mr. Dunford is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party, and all public social and civic interests receive his intelligent co-operation in their furtherance.

CHARLES HENRY THOMAS. Among the residents of Santa Monica conspicuous for their ability and worth is Charles Henry Thomas, a practical millman and an expert machinist, who is carrying on an extensive and lucrative business, employing in his shop from three to five men daily, increasing the number in busy times. A son of the late Samuel Thomas, he was born in Ogle county, Ill., being the oldest of a family of five children.

The descendant of a Welsh family of note, Samuel Thomas was born and reared in Hagerstown, Md. A young man of high ambitions, he resolved to take advantage of the sale of cheap lands in the then distant west, and in 1845 made his way overland to Illinois, settling near Oregon, Ogle county, where he improved a good homestead, and in addition worked at the trade of a cabinet maker and joiner. Soon after locating in Oregon he married Susan C. Hess, whose parents settled in that vicinity as pioneers in 1839, and there both he and his wife spent their remaining days. He died November 12, 1905, at the age of eighty years, and she died July 23, 1905, aged seventy-seven years.

Having completed his early education in the educational institutions of Ogle county, Charles Henry Thomas went to Maryville, Nodaway county, Mo., where he followed various occupations, and after reading law for a time was admitted to the Missouri bar. For a number of years he practiced his profession most successfully, but gave it up to engage in newspaper work, which, owing to an unfortunate partnership, was not a financial success. Coming to Los Angeles county April 27, 1887, just as the memorable boom was at its height and the beaches were humming with its real-estate operations, he and his father, who accompanied him on the trip, took contracts for building and carried on a successful business in carpentering. Mr. Thomas also purchased land, becoming owner of a house and lot on Tenth street, where he has now a valuable homestead. Giving up carpentering when the boom burst, he entered the employ of the Santa Monica Mill & Lumber Company as foreman, and for eight years had charge of a planing mill. The ensuing six years he was connected with the United Electric Gas and Power Company, and was afterwards associated with the Edison Company. While with the Electric Gas and Power Company he had charge of some very important pieces of work in this county, installing gas plants in many of its cities and towns. An expert mechanic, he embarked in his present business in June, 1905, starting with two partners, both of whom he has since bought out. He has been very successful in the management of his shop, and is fast building up a large business, his patronage being extensive and well-paying.

A Domenzoni

In Maryville, Mo., Mr. Thomas married Anna Williams, and of their union five children have been born, three of whom are living, namely Charles Henry, Ruth Emma and Paul Denslow. Politically Mr. Thomas is a Democrat, and is now serving acceptably as chief of the local fire department of Santa Monica. Fraternally he belongs to the order of Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member and the secretary of both the Royal Arcanum and of the Independent Order of Foresters.

ANGELO DOMENIGONI. The possibilities afforded by California to those seeking a livelihood within its boundaries find illustration in the life of Mr. Domenigoni, who left Europe so poor that he was obliged to leave his family behind and to borrow the money necessary for the paying of his expenses to the new world. Without friends or money he landed in Southern California, where since he has achieved noteworthy success. The valley in Riverside county which bears his name and of which he was the first settler has been his home since the year 1880, when he took up a large tract of government land as yet unsurveyed. The necessity of an immediate survey led him to hire the work done at his own cost, thus entailing an expense of $300. The year following his arrival he was appointed the first postmaster at Winchester and for four years he filled the office. Meanwhile his farming interests rapidly increased in importance, and from time to time he has added to his property until his ranch now embraces three thousand acres, besides which he owns fifteen hundred acres in the San Rafael valley in Lower California.

Of Swiss birth, Mr. Domenigoni was born in the canton of Ticino December 21, 1851, being a son of Anton and Dominica (Gartni) Domenigoni, also natives of that portion of Switzerland lying near the Italian border. The father, though ninety years of age, is remarkably robust and during the year 1906 made the trip to the Alps, walking around and up the mountains a distance of twenty-five miles or more. The mother died in 1873, at the age of forty-five years. After having completed his education in the schools of his native canton, Angelo Domenigoni at the age of seventeen years took up the stone-mason's trade, at which he served an apprenticeship, and later worked as a journeyman in many of the countries of Europe. These travels broadened his mind and were the direct incentive leading him to emigrate from Switzerland to America. May 1, 1874, he landed in New York City, from which point he traveled westward to California and secured work near Stockton. For five years he acted as superintendent of a large dairy in that locality and from there removed to Riverside county, where he embarked in the dairy business at Temecula Station in 1879. His dairy herd comprised fifty head of cows, and the products were sold in the city market. After one year on that place he came to the vicinity of Winchester, where he now owns three thousand acres, improved with a neat ranch-house and substantial barns.

The raising of wheat and barley and the carrying on of a dairy form the principal industries in which Mr. Domenigoni engages. He has three thousand acres in grain, yielding an average of seven sacks per acre from year to year. The year 1906 was exceptionally favorable, the crop averaging much larger than usual. The grain is cut with a combined harvester of thirty-six horse-power. About fifty head of horses are utilized in caring for the crops, and all of these he raises himself, besides which he frequently sells stock to others. In addition to his grain land he has three thousand acres of pasture land, on which he keeps five hundred head of cattle, and each year reduces his herd by the sale of about one hundred head. The Helvetia creamery, of which he is proprietor and which is located on his ranch, comprises seventy cows, and the output (several thousand pounds of butter per annum) finds a ready sale in the Los Angeles markets. In addition to his other enterprises he has a vineyard of five acres and from the grapes manufactures wine for family use.

On coming to the United States Mr. Domenigoni left his wife and two children in the old country. There he had married, November 10, 1870, Mary A. Gorbani, a native of Switzerland. In May, 1882, she joined him in his new home, and they have since labored earnestly and intelligently in the accumulation of their property and the rearing of their six children, Anton, Peter, Jack, Margaretta, Serefina and Sunday. The family are identified with the Catholic faith and aided generously in building the church of that denomination at San Jacinto. In 1893 Mr. Domenigoni visited the World's Fair at Chicago and from there proceeded to his old home in Switzerland, where he enjoyed a pleasant visit among old friends. His father and grandfather for many years served as members of the legislature in Switzerland, but he has never cared to participate in political affairs, preferring to devote himself to the development of his ranch and the management of his business interests. The only office which he ever accepted is that of president of the board of trustees of the Helvetia school district. The organization of this district was due to his efforts, and in order to place the work upon a permanent basis he consented to serve as the first president of the board, an office that he filled for nine years, meanwhile grading the school, improving the property and introducing the best text-books to be obtained for their varied purposes. Every movement for the benefit of the valley and the county receives his quiet but steadfast and stanch support, and he has accomplished much as a rancher, dairyman and grain-raiser, proving by his own success that diligent application and constant labor will bring their own measure of prosperity.

HON. ELI T. BLACKMER. The family represented by this prominent pioneer of San Diego springs from English progenitors and the first record of their settlement in America dates back to 1650, when Peter Blackmer identified himself with the sparsely settled regions of Cape Cod. From him the line of descent is traced through Peter, Jr., Solomon, John and Lewis to Eli T., the latter representing the sixth generation in the new world. John and Lewis Blackmer were born in the vicinity of Warren, Mass., where for a time they engaged in farm pursuits, then took up shoemaking, and later resumed farming, following this occupation until their deaths. The lady whom Lewis chose as his wife was also a member of an old family of the Bay state and was Miss Nancy Keep, a native of Worcester county, where her father, Chellis Keep, followed the blacksmith's trade. Her death occurred in Connecticut when she was eighty-nine years and five months old. Of their twelve children, six sons and six daughters, four sons and six daughters grew to maturity, and three sons living in California, and three daughters in New England. The eldest son, Eli T., was born at New Braintree, Mass., February 14, 1831, and from the age of three years was reared at North Brookfield, also in Worcester county, Mass. There he was a pupil in the grammar schools and also attended the high school, after which he learned the shoemaker's trade and then worked at Chicopee, Hampden county, in the employ of the Ames Manufacturing Company.

During a short period of the Civil war (from July, 1862, to November of the same year) Mr. Blackmer was a volunteer in Company A, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, of which he was elected and commissioned first lieutenant, but after a brief service he was obliged to resign his commission owing to the failure of his health. As soon as he was able to resume work he became identified with a musical organization traveling from New York, and from there in 1866 he removed to Indianapolis, where he engaged in the music business. A year later he went to Chicago and opened a music store, but this he soon sold and turned his attention to the tuning of pianos. In 1873 he came to California for the benefit of his wife's health, and on the 12th of October arrived in San Diego, coming from San Francisco on the old Orizaba, commanded by Captain Johnson. In 1874 he opened on H street the first music house in San Diego and this he conducted until February of 1888, when he sold out. Meanwhile he taught voice culture, trained choruses, gave lessons on the violin, etc., acted as instructor of music in public and private schools and was director of the Philharmonic Society for six years. This was the beginning of the present standing of San Diego as a musical center. Later he made a specialty of tuning and renting pianos, but in 1894 retired from that business and has since had no business interests aside from the management of his property holdings. In his family there were two children. The daughter, Nettie, married F. M. Lewis and resides in Philadelphia, Pa., and the son, Leon, makes his home in Gardner, Worcester county, Mass.

The Republican party has received the support of Mr. Blackmer ever since its organization. In 1879-80 he served as superintendent of the schools of San Diego county. As a member-at-large from San Diego county he attended the constitutional convention in 1880 and served as member of the committee on education and as chairman of the committee on amendments. For five years he filled the office of library trustee. Personally he is a man of admirable attributes of character. A love of travel, as well as the management of his business affairs, led him to make frequent trips to the east, and he has a record of fourteen trips across the continent. To one of his genial, warm-hearted qualities, the fraternities present the attractions of comradship and congenial association, and for years he has been active in various organizations of such a nature. Among these is Heintzelman Post No. 33, G. A. R., of which he served as commander at one time. In San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M., he was made a Mason and served as master, besides having been secretary of the lodge since 1896, and since 1898 has served as secretary of the board of relief. For three terms he officiated as high priest of San Diego Chapter, R. A. M., and for years was an officer of the Grand Chapter and in April of 1898 he was elected grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of California. With the Scottish Rite bodies he is identified as follows: Lodge of Perfection, in which he has officiated as venerable master since 1896; Chapter of Rose Croix, in which he acts as master of Ceremonies; Council of Kadosh, in which he is second sub-preceptor; and the Consistory, in which he served as minister of state. In addition, he has been chosen Knight Commander of the Court of Honor, and is also identified with the San Francisco Commandery of the Loyal Legion.

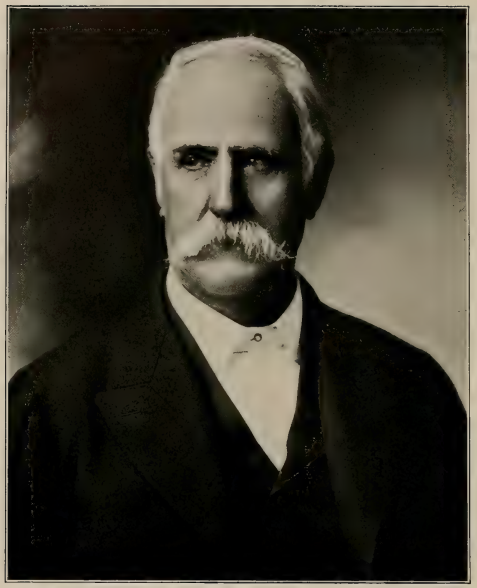
THOMAS VINCENT COONY. Among the skillful mechanics and energetic business men of Ocean Park conspicuous for their ability and integrity is Thomas Vincent Coony, one of the leading plumbers of the place. Paying strict attention to his business, he has met with encouraging success since locating here and has built up an extensive and remunerative patronage. A son of Alfred Coony, he was born in Edina, Knox county, Mo., where his grandfather, Patrick Coony, was an early pioneer, settling there in 1846, when the country was in its original wildness.

Born in Ohio, Alfred Coony accompanied his parents to Missouri, and when ready to start in life for himself established himself as a merchant in Edina. In 1901 he came with his family to California, giving up farming, in which he had previously been engaged for a few years, and is now living retired from active pursuits in Santa Monica. He married Harriet Winterbottom, and they reared a family of ten children, of whom nine are living, seven sons and two daughters.

Educated in the common schools of Missouri and western Kansas, Thomas V. Coony subsequently went to Denver, Colo., where he learned the plumber's trade, which he followed for a time in that city. Coming to Los Angeles in 1895, he remained there a year, and then went to Mexico. From there he returned to the United States, and after visiting in New Mexico and many of the principal cities of the western states, including Omaha, Kansas City, Salt Lake City and San Francisco, he spent a year in Topeka, Kans. Returning then to California, he worked as a journeyman plumber in Los Angeles until 1902, when he established himself in business in Ocean Park, opening a shop of his own, which he has conducted successfully from the start, his record as a skillful workman being above reproach.

In Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Coony married Katherine Kennelly, a native of New York state, and they have one child, Thomas E. Politically Mr. Coony is independent, voting as his conscience dictates, without regard to party restrictions.

ALBERT ARTHUR THOMAS. The chief of police of San Diego is a member of an old southern family descended from Welsh progenitors. Of Virginian birth, his father, James B., removed to Ohio at an early age and then settled at Springfield, Ill., where he followed the occupations of millwright and builder. Becoming a pioneer of Iowa in 1844, he took up the difficult task of clearing a farm and supporting his family in the midst of frontier surroundings. During the fall of 1856 he removed to the frontier on the Des Moines river near the Minnesota and Iowa state line, where he had large herds of cattle on the plains. Indians were numerous and hostile and the while settlers fortified their cabins in preparation for attacks. Early in the year 1857, at the time of the massacre at Spirit lake, Mr. Thomas helped to defend the white people from the onslaughts of the savages and lost an arm in the fight. One of his sons, William, was shot on the doorstep of their home, and after the family had hastily fled for Fort Dodge, Iowa, an infant daughter died en route from exposure. As it seemed unwise to again establish the family so far from civilization, he settled in Marshall county, Iowa, and opened a mercantile store at Marietta. Later he became interested in farming, and that occupation he was following when he died in 1865, at the age of fifty-five years. After settling in Illinois he married Irene Clark, daughter of John Clark, and a native of Illinois, but now a resident of Marshall county, Iowa.



In a family of nine children, six of whom survive, Albert Arthur Thomas was next to the oldest and is the only one to settle in California. Born in Springfield, Ill., September 2, 1844, his early recollections are associated with the frontier of Iowa and the primeval conditions then characteristic of that country. Early in life it was necessary for him to aid in the support of the family and, while working on the farm, he learned lessons of thrift, self-reliance and perseverance, of inestimable value to him in later years. In addition to public-school alvantages he enjoyed a course of instruction in the Lutheran College of Albion, Marshall county, Iowa, and afterward clerked in his father's store and worked on the home farm. In 1862 he offered his services as a volunteer in the Union army, but was rejected. However, he was more successful when in June of 1864 he again volunteered in the defense of the Union. At Davenport he was mustered into Company G, Forty-fourth Iowa Infantry, and went with his regiment to the south, serving principally in Tennessee, where he was promoted to be a corporal. At the close of the war he was mustered out at Muscatine, Iowa, and returned to farm pursuits.

The marriage of Mr. Thomas took place in Marshall county, Iowa, March 14, 1867, and united him with Miss Harriet A. Hixson, who was born in Jamestown, Greene county, Ohio, being a daughter of Dr. O. F. and Elizabeth (Dawson) Hixson, natives of Harpers Ferry, W. Va. Her maternal grandfather, John Dawson, removed from West Virginia to Ohio and followed the tanner's trade at Jamestown. Dr. Hixson also removed from West Virginia to Ohio and settled at Jamestown, where he engaged in the practice of medicine. Eventually he became a resident of Marshall county, Iowa, and there remained until death. Long before the outbreak of the Civil war he espoused the cause of anti-slavery and was a stanch abolitionist in the days when that word was used as a term of reproach and contempt. Among his nine children there were three sons, John, Erasmus and George, who served as Iowa volunteers in the Union army, and John rose to the command of a company.

Removing to Nebraska in 1869 Mr. Thomas settled in Lyons, Burt county, at a period so early in the settlement of the village that Mr. Lyons and family were the only other residents of the hamlet. For three years he carried on a general store and then operated a farm adjoining the town. Meanwhile he had become prominent in local Republican politics and on that ticket, in the fall of 1879, he was elected sheriff, after which he removed to Tekamah, the county seat. Upon the expiration of his term as sheriff in 1881 he was elected county clerk and two years later was chosen to succeed himself in that office, which he filled until the 1st of January, 1886. Not long afterward he closed out his interests in Nebraska and arranged for removal to the west. April 7, 1887, he came to San Diego, where he engaged in the real-estate business, but like all others similarly interested, he suffered heavy losses in the reaction subsequent to the memorable "boom." Later he set out an orchard of ten acres of lemons, also continued in the real-estate business and built his present resident on the corner of Third street and Ash. For five years he was employed as a conductor on the San Diego electric streetcars and for some years he was one of the inspectors in the customs service, resigning that position to accept the appointment as chief of police, tendered him in June, 1903, by Mayor F. P. Frary. Under re-appointment by Captain Sehon he is now serving his second term as the head of the police department. He is a member of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, belongs to the Union League Club, is identified with Boomer Post, G. A. R., and with his wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. While in Nebraska he was made a Mason in Tekamah Lodge No. 35, A. F. & A. M., and now holds membership with San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M. Both of his daughters have married and now reside further east, so that he and his wife are alone in their home by the seashore. The older daughter, Ella M., became the wife of O. G. Tabor, of Holton, Kans., and the younger daughter, Frances, married Dr. J. U. Scott of Missouri, who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Harrisonville, that state.

FELIPE J. CAZAS. With the exception of three years while in Lower California Felipe J. Cazas has spent his life in Southern California. On February 5, 1854, he was born in Ventura county, the son of Paul and Ramona (Bemis) Cazas. The father, a native of Mexico, fought in the Mexican war, and his death occurred in Ventura; the mother, who was born in Ventura, died in 1883. The education of Mr. Cazas was received through the medium of the common schools of Ventura county and in 1869 he removed to Los Angeles county, locating in the San Fernando valley. In 1871 he returned to Ventura county, remaining for three years, when he again came to this section of the state. The three years following 1875 he spent in Lower California and the remainder of his life thus far has been spent in farming on his present ranch, located six miles south of Temecula. He is also interested to some extent in honey production, owning thirty-four colonies of bees which yield him a nice income.

W. O. Graham

In 1885, in Temecula, Mr. Cazas was married to Louisa Ayal, who is a native of Riverside county, and of this union six children have been born: Sarah, Estefana, Joseph, Louisa, Marie and Louis. They are members of the Catholic Church and contribute liberally to the support of all enterprises tending to elevate and upbuild the community in which they make their home. Mr. Cazas is an enterprising and progressive citizen and possesses many sterling qualities which have won for him the highest esteem and respect of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

WILLIAM OTTERBINE GRAHAM. The development of the walnut industry as one of the profitable enterprises of California may be attributed to the sagacity and perseverance of a comparatively small number of men, among whom mention belongs to Mr. Graham of Whittier, a horticulturist who has ever been anxious to experiment with new methods in order to ascertain those that are the most practical and successful. Through a long series of experiments he has arrived at a certain theory and definite conclusion regarding the growing of walnuts, and the value of his plan of work is proved by his success with the trees. When he came to Whittier he bought twenty-five acres from B. F. Maxim, the same forming a part of the old Gunn and Hazard tract, watered by the old Banta ditch, but wholly unimproved. Immediately after the purchase of the property he set out walnut trees, which are of such value that he has been offered $800 per acre for the orchard. However, as he has no desire to change his place of residence, he has declined all offers.

In his care of the orchard Mr. Graham has adopted a method as unique as it is successful. Briefly stated, his plan is as follows: In the spring the weeds are allowed to grow tall, for the weeds that are so obnoxious to a grain farmer are a blessing to the orchardist. After the rains of April and May he uses a disk plow to turn the soil to a depth of ten or twelve inches, then harrows the land. During the latter part of July he irrigates by means of a system of furrows. A stream of water is turned into each of six furrows between rows of trees forty feet apart, and from forty-eight to sixty hours are allowed for irrigation, after which he harrows the ground crosswise and then uses the Killifor weed-knife cultivator. Each season he plows deep but once and irrigates but once. Many of his acquaintances are adopting his methods, convinced by his success that his plan of cultivation is judicious. The success of his system entitles him to a place among those men who have benefited their community by the exercise of wise judgment and original methods.

At the family home on the banks of Wills creek in Maryland, near the old Savage Furnace, Mr. Graham was born February 21, 1843, and from there when three weeks old he was taken to Pennsylvania by his parents, William and Sarah Graham. Somewhat later he accompanied the family to Illinois and settled on a farm in Adams county near the Mississippi river, where he was trained to a knowledge of agriculture and to habits of industry and frugality. At the same time he also applied himself to the cabinet-maker's trade, which he learned in youth, and did considerable work in carpentering after his removal in 1884, to Jasper county, Iowa, where also he conducted a farm. While living in Illinois he married Miss Gilly Mustain, who was born in that state and died in Iowa. The two daughters of that union were Sarah Belle (deceased) and Mrs. Gilly J. Wolf. After going to Iowa he was a second time married, his union with Miss Carrie Taylor being solemnized in August of 1886. In March of 1887 he brought his family to California and settled at Garvanza, a suburb of Los Angeles, where he built a house, but remained only a short time. From there he went to Pasadena and took charge of the building of a brick block, after which he filled a contract to build a substantial hotel at Fairmont in the Antelope valley. On the completion of that contract he came to Whittier, where he and his wife and their three children, William J., Millie Elmira and Harry Reuben, have many friends among their circle of acquaintances. In addition to his home place he owns thirty acres of pasture land near by, also a small orange orchard in Whittier, and one hundred and sixty acres in Antelope valley, these various properties representing a considerable monetary value and the accumulations of years of energetic application.

ALBERT DUANE EASTON. Since December, 1905, Mr. Easton has been engaged in the conduct of the Model market, of Ocean Park, and although a resident of this place for so brief a time he has still made for himself a place among the business men and bids fair to acquire a noteworthy success in his venture. He is a native of the middle west, his birth having occurred in Piatt county, Ill., April 10, 1873; when he was but six weeks old his parents, Ezra and Mary (Hodge) Easton (natives respectively of Ohio and Indiana), removed to Iowa and located in Monona county on a farm. For twelve years they remained in that location, engaged in agricultural pursuits, when, in 1885, they came to California and in Colton established their home, Mr. Easton following ranching there. In that place Mrs. Easton died in her thirty-eighth year; she is survived by her husband, who is now living retired in Monrovia.

Of the six children born to his parents, Albert Duane Easton was third in order of birth. His boyhood years were spent in Iowa and California, and he received his education in the public schools of both states, eventually attending the high school of Colton. In young manhood he learned the trade of tailor, but not caring for the work he later engaged in the grocery business. Eventually learning the trade of butcher in Colton, he opened a shop in Los Angeles, and later was located in various cities of the state, among them, San Francisco and San Jose, in the latter city conducting the business of the noted Saratoga Market. Coming to Ocean Park, in December, 1905, he purchased the Model market and has conducted the same since, with every prospect of meeting with entire success.

By his marriage Mr. Easton has one daughter, Roberta Lillian. In his political convictions he is identified with the Republican party, while socially he is esteemed for the many qualities of manhood as displayed by him in both his business and social life.

JOHN VERPLANK LARZALERE, M. D.

Noteworthy among the influential and respected citizens of Escondido is J. V. Larzalere, M. D., a well-known physician, who, now in the prime of life, is following a career of usefulness, being exceptionally well fitted for the duties of his responsible position. His skill and ability and his thorough knowledge of medicine have won for him the confidence of the community to such an extent that his success is assured, and his patronage is of the best and most lucrative. A son of John Larzalere, he was born, January 28, 1859, in Waterloo, N. Y.

The lineal descendant of a family that emigrated from France to the United States in colonial days, John Larzalere was born in New York state more than eighty years ago. When a young man he learned the trade of harnessmaker, which he followed successfully for a number of years. Enlisting during the Civil war in Company H, One Hundred and Forty-eighth New York Volunteer Infantry, he was detailed as a harness maker, and served in that capacity during his term of enlistment. After the war he was machinist and superintendent of a woolen mill in Waterloo, N. Y., where he is now living, retired from active business. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He married Maria Schick, a native of Fayette, Seneca county, N. Y. Her father, David Schick, was born in Pennsylvania, of German ancestry, and was for many years engaged in business in Fayette, N. Y., being a stock-dealer, a butcher and a merchant. She died at the early age of thirty-seven years, leaving six children, four of whom are living, J. V., the subject of this sketch, being the only one on the Pacific coast.

Brought up in Waterloo, N. Y., J. V. Larzalere there laid the foundation for his future education, attending the public schools and the village academy. After studying medicine for awhile with Dr. John W. Day, of Waterloo, in 1881 he entered the University of Buffalo, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1884. Immediately beginning the practice of his profession with Dr. Day in Waterloo, he remained there a year, and in the mean time served as county physician. Going then to Poplar Ridge, Cayuga county, N. Y., he continued there as a practitioner for a number of years, meeting with excellent success. Coming to San Diego county, Cal., in 1895, he was engaged in his professional labors at National City for a year, succeeding Dr. Buxton. Locating in Escondido in 1896, he has built up a large and lucrative practice in this city, his natural talents and industry placing him among the most able physicians of this part of the county. In the treatment of diseases, the doctor uses the most modern methods, and in his finely equipped office he has a static electrical apparatus, with an X-ray attachment and all forms of electricity used in the treatment of diseases. He is local surgeon at Escondido for the Santa Fe Railroad Company, in this direction ably performing the duties devolving upon him. In 1901, Dr. Larzalere, ambitious to keep up to the times in his professional work, went to New York City to take a post-graduate course at the New York Hospital College.

The doctor is much interested in horticulture, and for a few years had twelve acres of oranges and lemons. He has recently sold five acres, and has now seven acres, all under irrigation, on which he built his present two-story residence, lying one and one-half miles east of the city. Since coming to Escondido he has taken a genuine interest in local affairs, and was one of the directors of the Irrigating District at the time of the work that was carried on in connection with the committee of fifteen that were successful in raising money to settle the bonds, which were burned upon liquidation, the directorate being then dissolved. He is president of the Escondido Chamber of Commerce, and has served one term of the board of health in Escondido district.

In Poplar Ridge, N. Y., Dr. Larzalere married Frances E. Peckham, a native of that place, and they have three children, namely: Ray V., a pupil in the high school, belonging to the class of 1907; Lena M.; and Harriet E. Politically the doctor is a zealous supporter of the principles of the Republican party and an ex-member of the county central committee, being a delegate to the state convention in 1906. Professionally he belongs to the County, State and American, Medical Associations. Fraternally he is a member and past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias; is a past officer and district deputy of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, with which he united at Poplar Ridge, N. Y.; is a member and the medical examiner of both the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America; is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters; and a member of the Knights and Ladies of Security. Religiously Mrs. Larzalere belongs to the Congregational Church, towards the support of which the doctor contributes willingly and liberally.

RICHARD J. WELTY. A goodly number of the men who were identified with the early American colonization of Southern California have been spared to witness its remarkable development and prosperity. Included in this class may be mentioned Richard J. Welty, who since the year 1866 has made his home in this section of the country and who has been a factor in its material growth. Born and reared in Illinois, he became a resident of Iowa in early life and there met and married Miss Mary Singleton, a native of the state. On leaving the settled regions of the Mississippi valley for the unknown and remote locality beyond the desert and the mountains, he traveled with wagon and team across the plains, accompanied by his family. After an uneventful journey of six months he arrived in San Bernardino county, where he established his home and engaged at the carpenter's trade, also for a time worked in a lumber mill on the San Bernardino mountains. When the tide of immigration turned toward San Diego county in 1869 he took up land on the Pala road and for seven years superintended his ranch, which is now occupied by Victor Magee and is known as the McCumber ranch.

Drifting from the occupation of a rancher into the specialty of an apiarist, Mr. Welty established his home at Aguanga and for twelve years engaged in the bee business, meanwhile becoming the owner of four apiaries, which he conducted in a profitable manner. At the same time he had charge of a cattle ranch at San Ignacio. During the year 1885 he came to Temecula, Riverside county, where he still makes his home. Soon after his arrival he bought real estate and erected a building for hotel purposes. Later this was destroyed by fire, and soon afterward he put up the Welty hotel on the same site. For some time this hotel was leased to other parties, but June 17, 1906, Mr. Welty again assumed its management and since then has been its popular and efficient landlord. In addition to this property he owns several houses in Temecula and has ranch property in the locality.

The family of Mr. Welty now comprises the following-named daughters: Nancy E., who married William Kinkead, of Moosa Canon; Matilda A., at home; Hattie A., who was appointed postmaster at Temecula in 1888 and has held the office continuously with the exception of one and one-half years; Laura, wife of Hugh McConville, the well-known liveryman at Temecula; Mattie E., Fronie J. and Allie A. The daughters are educated and refined, possess charitable dispositions and high principles, and in their religious views favor the Baptist and Christian Churches. Miss Hattie A., who has charge of the postoffice, fills the position with characteristic fidelity and tireless energy, and has won the confidence of the patrons of the office by her long and efficient service. Fraternally Mr. Welty long ago became identified with the Masonic Order and has remained to the present time an ardent disciple of the fraternity's principles of brotherhood and charity.

VINCENT SENTOUS, a successful business man of Los Angeles, and one of the old pioneers, was born in Mont Rejeau, in the department of Haute-Garonne, France, August 4, 1857, a son of Francisco and Marie (Fadeuill) Sentous. They were both natives of France, where they passed their entire lives. The father was a farmer and stockman and successful in his efforts, acquiring a competence and a position of prominence among the citizens of his section. He was twice married, having three children by the first union and five by the second, all of whom are located in California. The first of the family to emigrate was John Sentous, who came to California in 1852; this led to another brother, Louis, following in 1855, and in 1874 Vincent Sentous severed his connections with the Mother country, a lad not yet in his eighteenth year and just through his course in college. July 1, 1874, he reached San Francisco and on the 3rd of that month was in Los Angeles and in the sunny land of Southern California. His brothers were already established here in the sheep business, and he at once secured employment with them, beginning on the bottom rung of the ladder and with nothing to presage a future success save his energy, perseverance and industry. Three years later with his accumulated earnings he purchased a flock of sheep and continued the business alone until 1883, when he sold out and in partnership with his brother purchased a meat market on the corner of Los Angeles and Aliso streets, where the firm of Vincent and Exupere Sentous became widely known to an appreciative public. They dissolved partnership in 1903 and Vincent Sentous established a similar enterprise at No. 228 Aliso street, which was first known as the Vincent Sentous Market and later as the New Orleans Market. In addition to this business he is also engaged as an extensive farmer and stockman at Lemon Station, Los Angeles county, where he owns sixteen hundred acres of land, a part of the old San Jose grant. This extensive property is well watered by living streams and springs and much of it can be placed under irrigation. His chief interests here are in the raising of cattle and fine horses, in which he has met with unusual success, and which places him among the prominent farmers of Southern California.

In Los Angeles Mr. Sentous was united in marriage with Miss Zelia Meysan, a native of Columbia, Cal., but reared and educated in Inyo county, this state. Her father, Charles Meysan, was a miner in the early days and later a merchant at Lone Pine, Inyo county. Mr. Sentous is a member of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and is in every way interested in the advancement of the city and the development of its best interests.

CLAUDE WOOLMAN. During an early period in the settlement of America the Woolman family crossed the ocean from England and became identified with the fortunes of the new world, where, as in their old home, they adhered to the doctrines of the Society of Friends and displayed the peace-loving and upright qualities characteristic of the members of that organization. As the trend of emigration drifted toward the Mississippi valley the family were quick to identify themselves with the newer and undeveloped regions whose fertile soils offered a large return for their care and cultivation. Benjamin Woolman, who was a pioneer farmer of Iowa, afterward became an early settler of Nebraska, and eventually established his home at Julesburg, Colo., where he still lives. In his family was a son, J. H. Woolman, who was born in Osceola, Iowa, and became a hardware merchant of York, Neb., but as early as 1882 came to California, where, after a year in National City, he established his headquarters in San Diego, embarking in business as a tinsmith and hardware merchant. For some years he was one of the local leaders of the Republican party, on which ticket he was twice elected to the office of city trustee and also for four years held a position as member of the county board of supervisors. Largely to his tireless labors and enthusiastic support may be attributed the movement which led to the purchase and improvement of City Park on F street, and many other local enterprises of permanent value received the impetus of his support. Eventually he transferred his allegiance to the Democratic party, on which ticket in 1902 he was nominated for the legislature, but suffered defeat. Fraternally he long has affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. A busy life covering fifty-five years has not diminished his physicial powers or mental energies, for he still remains active in business, interested in the issues of the age, intelligently informed concerning matters of general importance, and public-spirited in his support of projects for the general welfare.

While still a resident of Iowa J. H. Woolman married Mary Estes, who was born in Osceola, that state, her father, J. M. Estes, having been a member of an old southern family and for some years a resident of Missouri, but in his last days a citizen of California. There are two children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Woolman. The daughter, Mrs. Ida Maude Deeble, lives in Los Angeles, and the son, Claude, is a business man of San Diego. The latter was born in Clarinda, Iowa, February 3, 1875, and was a small boy when the family removed to the Pacific coast, so that his education was obtained almost wholly in the west. After having graduated from the San Diego grammar school and having taken a course in the San Diego Business College, he learned the plumber's trade under his father's oversight, after which for five years he was connected with McKinzie Brothers (now the Western Metal Supply Company) and as a traveling salesman in Southern California and Arizona for three years he opened up the territory for them and established an excellent business in their line.

Upon resigning from the company's employ in the fall of 1904, Mr. Woolman formed a partnership with A. J. Bradley under the firm title of Bradley & Woolman. The partners purchased a lot and erected a three-story building, 60x30 feet, where now they conduct an undertaking business. The establishment is said to be the finest of its kind in this part of the state and is fitted up in the most modern manner with every convenience. The basement is utilized as an embalming room, stockroom and workroom, while the first floor has the office and reception room, and the second floor contains a chapel with appropriate furnishings. In addition to taking his part in the management of the business, Mr. Woolman has been interested in all movements for the city's development, has maintained a warm interest in the Chamber of Commerce, and until November, 1905, served for some time as a member of the board of police commissioners. For three years he served in the Naval Reserve at San Diego. After the outbreak of the war with Spain he enlisted at Pasadena as a musician in Company I, Seventh California Infantry, and went with the regiment to the Presidio. The course of the war was such that he was not called into action, but after seven months received an honorable discharge at Los Angeles. When an association was organized of the Spanish-American war veterans he became identified with the movement and attended their gathering at Camp Bennington. At different times he has been connected with the majority of the bands of Southern California, and now plays the trombone in the City Guard Band, besides which he is a charter member of the Musicians' Union. In San Francisco, April 21, 1904, he married Miss Edna B. Bradley, only daughter of A. J. Bradley, now of San Diego. Mrs. Woolman was born in Boise City, Idaho, and is a graduate of Mills College, Oakland, an earnest member of the Episcopal Church and a leading worker in the Order of the Eastern Star. In fraternal relations Mr. Woolman is an officer in the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and also a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World and Independent Order of Foresters. Under an appointment, which dates from November 26, 1905, he fills the office of city treasurer and tax collector, in which work he has proved painstaking, efficient, prompt and trustworthy, a strict guardian of the city's funds, a careful accountant and an honorable representative of the people in an office of trust and responsibility.

PATRICK DONOVAN

PATRICK DONOVAN. Rising from poverty to independence and from obscurity to prominence in his county, Patrick Donovan proved himself to be the possessor of the faculties that lead to success. Nor was his prosperity alone that of gaining a valuable ranch by dint of persevering energy and wise judgment. He was also successful in winning friends and in gaining the respect of associates. When he passed from his labors into rest there was none to say an unkind word of his character; on the other hand, all united to bestow tributes of praise upon the man whose progressive character they admired, whose kindness of heart had often been proved, and whose generosity to those in need was one of the leading traits of his disposition. Throughout all of his active life he was a friend of higher education for the rising generations; having been deprived of educational advantages himself, he realized their value and was solicitous that others might enjoy the privileges he was denied.

Born in County Cork, Ireland, February 22, 1840, Patrick Donovan was a brother of Daniel Donovan whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. On attaining the age of twenty-one years he came to the United States and settled in Boston, where he was employed as a longshoreman. Two years later, in 1863, he came to California and made a brief sojourn at Watsonville, Santa Cruz county, after which he carried on a farm in Monterey county for three years. Next he came to Santa Barbara county and remained for three years at Guadaloupe. From there he removed to Nipomo, San Luis Obispo county, where he was engaged in ranching for five years. Eventually he came to the vicinity of Arroyo Grande and bought a ranch of four hundred and seventy-five acres, of which a considerable portion is under cultivation to beans and grain. On this place he remained until his death, which occurred at the age of sixty-six years, March 16, 1906.

The marriage of Mr. Donovan occurred in 1867 and united him with Jane McCarty, who came to the United States in girlhood from her native place in County Cork, Ireland. There she attended the same school with Mr. Donovan and a mutual attachment was formed. Her parents died in Ireland and she came to America, where she was married in San Francisco. Of her union four children were born. The eldest, Mary, is Mrs. J. E. Adams of Santa Maria. John A. spends a part of the year in looking after the interests of the home ranch, and the remainder of the year is occupied in Arizona, where he is engaged in stock-raising as well as being interested in a number of other enterprises; he is a young man of exceptional abilities, inheriting many fine qualities from his father; honest, capable and energetic, he is making decided progress in his business undertakings and the future has much in store for him; his personal qualities are such as to make him a general favorite and none know him but to admire and respect him. The next child in order of birth is Katie, Mrs. C. Williams, of Los Berros valley. Agnes resides with her mother on the ranch in San Luis Obispo county. The family are identified with the Catholic Church of Arroyo Grande, and Mr. Donovan always contributed generously to the work of the church, in whose faith he passed from earth. Though he never held any offices, he was well posted concerning politics and voted the Democratic ticket at all elections. From the time (1871) that he became a naturalized citizen of the United States he was deeply interested in the political history and material progress of his adopted country, and those born under the stars and stripes were not more loyal to the Union nor more devoted to its prosperity than was Mr. Donovan.

JAMES A. JASPER. The history of the Jasper family in America dates back to the colonial settlement of Virginia, whence one of their number crossed the mountains into the wilderness of Kentucky. Among the children of this Kentucky pioneer was a son, Hon. Achilles Jasper, who was born in the Blue Grass state and served as a member of its legislature, also conducted a stock farm there for some years. After a time he became a pioneer of Missouri, settling in Holt county. Eventually in 1853 he removed to Texas, where he died ten miles east of Fort Worth. In his family there was a son, William H., who was born in Kentucky, lived for some years in Holt county, Mo., and in the fall of 1853 removed to Texas, engaging in the cattle business in that state. Not only did he serve throughout the entire period of the Mexican war, but also through the Civil war, and at the expiration of the latter conflict he was a cripple through disability brought on by exposure and privation. Returning from Texas to Missouri, he settled in Clay county, but in 1868 made another change of residence, this time coming to California with his wife and five children via New York and Panama. After one one year at Santa Clara county in 1869 he went to San Luis Obispo county, and in 1870 removed to what was then Los Angeles (now Orange) county, settling at Santa Ana, where he took up horticulture and general ranching. At the time of his death, which occurred November 7, 1900, he was eighty-two years of age.

The marriage of William H. Jasper united him with Mary E. Brown, who was born in Holt county, Mo., and now resides at Santa Ana, Cal. One of her brothers, Rev. Samuel Brown, is a well-known Methodist Episcopal preacher in northern California. Her father, Samuel Brown, who was a pioneer farmer of Holt county, Mo., crossed the plains to California in 1850 with ox-teams and wagon and settled near San Jose, buying an unimproved tract of ranch land. In 1861 he removed via the southern route to Texas and settled in Denton county, but in 1865 returned to Missouri and a year later followed the old California trail across the plains to San Jose, where he remained until his death. There were nine children in the family of William H. and Mary E. Jasper and all but one of these are still living, James A. being next to the eldest in order of birth. While the family were living on a farm in Holt county, Mo., he was born March 7, 1853. His earliest recollections are of Texas, and when he was yet a small child his father left home and entered the army as a volunteer in the Civil war, from which he returned permanently disabled. Upon his son fell the burden of helping to support the family and to educate the younger children, hence he had no opportunity to attend school himself nor did he enjoy any of the advantages that fall to the lot of most boys of the middle class. Yet he was ambitious to acquire knowledge and neglected no opportunity to gain information by reading and self-culture.

Upon leaving home at the age of twenty-six years Mr. Jasper married Miss Mary E. Williams, of Santa Ana, Cal., and began housekeeping at what was known as the old Gospel swamp, four miles south of Santa Ana. However, poor health forced him to abandon agricultural pursuits and he thereupon engaged in merchandising in Santa Ana, but in 1885 removed to Julian, where he engaged in ranching and stockraising. Soon he became interested in newspaper work through the purchase of the Julian Sentinel, which he published every week for eight years and which was noteworthy as the only paper in San Diego county printed away from direct access to telegraph, telephone and railroad. In 1902 he removed to the Imperial country and purchased a farm of two hundred and forty-six acres which he still owns. After he settled on the place he became interested in the digging of the canal and saw the first shovel of dirt thrown up in its construction. After having engaged in raising grain and stock for a few years, in December of 1905 he brought his family to San Diego, where he now resides.

For years Mr. Jasper has been a stanch adherent of the Democratic party and one of its local leaders. The members of his party in the third district in 1892 elected him to represent them on the county board of supervisiors, and he was re-elected in 1896, 1900 and 1904, serving until January, 1906, when he resigned owing to the pressure of other duties. Since 1888 he has been a member of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce and in October, 1905, he was chosen its secretary to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Wood, being duly elected to the office in January following. The organization possesses a membership of five hundred and thirty-five and is, with one exception, the largest in Southern California. In the upbuilding of the town and county it has proved most helpful. Although having for its ultimate aim the attracting of a desirable class of permanent settlers, it yet has been equally helpful in promoting the prosperity of the people already resident here, and has proved a power in the material development of the community.

R. B. Wilson

Fraternally Mr. Jasper holds membership with the Order of Foresters, while in religious views he upholds the doctrines of the Christian Church and is identified with that congregation in San Diego. His wife has been a lifelong resident of California and was born near Watsonville, Santa Cruz county, being a daughter of Isaac and Lydia (Patterson) Williams, who crossed the plains to California respectively in 1844 and 1846. After a brief experience as a miner Mr. Williams settled near Watsonville and planted the first large apple orchard in the Pajaro valley, later becoming a leading horticulturist of the locality. Three children comprise the family of Mr. and Mrs. Jasper, namely: Ralph, who is engaged in ranching near Imperial; Mollie, who married Thomas Doss and resides in Los Angeles; and Virgil, who remains with his parents in their San Diego home.

RUSSELL B. WILSON, a resident of Sherman, Cal., since 1896, was born in Sherburne, Vt., in 1832, a son of Jonathan and a grandson of Ezra Wilson. The latter was a farmer of the pioneer period, being the first white man to settle in Rutland county, Vt. There he hewed a farm out of the timber lands, living on berries and such game as he could kill until the harvest of his first crop, when he carried his wheat on his back to the mill to have it ground into flour. The greater part of his life was spent in Rutland county, where his death occurred at an advanced age. He inherited the valiant spirit of his forefathers—early settlers of the colonies—and during the Revolutionary war served as a Continental soldier. His son Jonathan was reared among the primitive surroundings of a pioneer section and followed farming his entire life, having received a limited education in the rude schools of the day. He was induced by his son to go to Wisconsin, where land was cheap and opportunities greater for a growing family, and in Menomonee took up government land, and with the aid of his sons cleared a farm which remained his home until his death. His wife was formerly Huldah Thompson, also a native of Vermont. They became the parents of thirteen children, twelve of whom were living at the time of their removal to Wisconsin, and one son still makes that state his home.

It was through the influence of Russell B. Wilson that the family fortunes were removed to the middle west, he being then a young man. His education was received in the common schools of Rutland county, which he attended during the winter months and assisted during the summer on the home farm. In 1852 he took a course in the Leoni (Mich.) high school preparatory to taking up educational work, after which he taught in that town for two years. Then going to Minnesota, he took up a quarter section of land in the vicinity of Northfield, cleared it and began farming. Well satisfied with the country he returned to Vermont and induced his parents to locate in Wisconsin, just across the river from his farm in Minnesota. He gave valuable assistance in the clearing of his father's farm and during the winter worked in the lumber camp on the Menominee river. After two years he returned to Northfield and became prominent in public affairs, supporting the principles of the Republican party (having cast his first vote for Fremont) and served for a time in the Minnesota legislature. In 1868 he disposed of his interests in that section and went to Kansas, following contracting and building successfully there for one year.

January 1, 1880, Mr. Wilson started for California and arrived in Los Angeles county on the 10th of that month. He took up a homestead of a quarter section on the slope back of Pasadena, later selling this property to Milton Lindley for the erection of the Esperanza Sanatorium. After having disposed of this interest he engaged in contracting and building in Los Angeles for five years, and with the means thus acquired invested in a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres in the vicinity of Cucamonga. This venture proving disastrous he sold out and in 1896 located in Sherman, where he purchased property which has since become very valuable. Since his location here he has taken great pride in the growth of the place and the improvement of his property, setting out various tropical trees, among them the Mexican lemon guava and the cherimoya or custard apple tree, so named because of the resemblance to custard in consistency. This fruit is prized for its delicate flavor. Mr. Wilson does not raise this for profit, although the market price is from fifty to seventy-five cents each. His friends are liberally supplied with this fruit.

Mr. Wilson was married in 1857 to Miss Mary Potter, a resident of Pittsburg, but a native of Allegheny, Pa., whose death occurred in California. They became the parents of three sons: Russell B., Jr., of Los Angeles; W. W., of Texas; and one son who died at the age of three years. Mr. Wilson is well informed and in touch with current events, keeping abreast of the times by the perusal of the best papers and magazines the country affords, and, although in no sense narrow, he is decided in his opinions, and frank in his utterance of them. He has been an interested spectator of the growth of California and has assisted in every way possible towards its upbuilding.

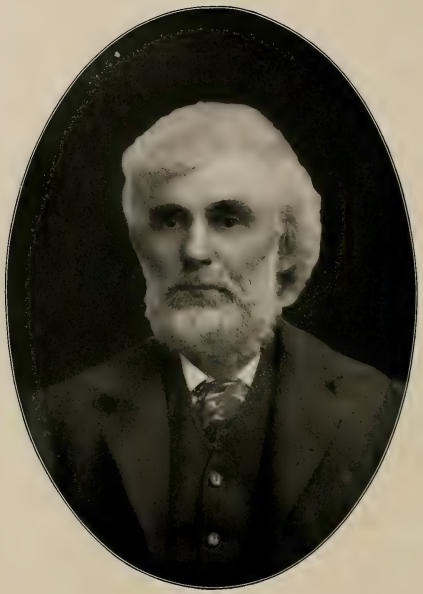
ROBERT L. OWENS. A well-known and respected citizen of Saticoy, and a progressive and prosperous ranchman, Robert L. Owens is closely associated with the agricultural and business interests of this part of Ventura county, and may well be classed as one who has contributed his full share toward its growth and improvement. He is a man of solid worth, possessing in a high degree those traits that command respect in all circles, and win esteem among one's neighbors and associates. A son of David C. Owens, he was born, May 24, 1862, at Glade Spring, Washington county, Va.

Born and reared in Washington county, Va., David C. Owens spent his entire life in the old Dominion state. He was a planter by occupation, raising grain, hay and cereals. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company F, Sixty-third Virginia Volunteer Infantry, in which he served four years. Returning home, he continued in agricultural pursuits until his death, in 1895, at the age of sixty-eight years. He married Sarah O'Neil, who spent her forty-five years of earthly life in Virginia. Of the six children born of their union, Robert L., the subject of this sketch, is the only one living outside of their native state. The father was a stanch Democrat in politics, and, with his wife, belonged to the Baptist Church.



Having first attended the common schools, R. L. Owens completed his early education at the Emory and Henry College, in Emory, Washington county. Beginning the struggle of life for himself, he then went to Florida, where for two years he was clerk in a general store. Coming to California in 1888, he worked as a wage-earner in Saticoy for two years, after which he was employed in ranching on his own account in Los Angeles county for a year having land in Inglewood. Returning to Ventura county in 1891, he leased the Santa Del Norte ranch of two hundred acres, which he is still carrying on, devoting it entirely to the raising of beans, which yield bountiful harvests, averaging twenty-five sacks to the acre. The yield in 1905 was exceptionally large, one hundred acres producing thirty-five sacks to the acre. For some time after locating here, he was engaged in mercantile business in addition to ranching, having a variety store in Saticoy. He disposed of that, however, and purchased seventeen acres of land, which he has set out to walnuts, and here he also has a fine artesian well for irrigating.

December 27, 1893, Mr. Owens married Lillian Kimball, who was born in Sonoma county, a daughter of George Kimball, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Winnifred, Carleton, Leland and Helen. Politically Mr. Owens votes independent of party affiliations, supporting the best men and measures at the polls. Fraternally he is a member of Saticoy Lodge No. 1419, I. O. F. Religiously he attends the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Owens is a consistent member.

JOSEPH W. NICHOLSON. Distinguished alike as a native son of California, and for the noteworthy position that he has won among the rising young business men of Los Angeles county is Joseph W. Nicholson, who is connected with the Compton branch of the San Pedro Lumber Company. Active, energetic and progressive, he had done much to promote the interests of his employers, at all times proving himself capable and reliable. A son of the late F. H. Nicholson, he was born March 18, 1875, in San Jose, Santa Clara county, being there reared and educated.

Although born in New York, F. H. Nicholson began life for himself in Illinois, embarking in mercantile pursuits in Joliet, Will county. Following the tide of emigration westward, he came to California in 1849, and for a few years sought for gold in the mining regions, in his efforts meeting with some degree of success. In 1863 he married Elizabeth Charles, a native of Ireland, and for some time thereafter was located in San Jose, where he engaged in the general merchandise business. In 1879 he removed to Maderia and became cashier and manager of a store belonging to a lumber company. He was a man of good business judgment, and continued in mercantile pursuits until his death, in 1884. To him and his good wife eight children were born, and all are living, namely: Annie M., Frank R., Charles H., Louis F., Edmund A., Joseph W., George H., and Genevieve E. He was a Democrat in politics, and was a member of the Catholic Church, to which his wife also belongs.

Having laid a substantial foundation for his future education in the common schools, Joseph W. Nicholson attended the State Normal school in San Jose. He was then employed in teaching school for a year and a half, meeting with success in his professional work. Since that time he has had charge of the San Pedro Lumber Company's yard in Compton. This company was first organized thirty years ago, being incorporated with a capital of $300,000. In his present position Mr. Nicholson shows a thorough understanding of the details of his business, which he is managing to the entire satisfaction of the company. He is a man of upright character, highly esteemed by his associates. Politically he is identified with the Democratic party, but has never been an aspirant for public office. Fraternally he is a member of the San Pedro Lodge of Elks No. 966, and religiously he is true to the faith in which he was reared, belonging to the Catholic Church.

W. P. Duncan

WILLIAM P. DUNCAN. For many years the late William P. Duncan was well known throughout Compton and its vicinity as an industrious and enterprising farmer, an honorable and upright citizen, a kind neighbor, and a loving husband and father; and his death, which occurred April 15, 1899, on his home farm, was a cause of general regret. A native of Mississippi, he was born, February 23, 1826, in Lowndes county, about three miles from the city of Columbus, where his father, William Duncan, an extensive cotton raiser, had large mercantile interests. William Duncan was born in North Carolina, while his wife, whose maiden name was Jane Dowdle, was a native of Mississippi, and a life-long resident of that state.

Having received such educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools of his boyhood days, William P. Duncan began life for himself as overseer on a plantation, retaining the position several years. In 1851 he went to Texas, where he was engaged in the stock business for upwards of a quarter of a century. Going from there to New Mexico in 1878, he continued in that occupation for about five years, when he disposed of his stock and removed to Kansas City, Mo. Four years later, in 1886, he came with his family to California, just after the completion of the Santa Fe road to Mojave, and for a few months resided in Los Angeles. Investing his money then in land near Compton, he purchased one hundred acres, from which he improved one of the best and most productive ranches in this section of the state. Twenty acres of the original tract were subsequently sold, but still later five acres were added by purchase, the ranch now containing eighty-five acres, upon which Mrs. Duncan and children are carrying on dairying with good results. To the improvements previously inaugurated they are making continual additions, each year adding substantially to its attractiveness and value. Mrs. Duncan also owns one hundred and sixty acres of wheat land in Riverside county, in the Alamos school district.

In 1859, in Texas, Mr. Duncan married Elizabeth J. Hall, who was born in Tennessee, which was also the birthplace of her parents, John M. and Elizabeth (Moore) Hall. Mr. Hall, a stock-raiser and dealer, moved from Tennessee to Texas after the death of his wife, and there spent his last years. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, uniting with that organization about twelve years before he died, and both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan six children were born, namely: John W., who married Dollie Connor, and has one son; James E., who died at the age of forty-one years; Mary P., who died when thirty-nine years old; Robert M., of Arizona; and David P., and Harry H., living at home. Politically Mr. Duncan was a strong Democrat. Mr. Hall, Mrs. Duncan's father, was also a Democrat, and four of his sons served in the Civil war on the Confederate side.

JOHN JOHNSTON. A man of great mental attainments, untiring industry and incorruptible integrity, John Johnston is a well-known citizen of Southern California. For many years he was engaged in the practice of law in Chicago, where he met with well merited success. He was born, April 2, 1845, in Illinois, and there received his elementary education. After his graduation from the Peoria high school he attended Gambier College for two years, subsequently taking a full course of four years at Yale College, and then entering the Albany Law School, from which he was graduated three years later.

Beginning the practice of his chosen profession in Chicago, Mr. Johnston was in partnership with Emory Storrs, a noted lawyer, for a short time. Subsequently becoming head of the law firm of Johnston, Rogers & Appleton, he built up an extensive practice, becoming well known throughout northern Illinois, his clientele being large and lucrative. He acquired wealth while thus employed, becoming owner of real estate in Chicago, also at Lake Geneva, Wis., where he had a beautiful summer home, which he called Gaylynne. Near this home is the famous Yerkes Observatory, for the site of which Mr. Johnston gave sixty-three acres of land, and in which is the largest refracting lens in the world. A brilliant scholar from his boyhood days, he had an honorable record in school and college, and on graduating from Yale, in 1863, was class historian. He is highly esteemed as a man and as a citizen in Oceanside, and his home, which he calls Gay Mount, is a center of social activity.

In 1871 Mr. Johnston married Elizabeth Constance Gay, who was born in Georgia, a daughter of Capt. Charles H. Gay, the descendant of a Virginia family of prominence and influence. She was brought up in Baltimore, Md., and was educated at a school in New Haven, Conn. John Johnston, Jr., the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, was prepared for college at Racine College, after which he was graduated from Princeton College. He is now a real estate owner in San Diego, and it was partly to be near him, partly for the mild climate, and partly on account of ill health, that Mr. and Mrs. Johnston come to Oceanside to live. Politically Mr. Johnston is an unswerving Republican, and while a resident of Chicago served for a number of years as a member of the board of education. He belongs to the University Club of that city, and is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to lodge, chapter and to Montjoie Commandery, K. T.

DAVID G. HARRINGTON. Among the wide-awake, enterprising men who have been largely interested in the upbuilding of Oceanside David G. Harrington holds an important position. He is successfully engaged in general ranching and carries on a substantial business as a dealer in real estate, his transactions in this line being many and large. As a loyal, public-spirited citizen he is ever among the foremost to encourage and support all enterprises conducive to the growth and prosperity of his adopted town, and as a public official has performed the duties devolving upon him ably and faithfully. A son of William Harrington, he was born November 12, 1833, in Franklin county, Vt., coming on the paternal side of Irish ancestry, and on the maternal side of good old New England stock.

A native of Ireland, William Harrington immigrated to the United States when young, settling in Vermont, where he was engaged as a tiller of the soil until his death, in 1849, when a comparatively young man. He married Lydia Stockwell, who was born and reared in New Hampshire. She survived him, and died in Minnesota in 1893, at the advanced age of ninety-five years, at the home of her son, David G. She was a most estimable woman and a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She bore her husband eight children, and these are scattered in different parts of the Union, some living in Minnesota, some in Texas and some in California.

Educated in Franklin, Vt., David G. Harrington attended first the district school and then the village academy, remaining on the home farm until after the death of his father. At the age of seventeen he began learning the trade of carpenter and joiner, and after serving an apprenticeship of four years in his native county went to Toledo, Ohio, where he remained a short time. Going thence to West Superior, on Lake Superior, he was there employed in carpentering and fishing for eight years. Desirous then of broadening his scope of action, in 1862 he went to Dakota county, Minn., locating near St. Paul. Turning his attention to agriculture, he became owner of one thousand acres of land, on which he was prosperously engaged in general farming for thirty-six years, by his diligent labor and judicious management acquiring a handsome property. In 1898 he came to Southern California in search of a desirable place of location. Charmed with the site, scenery, climate and future possibilities of Oceanside, he bought land, and has since carried on an extensive business as a buyer and seller of real estate in this vicinity, and has also continued the pursuit of agriculture, owning and occupying a valuable ranch of twenty acres, which he devotes to general farming purposes.

In 1859 Mr. Harrington married Mary A. Seward, who was born in Franklin county, Vt., and of their union seven children have been born, of whom we make the following mention: Lloyd M., of Oceanside, is married, and has one child; Nancy, wife of Guy Maltby, of San Diego, has eight children; D. Seward, of Dakota county, Minn., has two children; Charles D. is a well-known physician of Minneapolis, Minn.; Reuben B., of Farmington, Minn., is married, and has one child; Stephen G., also of Farmington, Minn., has three children; and Herbert E. resides at home. Mrs. Harrington was a woman of great intelligence and thrift, doing credit in her daily life to her New England training, and was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which she united when a girl. She died while on a visit in Minnesota, September 24, 1906.

Politically Mr. Harrington is a stanch Democrat, as was his honored father. During the Civil war he served as a soldier about six months, being a sergeant of Company C, First Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. He took part in several engagements around Petersburg, including that preceding the evacuation of the city, and was present at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court House, after which he was mustered out of service. While a resident of Minnesota he was very prominent in political affairs, serving for eight years as county commissioner of Dakota county; as assessor, as township supervisor, and for thirty years was a member of the school board of his district. In 1896 he belonged to the Bryan Club of Dakota county, and in 1900 was a member of the Bryan Club of Oceanside. For four years he has been a member of the board of trustees of Oceanside, the past two years serving as president of the board.

JAMES W. DAVIS. Varied enterprises have engaged the attention of Mr. Davis since first he came to California many years ago in the hope of regaining his health, which had become impaired by service in the army and by later exposure to the inclement weather of a northern climate. The immediate object of his removal was accomplished and with restored strength he was able to take upon himself the duties of active life, working at different occupations and filling a number of positions. For a number of years he has made his home in Whittier, where he owns real estate and at this writing officiates as city superintendent of water supply.

Early in the settlement of Illinois the Davis family removed from North Carolina to the newer country and took up agricultural pursuits in the midst of a frontier environment. Ransom Davis, who was a farmer of Greene county, married Elizabeth Hart, a member of a South Carolina family, and they became the parents of five children, among whom was James W., born in Whitehall, Greene county, March 19, 1843. From Illinois the family moved to the north and took up a raw tract of land in Hennepin county, Minn., where the parents labored earnestly in the development of a farm homestead. Eventually they moved to the town of Litchfield and there died. The early years of James W. Davis were passed uneventfully in the routine of farm work, but when he was eighteen the outbreak of the Civil war broke the monotony of existence. Fired with the enthusiasm of youth he determined to offer his services to the Union. August 15, 1861, he became a member of Company K, Twenty-sixth Illinois Infantry, in which he served as corporal and non-commissioned officer.

The experiences which fell to the young soldier were such as fate brought to the lot of all who participated in bringing success to Union arms. The memorable campaign before Atlanta and the march to the sea with General Sherman remain impressed upon his memory as among his most thrilling experiences of war times. When the war ended he was sent to Washington and there took part in the grand review. On returning to the pursuits of peace he became a farmer and thresherman in Minnesota. After some years his health failed him and in November, 1879, he sought the more healthful climate of California, where he settled in November of 1879. For three years he was connected with a grocery on Spring street, Los Angeles, and then entered the police department as a city guard. One years later he was chosen chief of police by the city council, and in that capacity proved himself a fearless, trustworthy and capable officer, determined in his efforts to uphold law and justice. The collapse of the boom brought financial disaster to him as to the entire population of Los Angeles. The depression and loss in values left him $15,000 the poorer and somewhat discouraged him as to immediate investments in Los Angeles, so he removed to Whittier, where he was connected with the state school for four years and one month, meanwhile filling various positions of trust with credit to himself. Twice he was elected city marshal and since leaving that office he has served as city water superintendent. While in Minnesota he married Miss Olive Gilman. They have no children of their own, but reared an adopted daughter, Daisy, who is now the wife of H. G. Webster of Los Angeles. In politics Mr. Davis always gives his vote to Republican candidates and measures, and in matters fraternal he holds membership with the Masons and the Grand Army of the Republic.

JOHN LAUGHLIN. Ventura county is fortunate in having been settled by a most enterprising, industrious and intelligent class of people; and among this number is John Laughlin, of Moorpark, who is actively identified with the development and promotion of its agricultural interests. In the management of his ranch he has shown good judgment, and has placed his land, which is advantageously located, under excellent tillage, and made improvements of a substantial character. A son of Alfred Laughlin, he was born, March 25, 1852, in Lincoln county, Mo., where he spent the days of his boyhood. His father was born and reared in Missouri, living there until 1865, when, having been left a widower the previous year, he started westward with his four children, traveling across the plains with ox-teams to Oregon, where he passed his remaining years, dying at the age of sixty. He was a man of high character, honest in all of his dealings with his fellow-men, and a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Lucy Kent, who died in Missouri, her native state, in 1864. Two of the children born of their union are residents of California, Mr. Laughlin having a sister residing in Santa Barbara.

Accompanying the family to Oregon in 1865, John Laughlin soon after began to be self-supporting, working for wages in Oregon for a number of seasons. Going from there to Nevada, he was employed in agricultural pursuits for two or three years, but was not sufficiently pleased with the country to remain there permanently. Making a decided change, therefore, in 1872 he came to Southern California, and for fifteen years was a ranchman in Santa Barbara county. Migrating then to Riverside county, he took up a claim of school land, and having proved his title, sold out and went to San Luis Obispo county, where he purchased a ranch of sixty acres, and for about five years made a specialty of raising beans. In 1893 he came to Ventura county, and having bought his present farm of one hundred and forty-three acres, has since been actively and prosperously engaged in its care and cultivation. He raises beans in large quantities, his land yielding about fifteen sacks to the acre on an average, which is a profitable crop, and he has recently set out a fine grove of walnut trees.

In 1889 Mr. Laughlin married Jane Morgan, who was born, reared and educated in Iowa, and into their home three children were born, namely: Pauline, who died at the age of fourteen months; Frank; and Charles, who died in infancy. Mrs. Laughlin died in 1899, at the early age of thirty-seven years. She was a woman of many excellent qualities, highly respected by her many friends and acquaintances, and was a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Laughlin is an unswerving Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

WILLIAM LIGHT GRIFFITHS. One of the most successful men of Los Angeles county is William Light Griffiths, who in addition to an eighty-acre ranch he owns conducts extensive properties throughout the section surrounding Covina, Los Angeles county, as well as a steam threshing machine which has brought him in large financial returns in the past years. Mr. Griffiths is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in Humboldt county, at Bear River Ridge, September 15, 1873. His father, George W. Griffiths, also represented in this work, was born in Detroit, Mich., where the paternal grandfather, Charles, had located upon his emigration from Wales with three brothers. Charles Griffiths came to California in 1849, crossing the plains with ox-teams and upon his safe arrival established a hotel and confectionery at Sacramento. He was flooded three times and burned out a like number of times, but survived all his disasters and each time rebuilt his enterprise. His death occurred in San Francisco. George W. Griffiths came to California in 1850 and engaged in teaming in California and Nevada, after which he engaged in the cattle and dairy business in Humboldt county, then as a farmer in Yolo county and finally, in 1889, came to Ventura county, thence to Orange, then Los Angeles county, following general farming occupations in each place. He is now living retired in Los Angeles. His wife, formerly Eliza Moore, a native of Lansing, Mich., was a daughter of Edward Moore, who crossed the plains in 1849 and located in Marin county and engaged in dairy farming. He is now living in San Benito county, where he has a large stock ranch, retired from active business life at the age of eighty years. Mrs. Griffiths died in 1904 at Fairview. They became the parents of four sons and one daughter, namely: Catherine, who became the wife of Fred Wickersham, of Petaluma, and after his death married A. L. Dowler, of San Francisco; Charles E., a large contractor of Bakersfield, Cal.; George, a cement contractor of Covina; William L., of this review; and Walter, a farmer and stockman, of Napa county.

William Light Griffiths was reared on the paternal farm and educated in the public schools, at the age of sixteen years beginning life for himself. His first venture was raising potatoes, then bean growing in Ventura county, remaining at Camarillo for the period of three years. Deciding to engage in farming on a larger scale in 1890 he went to the San Joaquin valley and rented one thousand acres, which he cultivated for three years, then located on La Puente ranch, while he also rented a part of the Baldwin ranch, farming in all seven thousand acres. He equipped with every possible improvement in the manner of carrying on his farming enterprise, purchasing a Best steam traction engine, of one hundred and ten horse power, equal to from five to seven gang plows, he having plowed one thousand acres in ten and a half days. He also owns a steam thresher and reaper, which has a thirty-five foot cut; it has an auxiliary engine of twenty-five horse power which runs the separator. In addition to his general farming he also raised fine roadsters, and full-blooded Jersey cattle. With his brother, George W., he was interested in the Griffiths' Bros. Milling Co., which they organized, building a large concrete mill and warehouse on Citrus avenue and the Pacific Electric carline, where they manufactured cereals and flour, and also handled hay, grain, coal and wood. He served as vice-president of the company until they sold out in 1905 to the San Gabriel Valley Milling Co.

S D Sanphor

In San Luis Obispo, Cal., June 14, 1904, Mr. Griffiths was united in marriage with Miss Elenore Russell, a native of Missouri who had been educated in the schools of New York. Mr. Griffiths is prominent in Masonic circles, having been made a member of the order in Santa Ana, raised to the degrees of Royal Arch and Knight Templar, and is now a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He also belongs to Pomona Lodge No. 789, B. P. O. E. He belongs to the Episcopal Church in religion, while politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Socially he is prominent in Covina, being a member of the Covina Country Club. Mr. Griffiths enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who have known him during his long residence in this section, appreciated for his sterling traits of character as manifested in both business and social life.

STEPHEN D. LANPHER. A substantial and prosperous rancher and a respected citizen of San Luis Rey, the late S. D. Lanpher is specially deserving of mention in this historical record, having been a fine representative of the brave and courageous pioneers who came to California in 1849, and were thereafter identified with the best interests of their adopted state. Little do the people of the present generation realize the hardships and the trials endured, the great ambition required, and the physical strength demanded to secured the homes established by the early settlers for themselves and their descendants. How well they succeed in their efforts is plainly proved in the broad expanse of cultivated fields and the large and productive orchards and vineyards everywhere visible, the many fine farm residences and buildings that have been erected, and in the long trains of palace cars that are used for transportation in place of the wagon drawn by oxen. Of New England ancestry, Mr. Lanpher was born January 11, 1822, in Bucksport, Me.

Completing his early studies in the district school of Sangerville, Me., S. D. Lanpher began life as a sailor, for seventeen years following the sea. He visited many ports, as first mate of his vessel making a number of trips around the Horn, being engaged in trade along the Pacific coast. After his marriage he worked for a time as a wharf hand, remaining in New England until 1849, when he came by way of Cape Horn to California. Settling in San Francisco, he was there engaged in the milk business for a little while, and then went to Marin county, where for six years he carried on a prosperous dairy business. Removing then to Sonoma, he purchased fifty acres of land, from which he improved a ranch, on which he resided eight years. Coming to the San Luis Rey valley in 1875 he purchased the ranch now owned and occupied by his widow and son, and continued his agricultural labors. He carried on general farming and stock-raising with both profit and pleasure, placing a large portion of his one hundred and sixty acres of land in a tillable condition, residing here until his death, September 9, 1890. Inheriting in a marked measure the habits of industry, energy and thrift characteristic of his Maine ancestors, he became successful in his business career through his own strenuous efforts, by his integrity, honesty and upright dealings winning the esteem of the community in which so many years of his long and useful life were passed. He was a Republican in politics, and served his district most acceptably as school director.

In Maine, in 1853, Mr. Lanpher married Sarah Knowlton, who was born, reared and married in that state, and is now living on the home ranch, beloved and respected by all who know her warm heart, and kindly, sympathetic nature, winning for her a large circle of sincere friends. Two children were born to her and her husband. Philantha died at the age of seven years, and Fay, born in California, resides with his mother on the home place.

E. Y. CAMMER. A man of enterprise and ability, E. Y. Cammer was for many years a leading journalist of Los Angeles county, in that capacity becoming widely and favorably known, and is now actively identified with the mercantile interests of Ocean Park, owning and managing a well-stocked grocery store. A son of the late B. W. Cammer, he was born, October 9, 1857, in Huntsville, Tex.

Born and reared in South Carolina, B. W. Cammer moved to Texas in early manhood, and for a few years was employed in mercantile pursuits, first in Centerville, and afterwards in Bremond. He subsequently made a decided change of occupation, engaging in newspaper work in different towns, including Huntsville, Centerville and Bremond, Tex. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary J. Lee, was a native of Alabama.

The oldest son of the parental household, E. Y. Cammer worked in his father's office until familiar with the printer's trade, which he first followed in his native state. For several years he was editor of the Hearne Enterprise, at Hearne, Tex., after which he edited the Calvert Clipper, in Calvert, Tex. Coming from there to California in 1886, he worked in the job printing office of the Los Angeles Times for two years. Locating in Lancaster, Los Angeles county, in 1888, he published the Lancaster Gazette for four years, when, in 1892, he sold out to Walter S. Melick. He continued in the same office, however, for two years longer, and then embarked in mercantile pursuits, opening in Lancaster a general store, which he managed with good results until April, 1904. Coming in that month to Ocean Park, he opened a grocery at No. 15 Pier avenue, where he established a fine trade, his patronage being large and lucative.

Mr. Cammer's first marriage occurred in Cameron, Tex., in 1880, uniting him with Elizabeth Peoples, and to them were born three children, as follows: Edna, wife of C. W. Crawford, of Los Angeles; J. Benjamin, in the store with his father; and Margaret M. Mrs. Elizabeth Cammer died in Los Angeles in 1901, and in Sacramento, Cal., in 1892, Mr. Cammer was united in marriage with Emma J. Menzies, who was born in California, a daughter of Thomas Menzies, now a well-known resident of Ocean Park. Politically Mr. Cammer is an ardent supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of the Modern Woodmen of America, and of the Independent Order of Foresters.

BISHOP J. EDMONDS. A man of marked business ability and judgment, B. J. Edmonds is numbered among the active and useful citizens of San Diego, and now, as city auditor and assessor, is filling the position with credit to himself and acceptably to the people. Of English ancestry, he was born January 4, 1864, in New Brunswick, N. J., which was likewise the birthplace of his father, James C. Edmonds. He comes from patriotic stock, his great-grandfather, James Edmund Edmonds, having served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Jacob Edmonds, was born in Dover, N. J., but when a young man removed to New Brunswick, N. J., where he embarked in the lumber business, establishing the first lumber yard opened in that city.

Brought up and educated in New Brunswick, James C. Edmonds developed great executive power when young, and for forty years was manager of the Meyer Rubber Company, the plant being located in New Brunswick, N. J., and the office in New York City. He was an able assistant in developing and promoting the business of the company, devoting his energies in that direction until his death, December 6, 1879, while yet in manhood's prime. He married Mary Brown, who was born in Philadelphia, and died in New Jersey December 13, 1880. Her father, Benjamin F. Brown, a wholesale paint dealer, served in the Civil war, and her grandfather, William Brown, was a soldier in the Revolutionary army.

The ninth child in a family consisting of eight daughters and three sons, B. J. Edmonds received excellent educational advantages, and after his graduation from the high school attended Rutgers College, in New Brunswick, N. J. At the age of nineteen years he went to New York City, where he was for a time employed as a clerk. Returning to his native city he was subsequently employed in the plant of the New Brunswick Rubber Company, for six or seven years being assistant superintendent. Resigning the position in 1894, he entered the United States Internal Revenue service, at East Millstone, N. J., in Fleischman's distillery, which was paying $1,000,000 taxes per year. At the end of six years he resigned that position, and on account of the ill health of his wife came to California, hoping that in this land of kind sunshine and balmy airs she might regain her physical vigor, and in this wish he has not been disappointed. Locating in San Diego in 1900, he entered the employ of the Southern California Railway Company, having charge of its wharf until the steamer line was discontinued. He was afterwards bookkeeper for Simon Levi, wholesale commission merchant, until receiving his appointment to his present position as city auditor and assessor.

In New Brunswick, N. J., Mr. Edmonds married Annie Vroom, who was born in that city, a descendant of a Holland-Dutch family of prominence. Five children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Edmonds, namely: Cora; Warner, a graduate of the San Diego high school, and now with the Southern California Railroad Company; Eleanor; and James Clark and Bishop Jacob, twins. In politics Mr. Edmonds has the courage of his convictions, voting according to the dictates of his conscience. He belongs to the Episcopal Church, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

GEORGE H. HAZELTON. An honorable service during the entire period of the Civil war and an equally honorable record as a private citizen mark the life of George H. Hazelton, a retired business man of Ocean Park and the owner of valuable real estate in that suburb, as well as in the Seagirt tract. Though for years a resident of the east and also for a considerable period identified with northern California, he has found no spot so nearly approaching the ideal as the southern part of the Sunset state, where kind Nature smiles upon the intelligent efforts of man and a picturesque environment pleases his artistic tastes. Since coming to Ocean Park in 1898 he has witnessed the rapid growth of this locality and has enjoyed the benefits accruing therefrom, while at the same time he has won the esteem of associates and acquaintances.

Directly across the line from Pennsylvania, in Braceville, a town of Trumbull county, Ohio, Mr. Hazelton was born August 21, 1844, the son of Thaddeus Hazelton, an industrious carpenter descended from an English family early identified with the history of Vermont. It was natural that, on the conclusion of his school studies, he should take up the carpenter's trade under the oversight of his father, who taught him to be efficient, skillful and practical in the work. At the opening of the Civil war he was only a youth, scarcely old enough for service, yet he solicited admission as a private and was accepted in 1861, becoming a soldier in the Eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry. With his regiment he marched to the front and bore a part in the numerous engagements falling to their lot. In the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862, he was wounded, but soon recovered and rejoined his regiment, with which he remained until the close of the war. When peace once more reigned in the country he was mustered out of service and honorably discharged June 26, 1865, after which he returned to his old home and resumed the occupation of a private citizen.

After having worked as a carpenter in Pennsylvania for a number of years, in 1876 Mr. Hazelton sought the undeveloped regions of the northwest, settling in Winona county, Minn. Considerable building was being done in that locality and he had a part in the new prosperity coming to the region. Land was quite low and he invested his savings in farm property, in which way he became the owner of a farm of one hundred and twenty acres. However, the long and severe winters of the northwest proved trying and irksome, and to secure more favorable climatic conditions he disposed of his holdings and removed to California, where in 1889 he became a resident of Santa Rosa. Agricultural pursuits and the carpenter's trade occupied his attention here as in his former home. Upon coming to Ocean Park he bought property and erected houses, several of which he yet owns. Of a quiet, retiring disposition, he has had little inclination to identify himself with social or fraternal organizations, none of which has gained his allegiance except the Grand Army of the Republic. After settling in Minnesota he was united in marriage with Miss Agnes Graves, an estimable lady who had accompanied her father from their native place in Canada into the States and had settled in Minnesota during the pioneer history of that region.

WILLIAM H. FRINK. The Frink family were established in California in the famous days of '49 and since that time members have taken a prominent part in the upbuilding of the interests of the state. The pioneer, John R., was born in New York, a son of Jefferson Frink, the latter of an old Massachusetts family who located in New York. John R. Frink was reared in St. Louis, whither his parents removed later, and thence he began freighting across the plains and acting as captain of trains. In 1849 he came to Sacramento and began mining, remaining in that section of the state until 1852 when he came to Southern California and in Los Angeles established a feed and sale stable. He married there Sarah Peacock, a native of Yorkshire, England; her father having died in Canada, she crossed the plains with Mrs. Jane Lathrop and her mother in 1849, the latter dying in Council Bluffs, Iowa. In 1854 Mr. Frink brought his family to San Bernardino and located on a small farm, and a year later he bought a farm in San Timoteo cañon, while at the same time he continued interested in mining ventures, being associated with the Vulture Mining Company at Wickenburg, Ariz., and acting for some years as its manager. The gold obtained was carried in a four-horse carriage across the desert to San Pedro, thence by boat to the mint in San Francisco. After the mine ceased to pay he went into the stock business at Wickenburg. He was later interested in the mines at Darwin, Inyo county, where they had a stamp mill, and also interested in the mines near Virginiadale, this county. He sold his cattle business in Arizona in 1886, and then engaged in ranching in Tulare county, southwest of the town of that name. His death occurred there at the age of sixty-two years. His wife is still living at the age of seventy-nine years, and makes her home with her son. Of their four children three are living, George M., of Los Angeles; Daniel J., of Redlands; and William H., of this review.

William H. Frink was born in San Bernardino, Cal., May 23, 1865, and was reared on the paternal farm, and educated in the public schools, after which he attended the San Bernardino Business College for a more complete preparation for his work in life. He then returned to the home ranch and followed farming on the old Frink ranch in San Timoteo cañon. In 1892 he engaged in dairying and farming for himself, improving property, which consisted of five hundred acres eight miles from Redlands, eighty acres being in alfalfa and under irrigation from the San Timoteo creek. He devoted his time to the raising of hay and grain, and also had a creamery outfit which utilized the products of his dairy. In December, 1905, he sold the ranch and located in Redlands at No. 231 West Cypress street, where he has five and a half acres in navel oranges, a handsome residence, and necessary outbuildings, this being one of the valuable little ranches in the city. Mr. Frink is associated fraternally with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Odd Fellows, of Redlands, where he also belongs to the Board of Trade and gives his best efforts toward the material upbuilding of the city. He is a Republican in politics, and is ex-member of the Riverside Republican County Central Committee. He has been very successful in his work and is accounted one of the progressive and enterprising citizens of Redlands.

JOHN DUSCH. Noteworthy among the pioneer settlers of Ventura county was the late John Dusch, who came here in 1873, and from that time until his death was an important factor in developing its agricultural resources. Purchasing land that was mostly in its native condition, he labored with unremitting toil until he had it under good cultivation, with substantial improvements. A hard-working, honest and industrious man, he was in every way trustworthy and highly respected. He was born April 9, 1849, in Switzerland, the country which has given us so many of our most valued citizens, and died on the home farm in October, 1904, aged fifty-five years.

Brought up and educated in Switzerland, John Dusch there learned the baker's trade, in which he became proficient. Immigrating to the United States when a young man, he spent a short time in New York City, from there going to Philadelphia in search of congenial employment. Not contented, however, he pushed onward to the Pacific coast, in 1872 arriving in San Diego, where he remained about a year. In 1873 he located in Ventura county, and in the Santa Clara valley made his first purchase of land, buying ten acres. Very soon afterward he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, and immediately began the improvement of his home ranch. Succeeding in his ventures, in the course of time he bought ninety acres of adjoining land. Enterprising and thrifty, he raised all of the grain, fruit and cereals common to this section of the country, having an apricot orchard of fifteen acres, and raising wheat, barley, hay and beans in large quantities.

In San Diego, in 1873, Mr. Dusch married Mary Gisler, who was born and reared in Switzerland; coming to this country when a girl, she lived in Philadelphia until 1871, when she came to this state, where she has since resided. Two of her sisters have also resided here since 1884. Mrs. Dusch's parents are both deceased, as are the parents of Mr. Dusch, both of whom were life-long residents of Switzerland. In May, 1905, Mrs. Dusch and her daughter Amelia took a trip across the Atlantic, visiting friends and relatives in the mother's childhood home. Of the children born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Dusch, six died in infancy, and five are living, namely: William, of Santa Paula, who married Mary White; Bertha, wife of Christopher Nelson, of Somis, and the mother of two sons; Leonora, wife of W. P. Daily; Arno; and Amelia, a pupil in the Santa Paula high school. Politically Mr. Dusch was a firm supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and took a warm interest in the affairs of his adopted town and county.

FRANK PITTS. Occupying an honored position among the many worthy citizens of Ventura county, Frank Pitts is a successful and energetic farmer residing at Somis. A native son of the state, he was born in Mendocino county, August 10, 1860, and is one of ten children, eight of whom are living. He is the son of W. O. and Isabella (Burrse) Pitts, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Illinois, both of whom are living, aged seventy-four and sixty-six respectively. The father is also a rancher, and in connection with his agricultural pursuits runs a profitable livery business and besides has mining interests in Idaho, where he spends a portion of his time. In his political views he is a stanch supporter of the Republican platform and of the candidates of that party. The mother is a consistent member of the Episcopal Church.

Remaining at home with his parents until fifteen years of age, during which time he attended the common schools, Frank Pitts started out in the world for himself at that age, engaging in agricultural pursuits in Ventura county, where he has since resided. It has been his good fortune to succeed beyond his expectations, and he now operates a five hundred acre ranch which is devoted principally to raising sugar beets, Lima beans, barley, wheat and stock. The land yields on an average ten sacks of beans to the acre and is also well adapted to fruits and grain. The ranch upon which he has lived for the past fifteen years is a part of the Los Posas ranch. He owns a ranch at Hueneme, a comfortable home at Somis and property at Oxnard, and has won success by his individual and persistent efforts, industry and progressive spirit. His standing in the community is the best proof of his ability, integrity and worth.

In 1892 Mr. Pitts formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Emma Willard, who is a native of Idaho, and two children, Earl and Edna, have been born of their union. At the present writing Mr. Pitts is identified with the Fraternal Brotherhood. Politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, lending his support to its men and measures.

SAMUEL M. LESHER. One of the most up-to-date and progressive ranchmen in Riverside county is found in Samuel M. Lesher, who has upon his six hundred acre ranch, located near Murrietta, every convenience for farming, dairying and stock-raising, and in addition has a fine blacksmith shop on the farm. He is a man of more than usual intelligence and whatever he does is accomplished in the best and most scientific manner possible. He is a natural mechanic of ability, a progressive business man and conducts his ranching operations in a thoroughly modern manner, being well read and thoroughly familiar with all new developments in his lines of work. He was born November 1, 1868, in Henderson, Minn., the son of Benjamin and Annie (Gunderson) Lesher, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of London, England. The father was a pioneer settler in Minnesota, having removed to that state in 1865, and there continued the prosecution of his business as contractor and builder, having been engaged at that occupation in the south before coming west. He assisted in the erection of the state capitol of Minnesota in St. Paul, and later conducted a hotel on the Minnesota river in the city of Henderson. In 1880 he pushed on further west, and locating in Montana continued the hotel business first in Forsyth and later in Glendive, in which latter place he also engaged in mercantile pursuits. His residence in California dated from 1888, when he arrived in Los Angeles county, subsequently removing to Valley Center, San Diego county, at which point he took up land. Following this he spent a great deal of time in travel, visiting in Washington, D. C., and making a trip to Dawson, Alaska. His last years were spent with his son, Samuel M., his death occurring in 1902, at the age of seventy-three years. His wife died in Montana in 1884, in her fifty-seventh year. Of their children one son, Jacob C., is a draughtsman in Washington, D. C.; another son, Benjamin, resides in Los Angeles; a daughter, Georgiana, is now the wife of Edward Keys, of Fairbanks, Alaska.

The preliminary education of Mr. Lesher was received in the public schools of Minnesota, this being supplemented by work in St. Johns University, at Collegeville, Minn. After the completion of his studies he went to Montana and was for three years employed on the cattle ranges of that state, and after his removal to Glendive, in 1887, began his training at the blacksmith's trade. The following year he came to Los Angeles, from that place removing to Escondido, where he worked on a ranch for a couple of years, after which he returned to Los Angeles and engaged in blacksmithing until 1895. Subsequently locating in Murrietta on his present ranch he has since made this place his home. About three hundred acres of land is given over to the raising of crops, while a like amount is devoted to pasturage purposes. He has a dairy and creamery and milks thirty-eight cows, makes and ships butter supplying Murrietta Hot Springs and Elsinore with this product. His creamery was established in 1903 and was the first one located in this vicinity. He is also a breeder of fine horses of both trotting and the Percheron-Norman stock, owning Poco Pronto and Roscoe, two standard-bred stallions which are considered the best in this section of the state. Among his other property interests is a fine ranch at Valley Center.

Mr. Lesher's marriage in Los Angeles, in 1891, united him with Henrietta R. Christian, of Minnesota, and they have become the parents of seven children, namely: Roy, Earl, Edward, Ira, Oliver, Rena and John. The prominent interest which Mr. Lesher takes in educational matters is evidenced by his service as a trustee of the Murrietta school district. He is a Republican in politics and an active worker in his locality for the interest of the party. He is a public-spirited and well-informed citizen who takes an interest in all matters of importance to the community at large, his influence being always exerted on the side that builds up and develops the section in which he lives.

WILLIAM HARVEY BENTLEY. The genealogy of the Bentley family in America is traced back to the year 1720, when settlement was made in Rhode Island by James Bentley, an Englishman by birth and a brother of Sir Richard Bentley of England. In the family of James there was a son, Benjamin, who had a son named Gideon, the latter following farming pursuits in Rhode Island and New York, eventually dying at Constantia, Oswego county, N. Y., when he had attained the age of one hundred and ten years. From him the genealogy descends through his son; Gideon, who was a farmer of New York and Ohio, but in 1831 removed to the sparsely settled state of Illinois and settled on a tract of raw land in Pike county, remaining there until his death. When the family became established in Pike county in 1831 William was then but a year old, hence his earliest recollections were associated with the frontier, and as a boy he assisted his father in operating a woolen and flour mill run by water power. Upon starting out for himself he went to Iowa and there married Malinda C. Shaul, who was born in Indiana, and is a sister of M. J. Shaul of Oceanside (see his sketch for the family history).

Shortly after his marriage William Bentley bought a farm in Wapello county, Iowa, but in 1873 he removed to Kansas and improved a large tract of land near Westmoreland, Pottawatomie county. At this writing he still makes his home in the same county, but has retired from agricultural labors and resides in Havensville. In politics he votes with the Republican party and in religious views he is in sympathy with the doctrines of the Christian Church. In his family there are five sons and one daughter, namely: Rev. F. H. Bentley, pastor of the Christian Church at Topeka, Kans.; William Harvey, of San Diego; O. L., a merchant at Havensville, Kans.; Rev. Charles C., pastor of the Christian Church at Hanford, Cal.; Mrs. Hattie Witten, of Westmoreland, Kans.; and Bert L., who is an evangelistic singer and makes his home in Topeka. The second of the sons, William Harvey, was born at Ottumwa, Iowa, October 20, 1860, and at the age of six years accompanied the family in their removal from town to a farm six miles away. In 1873 he went with them to Kansas and afterward attended the country schools near Westmoreland. On leaving school he gave his attention to farming and stock-raising.

During the spring of 1882 Mr. Bentley left Kansas and made a tour of investigation through the region further west. While in Idaho he took up a claim and proved on the land. About 1886 he returned east as far as South Dakota with a drove of horses which he sold there and then visited relatives in Kansas. On again coming west during 1887 he settled at Fallbrook, San Diego county, and secured work with the American Ostrich Company which had started in the ostrich business in San Diego as early as November of 1883. Their importation of twenty-three birds was the first to be brought to the United States except with shows. In February of 1884 they removed to Fallbrook and established a farm, and in 1887 started the Coronado ostrich farm. In December, 1891, Mr. Bentley and C. F. A. Johnson started an ostrich farm at Riverside. During 1893 Mr. Bentley had charge of the exhibit of the American Ostrich Company at the World's Fair in Chicago. At the close of the exposition E. J. Johnson signed a contract to exhibit at the Antwerp (Belgium) exposition, having first secured from Mr. Bentley a promise to take charge of the exhibit. From Chicago the birds were taken to London, England, and wintered at the Royal Aquarium at Westminster, arriving at Antwerp in May, 1894, where they were exhibited until Sepember 15, same year, and were then sold to Hagenbach at Hamburg.

After having disposed of the birds Mr. Bentley traveled on the continent and in January, 1905, returned to San Diego, where he bought the forty-eight birds owned by the American Ostrich Company. Before this he had acquired the birds from the Riverside farm (twenty in number) and in December, 1893, had them sent to Coronado to be put with the birds owned by the company. For a few years, owing to the small demand for feathers, there was little profit in the business, but eventually the demand increased and the profits became commensurate with the risks. From Coronado in December, 1904, the farm was removed to its present location, a portion of the old Mission Cliff park, where the ninety-five birds have ample room and comfortable quarters. Some of the birds formerly owned by Mr. Bentley have been sold to other breeders, and several have secured their start from his farm. The manufacture of boas and plumes and tips is his specialty and orders for these come from all parts of the country. With one exception the farm is the largest of its kind in California and no spot in San Diego county yields to the tourist more of interest or instruction than this farm, which is, indeed, included among the most attractive "show" places for visitors to Southern California.

The marriage of Mr. Bentley took place in Clarinda, Iowa, and united him with Miss Rosena Stuart, who was born and educated in that town and is a cultured lady and an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church. Their two sons are William Harvey, Jr. (nine years of age) and Gilbert Stuart (two years old). For some years Mr. Bentley has been connected with the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, for three terms he served as treasurer of Coronado and for one term officiated as town trustee. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party and fraternally holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

WILLARD B. HAGE. One of the large business enterprises of San Diego is the New England Dairy and Creamery, whose owner and proprietor, Willard B. Hage, since coming to the city in 1891, has built up an industry of important and increasing proportions.

The management of his retail milk business, with the utilizing of six milk wagons for delivery to customers, is only a small part of his business, although this is the largest dairy in the city. Even more important is the creamery plant, occupying a modern building on the corner of 5th and G streets, operated by steam power and equipped with the latest appliances for butter-making. Often three thousand pounds of butter are churned in one day and at times the pay roll to farmers reaches $500 per day. Receiving stations have been established at Escondido, Ramona, San Luis Rey and Bonsall, and the balance of the cream is shipped by stage and railroad to San Diego. In addition to the operation of this plant he started the first creamery at Imperial, but finding it to far away to be given personal attention he sold the plant; for two years he also owned a creamery in San Francisco, but this too he sold to other parties, so that now his energies are concentrated upon the business at San Diego.

A native of Wisconsin, Mr. Hage was born at Eagle, Waukesha county, June 1, 1868, and was the eldest child and only son among four children, all still living. His father, S. S., was born in Livingston county, N. Y., and married Sarah Kelloway, also a native of New York state. The paternal grandfather, John Hage, was of English birth and parentage and on coming to America settled in Livingston county, N. Y., but later became a pioneer of Wisconsin and took up a tract of raw land in Waukesha county near Eagle lake, where he improved a farm and remained until death. The father likewise followed farming pursuits in Waukesha county and made a specialty of the dairy business, shipping milk to Milwaukee, thirty-five miles distant. On selling out there in 1904 he came to San Diego and since then he and his wife have lived retired from active cares.

After having completed the studies of the grammar schools and the Waukesha high school, Mr. Hage began to assist his father, whom in 1890 he accompanied to Phoenix, Ariz., for the purpose of engaging in the stock business. The following year he came to San Diego and embarked in the dairy business, which he has since conducted with unusual success. By reason of his thorough knowledge of the principles of butter-making he has gained considerable prominence among men following that occupation and at this writing he holds office as vice-president of the Creamery Operators' Association of California, in addition to being a leading member of the Los Angeles Creamery Board of Trade. The close attention which he has given to business matters has prevented him from becoming active in politics, in which he takes no part aside from voting the Republican ticket at general elections. The San Diego Chamber of Commerce numbers him among its members and no one is more interested than he in its plans for the upbuilding of the town and county. In fraternal associations he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. While living in Wisconsin he was married at Eagle Lake to Miss Addie Scofield, a native of Chicago, Ill. Four children were born of their union, namely: Frederick, Edna, Ruth and Willard, all of whom are at home.

JAMES HENRY CASSIDY. The supervisor from the second district of San Diego county has made his home in the city of San Diego for twenty years or more and meanwhile has formed a circle of business and social acquaintances extending throughout his home town and county. The present place of his residence is far removed from the scenes familiar to him in early life, for he is a native of New Brunswick and as a boy grew accustomed to the bleak and storm-tossed shores of that province. His parents, James and Elizabeth (Milligan) Cassidy, were also natives of New Brunswick, whence his paternal grandfather, Andrew Cassidy, had emigrated from the north of Ireland. For some years the father followed the carpenter's trade in his native province, thence came to the United States and worked in Calais, Me., later in Minneapolis, Minn., but eventually in 1900 he came to San Diego, where at the age of eighty-three years he is living in retirement from business cares. While residing in Minnesota he lost his wife by death.

There were seven children in the family. Of these James Henry was second in order of birth and is the only one living in California. Born at St. John's, New Brunswick, June 10, 1853, he was eight years of age when his parents removed to a farm near Gagetown. At the age of twelve years he began to learn the carpenter's trade and four years later, upon removing to Calais, Me., he commenced to assist his father in the building business. After removing to Minneapolis in 1878 he secured employed as foreman for W. H. Haight & Co., a firm of prominent and extensive contractors, with whom he continued for seven years. Coming west in 1885, he began to work at his trade in Portland, Ore., but the following year, in August, he established himself in San Diego, where for seven years he held a position as foreman with J. D. Raymond, and then took up contracting for himself. In the pursuit of his duties he has worked in various sections of San Diego county and everywhere has held a reputation for reliability, energy, promptness and accuracy.

Decidedly Republican in his political opinions, Mr. Cassidy always has given his support to the principles of the party which he supports, and for years he has been prominent in local affairs. In November, 1904, he was elected to represent the second district as a member of the county board of supervisors, and in January following he assumed the duties of the office, which he now fills with conscientious devotion to the welfare of the people. Measures for the development of the county receive his stanch co-operation when once he is convinced of their permanent value to the property owners, but at the same time he does not jeopardize the interests of the taxpayers. The San Diego Chamber of Commerce and the Union League Club number him among their members. While making his home in Minneapolis he married Miss Nellie Rose, who was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., and who always has shared with him the good-will and respect of acquaintances. After coming west he was made a Mason in Silver Gate Lodge No. 296, F. & A. M., in which he officiated as master. The Woodmen of the World have his name enrolled as one of the members of their San Diego camp. In addition he is a leading member and past grand of San Diego Lodge No. 153, I. O. O. F., also past chief patriarch of Centennial Encampment No. 54, at San Diego, and likewise identified with the Order of Rebekahs.

GUY W. WISDOM. Prominent among the recent energetic, thorough-going business men of Escondido, who, through their own tact, ability and good judgment have attained success in life, is Guy W. Wisdom, a well-known general merchant. A native of Iowa, he was born October 18, 1867, in Taylor county, near Blockton, a son of P. J. Wisdom. His grandfather, John A. Wisdom, removed from Kentucky to Missouri when a young man, from there going to Taylor county, Iowa, where he spent his last years. He was a man of strong patriotism, and during the Civil war served in the Federal Army. His wife was a Virginian by birth, the descendant of an old southern family.

Born and brought up in the northwestern part of Missouri, P. J. Wisdom began life as a farmer in Iowa. On the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Twenty-ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and as a soldier rendered his country much service. He subsequently settled near Blockton, Iowa, where for a number of years he was employed in mercantile pursuits. In April, 1904, he came with his family to San Diego county, locating in the Escondido valley, where he was for two years actively and successfully engaged in the culture of fruit, having a well-cultivated ranch of twenty acres. This he has since sold and is now senior member of the firm of Wisdom & Co. He is a Republican, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, a prominent Mason, having attained the Knights Templar degree in Iowa. He was postmaster of Blockton, Iowa, from 1872 to 1884, and from 1888 to 1892. He married Thankful Jane Carter, who was born in Taylor county, Iowa, a daughter of Col. John D. Carter, formerly of Indiana, who served as an officer in the Civil war, commanding a regiment, and is now a resident of Iowa. Mrs. Wisdom died in 1881, leaving four children, one son and three daughters, Guy W. being the oldest child.

Obtaining the elements of his education in the public schools of Blockton, Guy W. Wisdom subsequently attended Parson's College, at Fairfield, Iowa, for two years, after which he completed a business course in the Capital City Commercial College, in Des Moines, Iowa. After his graduation from the latter institution he was in business with his father in Blockton as a general merchant until 1901, when he sold out, removing to Portland, Ore., where he remained two years. Coming to Southern California in 1903, he was a resident of Los Angeles until July, 1904, when he located in Escondido. Three months later, on the first of October, 1904, he purchased his present store building, which he has enlarged and remodeled, it being now 25x92 feet, and has since established an extensive and remunerative general mercantile business, his stock of goods being one of the most varied and complete to be found in this section of the county, embracing everything demanded by the trade.

In Oskaloosa, Iowa, Mr. Wisdom married Mittie A. Nelson, who was born in Wayne county, Iowa, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Gail L., Eva Marie, and Alta Marguerite. Mr. Wisdom taeks an active interest in the welfare of his adopted city, being very public-spirited and doing his full share towards advancing its material and business prosperity. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and of the school board of the Escondido High School District. Politically he is a sound Republican, and religiously he belongs to the Baptist Church, and is assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school.

WINFIELD SCOTT KEEN. Among the prosperous and enterprising citizens of Whittier, Los Angeles county, especial mention may be made of Winfield Scott Keen, who is carrying on a successful business in teaming and grading, and is an important factor in advancing the industrial interests of the community. A son of the late George Washington Keen, he was born, November 12, 1863, in Baltimore, Md., being lineally descended from an early colonial family of that state. His grandfather, Edward Keen, a life-long resident of Maryland, was a successful farmer and fruit grower.

Pierre Lapeyre

A native of Maryland, George W. Keen was there reared and educated. Becoming a farmer from choice, he was first employed as a tiller of the soil near the home of his youth, remaining there until about 1872, when he removed with his family to Iowa. Buying land in Marshall county, he continued in his free and independent occupation the remainder of his life. In Baltimore, Md., he married Eliza Smardon, who was born in England, and died in Iowa.

But nine years of age when he accompanied his parents to Iowa, Winfield Scott Keen completed his early education in the public schools. While on the home farm he was well trained in the various branches of agriculture. Following in the footsteps of his honored ancestors, he engaged in farming for himself as soon as he became of age, owning a good ranch of fifty acres in Marshall county. In 1897 he came with his family to the Pacific coast, arriving in Whittier December 9. After ranching for two years he changed his occupation, and has since that time been actively engaged in teaming and grading, having established a large and profitable business. He has seventeen teams, and a complete grading outfit, one of the best in this vicinity, and keeps several men constantly employed. Industrious, thrifty, and a man of sterling character, he is highly respected, and occupies an assured position among the valued citizens of his adopted town.

While a resident of Iowa, Mr. Keen married Nellie Willets, a native of Iowa, and they have now six children living, two sons and four daughters, namely: Walter S., Blanch C., Maria E., George Willets, Mary E. and Dorothy May; all at home. Politically Mr. Keen is a stanch supporter of the principles promulgated by the Republican party, and fraternally he belongs to Whittier Lodge No. 315, I. O. O. F.

PIERRE LAPEYRE. A large landholder, and one of the most active and prosperous farmers of Ventura county, Pierre Lapeyre is meeting with excellent success in his labors, accumulating wealth and distinction. A man of pleasing address, cultured and talented, his geniality invites acquaintance, while his intelligence and kindly manners inspire respect and friendship. He was born March 9, 1862, in sunny France, where he received excellent educational advantages. His father spent his entire life in France, and his widowed mother, whose maiden name was Mary Minvielle, still resides in that country. He has two brothers in the United States, one of whom lives with him in California.

On leaving school, Pierre Lapeyre began working on a farm, and while there became somewhat acquainted with the science of agriculture. Just before becoming of age he immigrated to the United States, landing in New York City. Staying but a short time in the east, he came to Southern California, and for ten years resided in Los Angeles. Locating in Ventura county in 1890, he was at first engaged in sheep raising. In 1891 he bought his present home ranch, near Moorpark, and has since been employed in general farming. His ranch, which he purchased from the Simi Land and Water Company, contains six hundred and sixty-five acres of land, a large part of which he uses for pasturage, devoting two hundred and fifty acres to grain. In the management of his place he uses sound judgment and wisdom, his land being well improved and productive, bringing him in a handsome annual income. Not affiliated with any political organization, Mr. Lapeyre has the courage of his convictions, voting independently for the men and measures that are most likely to advance the interests of town and county.

LEBBEUS SCOFIELD. Several generations of the Scofield family have been identified with lumbering interests. Some have owned tracts of timber and have rafted the same down rivers to sawmills; and others have been connected only with the sale of lumber, having no connection with its manufacture. Many years ago a farmer of Dutchess county, N. Y., bearing the name of Lebbeus Scofield, operated a sawmill at Fishkill and manufactured lumber for the local needs. A son of this pioneer miller, Jerome, followed the lumber business all through a very active life and was still interested in the industry at the time of his death, which occurred at Clinton, Iowa, at seventy-eight years of age. Surviving him, at the old Clinton homestead, is his wife, now eighty-nine years of age, and who bore the maiden name of Ann Van Voorhis, being of Mohawk Dutch lineage.

In the family of Jerome and Ann Scofield there were two sons, James T. and Lebbeus, both of whom were soldiers in the Civil war. Lebbeus enlisted at Clinton, Iowa, August 15, 1862, and served as sergeant in Company K, Twenty-sixth Iowa Infantry until the end of the war. In the memorable march of General Sherman to the sea he bore a brave part, and later it was his privilege to participate in the Grand Review at Washington. Though he was with his company in almost the entire number of battles in which his regiment participated, he was never wounded, nor did he fall a prisoner in the enemy's hands. The other son, James, was a member of the Brooklyn Zouaves, Fourteenth New York Infantry, known as the Henry Ward Beecher Regiment; less fortunate than his brother, he received severe wounds while serving in the battle of Gettysburg.

A native of Dutchess county, N. Y., born September 2, 1838, Libbeus Scofield received his primary and common-school education principally in Brooklyn, N. Y. At sixteen years of age he went to Buffalo, where also he attended school. After two years he moved to Clinton, Iowa, and learned the carpenter's trade, from which later he drifted into the lumber business. From his father he inherited a sawmill at Dubuque, Iowa, and logging interests above La-Crosse, Wis. The timber was cut from the forests and then the logs were rafted down the Mississippi river to Dubuque and Clinton, where they were converted into lumber, and finally shipped to the markets of the west. About 1870 Mr. Scofield disposed of his interest in the business and moved to Crawford county, in western Iowa, where he leased a tract of three hundred and twenty acres. Later he became postmaster of Westside, a village in Crawford county, where he held office for two years under President Cleveland. There he also bought and operated eighty acres of land.

On resigning as postmaster Mr. Scofield came to California in 1887 and settled in the Santa Maria valley, where he carried on a hotel for some eight months. Next he worked at his trade in San Diego. During April of 1888 he came to Los Angeles and secured a position as manager of the yards of the Ganahl Lumber Company, later being in charge of the lumber yard of A. H. Carey. For ten years he was superintendent of the Los Angeles Lumber Company. On resigning from their employ he became connected with the San Pedro Lumber Company in San Pedro, later was transferred by the company to Compton, and in December, 1901, he came to Whittier as the company's manager at this point, where he still remains in charge of their business. While living in Iowa he married Alice Santee, who was born in Pennsylvania, and by whom he has four children, Jerome, Helen, Harold and Florence. In fraternal relations he is connected with the Masonic Order and the Grand Army of the Republic.

S. D. RYNEARSON. Not infrequently those who have passed years of busy activity in the sterner climates of the north and east, after gaining competencies as the result of their wise judgment, seek the genial sunshine of the Pacific coast and in our equable climate establish a home for the twilight years of existence. Such is the experience of Mr. Rynearson, formerly an extensive stock-raiser in Iowa, more recently a business man of Nebraska, and now a resident of San Diego, whither he came in the fall of 1895 for the purpose of enjoying, in the midst of attractive climatic surroundings, the leisure so amply earned by previous years of application and endeavor.

Descended from a colonial family originally from Holland, Mr. Rynearson was born in Ohio near the city of Cincinnati, and was the third son of Jacob and Phoebe (Sharp) Rynearson. The paternal grandfather, John Rynearson, and also the maternal grandfather removed from New Jersey to Ohio in a very early day and engaged in the development of farm land in the then frontier. Jacob Rynearson was born after the removal of the family to Ohio and in 1834 he removed to Illinois, where he spent a year in Peoria county and then bought land near Farmington, Fulton county. On the farm he there improved, he remained until his death in 1846. His wife was born in New Jersey and died in Illinois. They were the parents of four sons and two daughters, of whom two sons and one daughter survive. One of the surviving sons is S. D., who was born January 16, 1827, and at the age of seven years accompanied his parents to Illinois, where he had such advantages as the subscription schools afforded.

Upon starting out for himself at the age of twenty-two years Mr. Rynearson went to Lee county, Iowa, and settled thirty miles north of Keokuk. The country was new, settlers few and improvements almost wholly wanting. In the transformation of the primeval region into a finely improved farming country he bore his share and reaped the reward which comes with the increased value of land. During 1870 he removed to Red Oak, Iowa, where altogether he improved about thirteen hundred acres of land and conducted an extensive business in the buying, feeding and shipping of cattle and hogs. Often many carloads of stock were shipped to the markets from his farm at the same time. In common with other stock-raisers he experienced reverses and successes, gaining large profits when the fluctuations of the market brought high prices for stock, and on the other hand suffering losses when a depression occurred in prices. In 1888 he disposed of his stock interests in Iowa and removed to Nebraska, where he engaged in business at South Omaha and also bought farm lands in Saunders county. From Nebraska he came to California in the fall of 1895 and settled at San Diego, where he now owns a comfortable residence with pleasant surroundings. While he has been interested in local enterprises in every place where he has resided, yet he has never been prominent in politics nor has he sought the official positions which a man of his ability might command. Both in religion and in politics he has maintained independent views and has not allied himself with any organization.

The marriage of Mr. Rynearson took place in Lee county, Iowa, September 25, 1855, and united him with Miss Rebecca Townsend, who was born near Richmond, Ind., being the only surviving member of the family of Jonathan and Mary (Long) Townsend, natives respectively of Ohio and South Carolina. Her paternal grandfather, John Townsend, was a member of a Quaker family and in an early day went from Pennsylvania to Ohio; her maternal grandfather, John Long, who also was a member of the Society of Friends, became a pioneer farmer of Indiana. The former was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. At an early age Jonathan Townsend began to assist in the task of transforming raw land into fertile farms, and at different times he helped to clear three farms in Indiana. In that state he was married, but some years later he removed to Iowa, where he continued to make his home until death. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Rynearson consists of two daughters, both of whom have left the parental home for homes of their own. The elder, Cora, was graduated from the University of Iowa with the degree of B. S., and was valedictorian of her class; later she became the wife of Prof. C. M. Wirick and now resides in Chicago. The younger daughter, Minnie, the widow of Dr. F. L. Breed, is at home.

NICHOLAS HERKELRATH. A well-known citizen, Mr. Nicholas Herkelrath is living in San Bernardino retired from active business life and enjoying the fruits of his labors. He is a native of Germany, his birth having occurred in Bavaria, February 5, 1838, the son of John and Anna Baum Herkelrath. His father was a baker by trade and emigrated to America in 1848. He landed at New Orleans from there making his way up the river to Belleville, St. Clair county, Ill., where he remained for several years. From there he went to Peru, and La Salle county, but remained only a short time when he decided to go still further west and located in Nicollet county, Minn., near St. Peter on the Minnesota river.

Nicholas Herkelrath commenced his business career by clerking in a general store in Minnesota, after which he went to Chicago and engaged in the railway business. After several years employed in this capacity Mr. Herkelrath decided to change his location and occupation and removed to Ortonville, Minn., engaging in general merchandising for six years, after which he sold out his business and went to St. Peter, Minn. In 1893 Mr. Herkelrath came to California to spend the winter and was so well pleased with the climate and conditions that it became a practice with him to come to this state when the cold weather set in at his northern home. In 1898 he became a permanent resident of California, making his home in San Bernardino, where his residence is on South E street. In politics he is independent.

MRS. COLLISTO WILLARD SCOTT, of the firm of C. W. Scott & Co., of Ocean Park, Cal., is a native daughter of the state, being a daughter of Alexander Hamilton Willard, Jr., a pioneer of 1849, and Mary A. (Wakefield) Willard, his wife. Alexander Hamilton Willard, Jr., was one of the sons of Alexander Hamilton Willard, Sr., and his wife, Eleanor (McDonald) Willard, the elder man being one of the Lewis and Clark men of 1804. (See history of that expedition.) His name will be found on the roster and in the original records of that expedition on file at the Smithsonian Institute, and in other historical works. He was one of the nine picked men who left St. Louis with Lewis and Clark, selected for his fine physique and known courage and hardihood. After returning from the expedition he married Eleanor McDonald, of Kentucky, and born of this union were five daughters and seven sons. He was actively engaged in the Indian war of 1811 with Tecumseh and was selected by General Clark to carry his despatches from St. Louis to Prairie du Chien, which he did with many hairbreadth escapes and much suffering. He, with four of his sons (George, Austin, Royland and Hamilton, Jr.), fought in the Black Hawk war. In 1852 he again crossed the plains, this time to California, with other members of his own family, where he joined his son, Hamilton, Jr., and other members of the same family who had emigrated to the Sacramento valley in 1849 and had acquired part of a large Spanish grant on Cache creek, near Sacramento. He was born in New Hampshire in 1778 and died in 1868, and is buried in Georgetown, near Sacramento, Cal. He had one brother by the name of Joel Willard, who remained in New Hampshire; and two sisters who married men by the name of Willard. He was a descendant of the two Harvard presidents, Samuel and Joseph Willard, who were descended from Simon Willard, one of the founders of Concord, Mass., in 1634, and whose ancestry has been traced for eight hundred years on English soil. The late Frances Willard, the noted temperance reformer, is a descendant of the same family.

Alexander Hamilton Willard, Jr., was born in Missouri in 1812, and died in California in 1870. He married Mary A. Wakefield, a daughter of Judge John A. Wakefield, and to them fourteen children were born, most of whom grew to maturity in California. Judge John A. Wakefield was born in South Carolina in 1795, his mother being a member of the celebrated Barnwell family. When seven years of age his parents removed to Kentucky, and he there attained manhood, and during the war of 1812 served as a member of the battalion of mounted rangers, and also served through the Black Hawk war, attaining the rank of major. In later life he wrote a history of the Black Hawk war which has always been standard. He came of Revolutionary stock, his father and several uncles being members of Mariona's "Immortal Band." He was also a pioneer in the states of Illinois, Minnesota and Kansas, having served several terms in Illinois legislature, being a fellow member of Stephen A. Douglas, between whom a warm friendship existed. Judge Wakefield entered the legal profession when a young man and acquired a noteworthy success in this line, being a scholar as well as a good financier, having accumulated a large fortune in lands and stock. He also wrote several books and from Judge Wakefield's library in Galena, Ill., Abraham Lincoln received his first instruction toward an education, and in the home of the judge found a trusted and valued friend. Judge Wakefield married Eliza Thompson, with whom he lived a long life and reared a large family. He was distinguished for his energy of character and high sense of personal honor, and was one of the men who helped to make the history of this country.

G. W. NEULS. Although he has been a permanent resident of San Bernardino county, but little more than a year, G. W. Neuls succeeded in establishing himself in one of the extensive lumber dealing and manufacturing enterprises in that section of the county, being a director and formerly secretary and general manager of the San Bernardino Lumber & Box Company.

G. W. Neuls was born November 11, 1857, at Scranton, Pa., where he received his education in the public schools, and early went to work as a mechanic for the Dickson Manufacturing company, under direction of his uncle, Mr. Dupree. He remained at this employment for three years, then became manager of a furniture factory, after which he accepted a position in the brush handle factory of Holgate Brothers & Co., at Daleville. In 1881 he went to Mexico to install machinery for a large manufacturing plant, and after that work was completed came to California, locating at San Francisco for a short period, later accepting a position with L. Shover, a lumber merchant of San Rafael. In 1885 he returned to Pennsylvania, intending to spend six months with the Holgate firm, which had removed to Kane, Pa. He became general manager of the factory, and in 1889, when the firm was incorporated as Holgate Brothers Company, Mr. Neuls was made vice-president and general manager. He set about to develop the business into one of much more importance than it had been and succeeded in building up the capacity of the factory from an enterprise demanding the labor of twenty-five men to one which employed two hundred hands. He invented many machines to be used in the manufacture of brush handles and ultimately the factory became the largest in the world in that line, manufacturing one thousand seven hundred different varieties of brush handles, handling eighty-five per cent of the trade in the United States and securing large export orders. Mr. Neuls had been carrying the whole responsibility of the business and detail work at the factory when realizing that his duties were undermining his health he resigned the position.

For five years Mr. Neuls had been spending his winters in California and in March, 1905, he decided to make Redlands his home. He has a fine twelve-acre orange grove on Fern avenue and takes considerable pride in his residence there. In June, 1905, the San Bernardino Lumber & Box Company was re-organized and Mr. Neuls became secretary and general manager. They have the largest planing mill in San Bernardino, which is fitted with steam and electric power, employs from thirty-five to forty hands, and is engaged in the manufacture of boxes and planing mill work, as well as dealing in all kinds of lumber. His marriage occurred at Champaign, Ill., where Miss Grace Dale, a native of Pennsylvania who was educated at the University of Illinois, became his wife. This union has been blessed with the birth of three children, Joseph D., William D., who died aged two years, and Marion. Mrs. Neuls is an active member of the Presbyterian Church, and a woman of superior intelligence and education. Fraternally Mr. Neuls is prominent in the Masonic order, of which he was made a member in Kane Lodge No. 566, F. & A. M., and is past master of the same; is a member of Kane Chapter No. 279, R. A. M., and is past high priest; also belongs to Warren Commandery No. 63, K. T.; Bradford Council No. 43, and Valley Consistory at Williamsport, Pa. In 1902 he was sent as a representative from Kane lodge to the Sesquia Centennial of the initiation of

W A McFarlane

George Washington as a Mason which was held in Philadelphia. Politically he believes in the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He has always been interested in military matters and while in Scranton was a member of Company A of the Thirteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania National Guards. At San Rafael he assisted in the organization of a company of state militia and was commissioned lieutenant just as he removed his residence from that place. Mr. Neuls is a liberal and public-spirited man of pleasing personality and has won the esteem of his fellow citizens of San Bernardino county during his residence among them.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER McFARLANE. In tracing the ancestry of this honored pioneer of San Bernardino we find that he descends from families connected with the colonial history of Virginia and boasting records for patriotism and loyal devotion to country. The old Commonwealth gave to our struggling colonies no defender more brave than the young Virginian, Andrew McFarlane, who left home at the opening of the Revolution and gave seven years to the service of the patriotic spirits aiming at independence. During the progress of the war he was captured by the English and Indians, by whom he was held a prisoner for some time and forced to run the Indian gauntlet. The McFarlane family was related to Lewis and Clark, who made the memorable expedition to the mouth of the Columbia river and thus opened to settlement one of the most fertile regions of the country.

Among the children of Alexander McFarlane was a son, Thomas Lewis, who was born, reared and educated in Pennsylvania, and from there in 1843 removed to Iowa, settling among the frontiersmen of Jackson county. After farming there for a short time he went to Illinois and secured employment in the Galena mines, but eventually returned to Jackson county, Iowa, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1875. Early in manhood's prime he married Susan Alexander, who was born in Ireland of Scotch ancestry, the daughter of an English officer, William Alexander. In their family was a son, William Alexander, whose name introduces this article, and whose birth occurred in Jackson county, Iowa, May 19, 1845. Educated in the primitive log schoolhouses of the frontier, he managed to acquire a broad knowledge despite the primitive conditions of the schools. Each summer he helped to till the soil and gather in the harvest; each winter found him diligently pursuing his studies in the common schools.

During the spring of 1865 William Alexander McFarlane crossed the plains with a freighting expedition, leaving Iowa and following the customary route along the Platte and through Cheyenne pass. When he started on the journey he had hired as driver of a team of mules, but it soon developed that he was an expert shot. Accordingly he was taken from the team and appointed hunter for the train. With the aid of his gun he supplied the large party during the entire trip with an abundance of wild game, including bear and deer. The first stop in California was made at San Bernardino, from which point he proceeded to Los Angeles and thence to Kern county, where his three brothers were living. In that county he engaged in placer, gulch and quartz mining for a number of years, meanwhile meeting with fair success. During 1869 he went to White Pine, Nev., where he engaged in silver mining for a time, but in the fall of the same year he returned to Kern county. From 1870 until 1872 he engaged in silver mining at the Ivanpah mines, in which he still retains an interest.

Since establishing his home in San Bernardino in 1872 Mr. McFarlane has lived somewhat in retirement from business cares, but still maintains an active supervision of his various interests, including mines in Inyo county and elsewhere. In this city he married Mrs. Anne McFarlane, a native of Ohio, and an estimable lady, who presides with cordial hospitality over their beautiful home at No. 581 E street. While he came west wholly without means and friends, he has been successful in gaining a fair share of the world's goods and in winning the warm friendship of a large circle of acquaintances, by whom he is highly esteemed for his record as a pioneer of the state and for his integrity of character and geniality of temperament.

PROF. G. WALTER MONROE. There is in the whole world no higher field of usefulness than that of educational activity, and the men and women who give their lives to the training of the young are of all others the most helpful factors in the development of the race. Southern California has gained a wide reputation for its thoroughness in educational work, and this high standing is due to its talented educators, one of whom, Prof. G. Walter Monroe, holds the responsible position of principal of the Whittier high school and superintendent of the grammar schools of the same district. Educated principally in the schools of the west, he may be called a product of California institutions of learning and whatever of success he has achieved (which is large) the credit may be attributed to the development of his talents through a correct and systematic course of training.

It was during 1886 that Felix M. and Chloe H. (Sevier) Monroe, natives respectively of Indiana and Missouri, removed to California, bringing with them their son, G. Walter, who was born in Floris, Davis county, Iowa, and was a youth of sixteen years at the time of the removal. The father settled in Monrovia and still makes that place his home, being well known to the people of the vicinity. After having completed the studies of the Monrovia public schools, the son was sent to the California State Normal School of Los Angeles, where he took the complete course and was graduated in 1892. Immediately afterward he began to teach school and for three years held the position of principal of the schools of San Gabriel, Los Angeles county. With the savings of that period he determined to broaden his education and accordingly matriculated in the California State University at Berkeley, where he carried on a thorough course of study for two years. Afterward he became a teacher in the Monrovia high school and continued in that position for three years, resigning in order to resume his studies at Berkeley, where he remained until his graduation in 1900. For the ensuing years he was engaged in post-graduate work at the university and then came to his present position at the head of the Whittier schools.

The marriage of Professor Monroe took place in Monrovia and united him with Miss Leila E. Bent, of that place, and they are the parents of a daughter, Muriel I. The religious affiliations of the family are with the Baptist Church, to the maintenance of which Professor Monroe has been a regular contributor. Having devoted his life thus far to the acquiring of a broad education and the mastering of the most thorough principles of pedagogy, he has had little leisure for participation in public affairs, in which, indeed, he takes no part aside from voting the Republican ticket at local and general elections. In fraternal relations he is a Mason, upholding the principles of brotherhood for which that order stands.

OLIVER J. NEWLAN. Holding a position among the successful ranchers in the vicinity of Norwalk is Oliver Newlan, who, although he has been located here but a comparatively brief time, has already established himself among the upbuilding factors of the section. He is a native of Moultrie county, Ill., where he was born October 27, 1878; his father, Joseph N. Newlan, was also born in that section, the date of his birth being May 27, 1841, while the paternal grandparents, William and Rachel (Funk) Newlan, were natives of Ohio. They removed to Illinois and engaged in general farming, owning one hundred acres of productive land. His death occurred there at the age of forty-seven years, his wife surviving him and removing to Missouri, where she passed away at the age of eighty-seven years. They were the parents of eight children, of whom seven are living, two sons and two daughters residing in Missouri, two in Illinois and one in California. William Newlan was a Democrat in his political affiliations and was prominent in affairs in his community. His wife was a member of the Christian Church, which received a liberal support from the family. Joseph N. Newlan was reared in Illinois and educated through the medium of the public schools, after which he engaged with his father in the conduct of the home farm. He remained so occupied until he was twenty-seven years old, when he started out for himself, having previously purchased a forty-acre tract of land. He also added a forty-acre tract to this first purchase, retained it for a time, then sold and going to Bethany bought one hundred and thirty acres, and made this his home for a period of ten years engaged in grain and stock-raising. He finally came to California and in Santa Barbara was located for one year, engaging in ranching. Then he returned to his old farm in Illinois for one year; at the end of that time he rented this property and went to Oregon, where in Silverton he raised hops and then engaged in general farming at Lynn, same state, for some time. In 1883 he returned to California and rented a place of eighty-five acres near Carpinteria, Santa Barbara county, and after residing there for seven years he came to Los Angeles county and bought twenty acres. He sold his properties in the east and in Oregon and with the proceeds invested in two forty-acre tracts, and finally adding another twenty acres now owns a fine ranch. He was married in 1869 to Miss Sarah E. Hostetter, a native of Indiana, and they became the parents of the following children: Corwin E., who married Annie Sentney, and has one child; Rosa, wife of J. M. Moore, and who has seven children; Oliver, of this review; Ella, wife of George Campbell; and Roscoe V. Mr. Newlan is a stanch adherent of Democratic principles, and while in Illinois was chosen by this party to the position of road commissioner of Moreborn township. In religion he belongs to the Christian Church.

Oliver Newlan was reared in his native state of Illinois and in California and Oregon, and returning to California in 1893 he completed his education in the public schools of Santa Barbara county. At the age of seventeen years he became dependent upon his own resources and following his early training engaged in farming enterprises. In 1900 he came to his present ranch, a well improved tract of twenty acres, given over entirely to pasturage for twenty-three cows, which constitute a dairy herd, the product being shipped to Los Angeles. In August, 1902, he married Mrs. Sarah Hammerton, a native of Illinois, who had three children by her former husband. Mr. Newlan is identified fraternally with Modern Woodmen of America, Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Aid. He is independent in his political affiliations, reserving the right to cast his ballot for the candidate he considers best qualified for official position. The Christian Church receives the support of the family, both being active members of the same.

SIDNEY VORIS HORTON. Positions of honor have been the part of Mr. Horton since his location in Southern California, for he has demonstrated during his residence here the high qualities of character and the sturdy integrity of manhood which bespeak for him the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. Born in Greenville, Hunt county, Tex., January 4, 1860, he was a member of a family of three children, two of whom attained maturity and are now living, his brother, Benjamin Sterling Horton, being located in Indio, Cal., as roadmaster of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. His father, Peter Ivory Voris Horton, was born in Tennessee, and came to Texas in boyhood, and there engaged as a farmer and stockman. At the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the First Texas Cavalry and served as captain until the close of the struggle, being wounded at the battle of Shiloh. In 1868 he brought his family to San Bernardino and here purchased a farm and began the raising of grain and the cultivation of a vineyard and orchard. His death occurred in February, 1885, at the age of fifty-eight years. His wife was formerly Mary Ann Eliza Melton, a native of Selma, Ala., and a daughter of Peter Melton, a planter who is supposed to have died on a trip to Mexico; the maternal grandfather, named SoRelle, was a planter in Alabama and later in Texas, and was of French descent. Mrs. Horton died in San Bernardino county in 1878.

Sidney Voris Horton was reared in Texas for the first eight years of his life, when he was brought to California by his parents and has here continued to make his home. He attended the public school at the old Mission and was early trained to the life of a farmer's son, learning methods used in horticulture and general farming which have proven of benefit to him in later years. At twenty-one years of age he went on the railroad and for three or four years was engaged in the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad, after which he returned to farming, and has since been so occupied. He owns twenty-three acres in Mission valley at the foot of the Terracina bluff, all of which is set out in valencia and navel oranges. In 1906 he was elected justice of the peace of Mission township on the Democratic ticket, his office being at Bryn Mawr.

In San Bernardino Mr. Horton was united in marriage with Miss Beulah Hamner, a native of Mississippi, and born of this union are the following children; Clara Evelyn, Alice, Mildred, Sidney V., Jr., Gladys, Hugh, Bertha, Eugene and Floyd. The first three named are graduates of the Redlands high school in the class of 1906. Mr. Horton has served as school trustee of the mission district for one term, and was clerk of the board for that time. Fraternally he is associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of Redlands; the Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows, of San Bernardino; and the Modern Woodmen of America of Redlands. Mrs. Horton is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Horton is a stanch Democrat, and for many years has served as a member of the Democratic County Central Committee.

JOHN W. BARTON. A pioneer miner and rancher, John W. Barton is located in the vicinity of El Monte and engaged in the cultivation of an extensive ranch of between fifteen hundred and eighteen hundred acres, while he is improving a homestead of twenty-four acres. He has met with gratifying success in his efforts, has acquired a competence, and at the same time has taken his place among the citizens of his locality, who are always counted upon to uphold public honor and support progressive and developing measures. Mr. Barton is a native of Berrien county, Mich., born October 19, 1841, a son of John W. and Emeroy (Williams) Barton, early pioneers of California, whose history is given at length in that of their son, Chester R. Barton, which appears elsewhere in this volume. The mother lived to a ripe old age, her death occurring December 19, 1906.

During childhood John W. Barton was brought to California by his parents and located in Solano county, and there he attended the public schools. After completing his educational work he went to the mines of Nevada and engaged in driving a twenty-six mule team in the hauling of ore. During this time and later he made his home in Virginia City, which was then one of the flourishing cities of the west. Later he engaged in buying and selling stock of mining companies and the numerous mining operations in hand at that time enabled him to occupy his time very thoroughly. He also owned stock in some of the best mines known at that time, making and losing several fortunes during his continuance in this work. Thirty years of his life were thus spent in the mining towns of Nevada, but finally he withdrew his interests and going to Arizona became manager of quartz teams with the Pinal Company, of that state. After three years of this work he resigned, and returning to California located in Los Angeles county, since which time he has been extensively engaged in grain raising, renting a part of the Baldwin property, and he also owns twenty-four acres upon which he is making his home. He employs more men than any other one man in this section and his success has given him no little prestige among the ranchers of the county.

In 1876 Mr. Barton was united in marriage with Miss Scioto Eggleston, a native of Iowa, and a cultured woman, who occupies a prominent place in the social life of the community. She is a member of the Episcopal Church, whose charities are liberally supported by Mr. Barton. In his political convictions he is a stanch adherent of Republican principles, and although he has never cared for official recognition has still taken an active interest in the advancement of his party's welfare. Fraternally he is a member of Lexington Lodge No. 104, F. & A. M., of El Monte, in which he has served as treasurer for the past twenty years, being elected without a dissenting vote—an eloquent tribute to his honesty and nobility of character.

DANIEL M. DURRELL. Not only as a pioneer of Los Angeles county has Daniel M. Durrell won for himself a position among the citizens of this section, but as well for the success which he has won as a rancher. Although his ranch is now only moderate in size, yet he has owned considerable property here and has assisted materially in the development of the farming interests in and about Compton, where he has been located since the fall of 1876. He is a native of Maine, his birth having occurred in Solon, Somerset county, February 25, 1842. His father, Daniel M. Durrell, Sr., was of English parentage, while his mother, Elizabeth (Toms) Durrell was the representative of a family long established on American soil. Both were natives of Maine, where the father followed farming until 1872, when he brought his family of ten children to California and located on a part of the Tajanta ranch in the vicinity of Florence. There he died at the age of eighty years, while his wife passed away when eighty-five. He was a citizen of worth and prominence, taking an active part in public affairs, always voting the Republican ticket and seeking always to advance the principles advocated in the platform of this party. Both himself and wife were affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Daniel M. Durrell, Jr., was reared to young manhood in his native place, receiving his education through the medium of the public schools. At the age of nineteen, in 1860, he came to California. In Plumas county he engaged in mining until 1876 (having in the meantime made one trip to British Columbia prospecting), when he came to Los Angeles county and in 1879 purchased the property upon which he now lives. He now owns of this acreage a tract of twenty-five acres, devoted principally to the cultivation of alfalfa, although he raises some vegetables. His alfalfa crop averages about seven tons to the acre. He is also interested in a pumping plant which has a twenty-two horse power engine, with a flow of one hundred inches.

November 9, 1880, Daniel M. Durrell married Miss Margaret J. Juden, a native of Missouri, and the daughter of George W. and Mary (Caker) Juden. Mr. and Mrs. Durrell are the parents of the following children: Nellie E., Catherine L., who married Raymond Ball and has one child; Herbert J.; and Frank and Maggie Mae, twins. Mr. Durrell is associated fraternally with the Odd Fellows, having become a member of the organization in Plumas county, and is now an Ancient Odd Fellow. Like his father he is and always has been a Republican in politics and like him also takes an active and intelligent interest in all movements of the party, as well as any movement calculated to advance the general welfare of the community. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Durrell is a man of broad ideas and very well read on all topics of contemporary interest, making him an entertaining and interesting companion. He is thorough and painstaking in his methods, conscientious in all of his efforts, and has deservedly won the position of esteem which he holds among those who have known him for so many years.

The history of the Juden family can be traced to John Juden, who was born in Kent, England, February 15, 1700, and he it was who first represented the name in the new world. Descended from this ancestor was Thomas Juden, who was born in Baltimore, Md., April 12, 1799. A farmer by occupation, he followed this calling in Cape Girardeau county, Mo., where he was well known as a citizen of worth and ability. For four terms he served as judge of Capt Girardeau county, a position to which he was elected on the Whig ticket. In his religious belief he was a Baptist. His marriage united him with Nancy Holcomb, a native of North Carolina, where her father carried on farming. The first representative of the Holcomb family in the United States was James Holcomb.

Boyd M. Moon

To the marriage of Thomas and Nancy (Holcomb) Juden George Washington Juden was born in Cape Girardeau county, Mo., May 10, 1829, and in that locality he received his education and was there reared to a practical knowledge of agriculture on his father's farm. At the time of the gold excitement in California he was a young man of twenty-one years and like many others he came west to try his luck in the mines, and in addition to mining also followed farming to some extent. Subsequently he returned to the east, and January 10, 1854, he was united in marriage with Mary Caker, who was born in Nashville, Tenn., the daughter of S. T. and Margaret J. Caker. The latter were pioneer settlers in the west, the family having located in Watsonville, Cal., at an early day. Eight children were born of the marriage of George W. and Mary (Caker) Juden, as follows: Mrs. F. E. Turner, T. S. Juden, Mrs. M. A. Holloway, Margaret J. (Mrs. Daniel M. Durrell), G. W. Juden, J. W. Juden, C. F. Juden and Mrs. M. C. Wheat. When their daughter Margaret was a child of eight months Mr. Juden brought the family to California and in 1867 located in Azusa, where he still makes his home. The wife and mother is deceased. In politics Mr. Juden is a Democrat and fraternally he is a Mason.

BOYD M. MOORE. Friends as well as a competence have been the result of the energetic and well directed efforts of Mr. Moore, who is located in the vicinity of Norwalk and engaged in the management of a twenty-acre ranch. Of southern lineage, he was born in North Carolina August 23, 1859, a son of William R. and Sarah (McCrary) Moore, both natives of Transylvania county, same state. The father was a planter and owned two hundred acres of land susceptible of cultivation and about five hundred acres of mountain pasture land. He was a Republican in politics and was elected county treasurer for six terms. He served in the Civil war as a soldier in a regiment of North Carolina Infantry, and survived the perils of warfare. He is now living in North Carolina, his wife also is living. They were the parents of twelve children of whom ten are living, another son besides Boyd being in California, Perry Moore, of Long Beach.

Boyd Moore received his education in the public and high schools after which he entered Judson College, at Hendersonville, N. C. After completing the course he began teaching and continued this occupation for the period of nine years, being employed in the grammar grades, high schools and subscription schools, in both the Carolinas. He finally gave up his educational work, and going to Texas engaged in ranching for the next five years, when, December 11, 1893, he came to California. On his arrival he took an inventory and found the extent of his worldly possessions amounted to $2.40. Nothing daunted he went to work with the determination and will to succeed and found employment on ranches for two years; then rented a ranch in the vicinity of Norwalk, farmed there for about four years, and then purchased his present property of twenty acres. After batching it for several years he resolved it was not good for man to live alone, so in 1902 he made a visit to his old home and while there married Miss Carrie Batson, a native of that state and the daughter of Ed. E. and Sallie (Lyon) Batson, who are still living in North Carolina. Of the family, Mrs. Moore is the only one in California, she having seven brothers and one sister still living in the sunny south. Mrs. Moore obtained her education in the public schools. She is a woman of much ability and excellent qualities, which endear her to a large circle of friends; and she is an active member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Moore by his energy has improved his place until it has become a very valuable farm with eight acres in bearing walnut trees and eleven acres in one and two year old trees. The balance is devoted to a family orchard with substantial improvements, including his residence, outbuildings and a fine well. From his twenty-acre ranch in 1906 he cleared the sum of $1,700, a very large yield considering eleven acres are in young trees. He is also interested in copper and last year invested $2,000 in copper mines that looks very promising. They are the parents of two children, Vera and Thelma. In his fraternal relations Mr. Moore is identified with the Fraternal Brotherhood, and also carries insurance in the Etna Old Line Company and the Mutual Life of New York. He is a Republican in politics and while in North Carolina worked for his father in the office of county treasurer. In religion he is a member of the Baptist Church and liberally supports its charities.

ORIN PORTER. Mining has occupied much of the attention of Orin Porter, but he is now spending the evening of his days in the pleasant surroundings of Redlands, engaged in horticultural pursuits. He was born in Troy, Orleans county, Vt., November 11, 1838, a son of Charles Porter, the latter was a native of Caledonia county, Vt., where the grandfather, Eleazer, of English ancestry, came from Connecticut and followed farming. Charles Porter died when his son was but nine years old, being at that time employed as a grading contractor on the C. P. & S. Railway. His mother, Electa Hand in maidenhood, was a native of Peacham, Vt., and a daughter of Capt. Charles Hand, a farmer at that place and later in Troy, where he died. Mrs. Porter died in Redlands at the age of eighty years, when making her home with her son. She was the mother of four sons and one daughter, of whom three sons are living.

Reared in Vermont on the paternal farm, Orin Porter received his education through the medium of the public schools and the Peacham Academy, which he attended for one term. At seventeen years of age he came to Iowa and made his home with Arad Hitchcock, in Osage, Mitchell county, where he continued for four years. Returning to Vermont in 1859 he engaged in farming for three years, also following the blacksmith trade. In 1868 he removed to Idaho, making the trip by rail to Cheyenne, thence by mule teams and on horseback to Boise basin, Idaho, where he prospected and mined for a time, and then engaged in teaming. In Nevada he worked at lumbering where logs were worth $100 a thousand, and then again took up mining and teaming. He returned to Vermont in 1872 and engaged in the blacksmith trade in Troy, going again to Idaho four years later, where he was occupied in mining at Rocky Bar, Alturas county, that state, and assisted in opening the following mines: The Governor Bennett, the Golden Eagle, after which he went to Wood river and engaged with his brother, E. H. Porter, and his partner, J. L. Mason, in the lead and silver mines, and there opened the Red Cloud group as the Red Cloud Mining Company. He worked in that section until the spring of 1890 when he sold out for $250,000, and in the same fall came to California and was so impressed with the country that he decided to locate here permanently. The following winter he accordingly purchased a ten-acre tract on Wabash street, which he set to oranges, and settling here in 1892 he built a residence, barns, outbuildings, and made all necessary improvements. Since that time he has added to his original purchase a twenty-acre tract on Wabash, ten acres of which being in oranges, and he also has a ten-acre grove on the Williams tract, thirty acres in bearing.

In Idaho Mr. Porter was united in marriage with Mrs. Sarah (Rogers) Gregory, a native of Vermont, and they have one child, Ora. Mrs. Porter is a member of the Congregational Church. Fraternally Mr. Porter was made a Mason in Troy Lodge No. 16, A. F. & A. M., and now belongs to Haley Lodge No. 16 in Idaho. Politically he is a stanch Republican. He is interested in the East Redlands Water Company and is serving as a director, and is also acting in the same capacity in the Redlands Orange Producers' Association. He is one of the prominent citizens of the town, and is accounted one upon whom public honor may safely rest, every movement looking toward the general welfare being liberally and enthusiastically supported by his efforts.

JAMES BROWN GLOVER. Among the pioneers of Redlands mention belongs to James Brown Glover, who came to California in 1855 and to this location in 1869, and since that time has given his efforts toward the material upbuilding and development of this section of Southern California. He was born in Warsaw, Mo., near the farm owned by Thomas H. Benton, June 29, 1842. His father, Milton White, was born in Kentucky, a son of Richard, a farmer who lived and died in that state. Milton White Glover became a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was ordained in Kentucky and after his location in Missouri in an early day engaged in the ministry of his church. He attended the St. Louis Conference and was appointed to a circuit six hundred miles in circumference. He worked at the builder's trade for a livelihood. In 1850 he crossed the plains to California by means of ox-teams and after his arrival engaged in the mines of the state and also preached on Sundays as a local preacher. He returned to Missouri in 1855 via the Isthmus of Panama and in the same year brought his family to California via Nicaragua. After his return to the state he engaged in mining for a time, and finally in 1858 on the formation of the Pacific Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South he joined it and was sent as a missionary to San Bernardino, where he established the first church of this denomination in the county. After serving for three years he went to Los Angeles and preached in the old courthouse, Mr. Harper, the father of the present mayor of that city, being one of his principal supporters, and with him and Bishop Keener, Mr. Glover purchased a lot on Spring street between Second and Third streets, where the first church of this denomination was erected in Los Angeles. He was later sent to San Luis Obispo and there he formed a church and erected a building, doing the work with his own hands. Overwork and exposure caused him to lose his health and he was forced to retire from the ministry, and coming to the home of his son at Highland he made this place his home until his death, which occurred in 1878, at the age of sixty-seven years. His wife was Elizabeth Osburn, who was born near Mt. Washington, Ky.; her death occurred in Los Angeles at the home of the Rev. William A. Knighten.

She was the mother of the following children: James Brown, of this review; Sarah Margaret, Mrs. Carter of San Bernardino; Nancy Maria, wife of Rev. William A. Knighten, of Los Angeles; Jasper, a horticulturist of Redlands; and Newton, who died at the age of fifteen years.

The oldest in the family of children born to his parents, James Brown Glover was reared in Missouri to the age of thirteen years, when he was brought to California, the journey being made by way of the Nicaragua route, their passage being on the Prometheus to Greytown and thence on the Uncle Sam to San Francisco. Their landing was made in October, 1855, when they went to Drytown, Amador county. In 1858 Mr. Glover was apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith and after two years he went to Sonoma county, and there completed his education in the public schools of the state. He was married in 1863 to Miss Elizabeth A. McGuire, who was born in the vicinity of St. Joseph, Mo., a daughter of Cornelius McGuire, who brought his family to California in 1852 across the plains and in Sonoma county engaged as a farmer. After his marriage Mr. Glover located in the vicinity of Ukiah, Mendocino county, Cal., and there engaged in general farming. Through the glowing reports made by his father of the climate and opportunities of San Bernardino county he came to Southern California in 1869 and entered land on the Bench (now Redlands) and began the improvement of a tract of one hundred and sixty acres. Five years later he proved up on the property, but having no water he removed to Crafton and leased a fruit farm, which he cultivated for two years. He was next located in Highland and engaged in fruit culture. Returning in 1878 to his original farm he with other settlers who were now located in this district formed the Sunnyside Company and took out a ditch from the Santa Ana river and began irrigation, later forming the Lugonia Water Company which took out a large ditch, rocked and cemented it. This is still in existence and is now a pipe line. He improved his property and in the fall of 1878 set out fifty orange trees and continued to set out oranges until he had twelve acres devoted to this fruit. In 1890 he sold out this property and engaged in a mercantile enterprise in Redlands, locating on Orange and Central avenues, where he conducted a grocery business for the period of six years. In the fall of 1896 he was nominated on the Democratic ticket as supervisor of district No. 3, and was elected by a majority of forty-three votes in a district where the Republicans led by a plurality of five hundred and sixty votes. He was re-elected in 1900 with a majority of one hundred and fifty votes, and re-elected in 1904 by seventy-three votes, with his district going Republican by a plurality of nine hundred and ninety-one votes. He is chairman of the finance committee, and a member of the hospital committee, for the first eight years having served as chairman of the board of supervisors and ex officio member of the Law Library of San Bernardino county. From the organization of the city of Redlands in 1888 Mr. Glover served as a member of the Board of Trustees, and officiated as president of the board. He was a member of the Board of school trustees of the Lugonia district for nine years and served as president, during which time the first school building was erected.

Mr. and Mrs. Glover are the parents of the following children: Ida M., wife of Walter Lawry, of Redlands; Virginia Lee, wife of F. A. Armstrong, proprietor of Eden Springs; Edwin Milton, operator for the Edison Electric Company at Inglewood, Cal.; and Anna Katie, who died at the age of two years. Fraternally Mr. Glover is identified with the Knights of Pythias and is past chief counsellor of Redlands lodge; and the Uniformed Rank of the K. of P. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and has held every office in the church, having served as trustee and Sunday-school superintendent for the past twenty-six years. He served as delegate to the General Conference held at Birmingham, Ala., in 1906, and during his trip east visited his old home in Missouri after an absence of fifty-one years. He is a stanch Democrat politically. As a member of the Board of Trade and an ex-director he has been instrumental in the material prosperity of the city. Mr. Glover has not been too much engrossed with his multifold duties to entirely ignore his mechanical ability, taking time to invent various articles, among them the Glover roadoiler, for oiling streets and roads, a patent for which he secured in 1903. This is used in San Bernardino county, Los Angeles, Santa Cruz, San Luis Obispo, Ventura, Santa Barbara and Orange, and is justly considered one of the most important achievements in the matter of improvements in Southern California.

IVES E. COBB. Perhaps no man in Venice is better informed on its public affairs and the valuation of property than Ives E. Cobb, who has been a resident of the place since its phenomenal rise upon the business horizon of Southern California. Natural ability enhanced by education, experience and contact with the world in all its business forms, has given to him a knowledge that he has found invaluable in his work in this section of the state, and putting into practice the quick, unerring decision which distinguishes the man equal to progress, he has acquired both financial success and a wide influence as a capable man of affairs. His name is associated with practically every movement which has for its end the growth and upbuilding of Venice, in whose future he has unbounded faith.

It is not a matter of surprise that Mr. Cobb is endowed with a mentality of unusual caliber, for this has long been a characteristic in his family, whose members have distinguished themselves in professional and business life. His father, James T. Cobb, of eastern birth, was educated at Dartmouth College, where he was a brilliant member of an unusually brilliant class, comprising such men as Phillips Brooks, Digby Bell, George W. Emery (afterward governor of Utah), and others of equal prominence and note. Although a man of advanced years he is considered today one of the best Shakespeare scholars in the United States, for his services along this line having been included by Ignatius Donnelly in his Cryptogram. Mr. Cobb is a resident of Salt Lake City, Utah, where he engaged as a journalist on two of the leading papers many years ago. Time has not lessened his ardor in the matter of research or literary criticism, and he is still named among the lights of his home city, where he has acquired a wide circle of friends. His wife, formerly Camilla C. Meathe, a native of Dresden, Germany, is also living. She is a daughter of Professor Meathe, a well-known educator of Germany, and in her young womanhood received a most excellent education, being a clever linguist and able to both speak and write fluently in three languages.

A native of Utah, Ives E. Cobb spent the first years of his life in Salt Lake City, where he received his education through the medium of the public schools. Preferring active business life rather than a professional career, at the age of twenty-one years he accepted an opening in a bank of his native city, being first employed as messenger. Promotion was not long in coming to him and from one position to another he was chosen until he became bank teller. Having in the mean time become interested in mining, he resigned his bank position to enable him to give his entire attention to this other enterprise, and for some time thereafter he engineered important deals in this line of work. In 1900 he came to California and in the southern portion of the state became identified with real estate operations, finally locating in Ocean Park, and thence opening an office in Venice, where he was instrumental in the organization of the Venice Investment Company, of which he became president. He is also serving at the present writing as president of the Venice Amusement Company, and is thus closely identified with every movement for the improvement of the place, standing close to the master mind that has conceived and with the help of invaluable lieutenants has executed this gigantic plan.

In spite of his engrossing business affairs Mr. Cobb has found time to ally himself with social organizations, being a valued member of the Country Club. Politically a Republican, he supports the men and measures of his party and seeks to advance the best interests of the country according to the principles he endorses. That he is a loyal citizen has been demonstrated, for at the call of his country during the Spanish-American war he enlisted in Company One, Utah Volunteer Cavalry, in the capacity of sergeant, although to do so he was compelled to resign a lucrative position.

DR. FREDERICK C. SHELDON. On both sides of the house the late Dr. Sheldon of San Diego descended from ancestry prominent in the public affairs of New England, the states of Vermont and Massachusetts profiting by their participation in the upbuilding and development of that section. The only child of his parents, Dr. Sheldon was born September 13, 1860, in Boston; his father, Leonard R. Sheldon, a native of Vermont, was a prominent physician of that city, where his death occurred in 1872. His mother was formerly Anne M. Cartwright, of Boston, whose father, Charles W. Cartwright, the representative of an old Quaker family, was a successful business man in banking and railroad circles and acquired considerable wealth before his death. She died in 1866 in the family home in Boston.

Dr. Sheldon was the recipient of every advantage in youth, besides inheriting the forceful characteristics of his New England ancestors being trained in the best schools afforded by his native city. Following his first impressions in life he took up the study of medicine and graduated from a college of physicians and surgeons in Burlington, Vt., having been capable of graduation at the age of nineteen years, but was refused his degree until just three months before attaining his majority. He then took a course in Bellevue Hospital in New York City, from which he also received a degree. Being taken ill with pneumonia he sought a milder climate, and in the fall of 1882 came to San Francisco, whence he went to San Jose and practiced medicine for one year. Pasadena was his next location and there he remained for three years, during which time, in addition to practicing his profession he also established the first drug store of that place. While there, too, he also became interested in horticulture, setting out an orchard and also developed several pieces of property. From November, 1885, Dr. Sheldon dated his residence in San Diego, at that time making a visit to the city on the old steamer Orizaba and becoming so favorably impressed with existing conditions he decided to make this her permanent home. He at once engaged in the development of the property which he had purchased on Sixth street, known as the Sheldon Block, and in December of the following year beginning the erection of the magnificent residence at the corner of Eleventh and D streets, which is now the home of his widow and children. This was completed in March, 1887, and became their home at that time, and on the 14th of June of the same year the death of Dr. Sheldon occurred. The illness which caused his death—typhoid pneumonia—was contracted through exposures during a trip to the vicinity of Ensenada in the gold excitement of the previous May, during this experience enduring many hardships and privations.

C S Libby

To the energy and progressive spirit of Dr. Sheldon is due much of the development of San Diego, for although he was a resident but a brief time he gave every effort toward the upbuilding of the section in which he had decided to make his home. In the year of his death he completed the fine Sheldon block at the corner of Sixth and F streets and had made many other improvements on property which he owned. Among other holdings he owned five hundred acres of musselbeds upon which Ocean Beach now stands. Since his death his business undertakings have been ably carried on by his wife, who was before marriage Emma Bancroft. She was born in Vermont, a daughter of George Bancroft, a farmer and lumberman, whose death occurred in February, 1888, in San Diego, as did that of his wife in 1896, she being Caroline Sheldon before marriage, and a native of Vermont. The Bancrofts were members of the same family which gave to the world the famous historian. Mrs. Sheldon was the only child in her parents' family, and in her girlhood received every advantage, being a graduate of the high school at St. Albans, Vt. She is the mother of two children, George Bancroft, who is preparing himself for the medical profession; and Anna Cartwright. Since her husband's death Mrs. Sheldon has improved her property with handsome flat buildings and bungalows, and she also built the Richelieu, a rooming house, which she has since sold. She is a member of the Congregational Church and is active in its development in every possible way, but being particularly interested in missionary work. Dr. Sheldon was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and gave his support liberally to all its charities. In politics he was a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party and fraternally was a Master Mason. The name of Sheldon is justly accorded a place among the upbuilders of San Diego, honored remembrance being given to Dr. Sheldon for his participation in public enterprises and a place of prominence is accorded Mrs. Sheldon for her active work of to-day.

CHARLES S. LIBBY. Prominent among the ambitious, energetic and progressive agriculturists of San Diego county is Charles S. Libby, one of the largest landholders of San Luis Rey, and one of its most extensive stock-raisers and dealers. He has been an important factor in developing and promoting the farming interests of this part of the county, and is numbered among its most enterprising and public-spirited citizens. Coming from substantial New England stock, he was born November 27, 1857, in Goodhue county, Minn., a son of Jacob Libby.

Jacob Libby was born in Lebanon, Me., February 24, 1825, and died in San Luis Rey February 22, 1902. Following the occupation in which he was reared he carried on farming and for many years was successfully engaged in his chosen occupation in Minnesota. In 1887 he came to San Diego county, locating in San Luis Rey, where he purchased a ranch of four hundred and sixty-five acres, on which he resided until his death. He married Rebecca Bliss, a native of Maine, and of the five children born of their union two died in infancy, and three grew to years of maturity. He was a man of sterling character, and both he and his wife were valued members of the Baptist Church.

Having acquired a practical education in the district schools of Goodhue county, Minn., Charles S. Libby went to Iowa, settling there as a farmer. Removing from there to Gage county, Neb., in 1880, he remained there three years, in the spring of 1883 locating in Platte county, where, having purchased four hundred and forty acres of land, he was successfully engaged in general farming and stock-raising for ten years. In March, 1893, he came to San Diego county, locating first in San Luis Rey, and buying a half interest in a ranch lying two and one-half miles from the village. Going then to Bernardo, he was employed in general ranching for five years. Returning to San Luis Rey he subsequently bought his present large ranch of one thousand acres, and in its care and management has met with eminent success. He carries on general farming and stock-raising on an extensive scale, paying especial attention to the breeding and raising of horses and cattle. A man of keen foresight and excellent judgment he has accumulated a large share of this world's goods, and in addition to his realty in San Luis Rey owns valuable residence property at Oceanside.

Mr. Libby's first marriage was solemnized in Nebraska in 1884, uniting him with Susan E. Lattermire, who died October 20, 1900, leaving four children, namely: Edna May, wife of C. G. Borden, of Carlsbad, San Diego county; Victor S.; Clarence M.; and Gladys L. In February, 1902, Mr. Libby married May Watson. Politically he was formerly identified with the Republican party but is now an ardent Prohibitionist. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, with which he united when twenty-nine years of age. Religiously he and his wife belong to the Christian Church.

JOHN E. SMITH. Occupying a foremost position among the worthy and respected citizens of Ventura county is John E. Smith, of Moorpark, an able and skilful agriculturist, who has never been satisfied with less than the highest possible results in his farming operations. A man of culture and scholarly attainments, he holds a position of influence in the community, and among his fellow-men is respected for his many fine qualities of both heart and mind, and honored for his integrity and strength of character. A son of John Smith, he was born, August 22, 1843, in Henrysburg, Canada East, now province of Quebec, coming from English stock.

Emigrating from England, his native country, in 1830, John Smith settled in the United States, living first in the east. In 1836 he purchased a tract of heavily wooded land in Ohio, cleared an opening, and having erected a small house moved into it with his family. Working with indomitable perseverance and a resolute will, he improved a good homestead and gave material aid in advancing the growth of the town, county and state. He was successful as a farmer, and remained a resident of Ohio until his death, in 1887, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. He married Mary Braithwaite, a native of England, and of this union there are three children living. She survived him ten years, dying in Canada in 1897, at the age of four score and two years.

Having received his elementary education in the public schools of Lorain county, Ohio, John E. Smith continued his studies, intending to fit himself for college. The Civil war breaking out in 1861, his patriotic ardor was aroused, and, enlisting in Company H, Forty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, he served for one year, during which time he saw some hard fighting, taking part in the engagement at Pittsburg Landing and at Corinth. Subsequently, at Nashville, Tenn., he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability. Returning to Ohio, he remained at home a year, and then entered Oberlin College, at Oberlin, Ohio, and having finished the course was graduated from the classical department. Then, after teaching a year in Fisk University, at Nashville, Tenn., he took a three years' course of study at the Andover (Mass.) Theological Seminary. Going south after his graduation from that institution, he taught Latin in the Atlanta University for two years. The ensuing six years he was engaged in ministerial work, preaching four years at West Andover and Andover, Ohio.

Subsequently removing to Dakota, Mr. Smith took up government land, and the next eighteen months resided in that state. Selling his land, he then accepted a position in Niobrara, Neb., and for a number of years had entire charge of the Indian work in that place, at the same time being a teacher in the Indian school. Coming to Ventura county in 1891, he invested his money in land, buying eighty acres near Moorpark, where he has improved a fine orchard, the entire tract being devoted to apricots and walnuts. About one-fourth of this place is in bearing condition, and he carries on an excellent business as a fruit dryer, the amount disposed of in 1903 reaching twenty tons. He also carries on general farming, cultivating one hundred and ninety acres in all, raising grain, corn and beans on a part of his ranch. Laboring diligently and successfully, he is continually improving and beautifying his property, each succeeding season bringing him in richer rewards from a financial standpoint.

September 9, 1874, Mr. Smith married Lydia E. Stratton, a native of Ohio, and they have three children, namely: Hope B., a graduate of Pomona College; Raymond S., a senior in that institution; and Philip E., a junior. Politically Mr. Smith invariably and conscientiously supports the principles of the Republican party, and for several years served as school trustee in his district. He is an active member of the Presbyterian Church.

HOTEL ESCONDIDO, located at the head of Grand avenue, on an elevated point of land, overlooks the "City of the Hidden Valley," and commands on either side views of unsurpassed beauty. The house and its environments present an unusually attractive appearance, the ten-acre park being adorned with beautiful shrubbery and a large variety of ornamental trees, while its winding walks and driveways are made brilliant and fragrant by the many rows of exotic plants and native roses. The entrance to the grounds is carefully guarded by two tall Norfolk Island pines, one on each side of the drive, giving to the visitor a faint suggestion of the wealth of beauty within. A deep well furnishes clear, sparkling water for use in the house, while the grounds are watered by irrigation from the city water works.

This hotel, which was built by the Escondido Land and Town Company at a cost of $50,000, was at the time of its construction most modern in every respect. It is three stories in height, and with its rose-covered veranda, which extends almost entirely around the building, is indicative of the comfort to be found therein. It is finely equipped and furnished, having large corridors, baths, and with its superior ventilation and excellent sewer system, is an ideal health resort. It contains one hundred guest rooms, each furnished comfortably, and in busy seasons is usually taxed to its utmost capacity. In the basement is a billiard table which gives the guests opportunities for social recreation indoors, and out of doors is a tennis court for their especial use. The hotel is noted for its select class of guests, and under the supervision of its proprietor, Mrs. D. F. Henderson, and its manager, H. M. Hawkins, it gives to each visitor all of the comforts, ease and pleasures of a well-kept home. Mrs. Henderson came from St. Paul, Minn., to Escondido, Cal., in 1899, and being charmed by the location of the house, the climatic conditions of the surrounding country, and its many natural attractions and varied improvements, she purchased the hotel, which is now recognized as one of the very best in its appointments of any in Southern California.

FRANK J. GARRISON. Associated in the largest building and plumbing business in Rivera and its vicinity, Frank J. Garrison is named among the progressive and enterprising men of the community. He is a son of James A. Garrison, the senior member of their business firm, and a prominent and successful citizen. (For complete details concerning his life refer to his biographical sketch, which appears elsewhere in this volume.)

Frank J. Garrison is a native of Bellona, N. Y., his birth occurring September 26, 1864; his childhood and youth were passed in that city, where he received his education. He learned the trades of builder and plumber under the instruction and practical training of his father, and after their location in California they established the business which they have since conducted with a full measure of success.

Mr. Garrison has established home ties through his marriage with Mrs. Ellen Marlin, a daughter of John McLaughlin, of Los Angeles, who brought his family to this section of California when his daughter was only a small child. She received her education in Los Angeles, and here married Mr. Garrison. In religion she belongs to the Baptist Church and is prominent in all its charitable movements. Mr. Garrison is a citizen whose worth is appreciated by all who know him and who is universally esteemed wherever known.

JOHN HOOK. On Christmas Day in 1847, John Hook was born in Baden, Germany, the son of Magnus and Anna (Willman) Hook, both of whom lived their entire lives in that country, where the father was occupied as a farmer. There were eleven children in the family of which John Hook was a member, and two of his brothers are still residents of Germany. He received a good common school education in Baden and in his fifteenth year began to learn the carpenter trade, no progressive and enterprising German family considers the education of the sons complete until it embraces the knowledge of some good trade. After completing his apprenticeship he followed the occupation as a traveling journeyman for three years in different parts of Germany, Switzerland and Italy, while in the latter named country having had the pleasure of seeing Pope Pius IX. On returning to his native land he enlisted in the German army and served a term of three years, after which, in 1870, he emigrated to America, landing in New York City. He did not remain at that point, however, but pushing his way westward stopped for seven months in Arkansas, where he plied his trade, from there traveling the rest of the distance across the continent into California. His first stop was at Sacramento, then at San Francisco, where he remained two years, next coming to Southern California and locating in Los Angeles for a year, after which he became a resident of San Bernardino.

Arriving at this place he first secured employment in a sawmill in the mountains and subsequently adopted the occupation of farmer. He formed a partnership with John Suverkrup some time later and for twenty-six years carried on a lumber manufacturing business under the firm name of Suverkrup & Hook. Disposing of his interests in this enterprise Mr. Hook then retired to San Bernardino city and this place has since been his home. In 1890 he was married to Miss Johanna Jacobson, who had two years previously come from Sweden to California, and they have one daughter, Bertha, a very talented young lady. Mrs. Hook is a woman of much culture and refinement and is especially well versed in languages, speaking a number of them fluently. Their home which is located at 503 B street is an attractive one comfortably and artistically furnished. Mr. Hook is, fraternally, a member of Phoenix Lodge No. 178, F. & A. M., and of Keystone Chapter No. 56, R. A. M. He is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, but has never sought political office, preferring to perform his duties as an intelligent and progressive citizen in the private ranks.

POMEROY B. FUSSELL. The horticultural interests of San Bernardino county have in Mr. Fussell truly a most successful exponent, every detail of the business, all modern methods and improvements, being a part of the understanding which he has brought to bear in his work. He is a native of the middle west, his birth having occurred in Fayette county, Iowa, near the town of Fayette, September 14, 1857; his father, David E. Fussell, was born in Ohio and in 1844 became a settler of Linn county, Iowa, there engaging in farming for four years, when he located in Fayette county and improved a farm from the wilderness lands, his death eventually occurring in that place. His wife, formerly Rachel Jennings, was born in Ohio and died in Iowa. They had twelve children, of whom seven survived and are now living.

The sixth child in the family of his parents, Pomeroy B. Fussell was reared on the paternal farm and educated in the district school in the vicinity of his home until old enough to enter a more advanced institution, when he became a student in the Upper Iowa University at Fayette. He attended this institution for four years, and upon leaving school engaged in the hardware business in Fayette, the firm being known as Fussell & Co. After ten years in this work he disposed of his interests and then engaged in general farming and fancy stock breeding, raising Polled Angus cattle, Poland China hogs, and fine poultry, and continuing so occupied for five years. In November, 1888, he came to Redlands, which had then a population of but four hundred people, and the following year took charge of one hundred and forty acres, which he set out in oranges and for the ensuing seven years proceeded to cultivate. During this time he set out several other orchards, over one hundred acres in all. The year 1897 was spent in San Diego as assistant under the chief engineer of the ice plant of the Coronado Hotel Company. Returning to Redlands he purchased fifteen acres in San Timoteo cañon, under the Terracina bluff, and proceeded to set it out in navel oranges, irrigation being received from the Lower Yucaipe Water Company. In 1906 he bought the old Grant place containing thirty-two and a half acres, of which twenty-four acres are in oranges, while the property is further improved with a residence, barns and outbuildings. There is a pumping plant on the ranch, and two one hundred and twenty foot wells, operated by a nine horse power gasoline engine with a twenty-seven inch capacity, which allows him to sell water as well as irrigate his own ranch.

In Iowa, in 1879, Mr. Fussell was married to Miss Sarah J. Houlsworth, a native of that place and a daughter of Joseph, born in Pennsylvania and a pioneer farmer of Iowa. Her mother was in maidenhood Eliza Jane McConn. Mr. and Mrs. Fussell are the parents of the following children: Nellie L., wife of G. W. Zellers, of Los Angeles; Homer Leo, engaged with father; Georgia O., a graduate of the San Bernardino Business College in 1907. Fraternally Mr. Fussell is very prominent, being a member of the Knights of Pythias of Redlands, and belonging to the Uniformed Rank of the K. of P.; the Rathbone Sisters; Modern Woodmen of America, of which he is V. C.; the D. O. K. K.; Royal Neighbors, of which his wife is also a member; and the Fraternal Aid. He is identified with the Mutual Orange Growers' Distributers, of Bryn Mawr, in which he is a director, and politically is a stanch Republican.

CAPT. MITCHELL DUFFY. As proprietor of the Salt Lake ferry Captain Duffy operates four naptha launches and carries on a successful business in San Pedro, of which city he has been an upbuilder and a promoter of movements calculated to advance the general welfare. The captain is a pioneer of the state, having come west in 1871, locating two years later in Santa Monica, Los Angeles county, and in 1881 in San Pedro, which was then known as Fyall. He is a native of Ireland, his birth having occurred in French Park, County Roscommon, December 9, 1841, one of a family of thirteen children, nine sons and four daughters, of whom all attained maturity and five are now living. His father, Mitchell Duffy, was an extensive contractor and bridge builder, having worked in nearly every section of Ireland. He died in his native land, as did also his wife, formerly Maria Cullen.

Until he was sixteen years old Mitchell Duffy, Jr., was reared in Ireland, there receiving his education and youthful training. He became an expert horseman in his native land and after his arrival in New York City in 1847, became a jockey, riding in many races, principally under

JOHN McCAIN

Hiram Woodruff on the Fashion track of Long Island, where he won thirteen races out of twenty. He also performed a noteworthy feat in the stopping of a runaway team attached to a carriage containing seven people. Climbing over the rear of the carriage he caught the reins, which were hanging over the dashboard, and succeeded in stopping the frightened animals. He was fond of all sports and was an expert swimmer, an accomplishment which he has put to good use since locating in California. On account of his increasing weight he finally gave up his work as jockey and in 1871 came to California, in San Francisco locating as a dealer in horses and from that point making several trips to New York City. In 1873 he removed to Santa Monica, during the first sale of lots in that place, and built a residence on Fifth street, and later erected the bath house on Southern Beach. Residents of the place regarded such a move as a mistake, but results soon justified his faith in the future of the town, taking in on his first Sunday $107 from 9:45 A. M. to 4:30 P. M. At the same time he conducted a restaurant in the canon and up town, continuing this business until 1881, when he sold out and came to what was then known as Fyall, where there were but three shanties. The following year he bought several lots and built the first house in San Pedro, being located on Terminal Island. He ran the first row boats to Terminal for the benefit of his bath house and also built and ran the first gasoline launch here. Since the building of the Salt Lake Railroad he has conducted a ferry service, operating four launches, Blanche, May, Ida and the Orient, the latter the largest, having a capacity of one hundred and fifty passengers. At one time he also owned and operated the Dora and Elsie. He is assisted in his work by his three sons, and together they are carrying on a successful business.

Mr. Duffy owns several residences in San Pedro, his home place being on Fifth street, near Center, one of the finest houses in San Pedro, while four of his other houses are located on Fifth street and one on Sixth street, the cost of all the buildings which he has put up in the city amounting to $21,000. He has been an interested witness and participant in the growth and progress of the place and has given his best efforts to advance the general welfare. His home is presided over by his wife, formerly Anna M. Reddy, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., where they were married. They became the parents of ten children, of whom eight are living: Edward, captain of the Orient; Ida, wife of Walter Rechtwig, of San Pedro; George, of St. Louis; Dora, wife of Norbey Olds, of San Pedro; Elsie, who graduated with highest honors from the University of California in the class of 1905; Cyrus, in business with his father; Blanche, at home; and Horace, also in business with his father. Mr. Duffy is a member of the Foresters of America, and politically is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, having served as a member of the county central committee.

JOHN McCAIN. To become an associate of Mr. McCain is to enjoy the privilege of listening to many exciting stories of his experiences when crossing the plains or running cattle on the desert, for during his younger years he remained for a considerable period upon the outposts of civilization and endured the dangers incident to the existence of a frontiersman. When he had abandoned that life of vicissitude he settled down to agricultural pursuits and in 1871 came to Julian, San Diego county, where he engaged in blacksmithing and since 1884 he has been proprietor of the Mountain Glen hotel and livery barns in the same town, besides owning and taking charge of eighty acres of orchard and pasture, also owning one hundred and sixty acres on which are located the Borago springs.

Born near Little Rock, Ark., January 25, 1843, John McCain is a son of George McCain, a pioneer of 1851 in the far west. When the latter had decided to establish a permanent home in California he returned across the plains for his family, and with them started back toward the coast, but en route, in 1854, he was bereaved by the death of his wife. The year following he settled in Mendocino county, and in 1868 became a resident of Acampo, where he died in 1882, at the age of eighty-three years. The removal of the family to the west when John McCain was a mere lad caused him to become familiar with pioneer life at an early age and gave him an accurate insight into conditions as they then existed throughout a sparsely settled tract of country. With his father he settled near Acampo in 1868 and took up the raising of cattle and the carrying on of ranch pursuits. From that locality in 1871 he came to Julian, where he has since resided. In the midst of pleasant surroundings, in the quiet spot where he has established his home, he passes his days in busy contentment, remote from the frontier scenes of Idaho and Montana where the adventurous experiences of a cattleman filled his younger years.

The marriage of Mr. McCain took place near Julian in 1872 and united him with Mary E. Cline, who was born in this state near the line of Oregon. Of the marriage five children were born: Christian is married; John is at home; Maude, Mrs. Russ, who lives near Escondido, has one child; Lillie, who is the wife of Robert Haley, has three children and lives near Julian; and Edith, the wife of Joseph McGann, has one child. Politically Mr. McCain always has given allegiance to the Democratic party, but has not been active in local politics nor has he been a candidate for any of the offices of town or county; however, at all times he is anxious to aid measures for the benefit of the party and especially those for the upbuilding of his community. He has always been ready when called upon to aid those less fortunate than himself and has surrounded his family with all the luxuries that have come within his reach.

OSCAR WILLIAM HARRIS. Among the pioneers of Redlands prominent place belongs to Oscar William Harris, residing at No. 114 West Palm avenue, who since his location here in 1887 has bent his energies to the accumulation of personal means and at the same time building up for himself a position among the representative citizens. Mr. Harris was born in Newton county, Ind., October 14, 1860, a son of John T., also an Indianian, born in Tippecanoe county. The grandfather, Benjamin, was a native of Virginia and became an early settler of Indiana, where he engaged as a farmer until his death. John T. Harris participated in the Civil war as a soldier in the Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, enlisting in 1861 and serving for over three years. Upon the close of the war he returned to Indiana and engaged in farming near Kentland, Newton county, spending his last two years in Jasper county, same state. His wife, formerly Louisa Cashaw, was born near Kokomo, Ind., and also died in that state. They were the parents of four children, of whom Oscar William is the eldest and the only one living.

Reared on the paternal farm and educated in the district school, Oscar William Harris remained at home until attaining his majority, when January 4, 1883, in Newton county, he married Miss Alice Cook, a native of Miami, Ind., and a daughter of Milton E. Cook, of Vermilion county, Ind., and granddaughter of Eli, of North Carolina, and an early settler in Vermilion county and later in Miami county, where he followed farming. He was a member of the Friends Church and a helpful and practical citizen. Milton E. Cook was a farmer and Quaker, and married Rebecca Rinker, who was born in Virginia and died in Indiana. They were the parents of nine children, of whom all are living and five are in California, Mrs. Harris being the fifth in order of birth. After marriage Mr. Harris located on an eighty acre farm and later purchased eight acres adjoining, engaging in general farming and stock-raising. In order to enjoy the healthful climate of Southern California he decided to locate here, so disposing of his property in 1887 he came to California and located in Redlands, where his brother, Grant D. Harris, had preceded him. He bought ten acres and set it out in navel oranges, and later bought three acres adjoining, making thirteen acres in all on the Bench, at East Highland. He has lived in Redlands since 1887 on the same property, owning ten acres at No. 114 West Palm avenue, near Cajon street, all of which is in oranges. In 1904 he completed a handsome residence on his ranch. In addition to the property already named he owns seven and a half acres in oranges on Highland avenue, and sixty acres on Judson between Lugonia and Colton avenue, which he is now setting out in navel oranges. He has also improved a fifty-acre ranch at Oak Glen, watered by Oak Glen creek, which supplies also water for domestic purposes, and was one of the organizers and is now president of the Oak-Glen Domestic Water Company, with canal and stone flumes, sixteen acres being in apple orchard. He is a director in the Redlands Water Company and interested in the development of the resources of the country, also a director and was one of the promoters of the Redlands Golden Orange Association.

Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Harris, namely: Ruth E., attending Occidental College; Chester C., in Imperial, Cal; Hazel, who died at the age of thirteen years; Benjamin Harrison; Virginia R.; John Milton; and Olive. Politically Mr. Harris is a stanch Republican.

CHESTER JOHN HOLMES. The Holmes family was first established on American soil in 1687, the emigrating ancestor being an Englishman who came to Massachusetts and later was one of the original settlers of Woodstock, Conn. He was a civil engineer by occupation and assisted in the first surveys of the country. Succeeding generations were prominent in the social, civic and political life of Connecticut, where the name became a representative one. A son of the emigrant John Holmes, born in Woodstock, Conn., was named David; he engaged as a farmer in that state, married and reared a family, his son, Josiah, representing the family name in the Revolutionary war. He was engaged in the hotel business as a means of livelihood; in his family was a son, David, who again returned to the soil and followed agricultural pursuits throughout his entire life. He reared a family, among his sons being one whom he called John, who was born in Stafford, Conn., and was the father of Chester John Holmes, the subject of this review, and the California representative of the name. John Holmes followed farming throughout his entire life in his native state, there passing away at an advanced age. He married Sabrina Case, a native of Stafford, Conn., and a daughter of Stephen Case, who was born in Tolland, the paternal great-grandfather having located the name in that state from Nantucket, Mass., where he engaged as a farmer. Mrs. Holmes also died in Connecticut. She was the mother of eight children, of whom but two are now surviving, Mrs. Mary A. Thrall living in Rockville, Conn. One son, David, served in an Ohio regiment during the Civil war and Chester John, the fifth in order of birth and born February 19, 1837, in Stafford, Conn.

O. D. Goode.

Reared on the paternal farm until he was sixteen years old, Chester J. Holmes attended the public schools in pursuit of an education and received the first lessons in life. He was first apprenticed to learn the trade of a machinist, and following this became superintendent of a linen mill. Because of impaired health he left Connecticut in 1856 and in Red Wing, Minn., engaged at the trade of carpenter and builder for two years, when he went to St. Louis, Mo., and followed a similar line of work. In 1860 he went to Louisiana and in Madison Parish engaged in contracting and building, putting up houses on a new plantation until the breaking out of the Civil war, and was there compelled to enlist in Company B, Third Regiment Louisiana Cavalry, in 1862, and served to the close of the war. He was engaged in the Trans-Mississippi department until the close of the struggle, when he engaged in the manufacture of lumber, operating a steam sawmill above Grand Gulf for two years. The climate was not salubrious and he returned to Connecticut, there married, and following engaged in the coal and lumber business in Stafford Springs for seventeen years. In search of a milder climate he moved his family to California in 1889, locating in Pomona, Los Angeles county, for one year, and then coming to Redlands, and in the following year (1891), located on his present property, which consists of twenty acres set to navel and valencia oranges, while he also raises poultry on a large scale, his preferred fowl being full-blooded White Wyandottes. He has three incubators and carries on the work in a thoroughly scientific manner, his son, B. G., assisting him in this work.

Mr. Holmes' wife was formerly Miss Amelia M. Gay, a native of Connecticut, and a descendant of Puritan ancestry, direct from John Alden, and born of this union was one son, Bernese Gay, who was born in Stafford, Conn., and educated in its public and high schools. He came to California with his father in 1889, and was here married to Miss Blanche M. Walton, of Philadelphia, and they have three sons, Alden Walton, Charles Chester and J. Walton. Mr. Holmes was made a Mason in Stafford; politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

EDGAR DOUGLAS GOODE. Prominent among the representative citizens of Glendale is Edgar Douglas Goode, who during his residence in this locality has been conspicuously identified with the best interests of town and county, generously using his influence to promote the public welfare. A native of Illinois, he was born, March 10, 1858, in Taylorville, Christian county, of English ancestry. His father, Benjamin F. Goode, was a son of Morgan Goode, and a grandson of Benjamin Goode, the emigrant ancestor.

Born and reared in England, Benjamin Goode crossed the ocean to America in colonial days, settling first as a planter in Virginia. He took an active part in the Revolutionary war, participating in many important battles, and subsequently fought the Indians on the frontier. Going then to Indiana, he took up land, and there spent the remainder of his life, dying at a venerable age. These facts were gleaned in part from an old Bible formerly in the possession of Peter Cartwright, the noted frontier evangelist. He was twice married, and his children were born and reared on the western frontier, one of them being Morgan Goode, the next in line of descent.

A native of Indiana, Morgan Goode was there brought up, receiving excellent educational advantages for his day. Going in early manhood to Christian county, Ill., he became distinguished as the first school teacher in Taylorville. Settling there permanently, he became prominent in public life, serving as county treasurer, and filling other offices of importance. He died while in the prime of life, at the age of sixty years. He married Elizabeth Schoonover, who was born in Pennsylvania, and died, at the advanced age of ninety-two years, in Illinois. They reared four sons and four daughters, bringing them up wisely and well.

Benjamin F. Goode was born and educated in Illinois, and during the earlier years of his life was engaged in agricultural pursuits, but is now living, a retired farmer, in Brookfield, Mo. He married Mary Bennett, also a native of the Prairie state, and they became the parents of thirteen children, nine sons and four daughters, all of whom, excepting one son, are now living, Edgar D., the special subject of this sketch, being the first-born.

Having completed his early education in the public schools of Taylorville, Edgar Douglas Goode was graduated from Bogardus Business College, in Springfield, Ill. Returning home, he chose for his occupation the one to which he was reared, and for a number of years carried on general farming in his native state. The day after his marriage, in the fall of 1882, he started with his bride for California, coming a stranger to a strange state, having no acquaintances here. After spending a year in Santa Barbara he went into the Conejo mountains, becoming superintendent of the large Hunt estate, of which he had charge a year. The ensuing two years he was in business in Los Angeles, and the following twelve years he was engaged in tilling the soil in Eagle Rock valley. Coming from there to Glendale, Mr. Goode has since been a resident of the place, and is now leading an ideal Californian life. He is identified with many enterprises, and occupies a position of prominence among the leading citizens of this part of the county. He takes genuine interest in aiding all beneficial projects, and is overseer of the Los Angeles road district, superintending nearly two hundred miles of road. He was instrumental in having the Glendale Electric Railway established, being one of its most ardent promoters, and securing to the company a free right of way. He is interested to some extent in literary matters, and is the local correspondent for the Los Angeles Times.

In Taylorville, Ill., in October, 1882, Mr. Goode married Aletia E. Suttle, who had been his sweetheart since early boyhood, their fathers having been boys together in the pioneer days of Illinois; her father was editor of the Taylorville Democrat for years, and was also county assessor of Christian county; her grandmother was Lady Jane Sturgeon of England. Into the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Goode five children have made their advent, namely: Lillie Fay, Ray Edgar, Pearl C., Leo Douglas and Donald Bryan, the two first mentioned having graduated from the Glendale Union high school in 1904 and 1906, respectively. Their home life is ideal. Mr. Goode says he believes he has established a new record, in that during the first twenty-one years of their married life, he and his wife were not separated twenty-four hours at one time. Mrs. Goode was one of the organizers of the Glendale Library Association and was one of its most active promoters and enthusiastic supporters. Much credit is due her for her tireless efforts in establishing this first library for the new city of Glendale.

In politics Mr. Goode is Democratic, and at the recent Los Angeles county convention he was unanimously nominated for the state legislature in the sixty-seventh assembly district. He worked out the necessary details for the organization of the Glendale Union high school, which is composed of seven grammar schools; he has always been the Glendale member of the board, and also clerk of the board of trustees. In the contest between the various districts for the location of the building, he won it for Glendale against strong opposition. He was one of the organizers of the Glendale Improvement Association, being its first secretary, and was the first citizen to advocate the incorporation of Glendale as a city, under his leadership and against great opposition, the incorporation being accomplished. He is a charter member of Glendale Lodge, I. O. O. F., and also of Carnation Rebekah Lodge of Glendale. At all times he has the courage of his convictions; he believes in a square deal, and a fight in the open when a fight is necessary.

JOHN F. AHLSTROM. The development of Los Angeles county and Southern California in general has had in John F. Ahlstrom one of its most interested witnesses, and as well a citizen whose best efforts were always given toward the furtherance of every movement which tended to upbuild his community. He is a native of Sweden, born May 14, 1848, the son of John F. and Johanna (Warlin) Ahlstrom, also natives of Sweden; both are deceased, the father dying, when seventy-two years of age, and the mother when thirty-six. The father was a cooper by occupation, a trade which he followed throughout his entire life. Of their family of eight children two sons and two daughters are located in the United States, the others being residents of their native land. The Lutheran State Church of Sweden claimed the religious allegiance of the parents and their children have been true to their early teachings.

John F. Ahlstrom was reared to young manhood in his native country, receiving a limited education in the public schools, after which he learned the trade of carpenter. He worked at his trade in Sweden until 1873, when he immigrated to America, and coming direct to California, located in the vicinity of Niles, Alameda county, where he engaged as foreman in a nursery. After twenty months he went to Yuba county and in Marysville engaged in carpenter work, following this with a period of ranching in Sutter county. He then went to Mendocino county and engaged in the logging business in the Redwoods, and after one year, on the 20th of May, 1876, he arrived in Los Angeles, where he engaged at ranching and other pursuits in the vicinity of Anaheim. A little later he accepted employment in the planing and grist mills of this section, remaining thus occupied for two years when he went to Chatsworth and engaged in ranching for a time, finally disposing of these interests because of dry seasons. After his marriage in 1881 to Miss Hannah J. Johnson, a native of Utah, he came to Los Angeles and engaged in carpenter work and also worked on the street cars. In 1894 he purchased his present property, which consists of eleven acres of land devoted principally to the raising of berries. He has placed many improvements on the place and by an intelligent cultivation also has added to the value of the property.

Daniel McIntosh

Mr. and Mrs. Ahlstrom are the parents of the following children: Arthur, Grace, Reuben, Bertha, Lilian, Maie Corinne, Charles and Eleanor. In his fraternal relations Mr. Ahlstrom is associated with the Independent Order of Foresters of Los Angeles; politically he takes an active interest in the principles of the various parties, but reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public duties. With his family he belongs to the Baptist Church. Mr. Ahlstrom is a man of many admirable traits of character, faithful in the discharge of all duties that fall to the lot of a citizen, earnest in his efforts to advance the best interests of the community, and as such a man, citizen and neighbor he has won a large number of friends who best appreciate the qualities so demonstrated throughout his life.

DANIEL McINTOSH. Occupying a foremost position among the worthy and respected citizens of the town of Ramona is Daniel McIntosh, who has been a resident of this place for thirty-five years, and during that time has been actively identified with its best interests, generously using his influence to promote its prosperity. A man of rare judgment, honest and true in all of his dealings, he has won the confidence and esteem of old and young, and holds a place of importance in the community. A son of the late Neil McIntosh, he was born, July 22, 1838, in Nova Scotia, coming from thrifty Scotch ancestry.

Born and reared on Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, Neil McIntosh was reared to agricultural pursuits, and during his entire life was engaged in general farming in Nova Scotia. He married Margaret Pringle, who was born in Scotland, and died in Nova Scotia, at the early age of forty years. Eight children were born of their union, and all, with the exception of Daniel, are living in the land of their birth.

Brought up near the Atlantic coast, almost within sound of the ocean's roar, it is not strange that Daniel McIntosh was an enthusiastic lover of the sea from his boyhood days, and that, on leaving school, he should choose the life of a sailor rather than that of a farmer. After coasting awhile in familiar waters, in 1856 he came to the United States, and in New York City, in the School for Navigators, further fitted himself for a seafaring life. Thus equipped, he made several voyages to foreign ports, sailing as first officer on different vessels, and during the fourteen years that he was thus employed visited many of the largest countries of the globe, making trips to Australia, China, South America, Japan, the Philippines, and on his last voyage sailing from San Francisco to Mediterranean ports.

Retiring from the sea, Mr. McIntosh located in Lower California, where he was for a while connected with the salt works in Scammon's Lagoon. In 1872 he came to San Diego county to make a permanent settlement. Taking up two government claims near Ramona, he resumed the occupation with which he became familiar while living on the parental homestead, and in his agricultural labors has met with undisputed success. His ranch of four hundred and forty acres is under a good state of cultivation, and with its many valuable improvements is now one of the most attractive and desirable in the neighborhood, being a credit to his energy and good management. He carries on general farming, raising fruit, grain and stock, in each branch being successful.

In 1871 Mr. McIntosh married Romana Murillo, who was born in Lower California, a daughter of Leandro Murillo, a native of Mexico, and into their household seven children have been born, namely: Daniel, Jr., living on the home ranch; Alexander, a merchant in Santa Ysabel; Rose, wife of J. E. Bachelor, of Ramona; Louisa, wife of H. C. Doll, of Kern county; Mary, at home, and two sons, deceased, Joseph at sixteen years and Andrew at six months. Politically Mr. McIntosh is a stanch advocate of the principles of the Republican party. Mrs. McIntosh is a member of the Catholic Church, but Mr. McIntosh is not connected with any religious organization by membership, although he was reared a Presbyterian, both of his parents belonging to that denomination.

JAMES A. GARRISON. Noteworthy among the esteemed residents of Rivera and its most prominent business men is James A. Garrison, a leading contractor and builder, who has contributed largely toward making the town of his adoption a desirable place of residence, both from a social and from a financial point of view. A native of New York, he was born December 14, 1842, in Yates county. His father, Stephen Garrison, was born in Westchester county, N. Y., but after his mariage settled in Bellona, Yates county, where he carried on a good business as a carriage manufacturer until his death, at the age of sixty-three years. His wife, whose maiden name was Eleanor Brown, survived him, passing away at the venerable age of eighty-three years.

The youngest child and only son in a family of five children, James A. Garrison grew to man's estate in Bellona, and there learned the trades of carriage maker and contractor and builder, becoming familiar with the details. He followed the carriage maker's trade in Geneva, N. Y.; after learning the details from his father, and when twenty-two years of age learned the carpenter's trade in Bellona from a New York City contractor. He followed this trade around Yates and Ontario counties until 1887, when he came to the present site of Rivera, Cal., to fill a contract for a man who had purchased a ranch in the vicinity and was so pleased with the country that he has never had any desire to return to the east. He has followed his trade all over Southern California and has met with his share of success and patronage. He erected his home in Rivera, two years after coming to the state. He now controls a large part of the building trade around Rivera, he and his son, the junior partner of the firm, employing many men in filling their large contracts for building and plumbing, their business being extensive and lucrative. Mr. Garrison has also other financial interests, being agent for the Aermotor company, of Chicago, Ill.

At the age of twenty-one years, in 1863, Mr. Garrison married Sarah E. Dickinson, a native of New York, being born in Starkey in 1846, and they have one child living, Frank James Garrison, of whom a sketch will be found elsewhere; one son, Fred, died aged nine months. Politically Mr. Garrison is a Democrat, and fraternally he is a member of Downey Lodge, No. 220, F. & A. M.

AUGUST PENKERT. The predominating characteristics of the Teutonic race are possessed in large degree by Mr. Penkert, as is evidenced in the care which he displays in the cultivation of his ranch in Los Angeles county, not far from the city of that name. Altogether he owns twenty-five acres, all of which is in alfalfa, a commodity which grows with exceptional rapidity and luxuriance under right conditions, and these Mr. Penkert possesses, for by means of the pumping plant which is located on his ranch he is enabled to thoroughly irrigate the land, and as a result harvests a crop which averages from eight to ten tons per acre.

Born in Germany, October 16, 1858, August Penkert is a son of Jeremiah and Annie (Hannel) Penkert, who were also natives of the Fatherland, and there died when their son was too young to realize his loss. Besides himself there were two daughters in the family, but only one of them is now living, and she also is a resident of California. Until he was about twelve years old August Penkert was reared in the home of an uncle, but at that age he set out to make his own livelihood. In the meantime he had received a fair education in the schools near his uncle's home and upon leaving the school he immediately apprenticed himself to learn the brickmason's trade, which he accomplished in three years, and thereafter he followed the trade in his native country for nearly eight years. In view of the possibilities which, according to reports, awaited the young man of persevering qualities on this side of the Atlantic, work at his trade began to be irksome to Mr. Penkert, and accordingly, when he was just past twenty-two years of age, he embarked for the new world, sailing from Germany November 15, 1880, and landing in New York January 1, 1881. Before he reached his destination, however, he was shipwrecked and lost everything he had brought with him, even his ticket, but in some way he was able to prove that his passage had been paid as far as Pittsburg, Pa., and transportation was furnished him to that city soon after anchoring in New York harbor. For many weeks after reaching his destination he was unable to work on account of illness. He worked in the rolling mills of that city for a time, going from there to Chicago, Ill., where he obtained work in a pipe factory, and later in the same year, 1881, removed still further west, going to Missouri, where he resumed work at his trade. In Nodaway county, that state, he was employed at his trade in the erection of a large Catholic church. Later he worked on a farm in that locality, and still later removed to St. Joseph, at once taking up work at his trade. The desire to get still further west was at last gratified when before the close of 1883 he had located in Portland, Ore., where for one year he was employed in the harvest fields. The following year, 1884, he came to Los Angeles, where for three years he was in the employ of the Oregon Lumber Company, of whose plant he was foreman. A desire to become a land owner led to the relinquishment of this position and resulted in the purchase of five acres near Los Angeles, and is a part of the ranch which he now occupies. As his means would permit he purchased adjoining land until he now has twenty-five acres, all of which is cultivated to the very best advantage. He erected his own residence and otherwise added such improvements as are usually found upon a well-regulated ranch.

In 1893 Mr. Penkert was married to Miss Annie Koppe, like himself a native of Germany, and of their marriage five children have been born, Albert, August, Annie, Theodore and Willie. The family are communicants of the Catholic Church, in which faith the parents had been trained from earliest years. Mr. Penkert is a member of the St. Joseph Society of his parish church in Los Angeles. In his political leanings he is a Democrat.

FREDERIC AGGEN. It is an undisputed fact that of all the foreign born citizens of the United States those who come from the Fatherland possess in a greater degree than all others the thrift and fixedness of purpose for which the Germans as a nation are noted. Transplanting from one soil to another in no way weakens these prime characteristics, but rather enlarges their growth and usefulness, to the end that wherever the German citizen may go he inculcates in the less ambitious a desire to get ahead in the world. The qualities above mentioned are not lacking in the make-up of Frederic Aggen, but on the other hand were his chief asset when, at the age of twenty years, he landed a stranger upon the shores of the New World in 1869.

Born December 24, 1848, in the northern part of Germany, Frederic Aggen is a son of Gerhard and Abbie (Johnson) Aggen, both of whom were also born in the Fatherland. Influenced no doubt by the fact that their son Frederic had come to this country two years previously the year 1871 found the parents in Iowa, where the father became the owner of a farm. After nearly a quarter of a century spent in that locality his earth life was brought to a close by his death in 1895, at the age of seventy-six years and fifteen days. His wife had preceded him by a number of years, dying in 1888, at the age of seventy-six years, one month and sixteen days. The only child of their union besides Frederic, Hinrich, also died on his Iowa farm. In their religious belief the parents were members of the German Lutheran Church.

After landing in New York City Frederic Aggen lost no time in making his way to Illinois, where for about two years he worked as a farm hand, at the same time, as opportunity offered, continuing the studies in which he had gained a good headway before leaving his native land. Going to Iowa two years later he worked on his father's farm for a time, but in 1873 purchased a farm and made his home there until 1895, the year of his advent in California. Previous to locating here permanently, however, he had satisfied himself as to the advisability of taking up his abode here by visiting the west and judging for himself of its merits and demerits. The fact that before leaving for his Iowa home he had invested in a ranch speaks louder than can words of his opinion of the west in general, and of Ventura county in particular. To his original purchase of eighty-four acres in 1894 he added adjoining acreage in 1901, and now has altogether one hundred and twenty-six acres devoted to lima beans, which produce abundant crops, yielding up to twenty-three sacks to the acre. He still owns his farm in Cass county, Iowa, which comprises one hundred and twenty acres.

While a resident of Iowa, in 1878, Mr. Aggen was united in marriage with Miss Margret Chaney, a native of Ohio. The four children who have been born to them are as follows: Frederic M., at home; May, who is the wife of Frank Reed and resides at Somis; Amie and Charlie, both of whom are at home with their parents. The family hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Somis. Politically Mr. Aggen is a Republican, and while in Iowa served his party three terms as township clerk, and since his residence in Ventura county has been school trustee and clerk of the board for six years. Personally Mr. Aggen is a genial, companionable man, who has a host of warm friends and associates in and around Somis, and one whose life has been such as to win for him the confidence of all.

JOHN E. SHANNON. One of the best-known citizens of Arroyo Grande is John E. Shannon, a fine gentleman to meet and one who is noted for his sterling qualities of character. He is a firm believer in the growth of San Luis Obispo beach property in value and always stands ready to invest his means in enterprises which are organized for the promotion of this section of the state. He makes his home on a seventeen-acre ranch which he owns and which is devoted to the cultivation of vegetables, strawberries, dew berries, logan berries, etc. Mr. Shannon was born in Pike county, Pa., January 5, 1849, his father, William Shannon being also a native of Pennsylvania, where he died at the age of fifty years. His mother, Betsy Everets before her marriage, was born in New Jersey, and was sixty years old at the time of her death. There were nine children in the family of which the subject of this sketch was a member. He received his education through the medium of the public schools of Pike county and when he grew to manhood decided to follow railroading as an occupation. In carrying out this decision he worked as a brakeman, fireman, engineer and conductor in the seven years which he spent in service on the New York & Erie Railroad. He was then seized with the ambition to go west and take advantage of some of the golden opportunities which the states on this side of the Rocky mountains hold out to industrious, wide awake young men. Arriving at Reno, Nev., when that town was in its infancy, he engaged in the restaurant business, following this for fourteen years. The nature of this business is such that a man who engages in it becomes acquainted with a very large circle of people, and there are few of the old timers at Reno, or in fact in the state of Nevada, who do not remember Mr. Shannon and speak well of him. In 1893 he sold out his business at Reno and came further west into California, his objective point being Arroyo Grande, and here he has since been engaged in ranching and the real-estate business, as well as in money lending, for he accumulated a large fortune while at Reno, and being possessed of that rare ability to take care of money as well as to make it, he now has an independent fortune. Besides having considerable property at Oceano Beach he also owns town lots and business property at Pismo, upon which he is erecting several cottages and business blocks. His political belief is represented by the platform of the Republican party, which he gives his hearty support.

The marriage of Mr. Shannon occurred in 1879, uniting him with Miss Catherine Brennan, who was born in Canada, and one son was born to them, John. They have also an adopted son, Lester Leivre. Mrs. Shannon is a member of the Catholic Church and Mr. Shannon's religious affiliations are with the Baptist denomination.

HYPOLITE ESCALLIER. One of the oldest pioneers in Riverside county, Hypolite Escallier is now located on a forty-acre ranch one mile south of Temecula, where he raises grain and potato crops. He is also well known as the mail carrier between Temecula and Warner's ranch, having held the contract for this route during the past eight years and has just renewed it for an additional term of four years. He was born January 22, 1855, in Hautes-Alpes, France, the son of Hypolite and Annie Rena Escallier, both natives of that country and now deceased. After securing a common school education in his native land Mr. Escallier immigrated to the United States in 1872, arriving at the port of New York and coming from there directly to San Francisco. Spending a few months in the last-named city he came by boat to Los Angeles, where he remained for three years, later removing to Long Pine, then to Bakersfield, returned to Los Angeles, and in 1876 removed to Temecula. After staying here a short time he went to Old Mexico and remained for two years. At the expiration of this time he again took up his residence in Temecula and has since made this his home.

Mr. Escallier's marriage, which occurred in Temecula, in February, 1881, united him with Marie Cabaco, and they have become the parents of six children, namely: Brigela, Ellen, Matilda, Louisa, Hypolite, Jr., and Arthur. They are attendants of the Catholic Church and exert their influence toward the upbuilding of the community in which they reside. By his honest dealings and integrity of character Mr. Escallier has won the highest esteem of all with whom he comes in contact and has a host of friends in Riverside county, where he has resided so many years.

JOHN MAHAN. Few of the men now living in Camarillo have been identified with the history of California for a longer period than has Mr. Mahan. He was one of the '49ers who cast in their lot with the unknown west at the time of the discovery of gold here, and has since made his home in the state. The wonderful improvements that have brought this state to a foremost position among the great commonwealths of America he has witnessed and aided, and he deservedly occupies a position among the public-spirited pioneers to whose self-sacrificing efforts the organization and development of the state may be attributed. Although he was only about twenty-two years old at the time he came to the state he had spent a number of years on the ocean in the employ of trading vessels, and participated in the Mexican war, and the trip across the plains in 1849 was made as an employe of the government, as driver of a team in a train bound for Oregon City. The sailing vessel which brought him from Astoria to San Francisco was six weeks in making the voyage, landing its passengers in the latter city November 16, 1849.

As the name would indicate, Mr. Mahan comes of Irish antecedents. Both of his parents, William and Helen (Driscoll) Mahan, were born in the Emerald Isle, but while they were still young they came to the United States, and made settlement in New York state. There they both died, the father at the early age of forty-five. Besides John they had one daughter, Mary, who still makes her home in the Empire state. Born in Madison county, N. Y., July 5, 1827, John Mahan was educated in the temple of learning known as the subscription school. Just what his reasons were for leaving home are not stated, but it is known that he went to New York City when thirteen years of age with the intention of going to sea. He first shipped on a whaling vessel bound for New Bedford, Mass., and when the harbor was reached left the crew and went to Providence, R. I. From the latter port he sailed as one of the crew on a small trading sloop, following the sea in all about five years in this capacity. As surf boatman he next was in the employ of the United States during the Mexican war, serving throughout the entire conflict, and receiving his discharge in 1848, at St. Louis, Mo. Immediately thereafter, in 1849, he drove a team across the plains for the government, and upon reaching his destination, Oregon City, made his way to Southern California. From San Francisco he went to the mines in the vicinity of Sacramento, but after three years of rather uncertain and varying success he established a store on Feather river which he ran successfully until 1855. During this time he had noted the success of agriculturists and wished to try his luck as a tiller of the soil. His first experience was in Yuba county on Honcut creek, where he conducted a ranch for two years, afterward going to Sonoma county and carrying on a ranch for eleven years. His advent into Ventura county dates from the year 1868, at which time he took a patent from the government for eighty acres of land, but as it proved to be a Mexican grant he finally lost the land as well as the improvements which he had placed upon it. The one-hundred-acre ranch upon which he now resides was purchased in 1882, and the years which have intervened have proven the value of his previous experiences, all of which have tended to make him the all-around agriculturist which he is to-day. Aside from eighteen acres devoted to walnuts, the entire ranch is in beans, hay and barley, the harvests from which bring him in handsome returns annually.

Geo. Wm. Deck

In 1853 Mr. Mahan was married to Rebecca Blakeley, who was born in Missouri, and of the eight children born to them we mention the following: W. S., the eldest child, married Emma Sisson, and they make their home in Santa Paula; George F. married Maggie Johnson, but both are now deceased; Sterling P. is married and makes his home in Los Angeles; Eva, the wife of Horace Crinklaw, also lives in Los Angeles; Henry L. married Miss Nettie Benn, and they reside in the Simi valley; Miles O., a miner, is married and resides in Colorado; and Grace and Rolley, the two youngest, complete the family. In religious belief the family are Baptists, the parents and the children at home attending the church of that denomination at Camarillo. Although nominally a Democrat Mr. Mahan votes according to his conscience, under all circumstances voting for the man of highest principles. He himself is a man of undoubted worth in his community, and as school trustee and a member of the Farmers' Grange has rendered valuable assistance.

GEORGE W. PECK, M. D. One of the most prominent and successful physicians of Sawtelle is Dr. George W. Peck, who although he has been in Sawtelle but two years, has in that time built up a large and lucrative practice. He is a native of Cedarville, N. J., and was born March 8, 1841, His father, Rev. Simon Peck, was born in New Hampshire, being a descendant of those Huguenots who landed on the New England coast in 1636. He received his education at Princeton College, and spent his entire life in the Presbyterian ministry in New York, Ohio and Nebraska, and his death removed a faithful and well beloved man. He married Christina Hollinghead, who was born in Princeton, N. J., a direct descendant of William Wright, who served in the Revolutionary war under George Washington and was one of those who kept up the decoy fires on that memorable night when Washington crossed the Delaware and made the attack upon the British. His service extended over a period of seven years.

It was in Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, that Dr. Peck spent his childhood days, and after preliminary school work he entered Rush Medical College at Chicago in 1885, graduating in 1890. After securing his medical degree he went to Omaha and practiced his profession for ten years, and was an influential member of the Medical Society of that city. Seeking a more genial climate he came to California, arriving in Los Angeles on May 21, 1900. After spending two weeks there he went north and located in the San Joaquin valley, practicing medicine between Fresno and Merced for three years. Later he traveled over the greater part of the state in his endeavor to find the most favorable climate, spending a part of one year in Petaluma, Santa Rosa and Sebastopol, all in Sonoma county; taking all things into consideration he chose Sawtelle as the most desirable place. He arrived here April 21, 1904, and after purchasing property opened an office for the practice of his profession and rapidly built up a large and lucrative practice. He is health officer of Sawtelle, is a member of the California State Medical Society, the Los Angeles County Medical Association, and the American Medical Association.

During the Civil war Dr. Peck served eleven months in Company A, First Nebraska Cavalry. He is an active member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Sawtelle and president of the board of trustees and he stands for all the best and highest interests of society, be they of a social or a financial character. His wife, a native of New York state, is also an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WALTER LOUIS DAVENPORT. Conspicuous among the energetic and enterprising men who are active assistants in advancing the manufacturing and shipping interests of Los Angeles county is Walter Louis Davenport, of San Pedro, secretary of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California. A native of California, he was born, October 20, 1867, in Soquel, Santa Cruz county. He comes of sturdy New England ancestry, distinguished alike for their morality, intelligence and industry, his father, J. P. Davenport, having been born and brought up in New Bedford, Mass., a descendant of one of the earlier settlers of that part of the country.

At the age of fourteen years, J. P. Davenport began his career as a sailor, going on a whaling trip. Continuing his chosen occupation, he was promoted from rank to rank, at the age of twenty-three years being master of a vessel. Putting in at San Francisco in 1849, when the gold excitement was at its height, he immediately engaged in whaling, meeting with such success that he went back to the Atlantic coast for his family, returning with them to Monterey in 1852. Soon afterwards he bought the schooner Caroline E. Foot, and for many years was employed in whaling along the Pacific coast. Giving up seafaring pursuits, he built a wharf at Davenport's landing, fifteen miles north of Santa Cruz, where he subsequently settled, while living there serving as justice of the peace. His last days were spent in San Francisco, his death occurring in that city when he was seventy-four years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Ellen Clark Smith, was born at Fairhaven, Mass., and is now a resident of San Francisco. Of the ten children born of their union, five are living.

The sixth child of the parental household, Walter Louis Davenport received a practical education in the public schools of Santa Cruz. Beginning life for himself at the age of sixteen, he was for a number of years employed in a sawmill at Aptos, Santa Cruz county. Going from there to San Francisco, he became clerk for Polk & Talbot, of the Pacific Pine Company, a position that he retained about twelve years. Coming to San Pedro for a visit in 1903, his services were very shortly called into requisition on account of a lack of inspectors in the Lumber Surveyors' Association, which he gladly assisted for awhile before beginning his visit. Deciding subsequently to locate permanently in this city, he was made a member of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California in September, 1903, and in January, 1904, he was elected to his present responsible position as its secretary, and in addition to faithfully performing his varied dutes in this capacity he is agent for the association at East San Pedro.

March 26, 1902, at Valle Vista, Riverside county, Mr. Davenport married Maude Saunders, who was born in Mendocino county, Cal. Amasa Saunders, her father, who was born and reared in Dedham, Me., came to California in 1852, and for a number of years was engaged in lumbering, first in Mendocino county, and then in Riverside county. Subsequently turning his attention to horticultural pursuits, he purchased a large orange grove at Valle Vista, where he was employed in fruit growing until his death. He married Jane Phillips, who came to California in 1858, and now resides in San Pedro, making her home with Mr. and Mrs. Davenport. Mrs. Davenport has inherited a part of the Saunders ranch at Valle Vista, where she has a fine bearing orange grove of forty acres. Mr. and Mrs. Davenport have one child, John Lloyd. Politically Mr. Davenport is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to Santa Cruz Parlor No. 90, N. S. G. W. He attends the Congregational Church, of which his wife is a member.

THEODORE G. SCHULZE. A wide-awake, active business man, ever ready to take advantage of favorable opportunities for advancing his financial interests, T. G. Schulze is prominently identified with the important industries of Los Angeles county, being a member of the Long Beach Realty Company. A native of Texas, he was born in April, 1859, in Freestone county, coming from excellent German ancestry. His parents, Hardwick and Caroline Schulze, emigrated from Germany to the United States soon after their marriage and located in Texas, where he followed his trade of butcher for many years. He died of yellow fever, in Houston, Tex., in 1867, at the early age of thirty-two years, and she survives him, being now a resident of Los Angeles, Cal.

Having completed his early education in the common schools of Texas, T. G. Schulze left home when fifteen years old, becoming an apprentice at the butcher's trade, which he afterwards followed four years. Learning then the blacksmith's trade, he was engaged in blacksmithing in Texas until his removal to California. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1887 he located at Whittier on July 9, and there followed his trade for two years. He was similarly employed the succeeding two years in Los Angeles, after which he settled in San Pedro, where he lived eight years, carrying on general blacksmithing, including a good deal of ship work. His health failing, he established himself as a butcher at Oceanside, San Diego county, where he built up a prosperous business. January 1, 1903, he purchased the interests of the Long Beach Ice Company, at Long Beach, and for nearly three years carried on a substantial business as a dealer in ice, also in ice cream and soda water, his manufacturing plant being located at No. 121 West First street, and in this branch of industry he met with excellent success. On November 1, 1905, he disposed of his interests in these various lines of business and assisted in the organization of the Long Beach Realty Company, and in this connection is doing a general real estate business.

On April 10, 1889, in Houston, Tex., Mr. Schulze married Grace Davidson, a daughter of L. P. and Caroline Davidson, of Louisiana. Mr. Davidson died in 1888, at the age of forty-seven years, and Mrs. Davidson now lives in Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Schulze have one child, Laclair Schulze. Politically Mr. Schulze supports the principles of the Democratic party by voice and vote. He takes great interest in public affairs, and while in San Pedro served for one term as town trustee. Fraternally he belongs to Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M.; to San Pedro Lodge No. 348, I. O. O. F.; to Long Beach Lodge No. 888, B. P. O. E.; to San Pedro Lodge No. 126, K. of P.; and to Court Occident No. 467, I. O. F.

ALEXANDER McKIE. Among the active and progressive agriculturists of Los Angeles county is Alexander McKie, who has met with no mean measure of success in his independent calling. His home ranch, lying near Palms, contains some fine farming land, and under his intelligent management has been highly cultivated and improved, rendering it rich and productive. Of thrifty Scotch stock, he was born in Wigtonshire, Scotland, where his parents, James and Janet (Hennay) McKie, spent their entire lives, the father dying in 1885. The parents reared five children, all of whom are residents of California, namely: Alexander, James, Charles, William and Jane Grace.

Reared by his wise parents to habits of industry, economy and thrift, Alexander McKie assisted in the various duties connected with the management of the little farm in Wigtonshire during the days of his youth, obtaining a knowledge and experience that have since been of value to him. Immigrating to the United States, he came at once from New York City to California in search of a favorable opening. He located first as a farmer near Santa Monica, and is still in the bottom lands. He has a finely improved ranch of sixty-one acres, which is under an excellent state of cultivation and is largely devoted to the raising of alfalfa, although eight acres of it are set out to walnut trees, from which he reaps a satisfactory income annually.

Mr. McKie married, in 1895, Henrietta Burgwitz, and they are the parents of three children, Lena Janet, Alexander Hennay and Grace Jane. Politically Mr. McKie is a steadfast adherent of the Republican party, and religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and his wife of the German Lutheran.

H. W. ROGERS. Three generations of the Rogers family have lived and labored in Southern California, the subject of this review, H. W. Rogers, being the only native son of the state, his birth having occurred in Compton, Los Angeles county, February 26, 1875. His grandfather, Sylvester Rogers, brought his wife, Martha, and their son, Henry, across the plains from Missouri in an early period in the development of the Pacific coast country and in Southern California spent the remainder of his life. Henry Rogers married Ellen Watros, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of William S. and Harriet B. Watros, who crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1861, settling in San Jose, Cal., and shortly afterward locating in Southern California. Mrs. Rogers died in Santa Monica in 1903, at the age of forty-two years, survived by her husband, who still makes his home in Compton.

The only child born to his parents, H. W. Rogers spent the first years of his life in his native town of Compton, where he received some education, which was later supplemented by study in the public schools of Santa Monica. In young manhood he decided to learn the trade of plumber, and accordingly spent some time in the employ of J. S. Wilson, now a retired citizen of Santa Monica. Upon the completion of his apprenticeship he opened a shop for himself in partnership with W. A. Penny, in Ocean Park. In 1904, after three years in the work, he purchased the interests of Mr. Penny and has since continued in the business alone. It can truly be said of him that success has accompanied his efforts, for he is widely recognized as one of the best workmen of his class, and enjoys not alone the distinction of superior workmanship, but is also held in high esteem for the reliable business traits which he has always displayed. He has done considerable work in the best buildings of the city, among them the Casino, the Hammel building, the Myer and Zobelein building, and others of equal note.

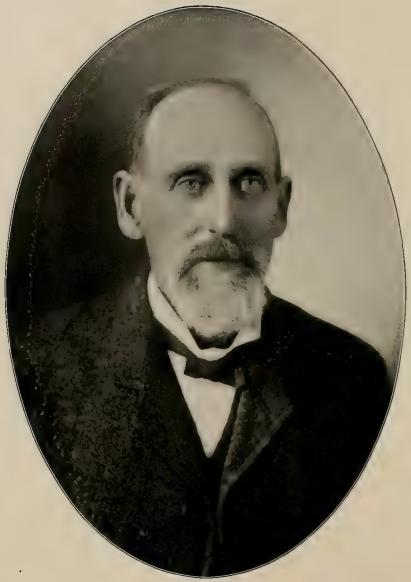
The marriage of Mr. Rogers occurred in Ocean Park and united him with Mrs. Lizzie B. (Mitchell) Marvin, of Ohio, and they have since established a pleasant and comfortable home in this city. Mr. Rogers is identified with the Republican party, and although not desirous of official recognition, he takes a deep interest in the affairs of his party. Fraternally he has been a member of the Foresters of America for twelve years and is prominent in the order. He is a substantial and reliable citizen and holds a place among the successful citizens of Ocean Park.

JOSEPH NEWTON COVERT. When Mr. Covert came to Long Beach in 1901 he brought with him an experience of over fourteen years in the restaurant business, this alone explaining the phenomenal success which has come to him along this line during the past five years. Of late, however, he has given less attention to this and concentrated his efforts more closely upon his real-estate business, owning valuable property in Long Beach, Los Angeles, Newport and Oceantide.



Born in Franklin, Ind., September 13, 1862, Joseph N. Covert is a son of Samuel H. Covert, born near Hopewell, that state, where he carried on farming throughout his entire life, his death resulting from a fall from a tree. His marriage was with Emily McCaslin, also a native of the Hoosier state, and the daughter of Alexander McCaslin. Though born in Kentucky Mr. McCaslin was a descendant of Scotch ancestors, and was one of the early pioneer settlers in Indiana. Mrs. Covert is still living, and makes her home with her only son, Joseph N. Her other child, Mary I., is the wife of B. F. Crutchfield, and resides at Lakeport, Cal. Until he was eighteen years old Joseph N. Covert remained with his parents on the farm in Indiana, in the meantime making the most of his opportunities from an educational standpoint. In his home town of Franklin he engaged in the picture business in 1880, the following year transferring his business to North Vernon, that state, but owing to the failure of his eyesight he was obliged to discontinue this line of work. It was in the year 1884 that he took the initial step into the business which was to bring him such remarkable success, and from that time until 1898 he followed the restaurant business in North Vernon, a period of fourteen years and one week.

As has been previously stated, it was with this experience that Mr. Covert came to Long Beach in October, 1901. For about one year, however, he engaged in the real-estate business, but at the end of this time purchased the Raymond café, Ocean Front, and ran it for nineteen months. In the meantime he had leased the site of the Palace café, which he opened, continuing this until December, 1903, when he enlarged its capacity by the erection of an addition demanded by his large patronage, and at the time he sold out in September, 1906, he controlled the largest restaurant business in Long Beach. Prior to this he had purchased the Pie lunch room and is still interested in it, although his son-in-law, Carl Ransdell, has charge of the details of management. His own time is given almost exclusively to his real estate transactions, which are numerous and important, and are confined entirely to property which he himself owns, handling none for outsiders.

While living in North Vernon, Ind., Mr. Covert was married to Miss Zoe Grinstead, a native of that place, and two children have been born to them, Lucile, the wife of Carl Ransdell, and Paul. In North Vernon Mr. Covert was made a Mason in the local lodge, and since coming to Long Beach he has transferred his membership to Long Beach Lodge No. 286. Other fraternal orders also claim his membership, among them the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and Knight of Pythias, in which latter he has attained the uniformed rank. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Long Beach, and politically is a Republican. Both himself and wife have many friends who respect them highly for their many commendable qualities.

WALTER D. HAMBLETON, D. D. S. Prominent in professional circles is Walter D. Hambleton, D. D. S., who has the distinction of being the first dentist to open an office in Ocean Park, where he has built up a large and remunerative practice, his natural talents and skill being recognized and thoroughly appreciated by those who need, as we all do at some period of life, a judicious application of dental surgery. A native of Iowa, he was born, July 1, 1875, in Davis county, in the same house, and in the same room, in which the birth of his father, Elbert A. Hambleton, occurred. His grandfather, Abraham Hambleton, was a pioneer settler of Davis county, Iowa, where he became a large property owner and one of its most successful farmers. In 1887 Elbert A. Hambleton migrated with his family to the Pacific coast, and is now living, retired from active pursuits, in Modesto, Cal.

Coming with his parents to California when a boy, Walter D. Hambleton completed the course of study in the Modesto high school, after which he entered the dental department of the University of California, at Berkeley, where he was graduated with the class of 1902. Immediately opening an office in Ocean Park, Dr. Hambleton began the practice of his chosen profession, being the first dentist to locate in this vicinity. The town was then in its infancy, and in its upbuilding and rapid growth he took great interest, making judicious investments in real estate. As the population grew, the doctor's patronage increased, his success as a dental surgeon being assured from the first, as was his popularity in business and social circles.

H. L. McLain

Politically the doctor is a loyal Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Santa Monica.

HENRY L. McLAIN. Few of the men now active in various occupations in the west have reason to regret their decision in establishing their homes in this part of the country, and certainly Mr. McLain is not among these few citizens, for he has achieved a steadily increasing success and has risen to a position of prominence as one of the successful residents of San Bernardino county. The occupation which he now so successfully follows differs from that which engaged his attention during the earlier years of manhood, for in early life he studied architecture and for twenty-years he devoted himself exclusively to that occupation. As a boy he had lived on a farm in Blair county, Pa., where he was born July 19, 1845; however, agriculture did not attract him sufficiently for him to select it for a life-work, but instead he turned his attention to the study of architecture. After having followed this occupation about one-quarter of a century he came to California in 1889 and settled in Los Angeles, but two years later removed to Highland, where since he has made his home.

The purchase of twenty acres of the Lingo claim gave Mr. McLain an unimproved tract on which to concentrate his labors, and here he erected a neat house and substantial barns. Ten acres of the land he set out in lemon trees and for a time devoted consideration to lemon-culture, but the failure of the water supply obliged him to abandon the occupation. Meanwhile he had begun in the poultry business on a small scale and gradually developed a large plant. On his place he has chicken-yards neatly fenced and a complete equipment for the care of the fowls. At this writing he has two thousand hens of the single white-comb Leghorn and barred Plymouth Rock varieties, and during the season of 1906 he shipped twenty thousand eggs for setting purposes, shipments being made to the various cities and towns along the coast. On his farm he utilizes incubators with a capacity of one thousand eggs altogether, which enables him to raise an enormus number of chickens each season. Through careful attention to detail and thoroughness of work he has developed a very profitable industry and gained a wide reputation as a poultry fancier.

In fraternal relations Mr. McLain formerly took an active part in the Knights of Pythias, but of recent years he has not been active in any order. Interested in politics, he always has been stanch in his allegiance to the Democratic party. Since 1894 he has been a member of the Democratic county central committee and since 1900 he has filled the office of road overseer, both of which positions he has filled with painstaking care and fidelity. However, partisanship does not appeal to him, for he is a citizen first, not a politician, and his devotion to the welfare of county, state and nation has been apparent in all of his acts. From Pittsburg, in 1863 he enlisted in the Fifth Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, Company L., and was assigned to the army of the Potomac, taking part in its engagements. He is a member of Cornman Post, G. A. R., of San Bernardino. Though not identified with any church, he contributes to religious activities, and especially to the missionary enterprises of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, with which his family holds membership. His wife, who shares with him the esteem of acquaintances and the good-will of the community, was Mary Dunlap Blood, a native of England, but from an early age a resident of Pittsburg, Pa., where she was educated in the public schools. Their marriage was solemnized on the 4th of July, 1869, and was blessed with two children. The daughter, Mary Belle, is the wife of E. L. Howell and resides in San Bernardino. The son, Francis George, has made his home in Redlands for several years and follows the trade of a builder, taking contracts for the erection of houses and other buildings.

S. D. MUNGER. Prominent among the active and enterprising business men of Moorpark is S. D. Munger, who in connection with his farming interests successfully managed the Moorpark hotel, of which he was formerly the proprietor. Industrious and energetic by nature, possessing great business ability and tact, he has ever made the most of his opportunities, and fortune has evidently attended his every effort, bringing him well deserved returns for his labors. As a general farmer, he uses excellent judgment, and as proprietor of the hotel was pleasant, agreeable and accommodating, proving himself an ideal host, and well worthy of the extensive and lucrative patronage which he built up. A son of Dexter Munger, he was born, February 8, 1860, in Shiawassee county, Mich., where he received his elementary education.

A native of New York state, Dexter Munger migrated from there to Michigan when young, and when the Civil war broke out offered his services to his country. Enlisting in a Michigan cavalry, he was in active duty for four years, taking part in the many engagements in which his company participated, and at the siege of Petersburg being severely wounded. He spent his last days in California, dying at the age of sixty-three years in Santa Paula. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, in which he took great interest. He married Jennie Hall, who was born in Michigan, and died in Tennessee, leaving two children.

But sixteen years old when he came to Ventura county, S. D. Munger completed his early education in the public schools of Nordhoff. Going then to Ojai valley, he followed ranching for fifteen years in that locality, after which he was engaged in grain and fruit raising at Santa Maria for ten years. The ensuing three years he was a resident of Riverside county and one of its prosperous agriculturists. Investing his money then in Moorpark property, he bought farming land, village lots, and the Moorpark hotel, and has since been one of the busiest and most active men of the place, carrying on general farming and managing the hotel until disposing of the latter.

In 1890 Mr. Munger married Julia Robison, a native of Texas, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Ruby, thirteen years of age; Marion, ten years old; Claude, five years of age; and Leon, two years old. Politically Mr. Munger gives his cordial support to the Republican party; fraternally he belongs to Saticoy Lodge No. 1419, I. O. F.; and religiously he is a member of the Christian Church.

LONG BEACH BUSINESS COLLEGE. The Long Beach Business College is one of colleges owned by The Private Schools Company, incorporated in 1905, of which R. S. Knudson is president and V. E. Nielson is secretary. The college was founded and opened by Mr. Knudson on September 8, 1902, and has grown until it has become one of the largest and leading commercial colleges in Southern California. In the fifth year of its growth, there are enrolled over eight hundred students. The college is located on First street and American avenue and occupies two floors of the Bartow building. It is modern and conveniently arranged, has large, light and airy classrooms and is equipped with roll-top desks and overy fifty Smith Premier and Remington typewriters. Besides full business and shorthand courses they have a Conservatory of Music, Art and Elocution. Branch schools have recently been established at Ocean Park and San Pedro.

Mr. Knudson is a Minnesotan, and is a graduate of the Rochester Business University, Rochester, N. Y., the Northwestern College of Shorthand, Minneapolis, Minn., and the banking department of the Metropolitan Business College, Chicago, Ill. He has been engaged in school work for nearly twenty years.

Mr. Nielson is a native of Kansas. He is a graduate of the Lincoln Center and of the Great Western Business College, Concordia, Kansas, and was a member of the faculty of the Riverside Commercial College until August, 1903, when he became a member of the present faculty. The two gentlemen, by their ability and energy have made the college a success and their efforts are appreciated by the people of the ocean cities.

EDMOND LEONARD DORAN. An interesting career has fallen to the lot of Edmond Leonard Doran, one of the prominent business men of Avalon. He was a resident of the great plains country and worked on the large cattle ranches at the time of the passing of the buffalo and the subduing of the Indians, being engaged in line riding at the time of the Geronimo campaign in 1886. He is now greatly interested in the wonderful glass bottomed boats which are the source of more interest and admiration than any other single attraction at Catalina, being a member of the Meteor Boat Company at Avalon. A history of these glass bottomed boats contains much of interest. Until 1895 glass bottomed boxes were placed on the water at the side of an ordinary boat when parties were looking for abalones and viewing the submarine gardens. In that year Alex O'Leary the hermit of San Clemente island, who spent some time at Avalon, suggested the construction of the glass bottom boat, and acting upon this suggestion Bill Condit and Charles Fage proceeded to build the first craft of the kind ever made, and in which Mr. O'Leary was skipper for some time. The first sidewheel glass bottom boat was built by Gurious & Tobin in Mathewson's boatyard, and afterward became the property of the Meteor Boat Company, although it is now dismantled and idle. The second large boat was Lady Lou, the third Cleopatra, and the fourth and largest of all is the Empress, which is the first one to be provided with two rows of glass boxes, instead of one as the others had, the capacity of the Empress being one hundred and twenty people —as large as it is considered practicable to build a boat of this description. All of these boats are now the property of the Meteor company. Mr. Doran has spent many months on the different islands along the coast, has explored all of them thoroughly, and owns a very large collection of Indian relics from them, being without doubt the best posted man in that line of anyone now living.

October 14, 1864, Edmond Leonard Doran was born in Ontario, near Montreal, the son of Solomon, a native of the same place, and a grandson of Samuel, who was a native of New England and became a pioneer in Ontario, settling near Montreal. A part of the Doran family were United Empire Loyalists, as different members settled on each side of the St. Lawrence river, thinking they were in Canada, the settlement of the boundary question proving those on the south side to be in the United States, however. The grandfather cleared and improved lands until he had enough to provide each of six children with one hundred acres, also utilized the water power of the creek which coursed through his possessions, established a saw mill, and proceeded to manufacture lumber. His death removed a man of considerable prominence in that part of the country. The father owned a farm on Doran's creek which he later sold, removing to Iroquois, where he engaged in the merchandising business, building the first large brick block at that place. He subsequently took his oldest son as a partner and together they were interested in many important enterprises, building a wharf on the St. Lawrence river, building a grist mill, and engaging in traffic on the river. They also owned a lumber yard; they shipped eggs, to Boston by the wholesale, and their house was the first one to be furnished with a base burner hard coal stove in that locality. The senior Doran was captain of a local company of militia, was prominent in politics, being at one time mayor of the city, and fraternally belonged to the Masonic lodge. He died at the age of fifty-three years. His wife was Margaret Bailey before her marriage, a native of the United States, her people being also United Empire Loyalists. She lived to the advanced age of eighty-two years, her death occurring at the old home in February, 1906. Of the nine children in this family but three are now living, and one brother, Edgar A., is a resident of Los Angeles, being president of the Doran, Brouse & Price Oil Company, and engaged in general contracting.

The next to the youngest of the family Edmond Leonard Doran was brought up on the farm in Ontario, where he attended the public schools as a boy, and in 1883 removed to Denver, Col., where he remained through the winter and in the spring of 1884 secured employment on Dr. Tuttle's ranch, continuing on the ranch four years. The spring of 1888 found Mr. Doran in San Bernardino, Cal., where he engaged in business, conducting a cigar and news stand in the old Hotel Stewart. Later he became clerk of the Stewart, under the proprietor, J. G. Burt, who had so many outside public interests that the duties of a private secretary devolved upon Mr. Doran until Mr. Burt's death in 1893, when he came to Los Angeles. The following year he started in the oil business, becoming the fifth stockholder in the American Crude Oil Company, which was the first prominently successful company in Los Angeles. He was president of that company at one time, and also held interests in other companies, which paid him well. In 1895 he first visited Catalina, and owned the Mascot, which was the only launch at San Pedro at that time except Captain Duffy's. Mr. Doran renamed his boat the Narod, which is his own name spelled backwards. There is also a station on the Southern Pacific and Salt Lake routes by that name which was given in honor of Mr. Doran. This same year he purchased other launches and became interested in the Avalon Boat Company, which was later consolidated with the Meteor Boat Company, and incorporated with him as vice-president and general manager. He holds both a master's and an engineer's license and can run any of his launches as skilfully as the best of his men. The other business interests of Mr. Doran include the Doran, Brouse & Price Company of Los Angeles, being a director of that incorporation; large land holdings in Tulare county on the Kings river; and oil wells in Bakersfield.

The marriage of Mr. Doran occurred in San Lorenzo, where he was united with Susanna, daughter of William Meek, owner of the large Meek tract at that place, comprising three thousand acres. He crossed the plains in an early day and settled at Llewellyn, Ore., and broke the first wagon road from that point to California. Mrs. Doran is a woman of superior attainments and fine education, being a graduate of Mills College. They have a beautiful modern residence on Breezy Point where Mr. and Mrs. Doran live with their two children, Margaret and Gertrude. Politically Mr. Doran is a strong believer in the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and he is a member of the Union League Club of Los Angeles. He is a man of generous disposition and liberal principles, taking an active interest in all business, social, and civic enterprises, and holds the highest respect of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

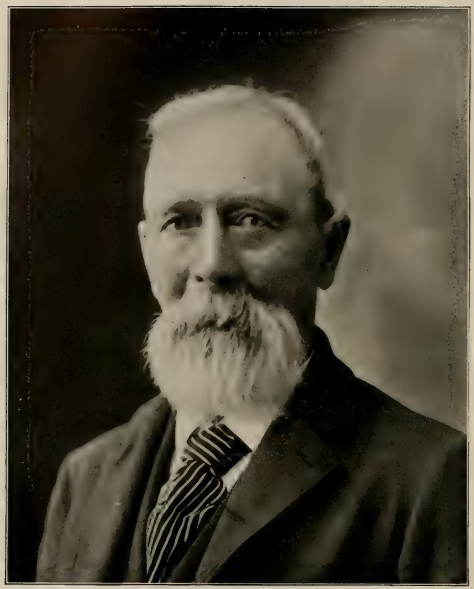
WILLIS BURR McDONALD. As a successful business man Willis Burr McDonald is adding his influence to the growth and upbuilding of the city of Redlands, where he has been located since 1900 and engaged for the greater part of the time in the management of the Palace Livery, of which he is proprietor. He was born in Waukon, Iowa, March 23, 1868, a son of Judge C. W. McDonald, a native of Indiana and a prominent citizen in whatever section of the union he made his home. His father, C. B., was a pioneer of Illinois, of Scotch descent, building and owning the first flour mill in Peoria, whence he later removed to Indiana. C. W. McDonald located in New York City and there engaged as foreman of a large daily, remaining so occupied for some time, when he returned to the middle west and in Sioux Falls established the Independent, which he conducted successfully. Later he established the Wessington Springs (Dak.) Herald, and at the same time entered land and engaged in general farming. A man of erudition and talent he was elected to the office of county judge, which he filled satisfactorily. He is a prominent Mason and well known in fraternal circles. His wife, formerly Clara Burr, was a member of the New York family of that name and was a second cousin of Aaron Burr. She died early in life, leaving but the one child, Willis Burr McDonald, of this review.



Reared in Dakota and educated in the public schools of Sioux Falls and Wessington Springs, Willis Burr McDonald grew to young manhood among the surroundings of a frontier home. He followed the training received in the paternal home and in young manhood began farming and stock-raising on a homestead which he took up adjoining the town. In 1898 he disposed of these interests and located in Boulder, Colo., where he established a feed and fuel business, and also followed farming to some extent, but because of the extremely high altitude he was forced to leave that place. Again disposing of his business interests he located in Redlands and six months later purchased the business of J. H. Kelley, who was then proprietor of the Palace Livery Stable, well located on Orange street, in a building 50x120 feet in dimensions. He has built up a large business and continues to hold a wide patronage. He is a member of the Redlands Driving Association, which company was formed for the purpose of caring for the tourists that come annually to the city.

In Wessington Springs, Mr. McDonald was united in marriage with Miss Floy Tofflemire, a native of Illinois, and born of this union are the following children: Burr, Lottie, Carl and Floy. Fraternally Mr. McDonald is associated with the Odd Fellows, having been made a member of the organization in Boulder Lodge No. 7, and is now a member in Redlands, and also belongs to the Encampment and Canton. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He is a member of the Board of Trade and takes every interest in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community.

CHARLES G. DAVIDSON. Numbered among the practical, self-reliant and prosperous young business men of Compton is Charles G. Davidson, who is actively engaged in mercantile pursuits, carrying in his store a full line of general sporting goods, and likewise conducting a well-equipped bicycle repair shop. He was born in Lafayette county, Mo., December 5, 1874, a son of the late G. C. Davidson.

Born and reared in Missouri, G. C. Davidson became a land owner in that state, and for a number of years was there employed in general farming and stock-raising. Disposing of his property there in 1875, he came to California with his family, locating in San Luis Obispo county, where he ran a dairy farm for a few years. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1882, he bought land, and in addition to farming was also engaged in business here as a blacksmith for a time. Giving up his smithy some time later, he devoted himself to ranching altogether until his death, in 1889, at the comparatively early age of fifty-one years. He married Eliza Goodrich, a native of Kentucky, and she survived him a number of years, dying in Compton in May, 1902. Eight children were born of their union, namely: Rebecca, wife of B. Aberle; Rosie, wife of J. N. Brinkerhoff; Alice, wife of A. McComas; James, who married Minnie Ridgeway; Martha, wife of H. M. Dillon; Annie, wife of Jesse Sutton; Charles G., the subject of this sketch; and John, who married Lena Andrews. Politically the father was a steadfast supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and both he and his wife were faithful members of the Baptist Church.

Coming with his parents to Compton when about seven years of age, Charles G. Davidson was here brought up and educated, attending the public schools, and until after the death of his father assisting in the labors incidental to farm life. His widowed mother then bought property in the village of Compton, and here spent the remainder of her life. In 1898 Mr. Davidson enlisted for service in the Spanish-American war, becoming a member of Company C, Seventh California Volunteer Infantry, which was stationed for five months in San Francisco. Subsequently, after a furlough, he went to Los Angeles, where, in December, 1898, he was mustered out of the army. Returning home, he was for six months in the employ of S. F. Catey, acting as engineer in well drilling. In 1899 he started in business on his own account, opening a store well stocked with sporting goods of all kinds, and has since built up a substantial and profitable trade in this line. He has in connection with this business a bicycle repair shop, which is on a paying basis, being liberally patronzed.

S. Mudgett

A stanch adherent of the Republican party, Mr. Davidson is active in local affairs, and is serving as a deputy sheriff, and as constable of Compton. He is a man of upright principles, and a member of the Baptist Church, and socially belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood.

SAMUEL MUDGETT. Long association with the agricultural interests of Santa Barbara county and close identification with movements for the upbuilding of the same have made Mr. Mudgett one of the most prominent figures in this part of the county, his ranch of forty acres lying in close proximity to Orcutt. A quarter of a century, lacking only a few years, has elapsed since he cast in his lot with the few settlers of this county and began the task of developing a ranch from the wild prairie soil. Age has not weakened his intellectual powers nor lessened his interest in the prosperity of the county; on the other hand, while the years have taken from him a capacity for long physical endurance, they have made a recompense in their accumulating fund of experience and mental grasp.

For years antedating the Revolutionary war the Mudgett family had lived and labored in the New England colonies, and it was while the grandparents of Mr. Mudgett were living in New Hampshire, that their son Stephen was born. By his marriage with Mary Porter, also of New England parentage, and a native of Maine, eight children were born, but two of them are now deceased. Two sons fought for their country's cause in the Civil war, enlisting in Company A, Eleventh Maine Volunteers, and a daughter, Ann Mary Hunter, now makes her home in Alameda, this state. Both parents lived to enjoy a ripe old age, their earth life coming to a close amid the scenes familiar to them throughout their long and useful lives, both dying in Maine, the father when in his ninety-fifth year, and the mother when eighty-six years of age.

Born in Penobscot county, Me., January 31, 1828, Samuel Mudgett passed his boyhood years without much variation, for when he was not attending the subscription school he was generally to be found performing tasks upon his father's farm. However, in later years he did not confine himself to agriculture exclusively, for in addition to managing a farm which he had purchased near the home place he also carried on a substantial lumbering business. Notwithstanding the fact that he was succeeding well from a financial standpoint he had fallen a victim to the western fever, and all who have been similarly affected will appreciate Mr. Mudgett's paling interest in affairs which had once held his closest attention. When forty years of age, in 1868, he disposed of his Maine farm and crossed the country as far as Iowa, there purchasing a farm of eighty acres in Buena Vista county. Then as now the land was excellent for grain raising, and he put his entire acreage in this commodity, corn and wheat forming his largest crops. Eight years in the Mississippi valley, however, had made him desirous to reach out still further toward the setting sun, and thus it was that in 1876 he made to the west a tour of inspection, going direct to Nevada county, Cal., where he established a lumbering business. After he had been in the far west long enough to satisfy himself that he would not care to live in the east again he decided to dispose of his Iowa property, and returned to that state for the purpose of settling up his affairs in the middle west. Going back to Nevada county, he remained there in all about three years, after which he made his home in Mono county, this state, for two years. It was at this period in his career that he came to Santa Barbara county, at the same time (1882) purchasing the ranch of forty acres upon which he has since made his home. All of the acreage not planted to apples, peaches or almonds is in grain, all of which produce abundantly, and while continued activity is no longer a necessity Mr. Mudgett is not content to be idle, and every day finds him working among his chickens, in the raising of which he has established quite a paying business.

In 1854, while still a resident of his native state, Mr. Mudgett was married to Miss Susan Mansur, who was also born in Maine, as was also her father, Alvah Mansur. Alvah and Mary Ann (Trast) Mansur, the latter a native of New Hampshire, became the parents of seven children, of whom one son died in the Civil war (he having enlisted in Company A, Eleventh Maine Volunteers) and Mrs. Mudgett is the only one of the family in California. Mr. Mansur died at the early age of forty years, his wife, however, surviving to reach her sixty-seventh year. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mudgett, but all were taken from them at an early age with one exception. Orin died in infancy, as did also the next child; Arthur died when two and a half years old; Frank when nine; and Ernest at the age of five and a half years. The only surviving child is Laura A., who was born in 1855, and is now the wife of Daniel Toy, and the the mother of seven children. Though in the twilight of their lives Mr. and Mrs. Mudgett are cheerful and as young hearted as at the beginning of their married life, and enjoy the close companionship of their only living child, Mrs. Toy and her family living on a ranch near by. In 1860, while still a resident of Maine, Mr. Mudgett joined the Masonic order, and he now holds membership in Hesperian Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., at Santa Maria. Differing from his father in his political belief he is a stanch Democrat, and it was on this ticket while a resident of Iowa that he was elected one of the trustees of Grant township, later becoming treasurer. Personally he is a man of many fine qualities, and with his wife stands in the highest esteem in the community which for nearly twenty-five years has been their home. Both are members of the Presbyterian Church at Santa Maria.

JEAN BERDELIN LOUSTAU. Born in Lescar, Basses-Pyrenees, France, August 12, 1865, Jean B. Loustau was the youngest of five children born to Jean and Marie Lerfarger. He spent his boyhood on the farm and was educated in the public schools. He served one year in the Fourth Company, Eighteenth Regiment of Infantry in the French army. In 1891 he came to Los Angeles, California, and in 1892 engaged in farming on West Jefferson street. He was married in Los Angeles June 17, 1893, to Miss Natali Riviere, who was born in Los Angeles. She is the daughter of Bertrand and Sacramenta (Rezi) Riviere. The father was born in Haute Garonne, France, in 1817, and came to California in 1850 via Cape Horn, being nine months and three days on the sailer that landed him in San Francisco. He followed mining until 1852 when he came to Los Angeles and began the dairy business on San Pedro near Seventh street. Then he purchased twenty-five acres on the corner of South Main and Washington, the present Schuttes Park. He paid $1.25 per acre and a few years later sold it for $25 per acre, which at that time was considered a big price. He then purchased one hundred and sixty acres on what is now the corner of West Jefferson and Santa Monica avenue for $1.25 per acre. Later he bought adjoining land so he had three hundred and eighty acres and was a successful farmer. Some years later he sold off several tracts, but retained one hundred and twenty acres until his death in 1897. His wife who was born in Los Angeles died in 1883. Of their six children, Mrs. Clara Eschordiaz, Mrs. Enez Berges, Francisco and Louis died in Los Angeles. Jean Pierre is a grocer on West Jefferson street; and Natali, the wife of our subject.

Mr. and Mrs. Loustau owns thirty-three acres of very valuable land on West Jefferson and Santa Monica avenue which will soon have to be platted as a part of the rapidly growing city. They have four children: Hortense, Louis, Jean and Bertrand. Mr. Loustau is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, is a Republican in politics, and is a progressive man much esteemed by his many friends.

DENIS MULVIHILL. One of the old settlers of San Bernardino county and an enterprising and progressive horticulturist is Denis Mulvihill, who came to California in 1875 and has since made this state his home. He was born in County Kerry, Ireland, June 1, 1849, a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families of that section, their ancestry being traced back to the sixth century. His father was a farmer who brought his family to the Isle of Guernsey, where he engaged in the manufacture of cement blocks. In 1871 he came to Brooklyn, N. Y., and five years later to California, his death occurring in April, 1887, at the age of sixty-six years, while on a visit to his son. The mother, formerly Mary Lynch, was also a native of County Kerry, Ireland; she still survives and makes her home in Los Angeles at the age of eighty-four years. She became the mother of three sons and three daughters, of whom one son and two daughters are deceased. A son, Edmund J., was roadmaster for the Southern Pacific Railroad for over twenty-four years, when he resigned and is now living retired in Los Angeles; the daughter, Catherine, is the wife of James C. McInerny, of Los Angeles.

In infancy Denis Mulvihill was taken by his parents to the Isle of Guernsey, and there attended the public schools in pursuit of an education. In 1868 he came to Brooklyn, N. Y., and there engaged in different lines until 1875, when he came to California and entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad, working in the freight house in Los Angeles and later as section foreman. In 1876 he was sent to Dry Camp on the desert, nine miles west of Indio when that place was the terminus. He remained there as foreman for the period of two years, when he went to El Casco as foreman of section 41. In the fall of 1880 he purchased his present ranch, known as the old Peter Horton place, and in 1885 he resigned his position as foreman to give his time and attention to the improvement and cultivation of his property. This consists of one hundred and twenty acres of rich land, all lying in the valley, three miles south of Redlands and adjoining its city limits, has a pipe line for irrigation from Yucaipe creek, he owning one-ninth of the water right. He has ten acres in apricots, five acres in prunes, twelve acres in oranges, ten acres in alfalfa, and the remainder devoted to grain and stock. He has built a comfortable and substantial residence and many other improvements which have placed his ranch among the valuable ranches of the county.

In Los Angeles, in the old Plaza Church, Mr. Mulvihill was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Hanrahan, who was also a native of Isle of Guernsey, the ceremony being performed by Peter Verdeguer, who was made Bishop of Brownsville, Texas, in 1878. They are the parents of the following children: Mary Frances, a graduate of the Redlands high school and Stanford University, and now a teacher in the Los Angeles Polytechnic high school; Edmund, a graduate of the Redlands high school, and engaged with his father in the management of the home ranch; John H., a graduate of Redlands high school and a clerk in that city; Margaret Ellen, a graduate of the Redlands high school and now a student in the San Diego Normal; and Frank G., attending the Redlands high school. Mr. Mulvihill was school trustee for twenty-one years and clerk of the board for twenty years in the Railroad district. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of Redlands, and politically is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, having served as a member of the Democratic County Central Committee for the past eight years. With his family he is a member of the Sacred Heart Church of Redlands, and is one of its most liberal supporters. He is liberal and progressive and held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

GEORGE ELMER TRIGGS. Enterprising, energetic and capable, George Elmer Triggs, of Rivera, is a valuable member of the community in which he resides, and as a skilled mechanic, expert in all departments connected with blacksmithing is doing his part in promoting its industrial prosperity. A son of Thomas and Mary Triggs, he was born in Marshall county, Kans., where his parents settled soon after the close of the Civil war. His father, a farmer, subsequently removed to Nebraska, and there spent his last years, dying in Barnston, while his wife, who survived him, died in Topeka, Kans.

Being taken by his parents to Nebraska when a small child, George E. Triggs was there brought up, acquiring a practical education in the district schools. After the death of his father he went with the family to Topeka, Kans., where he served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade, which he subsequently followed for a time in Douglas, Wyom. The Spanish-American war breaking out while he was there, he enlisted in Company F, First Wyoming Volunteer Infantry, in which he served as corporal for eighteen months. For a year he was stationed in the Philippine Islands, where he was an active participant in twelve or more engagements. Returning to California, he was mustered out of service in San Francisco, receiving his honorable discharge. Going back then to Topeka, Kans., he operated a blacksmith's shop there for a year, meeting with good success. Coming then to Los Angeles county, he was located for six months at Whittier. From there he came to Rivera, where he opened a well-equipped blacksmith and machine shop, in which he is prepared to do all kinds of work in his line with promptness and ability.

In Rivera, Cal., November 29, 1902, Mr. Triggs married Belle Ellis, who had been postmaster here for seven years, and they have one child, Ira Ellis Triggs. Politically Mr. Triggs is a strong Prohibitionist, and fraternally he belongs to the Rivera Lodge of Good Templars, is a member of Rivera Camp, M. W. A., the Red Men and the Philippine Veterans' Society.

J. CHARLES MACLAY. A wide-awake, progressive, thorough-going business man, J. Charles Maclay has for the past twenty years been intimately associated with the mercantile interests of Fernando, and has been an important factor in advancing the welfare of the community in which he has so long resided. The Maclay Company, of which he is a member, is one of the long-established firms of the place, and has built up a large and lucrative trade in general merchandise. He is distinguished as a native son of California, his birth having occurred January 20, 1860, in the city of Stockton, where his father, Alexander Maclay, lived for a number of years.

Until fourteen years of age J. C. Maclay lived in the Santa Clara and San Joaquin valleys and in April, 1874, came with the family to Fernando, where he completed his public school education. He subsequently farmed for a year, after which he continued his studies for two years at the University of Southern California, in Los Angeles. Returning to Fernando at the end of that time, he was employed in agricultural pursuits for a season. Embarking then in mercantile trade, he met with success from the first and now as a member of the Maclay Company is carrying on a flourishing business as a general merchant, his store being well stocked with a choice line of groceries, dry goods and everything demanded by the trade, his aim being to supply and satisfy the wants of his numerous customers.

February 28, 1900, Mr. Maclay married Isabella Rice Granger, who was born and reared in New York, and they have one child, Fredericka Maclay. Politically Mr. Maclay is a steadfast Republican. Fraternally he is a charter member and past noble grand of Fernando Lodge No. 365, I. O. O. F., and a charter member of Fernando Lodge No. 214, A. O. U. W., in which he has passed all the chairs, and represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge in 1892. Religiously both Mr. and Mrs. Maclay attend the Presbyterian Church.

HENRY C. HUBBARD. Prominent among the early settlers of Fernando is Henry C. Hubbard, who came here upwards of thirty years ago, when the post office and the little village store were the only business establishments of the place. In the development of this straggling hamlet to a populous township, rich in its agricultural and industrial resources, he has taken an active part, watching its growth with genuine pride and satisfaction. Of New England ancestry, he was born September 19, 1844, in Hartford, Windsor county, Vt., but was brought up and educated in New Hampshire, living there until after attaining his majority.

In 1867, fired by the ambitions of youth, Mr. Hubbard came from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific shores, locating in Santa Cruz, Cal., where he lived until 1875, working first for wages, and afterwards as a lumber manufacturer and dealer. Coming then to Fernando, he has since been an honored resident of the place. Subsequently forming a partnership with F. M. Wright, under the firm name of Hubbard & Wright, he purchased, in 1887, eleven hundred and twenty acres of partly improved land, which was then used as a sheep ranch, there having been at that time one hundred and sixty thousand sheep in the valley. He has placed the land under cultivation, devoting it entirely to grain, and every year he and his partner raise excellent crops. In the carrying on of their profitable occupation this enterprising firm uses all of the latest improved machinery and appliances, including steam plows and steam harvesters, and are meeting with excellent financial returns.

In 1884 Mr. Hubbard married Kate E. Maclay, a daughter of the late Hon. Charles Maclay, of whom a sketch may be found on another page of this biographical work. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard, Catherine P. and M. Wright. Politically Mr. Hubbard is a stanch Republican, and for four years served as supervisor of Los Angeles county. Fraternally he is one of the charter members of Fernando Lodge No. 343, F. & A. M., and a charter member and past workman of San Fernando Lodge No. 214, A. O. U. W.

J. EUCLID MILES. The real-estate interests of Santa Monica have an able representative in the above-named gentleman, who, although he has been a resident only since 1902, is a prominent factor in the material upbuilding of the city. He is a native of Ohio, his birth having occurred in Morrow county. His father, Enos Miles, was born in Chesterville, that county, where he carried on a grocery. In 1849 he crossed the plains with ox-teams and came to California, locating in Marysville, Yuba county, where he engaged in placer mining, and was also one of the builders of the Yuba river dam. Having returned to the east in the mean time, in 1853 he made a trip to the coast by way of the Isthmus, and located once more in Marysville. Subsequently he returned once more to Ohio, and in Mansfield, that state, his death occurred in 1888. His wife was in maidenhood Margaret A. Claflin.

J. Euclid Miles grew to manhood in his native state, receiving his education in the common schools near his home and also in Notre Dame University and the Brothers School in Dayton, Ohio. His first position was as a clerk in a business house on Wall street, New York City, which he accepted in 1872, but subsequently he returned to Ohio and for a short time was engaged in the book business with his father in Mansfield. In 1873 he became an employe of the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis Railroad, and after giving this up went to Colorado, there securing a position in the motive power department of the Denver & Rio Grande which he held for a number of years. With the means accumulated during that time he went into business for himself in Pueblo, Colo., establishing a real-estate and insurance office at that point. During the twenty-two years in which he made that place his home and the scene of his activities he rose to a position of prominence among the citizens both socially and financially and accumulated considerable valuable property. Deciding to locate in Southern California, on July 4, 1902, he came to Santa Monica and at once organized the Santa Monica Investment

Samuel Myers.

Company, one of the strongest real estate concerns of this place. He is now acting as general manager for the company, while Robert F. Jones serves as president; Edwin Dike as vice-president; Roy Jones, as secretary; and the Bank of Santa Monica as treasurer. They conduct a general business and have met with more than the expected success.

Mr. Miles was married in New York City to an accomplished lady, a native of Ireland, in which country she received her education. In his fraternal relations Mr. Miles is associated with the Knights of Columbus, and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of which latter he is treasurer. A man of ability and many admirable personal traits of character, he is held in high esteem by all who know him and accounted a representative citizen of his adopted city.

DANIEL MYERS. While there are many people in Southern California engaged in the poultry business, few devote themselves so exclusively to the turkey raising branch of the occupation as does Daniel Myers of Hemet. He also carries on general ranching on a large scale and has three hundred acres of land planted to grain crops, a like area being used for pasturage purposes. There are twenty-five head of cattle, eighteen horses and a thousand young turkeys on the place at the present time. Mr. Myers was born August 4, 1843, in Wayne county, Ohio, the son of John and Mary (Middlekauff) Myers, the father being a native of Pennsylvania, and the mother of Maryland. Both parents settled in Ohio when they were children, and Mr. Myers, who was occupied as a farmer in that state, is now living there at the advanced age of ninety years. His wife died in Ohio in 1887.

It was in the public schools of his native state that Daniel Myers was educated, his boyhood days being spent on his father's farm. When twenty-one years of age, being of an ambitious nature and desiring to see something of the world, he joined a party of emigrants coming to California in the spring of 1864, and after a trip occupying four months and five days arrived in Sacramento August 25 of that year. For the following twelve months he secured employment by the month, and then established himself in the turkey business, raising twelve hundred the first year, and during the following four years marketed eight thousand eight hundred and fifty birds. Poultry was high in those days and this business was almost as good as a gold mine to Mr. Myers. In 1870, desiring to make a change, he disposed of his interests in Sacramento. Locating in the San Jacinto valley he purchased an interest in the Estudillo grant and later added to his possessions by acquiring one hundred and eleven acres of government land, upon which his home is now located. He built substantial and commodious buildings and otherwise improved the ranch. He engaged in farming operations exclusively for six years, then added turkey raising to his pursuits, and has since that time built up the business to its present extensive proportions.

In 1873, while in Ohio, Mr. Myers was united in marriage with Amanda Shanklin, a native of that state, and they are the parents of three children: Charles C., living at home; Edwin, engaged in mining in Alaska; and Etta, the wife of Charles Slanker of Riverside. Fraternally Mr. Myers is a member of Pomona Lodge, I. O. F., and politically he affiliates with the Democratic party. He takes a special interest in educational matters and has been trustee of his school district, also of the Hemet high school for one term. He is a man of progressive ideas and upright character and exerts a salutary influence in the community, the welfare of which he has always had at heart.

HORACE J. SEELY. Some years after the fever heat of excitement over the discovery of gold in California had subsided Horace J. Seely was brought to the state by his parents, Timothy and Mary (Love) Seely, natives of New York and Ohio respectively, although their married life up to that time had been passed in Michigan. Besides Horace J., who was born in Berrien county, Mich., September 2, 1850, there was one other child in the parental family, Charles, who was born in Napa county, Cal., September 27, 1859; he died of cancer of the stomach March 21, 1906. From Napa county, where the family first settled, they removed to Solano and Contra Costa counties respectively, remaining only a short time in each, however, and in 1871 settled in Arroyo Grande, San Luis Obispo county, where the father spent the remainder of his life. During a part of the twelve years which Mr. Seely lived in Napa county he was a member of the National Guards, and fraternally he belonged to the Masonic order. His church affiliations were with the Methodist Episcopal denomination at Arroyo Grande, with which body of believers his wife is still connected. Mr. Seely died at the age of seventy-seven years, his death terminating a life filled with noble and unselfish deeds. His widow still survives and at the age of seventy-three years enjoys her faculties unimpaired.

As he was a lad of eight years at the time the family left Michigan to take up life in the west Horace J. Seely was educated almost entirely in the schools of Napa county, which was his home for twelve years. Following the fortunes of his parents he came to Arroyo Grande in 1871, and for thirty-five years has assisted in the march of progress in this flourishing center of activity. His twenty-two and a half acre ranch produces twenty-five sacks of beans to the acre, besides which he raises large quantities of beets.

In 1875, in Arroyo Grande, Mr. Seely was united in marriage with Dora Casteele, a native of Missouri, and four children have been born to them. The eldest born, W. J., is now thirty years old and a resident of Santa Rita; Mary, who is twenty-eight years old, is the wife of Fred Keller, of Santa Barbara county, and the mother of one child; A. T. chose as his wife Sarah Fillmore, and they have one child; the youngest child of the family is Clara, now in her seventeenth year. In his political belief Mr. Seely is a Republican, and his religious inclinations are toward the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a member, her membership being in the church at Arroyo Grande. The accumulation of excessive wealth has at no time been the aim or object of Mr. Seely's life, but rather to live well and worthily, and that his life has been above reproach is the universal acknowledgment of those who have been associated with him for the long period of thirty-five years.

ALFRED C. DRAKE. The western representative of a fine old family of New York, Alfred C. Drake is located in the vicinity of El Monte and engaged in the management of a finely improved ranch of ten acres, in walnuts sixteen years old, and also, a fifteen acre tract in the Bassett district which is set to walnuts and alfalfa. Born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., March 10, 1873, he was a son of James and Martha (Vincent) Drake, the former of whom was a native of the same place and the latter of Ontario. The grandfather, Francis Drake, was a soldier in the Civil war, serving in a New York regiment, after which he followed farming in St. Lawrence county, where his son James was engaged as a builder. The latter subsequently removed to Franklin county, Iowa, and followed his trade, and from there went to Minnesota and North Dakota, finally coming to California. He died in El Monte in 1898, at the age of forty-eight years. His wife had previously died in their home in Iowa.

The only child born to his parents, Alfred C. Drake was reared in the different states where his parents made their home, removing to Iowa at the age of four years, thence to Minnesota at seven, and at nine to Valley City, N. Dak., his education being received in the public schools and the St. Cloud (Minn.) Normal School. He then attended a business college in Fargo and in 1893, after his graduation, located in Phoenix, Ariz. In the same year he came to El Monte, where his father had purchased a ranch on the Santa Anita road. He farmed this property for a year and a half, when he bought a ranch in the Puente district and when twenty-three years of age he engaged in farming for himself. In El Monte, March 10, 1896, he married Miss Myra Maxson, a native of Colusa county, Cal., and a daughter of B. F. Maxson, whose name is one well known in this section of Southern California. (For more complete details concerning his life refer to the sketch of his son, which appears elsewhere in this volume.) Mrs. Drake traces her ancestry on the maternal side to Priscilla Alden. She is a woman of excellent qualities, well educated and highly cultured, and has a wide circle of friends in El Monte and vicinity. They have four children, namely: James Merwin, Elizabeth Fay, Frederick Arthur and Francis Maxson.

In 1904 Mr. Drake improved his property by the erection of a new residence and also made other improvements. Both himself and wife are members of the Mountain View Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Drake officiates as chairman of the board of trustees. Fraternally he is prominent, having been made a Mason in 1903 in Lexington Lodge No. 104, F. & A. M., of El Monte, of which he is now serving as master, and both himself and wife are members of the Order of Eastern Star, El Monte Chapter No. 172, of which he is Worthy Patron. He is also identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, having served in his local lodge as recorder for seven terms, and the Independent Order of Good Templars. He is a Republican in his political convictions, and actively supports his party principles. Since its organization he has been a member of the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association. In educational affairs Mr. Drake has always taken a prominent part, having served for the past six years as a member of the board of trustees of the Mountain View School district.

EDWARD J. STEWART. In the selection of Mr. Stewart as overseer of their pipe lines the Los Posas Water Company of Somis have secured the services of one who will guard the interests of his superiors with the same care that his own affairs would receive. In the distribution of water over the town and vicinity three engines are kept in constant operation, besides which four windmills are at all times adding to the supply.

As a native son of the state Mr. Stewart was born in Ventura county September 24, 1871, a son of Oscar D. Stewart, a native of Michigan. (For a more complete history of the Stewart family the reader is referred to the sketch of the father, which will be found on another page of this volume.) The common schools of this county furnished the text-book knowledge which Mr. Stewart was permitted to enjoy, but he has never ceased to be a student, for by the reading of carefully selected literature he has become well informed, and all who know him speak of him in the highest terms. His school days over, his energetic disposition made immediate work essential, and in the selection of ranching he chose the work nearest at hand, for he was reared on a farm and during his boyhood and youth had assisted his father very materially in the care and management of the home place. He discontinued his agricultural enterprise, however, in November, 1905, at which time he accepted his present position with the Los Posas Water Company. Though he has been with the company little more than a year the time has been all sufficient to prove his trustworthiness, for he believes that what is worth doing is worth doing well.

In 1895 Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Lucy Russell, who is of southern parentage, born in Mississippi, the daughter of Henry and Lucretia (Sheffield) Russell. The mother is deceased, but the father still survives and is a resident of Ventura, being marshal of the town. Two children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, Lorraine and Russell. Mr. Stewart is proud of the privilege to claim membership in the organization known as the Native Sons of the Golden West, which is his by right of birth in this state, and he affiliates with the parlor at Ventura. The only other order to which he belongs is the Modern Woodmen of America, belonging to the camp at Somis. His political sympathies are in accord with Democratic principles, which he supports whenever the occasion arises.

GEORGE W. GLENN. The descendant of a representative pioneer family, and a lifelong resident of California, G. W. Glenn occupies a prominent position among the thriving agriculturists of Ventura county, his highly improved and productive ranch being located near Camarillo. A man of industry and sound judgment, the success which has attended him throughout his career has been brought about by persistent energy, well-directed toil and exceptional business ability on his part, and he is in truth well deserving of the respect and confidence in which he is everywhere held. A son of the late Joseph Glenn, he was born January 5, 1857, in Visalia, Tulare county, and there and in Kern county he received his early education.

A native of Tennessee, Joseph Glenn succeeded to the occupation of his ancestors, becoming a farmer. In 1852 he came to California, and for a while tried mining, but not meeting with the anticipated success he resumed his former independent calling. Removing from Kern county to Ventura county, he first took up a government claim near Hueneme. Later he spent some time as a farmer in Los Angeles county, but in 1886 returned to Ventura county, and was here employed as a tiller of the soil until his death in 1891, at the age of seventy-two years. He was a man highly esteemed, and a stanch Democrat in his political views. He married Mary Grounds, a native of Arkansas, and she is now living in Hueneme, a bright and active woman of seventy-eight years, and a valued member of the Presbyterian Church. Fourteen children blessed their union, five of whom are deceased, and of the nine that survive seven are residents of California.

Brought up on a farm, G. W. Glenn became well versed in agricultural lore during the days of his boyhood and youth, and started out on his own account at an early age. Coming to Ventura county, for six years he carried on general farming in Hueneme on rented land. The ensuing four years he was similarly employed in Los Angeles county, but not being quite contented with the results of his operations in that locality he returned to Ventura county. Laboring earnestly and successfully, he made money, and in 1893 purchased seventy-seven acres of his present home ranch, which now comprises one hundred and fifty acres. A part of his land he devotes to raising hay, but he makes a specialty of beans, his land readily yielding about twelve sacks per acre.

In 1880 Mr. Glenn married Catherine M. Cawelti, a daughter of the late John Cawelti. Mr. Cawelti was born January 26, 1828, in Germany, and died at the age of sixty-three years in Ventura county, Cal. He came with his parents to this country when young, and for many years was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Ohio. In 1864 he migrated with his family to Sonoma county, Cal., and in 1868 removed to Ventura county, where he acquired a handsome property, becoming owner of ten hundred and three acres of land in the Santa Clara valley of the south. As a general farmer he was exceedingly prosperous, and as a man and a citizen was much respected. He was a Democrat in politics. While living in Ohio he married Catherine M. Wagner, who was born in Germany, and died in Ventura county, at the age of seventy-three years. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in that faith reared her nine children, all of whom are living in California, in Pleasant Valley. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn are the parents of four children, Ethel, Lena, Clifford and Edward. In his political affiliations Mr. Glenn is a Democrat, and religiously he belongs to the Baptist Church. He is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood, an organization in which he takes great interest. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn are known far and wide as generous, hospitable people, and their pleasant home is a center of social activity.

LEROY ARNOLD. Until his death Leroy Arnold was one of the most prominent citizens of Ventura county, where he settled in 1870. He was born January 22, 1842, in DeKalb county, Ill., his father, Cutler, being a native of Ohio, born in 1818, and his mother, Emily Hough in maidenhood, being a native of Illinois. They removed to California in 1852, coming by the Panama route to Marysville, and from there they went to Sierra county, remaining there for a time. The year 1857 found them in Lassen county, where the father engaged in ranching until 1868, when he came to Ventura county and engaged in that business on a large scale. Both parents continued to reside here until their deaths, having spent their last days in the home of their son Leroy. The father lived to be eighty-two years of age. Of the nine children born to the parents six are still living.

In Lassen county, September 19, 1865, Leroy Arnold was married to Miss Carrie F. Hill, a native of Indiana and the daughter of William R. and Sarah (Gragg) Hill, the former a native of New York state and the latter born in Noble county, Ind. William R. Hill, who was a farmer and carpenter by trade, settled in Indiana prior to his marriage. From there he removed to Missouri and one year later settled in Iowa. In 1859 he started for Pike's Peak with his wife and seven children. He began the trip with horses, but while on the way decided to come to California instead and traded his horses for oxen. His route followed the Sublet cut-off by Harney Lake valley. Mr. Hill coming only a few days after the Shepard party, which was massacred. He located on Lassen county and engaged in contracting and building in addition to farming until 1865, when he removed to a farm near Eugene, Lane county, Ore., remaining there for six years. After this he returned to California, first to Ventura county, and after a few years bought a home in Tulare county. He died at the latter location in the year 1884, and his wife in Ventura county in 1870. There were seven children in the family, Mrs. Arnold being next to the oldest.

In 1870 Mr. and Mrs. Arnold removed to Hueneme. Mr. Arnold rented a ranch for a time, and then bought out the interest of his brother Eugene in a one hundred and sixty acre ranch and engaged in farming, in addition to which he operated a thrashing machine and raised thoroughbred horses. He took a prominent interest in all public affairs of this section, was an advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally affiliated with the Masonic lodge. His death, which occurred February 25, 1902, at the age of sixty years, one month and three days, removed one of the most successful men and highly respected citizens of Ventura county. His wife and seven children survive him, the youngest son, Dell, and Mrs. Arnold conducting the home ranch, which comprises over one hundred and twenty acres of land devoted to beet growing. It is a well improved piece of property and has a ten-inch well located on the highest point, from which the whole ranch may be irrigated. The other children are: Effie, who married Arthur Smith, of Hueneme; Mollie, now Mrs. W. T. Fulton, of Camarillo; Martha, the wife of J. E. Fulton, of Oxnard; Olive, who married Walter Rowe, of Hueneme; and Roy and Alton, both residing in Hueneme. Mrs. Arnold adheres to the faith of the Christian Science Church.

LAZARUS PETER CASNER. An active, wide-awake man of versatile talents, broad and progressive in his views, L. P. Casner has had a varied career in life, and wherever he has lived and labored has won for himself an honored position in business circles. He now has charge of the stage station on the stage line route between Foster and Julian, the station being located on the boundary line of the Ballena and Ramona precincts, and in this capacity is ably and faithfully performing the duties devolving upon him, winning the approval of his employers, and the esteem and hearty good will of the traveling public. He is a native of San Diego county, born May 14, 1873, a son of Martin Van and Mary (Littlepage) Casner.

Endowed by nature with those three characteristics, energy, ability and push, which are pre-eminent in all true born Americans, L. P.

Lloyd E. Noble.

Casner started in life at the early age of seventeen years, for two years being employed on the Hurt stock ranch in Arizona. Returning home, he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for a while, after which he was engaged in the cattle business on his own account for five years. He subsequently learned the trade of butcher, which he followed in Monrovia, Los Angeles county, for two years, during which time he joined the Los Angeles Butchers' Union, to which he still belongs. Going then to Lower California, he ran a store there for a year. Returning to Los Angeles, he was for five years connected with a private detective force, and while thus employed traveled extensively throughout the west and northwest. Settling then in San Diego county, he was for a few seasons employed in general ranching, and then accepted his present position with Mr. Foster, and has had full charge of the stage station, as above mentioned, managing its business most successfully and satisfactorily.

In 1898 Mr. Casner married Edith M. Clevenger, who was born in Chico, Butte county, Cal., a daughter of J. K. P. Clevenger, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Charlotte C., Lorain and Violet Pearl. Mr. Casner is a straightforward Republican in politics.

LLOYD E. NOBLE. The impetus afforded to all business enterprises through the rapidly growing popularity of Long Beach has attracted to its citizenship a large number of men directly or indirectly connected with the real estate business and the building industry, and among these men may be mentioned Lloyd E. Noble, who has been interested in the building for sale of modern cottages and substantial residences, as well as doing a general real estate business. Though familiar with every detail connected with contract carpentering and himself the possessor of varied experience in the occupation, he is yet a young man, having been born December 8, 1881, and is a native of Lake City, Calhoun county, Iowa. His father, William M. Noble, was born in Illinois and became interested in the hardware and building business in Iowa, where he became an extensive and successful contractor at Lake City. On coming to California in 1887 he took up work at his chosen trade in Whittier and erected a number of substantial structures in that locality, later being similarly occupied in Santa Ana. For some years he has made his home in Los Angeles, where he is financially interested in a flourishing industry. His first wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Seaburn, died in California August 6, 1892, at thirty-nine years of age, and he remained a widower until October 11, 1905, when he was united in marriage with Jennie R. Kirby of Los Angeles.

When the family came to the Pacific coast Lloyd E. Noble was less than six years of age, hence his education has been secured almost wholly in the west and principally in the schools of Whittier. When fifteen years of age he began to assist his father in carpentering and thus acquired an early and thorough knowledge of the trade. At the age of eighteen he became a partner of his father in contracting and building and aided in the erection of houses at Santa Ana and Long Beach. In December, 1904, he became a partner in the D. C. Lamb, Noble Grill Company of Los Angeles, with which his father was associated, but at the expiration of six months he sold his one-third interest. Subsequently he engaged in building houses in Long Beach, his plan being to buy vacant property, improve with modern dwellings and then sell. Since January 1, 1906, he has been engaged independently in the general real estate and investment business, also doing building to improve his own properties.

Since coming to Long Beach Mr. Noble has been connected with the Volunteer Fire Company as a department officer, the company having proved a distinct advantage and source of protection to the city. Further he is active in the California National Guard as a member of Company H, Seventh Regiment, maintains affiliations with the Fraternal Aid and the Modern Woodmen of America, in religion gives his support to the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and takes an active interest in the Y. M. C. A. as chairman of the membership committee from the First Methodist Episcopal Church. In political affairs he favors Republican principles in national issues, but in local elections maintains an independent attitude, favoring the men and measures best adapted to promote the progress of city and county.

HENRY DARIUS FREEMAN. Ranking high among the active and thriving ranchers of the Santa Maria valley is H. D. Freeman, a man of ability, intelligence and good business capacity, whose ranch of two hundred acres lies directly south of Santa Maria. The greater part of the tract is sown to grain, sixty acres alone being given over to corn, which, though not raised for commercial purposes direct, supplies feed for his hennery, which is the largest and one of the most flourishing industries of the kind in the valley. At this writing (1906) he has eighteen hundred laying hens and two thousand young chickens, the latter produced by the use of three incubators, which are kept in constant operation. The incubators which are used on the ranch are manufactured by Mr. Freeman's brother, Albert J., both being authorities in the raising of chickens, and that their theoretical and practical knowledge produce undeniable results will be seen when it is stated that during 1905 they sold in the San Francisco market $3,300 worth of eggs and $500 worth of poultry.

A native son of the state, Henry D. Freeman was born in Marin county August 8, 1859, a son of William D. and Mary (Halstead) Freeman, of whom more facts are given in the sketch of Albert J. Freeman. Mr. Freeman has known no other home than his native state, and in fact his life has been about equally divided between Marin and Santa Barbara counties. Educated in the common schools of Marin county, while still a school boy he became interested in the dairy business through association with his older brother's dairy, and finally started in business in the same line for himself. This continued for some time, but in the mean time he had been making investigations along the line of poultry raising, which in 1890 took tangible form by the inauguration of his present ranch in the Santa Maria valley. Having a thorough understanding of poultry raising, in 1897 he engaged in the business on a large scale, and by giving personal attention to details he has gained a standing in the business community from a financial standpoint of which he is well worthy, and judging from his past record still greater successes await him.

In 1878 Henry D. Freeman was united in marriage with Miss Mary Lucas, a native of Missouri, and the following children have been born to them: Chester L., Ruth, Lulu, Emil, Joe, Nellie and Lillian. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman are members of the Christian Church, and are rearing their children to lives of usefulness. Politically Mr. Freeman is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Good Templars and the Red Men, affiliating with the lodges at Santa Maria.

EDWARD MARION CHURCHILL. Among the prosperous business men of Escondido E. Marion Churchill, a hardware merchant, holds a position of importance. He is a man of recognized ability and worth, possesses keen judgment, and is enterprising and progressive. A son of C. B. Churchill, he was born, March 15, 1870, at Prairie City, Jasper county, Iowa. His Grandfather Churchill, a native of New York state, moved to Wisconsin at an early day, being a pioneer farmer of that state, and afterwards followed the march of civilization still further westward, locating in Iowa, where he resided until his death.

Born in Erie county, N. Y., C. B. Churchill went with his parents to Wisconsin, where he followed farming for a number of years. Subsequently settling at Prairie City, Iowa, he improved a fine farm, and was profitably employed in agricultural pursuits for a number of years. He kept abreast of the times in his labors, using the most approved farm machinery, and was one of the first to own a threshing machine in that state. In the fall of 1871 he moved to Butler county, Neb., where he purchased wild land and continued his operations as a farmer and stock-raiser. In 1883, in partnership with his son, G. D. Churchill, he embarked in business as a general merchant at David City, Neb., where he remained a few years. Selling his interest in the firm he resumed farming for awhile, and in 1893 located in Escondido, where, in addition to general ranching, he was engaged in the milling business until his retirement from active pursuits. He married B. A. Stephens, who was born in Erie county, Pa., a daughter of Sylvester Stephens, who spent his last years on a Wisconsin farm. She bore her husband six children, of whom two sons and three daughters are living, Edward Marion, the subject of this sketch, being the youngest child.

Brought up and educated in Nebraska, Edward Marion Churchill was graduated from the David City high school, after which he took a course of study at a business college in Des Moines, Iowa. Returning to Nebraska, he remained at home until 1893, when he came with the family to Escondido, where for two years he assisted his father in improving a ranch. Entering the flour mill then, he learned the miller's trade, and changed the process of manufacture of flour to the E. P. Allis bolting system, by which two hundred and sixty-five pounds of wheat were made to produce a barrel of flour, instead of three hundred and twenty-five pounds, as formerly required. Until 1899, he continued the management of the plant, when, finding the location undesirable for milling purposes, he gave up the business, intending to go east for awhile. Changing his mind, he bought a half interest with C. Young in a bicycle business, paying $100 for his share, and ran the shop until October, 1900, when the plant, with the exception of the repair shop, was burned out. For $200 Mr. Churchill then purchased his partner's interest in the business and the lot, and, moving into a new building, dealt in bicycles and sporting goods for a year, during which time he was robbed one night of goods worth $150. In December, 1901, forming a copartnership with Prof. J. E. Thomas, principal of the high school, Mr. Churchill bought out the hardware business of Arthur Jones, and has since been resident manager of the store, in which he carries a full line of hardware, agricultural implements, bicycles and sporting goods. His store, which he moved into in March, 1902, is 25x80 feet, and the warehouse is 50x120 feet. He handles the Pope Manufacturing goods, the J. I. Case threshers and engines, Oliver chilled plows, and the Studebaker's wagons and buggies, carrying a fine assortment. He has acquired considerable property, and on Iowa street has erected a fine residence.

In David City, Neb., Mr. Churchill married J. F. Lierle, who was born in Illinois, a daughter of William Lierle, now a resident of Norwalk, Iowa, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Arthur R., Ruth and Mildred. Mr. Churchill is a member of the Escondido Chamber of Commerce, and for two years rendered good service as city marshall and tax collector. Politically he is a Republican. Fraternally he was made a Mason in David City, and is now a member and past master of Consuelo Lodge, No. 325, F. & A. M., of Escondido, which he joined at the time of its organization; is a member of the knights of Pythias; and both he and his wife belong to the Order of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Churchill is a member of the Congregational Church, towards the support of which he contributes generously.

WILLIAM H. SMITH. To attain to so honored a place in the community as has William H. Smith is to live worthily and improve the opportunities within reach of one's ability and industry. Without doubt the surroundings of his youth had much to do with formulating those principles of truth and honesty which are the keynote of his character and which have helped him in surmounting difficulties. A native of Wisconsin, he was born in Lafayette county, November 15, 1847, a son of William and Sarah (Davis) Smith, the former born in England, and the latter a native of Illinois. When their son William was a small child they left Wisconsin and settled on a farm in Clay county, Ill., remaining there until 1874, when they came to California. The father died in Tulare county when seventy-six years old, and the mother was seventy-two at the time of her death. Both were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and throughout their lives they exemplified the teachings of the Master, who went about doing good. Of the seven children born to them, two are deceased.

Educated in the common schools of Clay county, Ill., William H. Smith interspersed with his studies the duties that fall to the lot of the average farmer's son, and remained at home with his parents until his twenty-fifth year. Upon coming to California in 1872 he went first to Alameda county, working on a stock ranch there for about two years, after which he went to Stanislaus county to take charge of a wheat ranch as foreman. An experience of ten years there enabled him to lay by means with which to purchase a ranch of his own, his choice of a location taking him within a short distance of Pomona. Five years later he disposed of the property and came to Ventura county, here also continuing to carry on a ranch, although it was not until about 1903 that he purchased and settled upon his present property. With the exception of about twenty acres of hay land the entire ranch, one hundred and twenty-two and a half acres, is planted in beans, his vines producing on an average fifteen sacks to the acre. Although Mr. Smith may be called a pioneer of Southern California, he is comparatively speaking a newcomer to this immediate vicinity. This fact, however, would not be known from the appearance of his ranch, for he has spared no means to supply himself with the latest labor-saving devices and install improvements of a high order, with the result that his ranch takes high rank among the best in Ventura county.

Mr. Smith's marriage in 1884 united him with Miss Belle Williams, a native of Kansas, and the only child of their marriage is Raymond, who is now a clerk in a store in Camarillo. The family attend and support the Baptist Church, and politically Mr. Smith is a believer in Republican principles.

EDWARD T. HUGHES. The modern and well-kept ranch which belongs to Edward T. Hughes, bespeaks the ability and energy which have characterized the effort put into the cultivation of the property. Camarillo, Ventura county, is his postoffice, and Oxnard his market town, where he finds a ready sale for the commodities produced on his ranch, which comprises beans and hay exclusively.

Richard V. and Elizabeth (Cullen) Hughes were both natives of Pennsylvania, but prior to the birth of their son Edward, they established their home in Nebraska. There the father practiced his profession, becoming known as a lawyer of exceptional talents and marked ability, a fact which was emphasized by his election to the office of district judge. He died at the age of fifty-nine years and his funeral was conducted under the auspices of the Masonic and Odd Fellow fraternities, in both of which bodies he had been an active member. The mother, who is also deceased, passed away at the age of sixty-eight years, leaving to mourn her loss many friends who had worked side by side with her in the various benevolent societies of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she was an active member.

Edward T. Hughes was born in Brownsville, Neb., January 17, 1868, and received his education in the common schools of his native village. When he was a lad of only seven years his life was saddened by the death of his father, and early in life he began to assume duties which but for this circumstance might have been averted until more mature years. After leaving school he began to work on the neighboring farms in Nebraska, and at the age of twenty years he had acquired sufficient confidence in himself to strike out in the world alone. Not content with the outlook which he saw before him in his native state, he came to California in 1888, locating first in Los Angeles, but finally came to Ventura county. To one with less grit and determination the prospects which confronted him would have seemed dark indeed, but he was not daunted by the fact that he was without money or friends, and philosophically set about to find some honest employment. Farm work, the only thing with which he was familiar, could be obtained with ease, and for a number of years he worked in the employ of others. During this time, however, the one thought paramount in his mind was to lay by whatever could be spared after paying his honest debts, in the hope of becoming a landowner himself at no far distant day. His earnestness and frugality were rewarded when, in 1901, he became the owner of his present ranch of one hundred acres. He has planted eighty acres to beans, from which he reaps fifteen sacks to the acre, and the remainder of the land is in hay.

In 1891 Mr. Hughes formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Lulu Rice, who was born in Kansas, a daughter of Benjamin and Mary Rice. Mrs. Rice is still living, making her home in Pomona, the death of her husband having occurred in Pasadena. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes have a bright and interesting family of five children, named in the order of their birth as follows: Herbert, Richard, Estella, Edna and Lottie. Like his father before him Mr. Hughes is a Republican in his political inclination, and like him, too, he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in Oxnard Lodge No. 341. Educational affairs have always been a matter of deep interest to Mr. Hughes and he is now serving as school trustee. His friends are not confined to any age or class, but are drawn from all the walks of life, for he is the same to all—high and low, rich and poor—and all honor him for his success and wish him many years of prosperity. He has recently improved the appearance of his property by the erection of new buildings throughout.

JOHN C. HARTMAN. Throughout the neighborhood of Camarillo, Ventura county, where he has made his home since 1874, Mr. Hartman is known as an enterprising and efficient rancher, few surpassing him in the output of beans to which his ranch is devoted almost exclusively. Immediately after coming to this place he purchased his present ranch, comprising eighty-one acres, and put it in vines, the venture proving so successful that he later rented adjoining land until he now has four hundred acres under his control. With the exception of a few acres which are in hay, all of the land is in beans, which harvest from fifteen to eighteen sacks to the acre.

An only child, John C. Hartman was born at Mount Pleasant, Henry county, Iowa, May 26, 1858, a son of John and Belinda (Gray) Hartman, born in Ohio and Indiana respectively. The greater part of their later life was passed in Iowa, however, and it was there that the death of the father occurred when he was only thirty-six years of age. After this bereavement the mother came to California, her death occurring in Santa Barbara in 1896, when fifty-nine years old. Both had been stanch members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically Mr. Hartman was a Republican. By the time he was sixteen years old John C. Hartman had left school and had entered the world of business. Coming to California in 1874 he purchased the ranch in Ventura county on which he now resides, his energy and shrewd business methods bringing him an early financial success.

January 2, 1881, Mr. Hartman was married to Eliza A. Wilhite, a native of the Lone Star state and a daughter of Rev. W. L. Wilhite, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Santa Ana, where Mr. and Mrs. Wilhite make their home. Four children have been born into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hartman, Georgia, Elmer, Jessie and Bertha, all of whom are receiving every educational advantage which their parents can bestow. They are now attending the schools of Los Angeles, in which city Mr. Hartman owns property, and for the time being the family make their home there, although Mr. Hartman's duties confine him very closely to the ranch. Mrs. Hartman is an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church, toward the support of which Mr. Hartman gives liberally. Throughout his life he has kept in touch with the issues before our government, has voted the Republican ticket, and upheld its principles whenever the opportunity has been offered. Accompanied by his wife and one daughter Mr. Hartman returned to the scene of his boyhood home in Iowa, in 1904, after an absence of thirty years, from there taking an extended trip throughout the east and south. A fitting climax to this journey was a visit to the World's Fair held in St. Louis.

George Palmer

GEORGE PALMER. During the twenty years that George Palmer has been a resident of Compton he has been industriously and actively employed in advancing its agricultural prosperity, and has his ranch well improved and under a high state of cultivation. His residence and outbuildings are neat, and everything around him evinces the thrift and care of its owner. A native of Indiana, he was born November 23, 1839, of English ancestry. His parents, William and Sarah (Bellamy) Palmer, emigrated from England, their native country, to the United States in 1835, locating first in Indiana, from there going, in 1855, to Marshall county, Ill., where they spent the remainder of their lives. Of the four children that blessed their union, two are living, namely: George, the special subject of this sketch; and Mrs. Emily Litchfield, who was born in England and is now living in Illinois. The parents were people of sound religious principles, and belonged to the Baptist Church.

Brought up in a rural district, two and one-half miles from the nearest school, George Palmer received limited educational advantages, pursuing his studies in the winter terms only. After removing with the family to Illinois he assisted his father in the pioneer labor of improving a farm, and of this homestead he and his brother afterwards had charge for a few years. Subsequently starting in life for himself, Mr. Palmer purchased land in Marshall county, Ill., becoming owner of one hundred and twenty acres now included within the limits of the city of Toluca. Selling out, he went to Livingston county, Ill., where he bought a half section of land, on which he was successfully engaged in general farming for several years. Disposing of that estate in 1885, he came to Los Angeles county, Cal., and having purchased his present home ranch of sixty-two acres has since carried on general farming with satisfactory results. The estate is now under the management of his sons, who make a specialty of raising alfalfa, for which the land is well adapted.

In 1864, in Illinois, Mr. Palmer married Isabel Ruston, a native of Indiana, and of the eleven children born of their union three died in infancy, and eight are living, namely: William R.; George H.; Eliza Belle, wife of Frank Walton; Emily L.; Anna Mary; John L.; Jane E.; and Robert L. Politically Mr. Palmer is an uncompromising Democrat, and when the town of Compton was incorporated was elected to the office of town trustee. Fraternally he is a member of Centennial Lodge No. 247, I. O. O. F., and has been through all of the chairs of the lodge with which he is connected. Religiously he belongs to the old school of Baptists, and is a faithful follower of its creeds.

E. WRIGHT DAILY. An extensive and prosperous agriculturist, now in the prime of life, E. W. Daily is successfully engaged in his independent vocation on one of the best and most valuable homesteads in Ventura county. Located near Oxnard, his ranch, with its comfortable and convenient set of buildings and their neat and tasteful surroundings, invariably attracts the attention of the passerby, its general appearance bearing evidence of the thrift and enterprise which first established it, and by which it has since been managed. A man of ability, industry and intelligence, he has met with marked success in his undertakings, and stands well in his community, both from a social and a financial point of view. A son of C. W. Daily, he was born, May 10, 1860, in Kansas, but was brought up and educated in New York state.

A native of New York state, C. W. Daily became a farmer from choice, and soon after his marriage removed to Kansas, where for a few seasons he was engaged in agricultural pursuits. Returning to the Empire state in 1862, he enlisted in the Fiftieth New York Engineer Corps, in which he served two or more years. At the close of the Civil war he resumed his chosen occupation in New York, living there until 1892, when he came to California. He is now retired from active labor, and makes his home with his son Charles. He is a Republican in politics, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and belongs to the Masonic order. He married Ruth (Fordham) Green, who was born in New York state, and is now living there. Three children were born of their union.

But two years of age when his parents returned to New York state, E. W. Daily there obtained a common school education, and during the days of his boyhood and youth acquired an excellent knowledge of general farming. Coming to California in 1884, he located in Ventura county, and for three years worked for wages on the Patterson ranch. Pleased with the country and his prospects herein, he then, after a brief visit at his old home in the east, purchased three hundred acres of land, and by dint of hard labor and good management has since improved the ranch which he now occupies. As a tiller of the soil, he has met with success, and is now devoting his time and attention to the raising of beans and barley, making a specialty of beans, which yield a good crop, averaging fifteen sacks to the acre.

In 1889 Mr. Daily married Etta Crowley, who was born and reared in New York state, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Nellie, Ruth, Bernice and Gladys. Politically Mr. Daily is a warm advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and for the past twelve years has rendered good service as school trustee.

HENRY BJORKMAN. A thorough knowledge of the lumber industry in all its departments enables Mr. Björkman to discharge with efficiency the duties connected with his chosen occupation. Since the year 1895 he has made San Pedro his home and has engaged in the lumber business continuously, by careful industry gaining a thorough knowledge of its many details. While he is a loyal American and a patriotic Californian, his early years were spent in the midst of scenes far different from those that now surround him in the sunny west, for in the cold and cheerless province of Finland his eyes first opened upon a gray sombre world. The home farm, which his father, John, cultivated, was one with sterile soil scarce sufficing to earn a livelihood for the family though all combined in their efforts to eke out an existence from the barren acres. There were five children in the family and of these Henry, the third in order of birth, was born February 25, 1873, his birthplace being the homestead at Nykarleby. Such advantages as were possible his parents gave him, sending him to the public schools of the town and training him to habits of self-reliance and patient industry.

When nineteen years of age Mr. Björkman came to the United States and sought employment in New Mexico, where he engaged for eleven months in a sawmill at Chama. Next he worked at lumbering in the South Park of Colorado and from there went to Nebraska near Ogallala, where he worked in the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for eighteen months. During 1895 he came to California, since which time he has made San Pedro his home. Securing employment in a humble capacity with the Southern California Lumber Company, he learned the entire business thoroughly and proved himself an efficient workman. September 29, 1903, he resigned to enter upon business independently; since 1905 he has been a member of the Lumber Surveyors' Association, and is following as a business lumber surveyor. During 1901 he erected on Second near Mesa street a neat and comfortable residence, which is presided over by his wife, formerly Alma Sophia Newman, of Los Angeles. Mrs. Björkman was born in the same part of Finland as her husband, and both are sincere members of the Lutheran Church, in which faith they were reared.

HENRY S. LANE. When the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day forced many Huguenots to flee from France and seek refuge in other lands, the Lane family found a haven of safety in England. The opening of the new world to colonization gave them an opportunity to transplant their race into a country where toleration in religion might be anticipated, and they became pioneers of Massachusetts, whence later generations scattered throughout the entire country. Jonathan, son of Joseph Lane, was born at Orrington, Penobscot county, Me., became an architect and builder, and died at Bangor. The even tenor of his life was broken by the outbreak of the Civil war, in which he enlisted as a private in the First Maine Heavy Artillery. At the expiration of three years and six months he was honorably discharged and immediately afterward raised a company which entered the Eighteenth Maine Infantry. Although he bore a part in many engagements the only wounds he received were at Gettysburg; at all other times he remained on the battlefield until the end of the engagement, and bore a part in all the activities of his regiment.

Born in Bangor, Me., July 8, 1861, Henry S. Lane was an infant during the period of his father's war service. As a boy he attended the common schools of Bangor, and when he started out to earn his own livelihood he went to Boston, three months later proceeding to Providence, R. I., where he served apprenticeship to the jewelry trade. During the year 1882 he enlisted in the United States army and was sent to David's Island in New York harbor, and in the same year was also sent to Salt Lake, Utah, assigned to Company E, Sixth United States Infantry, under Col. Alexander McD. Cook. Later, for eighteen months he was stationed at Fort Washakie, Wyo., and then returned to Salt Lake City, where he was mustered out January 9, 1887, after five years of service.

Coming to California and from San Francisco to Los Angeles, Mr. Lane engaged in contracting and building with a brother, W. E., for more than two years. Next he was employed on the Second street cable road until the failure of the company operating the same, after which he removed to Redondo, and for two and one-half years was foreman with the Willamette Lumber Company. Another year was spent with the same company as salesman in Riverside and San Bernardino counties, after which he bought an interest in the old St. Charles hotel at San Bernardino and operated the same for eighteen months. On disposing of his interest in the hotel he came to San Pedro in 1894 and entered the employ of the Southern California Lumber Company as yard foreman, since which time he has continued in the same position. In point of years of service he is the oldest employe of the company. Few surpass him in accurate knowledge of lumber and he has proved a reliable man in his responsible place. At no time or place has he been active in politics. Partisanship spirit is foreign to his disposition and temperament, and he takes no part in public affairs aside from the casting of a Republican ticket at general elections. Since coming to San Pedro he has become identified with Masonry, having been made a Mason in San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M., of which he is past master.

JOHN BENN. One of the many thrifty ranches in the vicinity of Oxnard, Ventura county, which elicits special notice is that occupied by John Benn. In common with many in this part of the county he is interested exclusively in the raising of beans, a commodity which seems particularly adapted to this soil and climate, and from his tract of eighty acres Mr. Benn gathers on an average fifteen sacks per acre.

Although Mr. Benn is of English birth he has has no personal knowledge of his native land, for when he was only one year old his parents immigrated to the United States to make their permanent home. Landing in New York City in 1847, the next year found them on the way to Iowa, where the father, although a carpenter by trade, carried on farming on a tract of land which he had previously purchased there. While he was fairly successful in the middle west, after four years he determined to locate in the far west and disposed of his Iowa farm. He reached Salt Lake City, Utah, in the winter of 1852, and on account of the difficulty of travel at that time of the year decided to remain there until the opening of spring. Again taking up the march he got as far as Fillmore, Utah, where the Indians were on the warpath. Being in sympathy with the cause of the white settlers he took up arms against the Indians and for three years aided in subduing the dusky foe. Once more resuming his westward journey he reached Santa Barnardino in 1855, remaining in that city one winter, when he purchased a ranch and also took up a claim not far from Montecito, Santa Barbara county. His earth life was brought to a close on the home ranch when he was in his eighty-eighth year, while his wife passed away when she was seventy-two years of age. Both were faithful members of the Episcopal Church, and politically Mr. Benn was a Democrat. The welfare of his party was always of deep concern to him and his constituents elected him a member of the city council.

One of five children which comprised the parental family, John Benn was born in Liverpool, England, August 27, 1846, and was little more than a child in arms when his parents landed on the shores of the new world. He was about seven years old at the time of the Indian war in Utah, and distinctly recalls the exciting times which the family experienced prior to their removal to California. His school days began when the family became established in Santa Barbara county, attending first the city schools of Santa Barbara, later the schools of Montecito. Until attaining his majority he had taken an equal interest with his father in the care of the home ranch, but at the age of twenty-one he determined to strike out in the world on his own behalf, his first independent step being his marriage which occurred in 1867, and united him with Mary E. Scull, who was born and reared in Cincinnati, Ohio. After his marriage he carried on a ranch in Santa Barbara county until the year 1884, when he came to Ventura county and bought forty acres of the ranch on which he now resides. Subsequently he was enabled to secure forty acres adjoining his original purchase, and now has eighty acres devoted to the raising of beans exclusively. Success has followed his persevering efforts and has enabled him to accumulate some means, but his personal gain has not been at the expense of principle or honor, as is attested by his hearty endorsement as a business man and neighbor from all who are brought in contact with him either in a business or social capacity.

Six children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Benn, whose names in order of birth are as follows: Nettie A., now Mrs. Henry Mahan; Charles F., Nellie, who died in infancy; Lawrence D., who died at the age of twenty-four years; May, and Agnes, who is now the wife of John Riggs. Although Mr. Benn is not identified with any religious body he contributes to the maintenance of the Baptist Church, of which his wife is a member, and may always be relied upon to lend a helping hand in any cause that tends to further the good of the community. Nominally Mr. Benn is a Republican, but strictly speaking he is independent in the matter of casting his vote, invariably giving his ballot to the man who shows the highest principles of honor and to the one best fitted for the office in question.

MARTIN VAN CASNER. Distinguished as an early pioneer of Southern California, and as a substantial and prosperous farmer of Ramona, M. Van Casner is eminently worthy of representation in this volume. Settling in Ballena valley nearly forty years ago, he put his shoulder to the wheel, and, in common with his neighbors, who were but few in number, toiled unceasingly and uncomplainingly in his efforts to improve a homestead. Little do the people of this day and generation realize the hardships endured, the great ambition required, and the physical effort demanded to secure the homes established by the pioneers for themselves and their descendants. How well they succeeded is evident in the broad expanse of cultivated fields, the large fruit-bearing orchards, and the productive vineyards that bespeak in no uncertain tones of their courage, industry and thrift. In the upbuilding and growth of Ramona and vicinity he has ever evinced a warm interest, contributing his full share towards the establishment of beneficial enterprises. A son of Martin Casner, he was born October 1, 1842, in Travis county, Tex., where he spent his early life.

Born in Alabama, Martin Casner began his business career in that state, and for many years was influential in town and county affairs, serving several terms as sheriff. Removing from there to Texas, he bought large tracts of land, some of which is still owned by his descendants, and in addition to being extensively engaged in the cattle business operated a sawmill and a grist mill. Coming from there to California, he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land, and on the homestead which he improved spent the remainder of his life, passing away at the age of sixty-six years. He married Jane Medford, who was born in Alabama, coming from a family noted for its inventive talent, and its mechanical skill and ability. She survived him, dying at the venerable age of eighty-seven years.

One of a family of nine children, M. Van Casner was educated in the common schools and under private tutors, receiving exceptional advantages in that line. At the age of seventeen years he enlisted in the Southern army, joining Company B, Texas Rangers, commanded by General McCord, and served for four years. During three years of this time he was doing frontier duty under General Watkins, being stationed at either Bankhead or McGregor. After being mustered out, Mr. Casner bought one hundred and sixty acres of land near the three hundred and twenty-acre ranch belonging to his father, and was there employed as a tiller of the soil for about three years. Coming to San Diego county in 1868, he took his Christmas dinner in Ballena valley, and has since resided here. Taking up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, he immediately began clearing the land, and by dint of persevering toil has now a finely improved estate, which he devotes to the raising of fruit, grain and stock. His vines, which are ten years old, yield on an average of one ton per acre, of raisins, the altitude of his vineyard being twenty-four hundred feet. In his labors Mr. Casner has met with acknowledged success, obtaining an assured position among the prosperous and substantial agriculturists of this part of the county.

In 1865 Mr. Casner married Mary J. Littlepage, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of nine children, namely: Allie B., wife of O. D. Crothers, of Santa Barbara; William D., of Orcut, Santa Barbara county, who married Tillie Bergman; Effie J., wife of Harry Hill, of El Cajon; Lazarus P., of whom a brief personal sketch may be found on another page of this volume; Victor A., an engineer; Vida, wife of J. C. Quinn, of Hanford, Kings county; Amy, living at home; Grace, attending the normal school; and Lillie, also a pupil in the normal school. Politically Mr. Casner is a zealous supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and for two terms served as constable. Religiously he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

LUCIUS B. PALMER. Among the men who possess a strong faith in the future of Long Beach and who give evidence of that faith through their large business transactions and extensive investments, mention properly belongs to Lucius B. Palmer, member of the real-estate firm of Palmer & Patterson, and identified with the recent growth of this city. Mr. Palmer is a native of Iowa and a son of A. B. Palmer, whose settlement in that state dated back to the days of its territorial existence and witnessed the gradual peopling of the commonwealth with sturdy frontiersmen. For many years he made Muscatine his trading point, but later resided at Iowa City, Jefferson county, and it was in that town that the birth of Lucius B. Palmer occurred May 17, 1845. A few years later the family moved to Illinois and about 1851 settled in Monmouth, where he received his primary education in the public schools. Later he supplemented his early studies by attendance at Monmouth College for a short time.

A. M. Peters

When the Civil war began Lucius B. Palmer was a stalwart youth of sixteen years, with all the fiery enthusiasm of youth, deepened by an intense devotion to the cause of the Union. During the first months of the war he offered his services and was assigned to Company H, Sixty-second Illinois Infantry, where he served for four years and two months, although the original period of his enlistment had been for three years only. With his regiment he bore a part in a number of notable engagements, chief among which was the battle of Shiloh. At the close of the war he was honorably discharged while still less than twenty-one years of age, with a record of which he might well be proud.

The first independent venture in which Mr. Palmer engaged was the management of a mercantile establishment at Kewanee, Ill., where he remained for five years. At the expiration of that time he removed to Iowa and took up agricultural pursuits near Grinnell, where he made his home for three years. During the early part of his residence in Iowa, in 1870, he married Lucinda M. Spooner, a native of Ohio. While they were living on their Iowa farm a daughter was born to them whom they named Elsie, and who is now the wife of S. L. Wallis, of Pasadena. In 1873 the family removed to Nebraska, where Mr. Palmer took up a homestead claim in the vicinity of Hastings and later became a resident of the town, engaging in business as a hardware and furniture merchant and also superintending his large tracts of farm land. In Nebraska four children were born, Grove M., Lilah B., Forest M. and Alta H., all of whom are with their parents in Long Beach.

On coming to California in 1889 after disposing of his interests in Nebraska, Mr. Palmer made Pasadena his home for ten years and then became a citizen of Long Beach, being attracted to this city on account of it being a prohibition town and also by reason of the locating of the government breakwater. Arrived in Long Beach, he was the first to enter upon real-estate deals with office on the Ocean Front and in 1901 formed a partnership with J. W. Patterson, the two now handling city property almost exclusively. In politics he formerly affiliated with the Republican party, but the evils of the liquor traffic caused him to ally himself with the Prohibitionists. In the various places of his residence he has been an active supporter of good schools. While in Nebraska he was not only a member of the Hastings board of education, but also for six years officiated as secretary of Hastings College. In religion a Presbyterian, he contributes to his own denomination and also, with characteristic liberality, aids other creeds and churches in the furtherance of their work. Since coming to Long Beach he has been an active worker in the Independent Order of Good Templars. Other fraternities in which he holds membership are the Grand Army of the Republic, Order of Pendo, Modern Woodmen of America and Ancient Order of United Workmen.

ANSON MAXWELL PETERS. During the entire period of his residence in San Diego county Mr. Peters has made his home near Fallbrook, where in 1886 he bought the tract of one hundred and fifty-four acres that he still owns. Since it came into his possession he has erected a packing house and has planted eleven acres in orange and lemon trees. The neat appearance of the ranch bears testimony to the thrifty disposition of the owner, and those who know him state that he is a substantial farmer. More than that, he stands high as a large-hearted, liberal man, generous to those in need, interested in all local progressive movements, a contributor to worthy enterprises, a warm friend and genial companion, furnishing in his attributes the highest type of citizenship.

The Peters family is of eastern ancestry. Luard and Merinda (Cochran) Peters were natives of Vermont, and there married and remained for some years after their union. In Grand Isle county, that state, their son, Anson Maxwell, was born December 5, 1828. The family became pioneers of Illinois in 1840 and settled in De Kalb county, where they were pioneers and industrious farmers. Leaving the locality in 1851, the parents settled in Iowa and some years later they died at Farmersburg, that state. It was impossible for the son, A. M., to attend school regularly, for much of the time they lived remote from any educational institution, and even the crude log-cabin schoolhouse of frontier days was not always sufficiently near for him to attend with any regularity. Hence the knowledge he now possesses has been acquired mostly by habits of close observation and careful reading of the best periodicals and other literature. When a mere boy he hired out to work by the month and at the age of twenty years he bought his time, so that he was free to start out for himself.

Removing to Iowa in 1850 Mr. Peters took up government land in Clayton county and at once entered upon the arduous task of putting the soil into proper condition for cultivation. However, he was not long content to remain there, but, hearing much concerning the openings offered to young men by the remote west, he determined to seek a home and livelihood beyond the distant mountains and beside the sunset sea. January 5, 1854, he was a passenger on a vessel that sailed from New York City for the Isthmus of Panama, from which point he proceeded up the Pacific ocean, landing in San Francisco about February 2. Immediately afterward he proceeded to the mines at Georgetown and for about fourteen months he followed the adventurous life of a miner, without, however, meeting with any remarkable success. A brief experience convinced him that, while the climate of the west was almost ideal, the occupation of mining was not congenial to his tastes, so he returned to Clayton county, Iowa, in April, 1855, and resumed the quiet life of a farmer. For a considerable period he remained in that county, but in 1868 he removed to Madison county, Iowa, and secured a large tract of farm land. During 1882 he came to California for the second time and settled near Saticoy, in Ventura county, where he bought land and took up general farm pursuits. Four years later he disposed of his property in Ventura county and came to the extreme southern part of the state, where he has since lived in the vicinity of Fallbrook.

The marriage of Mr. Peters took place in Clayton county, Iowa, in December, 1855, and united him with Jane Smith. Ten children were born of their union, and one of these died in infancy. The following attained mature years: Ella, wife of Thomas Gabbert, of Ventura county, this state; Dora, who married William Bernett, and lives at Avery, Cal.; Herbert, living at Fallbrook; Frankie, who is the wife of Rev. Mr. Ashley, a Methodist Episcopal preacher living at Garden Grove; Luard, who resides in Garvanza; Susie, Mrs. David Brown of Ventura county; Millie, wife of Rev. Albert Embre, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at San Jacinto; Mary, Mrs. Albert Ross, who died at Oxnard, Cal., at the age of twenty-five years; and Lloyd, who remains with his parents on the home ranch. Interested in educational affairs, Mr. Peters has served with fidelity and tact as a member of the school board of his district. In fraternal relations he holds membership with the blue lodge of Masons at Fallbrook. Religion mingles with the other elements that go to perfect his character. For many years he has been an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a generous contributor to its charities and missionary movements, as indeed he is to all philanthropic measures calculated to promote the welfare of humanity.

JAMES P. WARD. Prior to the outbreak of the war with England James Ward left Ireland and sought the opportunities of the new world. Settling in New Jersey he became a prominent citizen of Leesburg, maintained a constant activity in civic affairs, and when the country appealed to its patriotic men for support in the struggle with England he enthusiastically offered his aid and assisted in equipping a company of volunteers. Eventually he became a wealthy shipbuilder and the owner of three marine railways at Leesburg, also a number of stores and other properties, including farm lands. Until shortly before his death at seventy-three years he continued actively at the head of his extensive business interests.

Among the children of the shipbuilder was a son, John D., who was born near Cape May, N. J., and before he died at forty-one years, built up the largest coal and wood business in Philadelphia, occupying four wharves and two places of business and receiving contracts to supply fuel for the largest industries of the city. In early manhood he married Margaret Sharp, who was born at Shamokin, Pa., and at the age of seventy-five years (1906) is now living in Los Angeles. The family was founded in America by her father, Patrick Sharp, who was born in Ireland, but established himself in the United States at an early age and became a prosperous clothing merchant of Philadelphia, where he died at fifty-five years of age.

During the residence of John D. and Margaret Ward in Philadelphia their son, James P., was born January 3, 1855, and there he was educated in the Broad street military school and in La-Salle College. Upon embarking in business pursuits he became a clerk to an uncle in the wood and coal business, but after a clerkship of two years he began in the same business for himself. By arduous effort he laid the foundation of a prosperous enterprise, but ill health deprived him of enjoying the fruits of his labors, for at the expiration of eighteen months he was obliged to relinquish his business interests in Philadelphia and seek a more genial climate for the benefit of his health. After having spent one year in Texas he returned to Philadelphia with health restored, and during the next fifteen months he acted as city representative for a wholesale soap company.

Coming to California in 1880 Mr. Ward settled in Los Angeles and for two and one-half years engaged with R. J. Hambrook in the manufacture of furniture by water power, but at the expiration of that period he disposed of his interest in the factory. His next investment was the purchase of sixty-five acres occupying the present site of Hollywood, Los Angeles county, and for two seasons he raised vegetables on that land, shipping to the San Francisco markets. On selling the tract he bought five hundred and fifty acres, which is now embraced in the town site of Lancaster, Los Angeles county. During the "boom" period of the middle '80s he was extensively engaged in farming, also followed the lumber business and carried on a livery, but the reaction following upon the bursting of the boom caused him to close out many of his interests at a loss. The next enterprise which engaged his attention was the opening of an installment business in Los Angeles and also in Tucson, Ariz. After leaving Tucson he managed the United States hotel of Los Angeles for a year and later acquired mining interests in Yuma county, Ariz., and San Bernardino county, Cal. Since 1898 he has made his home at Palms and now is engaged in the real-estate business, for which his long experience admirably qualifies him. He was the first to sell lots in Lancaster on the installment plan and also has sold lots in other parts of the county.

The marriage of Mr. Ward in 1883 united him with Miss Lizzie Winshank, daughter of Andrew Winshank, of Los Angeles county. They are the parents of eight children, namely: Margareta, Mary, John D., James, Andrew, Frank, Elizabeth and Joseph, all of whom yet remain at home. The family are identified with the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Ward is connected with the Fraternal Aid and the Order of Foresters, and politically has always stood steadfastly by the principles of the Democratic party. Since coming to Palms he has held the position of school trustee for two years, in which office he not only showed his interest in educational affairs as a citizen, but also proved himself well adapted for the work, aiding materially in the advancement of the schools and in the raising of the standard of scholastic training.

BURT G. HURLBURT. Noteworthy among the esteemed and influential citizens of Los Angeles county is B. G. Hurlburt, one of the leading attorneys of Santa Monica, and a man of wealth and prominence. He has lived in four of the most prosperous states of the Union, and in the different localities in which he has made his home is well known, having been actively identified with the foremost industries of each. A son of Henry Hurlburt, he was born, November 17, 1853, in Wyoming county, N. Y., the descendant of an old and honored New England family. His grandfather, Barzilla Hurlburt, a native of Connecticut, was a farmer by occupation, and became one of the first settlers of western New York, living on the homestead that he reclaimed from the wilderness until his death at the remarkable age of ninety-nine years.

The eighth child in a family of nine children, Henry Hurlburt was born and reared in New York, and there spent the seventy-six years of his earthly life, being successfully employed as a tiller of the soil. He married Arvilla Austin, who died on the home farm, at the age of sixty-seven years. They reared eight children, of whom B. G. was the seventh child.

Having completed his early education by taking a commercial course of study at Pike Seminary, B. G. Hurlburt went to Iowa, where he taught school five terms, first in Adair, and then in Guthrie Center. In 1872 he began the study of telegraphy at Anita, Iowa, and in 1876 was appointed operater at Stuart, where he remained two years, becoming well known throughout Guthrie county while in that capacity. Obtaining in the meantime some political influence, he then accepted the office of deputy county treasurer, which he held four years. Embarking then in mercantile pursuits, with a partner he bought out a hardware establishment, which he managed successfully for several years. In 1886 he settled in Wallace county, Kans., which was then but sparsely populated, and on April 13 he opened the first grocery store established at Sharon Springs, a newly-organized town. At that time there were thirty young men in business there, but no woman appeared in the place for six weeks after his arrival, the first ones coming in July.

In the upbuilding of the new town Mr. Hurlburt took a prominent part, encouraging, aiding and promoting all enterprises conducive to the growth and prosperity of the place, which subsequently became the county seat. He became one of the leading attorneys of Wallace county, for ten years serving as county attorney. He also filled other offices of importance, being a member of the school board, and for eight years being justice of the peace. Possessing excellent business ability and good financial judgment, he acquired considerable property, becoming owner of a ranch containing forty-six hundred and twenty acres adjoining Sharon Springs, which he helped name, and of another valuable ranch lying about ten miles south of the town. He looked carefully after his agricultural affairs, and as a stock raiser and dealer met with more than ordinary success. Resigning his various offices in July, 1903, he settled in Santa Monica, Cal., and has since won an enviable reputation as a lawyer of ability, and has built up a fine clientage, his office being on Pier avenue, Ocean Park.

Mr. Hurlburt has been three times married. In Grinnell, Iowa, he married Kate L. Dosh, daughter of a prominent citizen of Davenport. She died in 1886, leaving three children, namely: Vida, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Mrs. Mildred Leonhardt; and Addie, wife of Rev. Frederick R. Raby, of Kansas. Subsequently Mr. Hurlburt married Mrs. Ella Cook, of Kansas, who died in California, leaving three children, Abigail, Edith and Emmett. After the death of his second wife Mr. Hurlburt married Mrs. Rebecca Boud Kempton, of Ocean Park, a native of Philadelphia, Pa. Politically Mr. Hurlburt is a Republican; fraternally he is an Odd Fellow; and religiously he is a member, a trustee and treasurer of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

GEORGE E. BENNETT. A man who has seen much of the world and has been very active in local public life wherever he has lived is George E. Bennett, who has been a resident of Elsinore since 1887. He is of English descent, and the first member of the family to come to America was his grandfather, James S., who was a wholesale and retail grocer in Bath, Me., owned a coasting vessel at that port, and served this country in the second war with Great Britain in 1812. His father, James H., was born at Bath, and was a sailor and captain of a coasting vessel until during the '60's, when he removed to West Branch, Iowa, remaining in that place until 1886, and then came to California, where he died at the age of eighty years. Mr. Bennett's mother, who was Catherine Roach before her marriage, was of Scotch descent, born in Vermont, and removed with her parents to Bath, Me., where her father was engaged in the dry goods business. He also served in the war of 1812. The mother is still living and makes her home with her son in Elsinore, and although she is eighty-six years old is very active and enjoys good health. She was the mother of eight children, George E. being the oldest son. One son, James, was a member of Company B, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and died in Iowa in 1868.

The birth of George E. Bennett occurred July 20, 1842, in Bath, Me., in which town he was reared and received his education in the public schools. While yet a youth he went on a trip with his uncle, Captain Winthrop Bennett, to Havre, France, and also to the West Indies, shipping as cabin boy. Upon his return to Maine he went to Brunswick and learned the shoemakers' trade, continuing at that employment until 1861, when, in April of that year, he volunteered for a three months' term in Company D, Fifth Maine Volunteer Infantry. He saw active service from the first and was engaged in the first battle of Bull Run before the expiration of his term in September, when he was mustered out. His was too patriotic a nature to remain impassive while his country was calling for help, however, and almost immediately he re-enlisted, this time becoming a soldier in Company B, of the Ninth Infantry, in his native state. Among the other engagements which found his regiment in the firing line was the battle of Port Royal and at Fernandina, Fla., and they also took part in the siege of Fort Wagner. Mr. Bennett was then transferred from the Ninth regiment to the Tenth Army Corps and sent to the front at Petersburg, where he was detailed as dispatch carrier. While performing duties in this capacity he and four companions were captured by rebels on Amelia island and started on their way to the Confederate camp by boat. Mr. Bennett, who was a most unwilling prisoner, watched his chance and suddenly jumped at one of the captors, tipped the boat over, precipitating the party into the water and he and his comrades made good their escape. The rebels, who were loaded heavily with weapons and ammunition, were unable to swim ashore and it was afterwards learned that they were drowned. Later, while carrying dispatches, Mr. Bennett received a saber wound on the left knee, which completely disabled him. He was sent to the hospital and remained there until able to move about on crutches, when he returned to camp until he received an honorable discharge in September, 1863. He has many interesting stories to tell concerning his war experiences, for he had many narrow escapes during the years of his service.

For two years following his return home Mr. Bennett was obliged to use crutches and during that time he plied his trade in Brunswick, Me. In 1865 he removed to West Branch, Iowa, and engaged in farming for a few years, but subsequently lived in Jasper and Shelby counties and was variously employed in agricultural pursuits and at the shoemaker's trade. In 1873, John Long, the sheriff of Shelby county, appointed him deputy sheriff and a little latter he was elected constable, serving in that office for two years. Long's successor also re-appointed him as deputy and when the regularly elected sheriff died during his term of office Mr. Bennett was appointed to fill the vacancy. He performed his official duties with such ability and satisfaction that the voters elected him to the office after the expiration of his appointed term and he continued as sheriff of that county until 1887, when he came to California in search of a more healthful location. After two months spent in Elsinore he felt so much better that he decided to remain permanently, and spent the years until 1890 in recuperating his strength. He then established a second-hand store, which he conducted for two years, giving it up at the end of this time to devote his whole time to the conduct of a shoe and harness business, which he had been engaged in simultaneously with the second-hand business.

P. C. Petersen

In Elsinore also Mr. Bennett has been active in official life. In 1904 he was appointed by the board of supervisors as justice of the peace and city recorder, positions to which he was re-elected in 1906, and has been a city trustee for four years, half of which time he acted as president of the board. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and is an ex-member of the county central committee. He has a nice residence in Elsinore, presided over by his wife, who was formerly Miss Elsadia Coombs, a native of Brunswick, Me. Their marriage occurred in Maine, and they became the parents of four children: Edward, who was a railway conductor, was accidentally killed at Atlantic, Iowa; Lewis H. is a fruit grower in Highgrove; Fred E. Conducts a shoe and bicycle store at Santa Ana, and Frank H. follows the painters' trade in Elsinore. Mr. Bennett is a member of T. B. Stevens Post No. 103, G. A. R., at Elsinore, being past commander of the post. Both he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he having served as a member of the official board at one time.

PETER CARL PETERSEN. The substantial and well-to-do citizens of Wilmington have no better representative than Peter C. Petersen, a capable and progressive hardware merchant, who has accumulated a goodly share of this world's goods. Enterprising and far-sighted, he has made judicious investments, and is the owner of much valuable residence property, from the rental of which he receives a fine annual income. A native of Denmark, he was born in Copenhagen in 1836, a son of Terkl Petersen. His parents spent their entire lives in Denmark, both dying at a comparatively early age.

Completing his studies in the city schools of Copenhagen, Peter C. Petersen, who was left an orphan when a small lad, began working for himself as a farm hand, continuing thus employed a number of years. Immigrating to the United States in 1867, he stopped for a few months in Philadelphia, and then proceeded to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he enlisted in the Fifth United States Cavalry, in which he served five years, when, at Camp Grant, Ariz., he was honorably discharged. Coming to California in 1872, he located in Wilmington, and for six years thereafter was in the employ of Banning Brothers and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Investing his money then in land, he became the owner of several ranches, which he improved, making them among the most valuable farming estates to be found in this part of the state. He also bought land in Wilmington, and built several modern residences, which he rents, and in the spring of 1905 he erected, on Canal street, the first modernly constructed two-story building in the place. For the upbuilding and improving of the place, Mr. Petersen has done much, being an important factor in aiding the growth and material prosperity of Wilmington, and takes great interest in beautifying his own property, and adding to the attractiveness of the town thereby.

In 1870, at Fort McPherson, Neb., Mr. Petersen married Mary J. Short, who died in Wilmington, Cal., March 28, 1903. Politically he is a loyal supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and religiously he is a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN LASSWELL. A successful ranchman, B. F. Lasswell is located three-quarters of a mile west of Compton, Los Angeles county, where on his twenty acre ranch he is extensively engaged in the raising of alfalfa and the prosecution of his dairy interests. He is a native of the middle west, his birth having occurred in the southern part of Illinois, February 7, 1844, he being a son of the late Isaac Lasswell, a native of Virginia, who removed to the Prairie state and engaged in farming for a livelihood. The father made his home in Illinois for many years, engaging prominently in public affairs, and as a Democrat was elected to the office of sheriff, where he ably discharged the duties incumbent upon him. After the death of his wife, formerly Anna Norton, also a native of Virginia, he came to California and followed ranching pursuits in Lincoln, Placer county, until his death. He was a Mason, and in religion belonged to the Baptist Church.

B. F. Lasswell remained a member of the parental family until attaining his majority, receiving his education through an attendance of the common school in the vicinity of his home, and also engaging with his father in general farming in Hamilton county. He finally engaged independently in the work, renting land in his native state until 1868, in which year he was married and came to California. He first located in Marysville, Yuba county, where he remained for a short time, when he became a rancher in Ventura county and followed these pursuits for nine or ten years; coming to Compton at the close of that period he purchased his present property, consisting of thirty-two acres, holding the same in his possession until about one year ago, when he disposed of twelve acres. The balance of the property is devoted to the raising of alfalfa and dairy purposes. He is an esteemed citizen of this community, where he takes a helpful interest in public affairs.

Mrs. Lasswell was formerly Anna Flynn, a native of Ireland, whose parents brought her to America during her childhood. They located in the east and spent the balance of their lives in Boston, Mass. About six years ago Mrs. Lasswell suffered a paralytic stroke, which has seriously affected her health. Mr. and Mrs. Lasswell belong to the Catholic Church and politically Mr. Lasswell is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

P. S. VENABLE. The Venable family is of old Virginia stock which was originally of English descent a representative of the name later going with Daniel Boone to Kentucky, where Judge J. W., the father of P. S. Venable, was born in 1831. At the age of sixteen years he served for three months in the Mexican war and when eighteen came around by the way of Cape Horn to California. When the ship on which he took passage reached Lower California he, with three companions, abandoned it and made the rest of the journey to San Francisco by foot, reaching their destination in the year 1849. He went to Placer county and worked in the mines for several years, after which he carried on ranching and stock-raising for a long period. At one time he owned the stock ranch where Oakland is now located, and he was the first man to pilot a boat up the Sacramento river to Red Bluff. He had many interesting experiences during those early years, for at that time the country was full of Indians who were primitive enough to wear cowhides on their feet, having no moccasins. In 1869 he removed to Los Angeles and purchased a ranch near Downey, engaging in horticultural pursuits, and he still lives on this place at the advanced age of seventy-four years. In 1852 he was married to Angeline Garrett, who died in 1860, leaving him with one daughter, Elizabeth Louise, who became the wife of Joseph Albright, now of Redondo. His second wife was Annie Elizabeth Tate, of Contra Costa county, and to them the following children were born: Mrs. Kennedy of Wilmington; P. S., of Redondo; John, a farmer near Redondo; J. W., Jr., also a farmer near Redondo; Mrs. Grider, living near Hollywood; Mollie; James; Thomas; Mrs. Hall of Redondo; Mrs. Venable of Los Angeles; George; and Mrs. Howards of Long Beach. The father was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was affiliated with the Masons fraternally, having served as master of the Downey lodge for ten years. He was very active in politics and was elected by the Democratic party, which he supported, to numerous official positions, among them being a member of the state assembly, four years as assessor and eight years as deputy assessor of Los Angeles county, and four years as supervisor. While in Contra Costa county he held the offices of justice of the peace and associate justice.

It was on January 19, 1862, that P. S. Venable was born at Oakland, Cal. When seven years of age his father brought him to Los Angeles county and the ranch upon which they settled was then in the midst of a wild waste. He was educated in the public schools and at Los Neitos Military Institute, and when his schooling was completed remained at home until twenty-two years old. In 1884 he became foreman of a ranch at Compton and in 1888 he secured the contract for hauling the stone to be used in the construction of the Los Angeles court house. This kept him busy for three years, during which time he used five and six teams and hauled stones weighing twenty-four thousand pounds. In 1890 he located in Redondo and engaged in farming on the Norbone ranch of two thousand acres and the Hellman ranch of one thousand, and has operated these places ever since. Everything is conducted on a very large scale and the most modern machinery is in use in the cultivation and harvesting of the crops, which consist principally of wheat and barley. Twenty-five men are required to work this large acreage.

One year ago Mr. Venable built a residence in Redondo on Catalina and Diamond streets. In addition to the cement work which he has executed in Redondo he has paved Pacific, Benito Guadaloupe and Ocean View avenues, Diamond, Emerald, Commercial, Gertrude, Francisco and Beryl streets. In Hermosa he graded Hermosa and Santa Fe avenues, and has completed much satisfactory work in other places. He is also heavily interested in various business enterprises in other lines, having been one of the party that built the mill and warehouses in Redondo and is on the board of directors of both the Farmers' and Merchants' National Bank and the People's Saving Bank of this city.

The remarkable development of this section of the state can be realized somewhat when it is known that Mr. Venable can himself remember the first engine ever run in the county and remembers the driving of the golden spike which completed the railroad connecting Los Angeles with San Francisco, when the tunnel this side of San Fernando was cut through; also remembers when the railroad was built from Los Angeles to Wilmington, where the government barracks were located in the days when passengers were carried in large stage coaches, and to know that he has been so largely instrumental in the building up of the community may well be a source of pride and satisfaction to him. He is an adherent of the Democratic party and has been elected a trustee of the grammar school, also a member of the high school board of which he is clerk. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving as a trustee and as a member of the building committee. Fraternally he affiliates with the Independent Order of Foresters, the Royal Arcanum, and was made a Mason in the Wilmington Lodge No. 198, F. & A. M., becoming charter member of the Redondo Lodge No. 328, of which he served as master for two years. He is past patron of the Order of Eastern Star and his wife is past matron of the same fraternity. His marriage to Miss Susie Malott, a native of Platte county, the daughter of William Malott, an early settler in California, occurred at Compton and they have become the parents of five children, Hazel, Max, Carrie, Helen and Mabel.

H. H. ZILLGITT. Noteworthy among the young, wide-awake business men of Los Angeles county is H. H. Zillgitt, of Inglewood, one of the active members of the Inglewood Mercantile Company. Since becoming a resident of this place he has identified himself thoroughly with the best interests of his adopted city, and, by his integrity and sterling character, has won the esteem of his fellowmen and the confidence of the community. A native of Fairmount, Richland county, N. Dak., he was born December 11, 1882, a son of the late Frederick T. Zillgitt.

Born and reared in Germany, Frederick A. Zillgitt immigrated to this country in early manhood, settling first at Lake City, Minn., and then at Fairmount, N. Dak., where he bought land and improved a farm. Removing from there to Vernonia, Ore., in 1889, he was for a number of years successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits in that city. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1903, he resided in Inglewood until his death, in February, 1904. He married Mary A. Seigne, who was born in Wisconsin, of French ancestry, and is now living in Inglewood. Six children, five sons and one daughter, blessed their union, and all are living, H. H., the special subject of this sketch, being the youngest child.

Brought up in Richland county, N. Dak., H. H. Zillgitt attended first the public school of Fairmount, after which he took a full commercial course at the Red River Valley University, in Wahpeton. In 1900 he came to California, and for four years was employed as a clerk in the store of his brother, Frank A. Zillgitt, one of the leading merchants of Inglewood. In December, 1904, in company with Lyman O. Calkins, of whom a brief sketch may be found elsewhere, he organized the Inglewood Mercantile Company, and has since carried on a thriving business, having built up a lucrative trade.

Politically Mr. Zillgitt is a steadfast Republican, and since 1900 has served as deputy postmaster. He takes great interest in the advancement of the public welfare, and is one of the directors of the Citizens' Home Water Company. He is a member and one of the directors of the Inglewood Commercial Club, and is a member and the clerk of the Woodmen of the World.

JOHN FRANKLIN TEDFORD. A self-made man who has gained, while still young, the degree of success that has crowned the efforts of John Franklin Tedford is always worthy of the admiration and esteem of his fellow citizens. His father died when he was but eight years of age and it became necessary for him to early assume the responsibility of his own support, and he now leases six hundred acres of fertile hay land in the Perris valley in Riverside county. He is the son of Thomas J. and Anna Elizabeth (Fickas) Tedford, natives of Texas and Missouri, respectively. The family had many distressing experiences with the Indians in the early days of their residence on the frontier. At one time the Indians captured two of the father's brothers and while one of them was saved the other was taken away and has never been heard from since. In 1849 the elder Tedford crossed the plains with ox teams and located in California at Bullwell Point and engaged in mining in San Antonio canon. Later he took up ranching in the Newport district and remained there until his death in 1882. The mother is still living in Sawtelle. Her father was an old settler of this state, who arrived in the early '50s, and in 1867 located on a ranch in Ventura county, where he remained until 1887, when he went to Santa Ana then to the Poway valley in San Diego county, living there until his death in 1905.

The birth of John F. Tedford occurred in January, 1874, in Orange county, Cal., and since the age of fourteen he has supported himself. He commenced by engaging himself to the ranchmen by the month at various locations, including Santa Ana, Santa Fe Springs, Lagona, Florence and in the San Fernando valley, and after a time went to Redondo and became a longshoreman and stevedore. Failing health compelled him to change his occupation, however, and he then went to Chino and worked in the sugar factory there for about three years. Afterwards he went to San Bernardino and resided at that place until 1905, when he came to Perris valley, and located the ranch which he now operates, and has since made it his home. He was married at San Jacinto, November 1, 1900, to Miss Emma Easton, a daughter of George Easton, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. They became the parents of one child, Nelva Ione. Mr. Tedford is a member of the Redlands Lodge No. 319, A. O. U. W., and also belongs to the Redlands Parlor, N. S. G. W. In national politics he advocates the principles of the Democratic party, but in local affairs reserves the right to vote for the man whom he believes will most efficiently perform the duties of his office. He is a man with many friends and exerts an elevating influence upon all with whom he comes in contact.

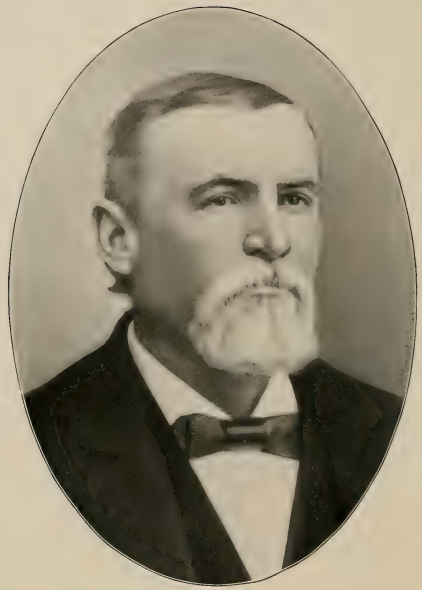
JOHN WILLIAM BLACK. Occupying an assured position among the energetic, enterprising and valued residents of Ocean Park is J. W. Black, who, in partnership with his brother, J. W. C. Black, is carrying on an extensive and prosperous business, being identified with the industrial and mercantile interests of this part of the county. A native of Iowa, he was born in Indianola, Warren county, being one of the six children of William and Mary (Culbertson) Black, both of whom were born and brought up in Illinois, near Monmouth. Grandfather Black was a pioneer of Illinois, settling there when young, and becoming a farmer of prominence. William Black was an early settler of Warren county, Iowa, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1901, when he came with his family to Los Angeles county, locating in Santa Monica, where he is living retired.



After his graduation from the high school in Indianola, Iowa, J. W. Black learned the baker's trade in that city, and subsequently followed it there and in neighboring places, meeting with success. He traveled to some extent while thus employed, coming to the Pacific coast, and in December, 1903, located in Ocean Park, and here, in partnership with his brother, who attends the outside interests, he is conducting a well-stocked store, devoting his entire attention to his business. Politically Mr. Black is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, but he is not connected with any fraternal, benevolent or social organization.

ADAM WASEM. To an unusual degree success has crowned the intelligent and well-directed efforts of Mr. Wasem, who, while still retaining large and valuable landed interests in Iowa, has also more recently acquired property in Long Beach, where he erected and now owns a modern residence of nine rooms, situated on the corner of Wasem avenue and Railroad streets, two blocks from the ocean, and one and one-half blocks east of Alamitos Park, on the line of the Pacific electric railroad. At the time of erecting this comfortable dwelling the neighborhood was sparsely settled, but since then a number of elegant residences have been erected in this portion of the city and its popularity is growing with a rapidity startling even to its warmest friends.

The far-famed city of Bingen-on-the-Rhine is the native place of Adam Wasem, and May 10, 1838, the date of his birth. His parents, Adam and Anna Marie (Hirshman) Wasem, came to the United States in 1856, and settled in Wright county, Iowa, where they took up farm pursuits. There the mother died in 1861, at forty-eight years of age, and was survived until 1882 by the father, who passed away at eighty-two years. Their son, Adam, Jr., received an excellent education in the gymnasiums of his native land. After accompanying his parents to the United States he took up agricultural pursuits, for which he early displayed an especial aptitude. From the date of his settlement in the United States he was always loyal to his adopted country and a friend to its progressive enterprises. When the Civil war began he was a stanch supporter of the Union cause, and August 6, 1862, was accepted as a member of Company B, First Missouri Light Artillery, with which he marched to the south and bore a part in various campaigns. The most important engagements in which he participated were those at Vicksburg and Fort Blakeley. During the entire period of his service he was wounded twice, once in the face and again in the hip, but fortunately neither wound proved to be of a serious nature. At the expiration of his term of enlistment, in September, 1865, he was honorably discharged and thereupon returned to his Iowa farm.

During the long period of his residence in Webster county, Iowa, Mr. Wasem enjoyed a steadily growing success. From time to time he added to his possessions until he acquired the title to six hundred acres of land, as fine as the state of Iowa contains, and this he still owns. Much of his success was due to the wise prosecution of the stock business, his greatest profits coming from the breeding of black polled Angus cattle. When finally he had accumulated large holdings and was in a position to seek recreation and rest, he came to California, arriving at Long Beach, February 10, 1904, and since then he has invested about $27,000 in property at this place. Included in his purchases were twenty-six acres all of which, excepting nine and one-half acres, he subdivided into town lots, and he also owned the Alamitos Park tract of five acres. He owns the Mira Mar tract of ten acres, Palm Island of nine and one-half acres, besides a number of lots.

The marriage of Mr. Wasem was solemnized at Fort Dodge, Iowa, October 6, 1866, and united him with Miss Henrietta Wise, a native of Germany. Fourteen children were born of their union, namely: Frederick, who died at twelve years of age; William, Henrietta, Charles, John, Adam, Otto, Ella, Bertha, Carrie, Henry, Walter, Mary and Lena. Ella, Bertha and Carrie are college graduates and formerly teachers in Iowa. All of the sons are stockmen and are attaining a gratifying degree of success in the occupation which their father followed in former years. To accommodate their large herds they have four thousand acres of grazing land in Nebraska, besides taking charge of the six hundred acres owned by their father in Iowa.

Madison G. Putnam

While living in Iowa Mr. Wasem was an active worker in Fort Donelson Post No. 236, G. A. R., at Fort Dodge, and also was an interested worker in the German Reformd Church, and in politics affiliated with the Republican party. For thirteen years he held the office of township trustee and during the greater part of his residence in Iowa he officiated as a member of the school board, giving considerable time and thought to the development of the rural schools of his district. Both in the state, where for years he was an extensive stockman, and in the more recent place of his residence, he has proved himself a public-spirited and progressive man, in sympathy with all forward movements and a contributor to helpful projects.

MADISON D. PUTMAN. Fair View fruit farm lies in Spencer valley near the village of Wynola and comprises one hundred and sixty acres, whose care and cultivation occupy the attention of the owner, Mr. Putman, giving in return a satisfactory and increasing moneyed recompense for his assiduous labors. When he came to this valley in 1869 he secured a large tract of land from the government and began to make improvements on the raw land. Since then he has erected a neat house and necessary outbuildings, and has made other improvements on his tract of one hundred and sixty acres, besides which he has planted twenty acres in apples of the choicest varieties, including the White Winter, Pomerain, Eureka, Belleflower, Ben Davis, Smith, Cider, Royal, Jeanette, Delaware Reds, etc. The thrifty appearance of the orchard proves him to be a man of tireless industry and wise judgment, while his pioneer work in fruit-culture in this valley shows that he possesses a genuine progressive spirit.

For a number of years Madison and Olivia (Davidson) Putman, natives respectively of Tennessee and Pennsylvania, made their home in Alabama, where their son, Madison D., was born November 15, 1841. From that state the family removed to Texas about 1848 and settled in Williamson county, later removing to Llano county, where the father died in 1875, at the age of sixty-three years. The mother survived him for a considerable period and attained the age of eighty-one years. During boyhood Madison D. Putman had fewer opportunities to attend school than fall to the lot of the average youth, for the family were poor and it was necessary for him to aid them in earning a livelihood. Yet, in spite of lack of advantages, he has gained a broad fund of information, for he possesses the faculty of close observation and has always been fond of reading. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in McCord's Regiment and served on the frontier, remaining in the army until the close of the struggle in 1865. While herding some horses his horse fell on him and the accident resulted in the breaking of his leg. Through all of his army service as well as in private life he was known as a man of fearless courage, and there are still living those who tell of his valor in killing the noted Comanche Indian, Big Foot, on the Llano river.

Coming to California in 1868, the following year Mr. Putman secured his present farm from the government and on this place he and his wife have since improved a comfortable homestead. Mrs. Putman was born and reared in Texas and in that state in 1866 became his wife, after which they remained in the old home neighborhood for two years and then removed to the Pacific coast. They are the parents of five children, namely: John E., of Los Angeles; Callie C., wife of Theodore Yerrick; James R., of San Diego county; David R., living in New Mexico; and Harvey D., who remains at home and aids in the care of the property. The family attend the Baptist Church, of which Mrs. Putman was an earnest member and a liberal contributor to its charities. She died February 18, 1906, aged sixty-one years. For a number of years Mr. Putman filled the office of school trustee, in which capacity he was helpful to the educational interests of the district. With that exception he has refused official positions and has taken no part whatever in politics aside from the voting of the Democratic ticket at local and general elections.

CHARLES E. CHAMBERS. One of the most energetic and enterprising business men of San Jacinto is Charles E. Chambers, who in company with H. S. Roach, is owner of the San Jacinto electric light plant, and the sole proprietor of the lumber yard, warehouse and feed mill in that city. He was born May 24, 1868, in Polk county, Iowa, the son of James S. and Isabelle (Fay) Chambers, the father being a native of Scotland, who came to this country in 1838, and located in New York; the mother claiming Ohio as the place of her nativity. The elder Chambers, who was a coremaker by trade, removed to Illinois when that country was new, and located at Freeport, in 1861 enlisting for service in the Civil war in Company G, Forty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, later becoming a member of the Eighth Regiment of Illinois Cavalry. In the battle of Gettysburg he was wounded in the leg and was discharged on account of disability. At the close of the war he returned to Illinois and was there married, after which he removed to Iowa, and later came to California, arriving in Los Angeles in 1884. He remained in that city for a short time only, going to San Jacinto and taking up a homestead in that valley. He improved the place and added to the acreage from time to time and the ranch is now a large and valuable property. Mr. Chambers died February 9, 1903, at the age of sixty-nine years, and his wife, who is now sixty years old, is still living on the old homestead.

It was in the public schools of Iowa and Los Angeles that Charles E. Chambers received his education, and when his studies were completed he learned engineering, securing a position with the Santa Fe Railroad, which he held for two years. Later he learned the machinist's trade with the Baker Iron Works of Los Angeles, after which he came to San Jacinto in 1898 and established the electric light plant, buying a lot, on which to erect a building for the installation of their own machinery, and from which plant the company now furnishes to the people of that section electricity for both light and power purposes, the plant being modern in every way, equipped with a one hundred and sixty horse power Corliss engine.

In May, 1897, Mr. Chambers was united in marriage with Nora Vines, of Phoenix, Ariz., and they have become the parents of two children, Shirley and Geraldine. He is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and is now filling the office of deputy city marshal of San Jacinto. In all matters of public interest to the community Mr. Chambers takes a leading part and he is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

GAUDENZIO GARBANI. One of the substantial ranchmen, who has many friends, is Gaudenzio Garbani, who has a large ranch near Winchester, in Riverside county. He was born July 2, 1849, in Gresso, Switzerland, the son of Giatomo and Rosa Garbani, both of whom lived their entire lives and died in Switzerland. Mr. Garbani received a good education in his native country and when the time came for him to choose an occupation he adopted that of agriculturist and engaged in farming in his own country until 1874, when he immigrated to America. Coming to California in that year he located first in Sonoma county, which section was then attracting many men of his nationality. He worked on a ranch there for a short time and the following year decided that Southern California offered greater advantages, and came to Los Angeles. After remaining here a few months he settled in Temecula, living there for the succeeding five years. In 1880 he took up a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres, and later bought a five hundred and sixty-acre tract where he now lives. The land was entirely unimproved when he came into possession and the house, barn granaries, etc., which are now on the place were built by Mr. Garbani. He has also brought the soil into a high state of cultivation and raises very fine grain crops. He has all necessary modern machinery for use in planting, cultivating and harvesting, for the latter purpose using a thirty-two horse power combined harvester.

The marriage of Mr. Garbani occurred in Switzerland in 1873, uniting him with Mary Ann Speziali, a native of that country, and they are now the parents of four children, Rose, Lena, Elizabeth and Dolores. They are devout members of the Catholic Church, and their influence upon the community in which they live is an elevating one.

BARTLEY F. PITTS. For many years Bartley F. Pitts has been a resident of Hueneme, where he fills the position of engineer and assistant superintendent of the wharf. He is a native of California, his birth having occurred in Eldorado county, April 15, 1857. His father, William O. Pitts, was born in Missouri and crossed the plains about 1850, arriving in Eldorado county, where for a time he engaged in mining. From there he went to Mendocino county, where he farmed and raised stock until 1875, when he removed to Hueneme and conducted a livery business for the following twelve years. He met with good financial success which now enables him to live retired from active work, his present age being seventy-two years. The mother of Mr. Pitts was Isabel Burris before her marriage. She came from her native home in Keithsburg, Ill., with her father, Shered Burris, who settled as a farmer in Mendocino county, Cal., where he died. The mother of Bartley F. Pitts is still living.

There were nine children in the parental family Bartley F., being the oldest. He received his education in the public schools of Mendocino county and when his father brought the family to Hueneme and located on a ranch he remained with him until he had reached the age of twenty-two years. He then began an independent business career, working on ranches for a time, and in 1884 entered the employ of the Hueneme Wharf Company as stationary engineer, being later assigned to the position of assistant superintendent in addition to that of engineer. Mr. Pitts has succeeded in accumulating considerable property and his holdings include a twenty-two acre ranch near Hueneme, which is planted to beets and on which he has a nice residence; also a six acre tract lying near the town.

Mr. Pitts was married in his home town to Miss Ella C. Bacon, a native of Marysville, Cal., and a daughter of Charles W. Bacon, a pioneer miner of this state. Politically he affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally holds membership in the Hueneme Camp No. 9591, M. W. A., of which he is a past V. C. He was also a member of the Hueneme Parlor, N. S. G. W., until its removal to Ventura. Mr. Pitts is a highly respected man who has many warm friends in the county where he has so long resided.

FRANK WARNER PHELPS. Numbered among the active and capable busines men of Inglewood is Frank Warner Phelps, who is rendering excellent service as superintendent and secretary of the Inglewood Domestic Water Company. Well educated and progressive, he takes a genuine interest in local matters, using his influence to advance the welfare of the general public, and as a man and a citizen has the respect and esteem of the community in which he resides. A son of I. W. Phelps, he was born November 26, 1877, at Ellsworth, Kans.

Born in New York state, I. W. Phelps spent his early life in that part of the country, living there until 1859, when he made an overland trip to Colorado, where he engaged for awhile in mining. As soon as news of the breaking out of the Civil war reached him he started for the nearest fort in order to offer his services to his country. Enlisting in a Kansas regiment he served eighteen months in an independent company of scouts, under command of Bill Cody, after which he was commissary sergeant of his regiment until the close of the war. Subsequently settling in Ellsworth, Kans., he opened a store of general merchandise, and there built up a large business, having an extensive trade with the incoming trailers. A man of good financial ability he was one of the founders of the Ellsworth Bank, and quite prominent in public affairs. Coming to California in 1885 he established a large real estate business in Los Angeles, and having purchased much West Lake property, he improved it, and is now living retired from active pursuits. He is an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is a Knight of Pythias. He married Rose M. Sternberg, who was born in New York, a daughter of the late Rev. Levi Sternberg, a pioneer Lutheran minister of Ellsworth, Kans., and a sister of Dr. George Sternberg, a retired surgeon-general of the United States army. Of the two sons and two daughters born of their union, Frank Warner, the special subject of this sketch, is the second child in order of birth.

But a young lad when he came with his parents to California, Frank Warner Phelps was educated in the public schools of Los Angeles, receiving his diploma from the high school in 1896. He subsequently entered the University of California, at Berkeley, from which he was graduated with the degree of B. S. in 1900. Engaging then in the oil busines in Los Angeles, he was secretary of the Lincoln Crude Oil Company for a year, afterwards as manager of the Phelps & Beveridge Oil Company, buying lands, putting down wells in different places, and overseeing the pumping, remaining as manager of the firm until the closing of the works in 1904, the property not being sold until 1905. Coming to Inglewood in 1903, Mr. Phelps was for a year superintendent of the Inglewood Water Company and its property, but since that time has been superintendent of the Inglewood Domestic Water Company, of which he is also secretary, filling both positions most ably and satisfactorily. February 1, 1906, he was made president of the Inglewood Realty Company, engaged in the general real estate and brokerage business.

July 1, 1903, in Los Angeles, Mr. Phelps married Mabel Morton, who was born in San Francisco, Cal., a daughter of William Morton, now assistant city electrician at Los Angeles. She is a woman of culture and a graduate of the Los Angeles normal school. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps have one child, Morton Warner Phelps. Politically Mr. Phelps is a stanch Republican, invariably casting his votes for his party's candidates. He belongs to the Inglewood Commercial Club and is a member of the Chi Psi fraternity.

JAMES M. SHEPARD. Prominent among the foremost business men of Los Angeles county is J. M. Shepard, who is actively associated with two of the leading organizations of Compton, being vice-president of the First National Bank of Compton, and of the mercantile firm incorporated under the name of the Ambrose Shepard Company. A man of excellent executive and financial ability, he takes great interest in the general welfare of town and county, and in developing and advancing the industrial prosperity of central California is doing his full share. He was born in September, 1837, in Mason county, Kentucky, which was also the birthplace of his father, George Shepard, Jr. His paternal grandfather, George Shepard, Sr., a native of Virginia, was an officer of the Revolutionary army, serving as sergeant of his company, and while at the fort in Lexington, Va., was married to a Miss McDermott.

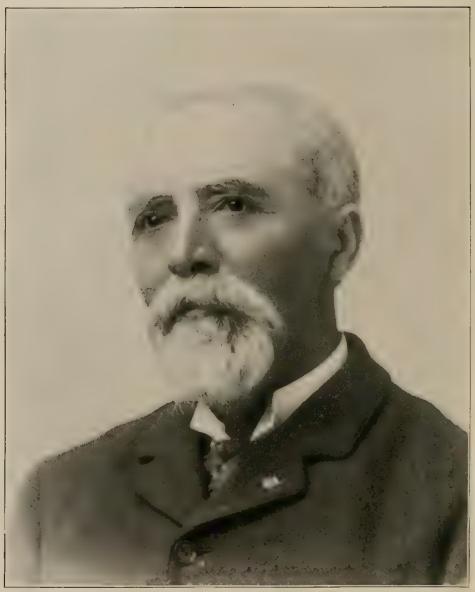
Born, reared and married in Kentucky, George Shepard, Jr., remained in his native state until the spring of 1856, being employed in agricultural pursuits. Moving then to Missouri, he took up land, but before he had made any improvements on it he died, his death occurring August 26, 1856. His wife, whose maiden name was Malida Davis, died a few months earlier, in November, 1855, in Kentucky.



Having obtained his rudimentary knowledge of books in the common schools of his native state, James M. Shepard completed his early education in Manchester, Ohio. In 1856 he went to Missouri, where he entered upon a professional career, teaching school there until 1861. In 1862 he located in Jacksonville, Ill., and for several years was a resident of that city, being engaged in the general merchandise business, and also being interested to some extent in agricultural pursuits. Returning to Missouri in 1870, he followed general farming for many years, first in that state and then in Nebraska. Coming to California in 1887, he spent six months in Pasadena, and then, in partnership with his son, opened a mercantile house in Compton. Building up a large trade in general merchandise, this firm enlarged its operations in 1896, incorporating the business under its present firm name, the Ambrose Shepard Company, with J. V. Shepard as president; J. M. Shepard, vice-president, and A. J. Shepard, secretary and treasurer. This firm is also connected with the Compton Water Company, and A. J. Shepard is secretary of the Home Telephone Company. Although his business interests are in Compton Mr. Shepard has for two years resided in Los Angeles, his home being at No. 807 Adams street.

August 18, 1862, in Jacksonville, Ill., Mr. Shepard married Rebecca Van Winkle, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of five children, all sons, namely: Samuel, cashier of the Farmers' Bank, at Union Star, Mo.; J. V., president of the Ambrose Shepard Company, in Compton; A. J., secretary and treasurer of the company; J. L., engaged in farming near Compton, and Charles Hubert, a graduate of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, who has for the past five years been chemist for the Union Iron Works, in San Francisco. Politically Mr. Shepard is a sound Republican, and while living in Andrews county, Missouri, served two terms as county judge. Both Mr. and Mrs. Shepard are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Compton. Both come from substantial Revolutionary stock, their paternal grandfathers having fought for the independence of the colonies, and both are eligible to membership in the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution.

GUSTAVUS LOUIS JUNOD. Prominent among those who have given substantial assistance in promoting the growth and upbuilding of Long Beach is Gustavus Louis Junod, a real-estate dealer, at the present time actively engaged in the sale and transfer of city property. A native of Switzerland, he was born, February 15, 1849, in the canton of Vaud, which was likewise the birthplace of his parents, August and Nannette (Bornan) Junod.

A watchmaker by trade, August Junod immigrated with his family to the United States in 1849, settling in St. Louis, Mo., where, during the same year, he died of cholera, being then but twenty-nine years of age. His widow, a stranger in a strange country, with five little children to support, left St. Louis, settling on a farm about thirty miles east of that city, near Highland, Ill., where she reared her family, although she spent the last years of her life in Sangamon county, dying in Springfield. Of the five children she bore her husband, four are living, Gustavus L., the subject of this sketch, being the youngest child. One of her sons, A. H. Junod, of San Francisco, was employed in the United States service at Benton Barracks during the war. A son by another marriage, Julius Cuendet, now a resident of Idaho, served as a musician in the Twenty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the war.

An infant when brought to this country, Gustavus Louis Junod was reared and educated in Highland, Ill., obtaining his early education in the district schools, and becoming familiar with the various branches of agriculture while yet a boy. He subsequently served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade on his own account. Giving that up for a time, he carried on a general mercantile business there for a few years, being quite successful. Going to Pawnee county, Kans., in 1892, he bought a ranch at Larned, where he established a very successful business in raising, buying and shipping cattle. Disposing of his interests in Kansas in 1903, he came to Los Angeles county, and for two years was employed as a contractor and builder at Long Beach, building up both business and residence property. In 1905, as head of the firm of Junod & Scales, he embarked in his present occupation, and in addition to buying and selling city realty has laid out the Junod addition to Long Beach. A man of sterling integrity, courteous and genial, he is most pleasant to deal with, and is conducting his extensive real-estate transactions with great financial ability and success.

Antoine Berthelon

In Madison county, Ill., Mr. Junod married Elizabeth Bosler, who was born in canton Aargau, Switzerland, of German ancestry, and of the children born of their union seven are living, namely: E. H., of Springfield, Ill., conductor on a passenger train; Annie, of Long Beach; Mrs. Ellen Converse, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Rosa Colgin, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Nellie Burkhart, of Long Beach; and Flora and Minnie, of Long Beach. In national politics Mr. Junod is a firm supporter of the principles of the Republican party, but in local affairs votes according to the dictates of his conscience.

ANTOINE REVOLON. The decadence of the mining industry in California was followed by the rapid development of stock-raising and for years the vast ranges were supposed to be worthless except for the pasturage of stock. It was during the stock-raising epoch of California's history that Mr. Revolon became a resident of the state, where for years he was engaged extensively in the raising of sheep, and experienced all the hardships incident to the development of that industry in the midst of discouraging circumstances. Notwithstanding the obstacles he encountered and the hardships he endured he met with considerable success, and still retains his large ranch holdings where once his sheep wandered over the broad range. Since 1903, however, the large ranch has been rented and he has made his home in Los Angeles county, where he owns twenty-five acres two miles southwest of Palms, a well-improved homestead worth $600 per acre and improved with a neat and adequate set of buildings.

A native of France, born August 15, 1847, Antoine Revolon received a fair education in his native tongue, and afterward served an apprenticeship to the trade of baker and confectioner in Paris. In the fall of 1868 he arrived at Boston, Mass., from France, and at once proceeded to Chicago, where for six months he was employed at his trade. However, it was his ambition to become a landowner, and with this object in view he left Chicago for Kansas and pre-empted a homestead near Williamsburg, Franklin county. After he had the title to the land he set about making needed improvements and in time placed the land under cultivation and in excellent condition for profitable management. Many conditions, however, proved unsatisfactory, and in the fall of 1874 he disposed of the farm and came to California, settling near Oxnard, in Ventura county. Immediately afterward he became interested in the raising of sheep and six years later he purchased a sheep ranch of thirty-five hundred acres, the larger part of which was in range and pasture-land, although a portion was under cultivation. In 1884 he sold his flocks of sheep and gave his attention wholly to general farming, remaining on the Ventura county farm until 1903, when he rented the land to tenants and removed to Los Angeles county.

The marriage of Mr. Revolon took place November 15, 1871, and united him with Miss Catherine Gormont, who was born in Clearfield county, Pa., June 4, 1841, being the daughter of French parents. While still quite small she accompanied other members of the family to Kansas and there remained until after her marriage to Mr. Revolon. They are the parents of three daughters, one of whom, Eugenie, remains with them at home. The others are twins, Louise Antoinette and Marie Josephine, and they married brothers who are partners in business in Prescott, Ariz., where they are prominent citizens, Louise A. being the wife of Floyd J. McCoy, and Marie J., the wife of Lawrence B. McCoy. The family are earnest members of the Roman Catholic Church and contribute to its various charities. Since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Revolon has voted the Republican ticket at all elections and has been a delegate to county conventions. When it is remembered that he came to our country without means, unfamiliar with the language and unused to the customs of the people, his present success entitles him to special praise and proves that he is a man of ability and enterprise.

ALONZO OSMOND HOUGHTON. Educational affairs of Norwalk have had in Mr. Houghton one of its most earnest advocates, but not to this upbuilding alone is he devoted, for throughout his residence here he has proven himself a conservative and helpful business man in whatever avenue the community has sought advancement. Mr. Houghton is a native of Hopkins county, Tex., his birth having occurred in that section December 2, 1860; his father, James Houghton, died in Texas, after which the mother, Nancy (Hastings) Houghton, came to California in 1868 across the plains with his paternal grandparents. They first located in Stanislaus county and remained for one year, when they came south to Los Angeles county, where the grandfather, W. L. Houghton, purchased land and kept his grandson with him until his death. The lad's mother died in California in 1871 when about thirty-three years old. A. O. Houghton received a common school education and after the close of his schooldays worked with his grandfather on the ranch. He was about twenty years old when they passed away, and he then began ranching for himself. In 1881 he purchased his present property, which consists of thirty-nine acres of land, and here he has erected necessary buildings for the successful conduct of his ranch, set out a fine family orchard of various fruits, and devotes fifteen acres to hay and barley. He also leases land and extends his farming interests. In 1888 he married Miss Ollie Day, a native of Mississippi, and a daughter of James Warren Day, who was born in Mississippi, August 30, 1836. His wife, Margurite C. Orman was born in Mississippi, October 4, 1847. Her marriage to Mr. Day occurring October 26, 1862, in Tippah county, Miss. They came to California in January, 1884 and located near Norwalk, where he engaged in ranching until his death here in January, 1887. The wife survives him and resides in Sherman, Cal.

Mr. and Mrs. Houghton are the parents of four children of whom three are living, the second daughter, Eula, having died at the age of thirteen years; Myrtle, Lena and Alta. Fraternally Mr. Houghton is associated with the Independent Order of Foresters, of Downey, and politically is a stanch Democrat. He is serving as a member of the boards of trustees for both the Little Lake grammar and the Norwalk high schools and is especially active in the advancement of educational interests.

ISAAC CLAY IJAMS. Those who are interested in the study of heredity will find ample support for their theory regarding the transmission of traits and tendencies in the life of Mr. Ijams and will admit unhesitatingly that he comes of progenitors who were honorable and high-minded. History records the pathetic fact that when he was but one day old he was left without a natural guardian, his father having died three weeks before he was born, and his mother passing away twenty-four hours after his birth. Thus destined to never know parental love and protection he was left to the mercy of others who had little or no interest in his welfare. And right here it must be noted that future developments show that he certainly was a child of noble qualities. Until he was about four years old he was brought up in the home of a Mr. Leib, a relative on his mother's side, and thereafter until he was fourteen years old lived with a relative of his father. At that age he decided to strike out in his own behalf and for the following six years worked as a farm hand in the neighborhood of his birthplace, Logan, Hocking county, Ohio, his birth occurring September 2, 1840. Thus far in his life he had had no advantages for an education, but from the time he began to be self-supporting he diligently laid aside from his small earnings such sums as could be spared after providing the actual necessities of life, with the intention of having this apply towards an education. In 1860, when he was twenty years old, he went to Iowa City, Iowa, and obtained three months' schooling, during which time he also became interested in the patent rights business through his association with an uncle on his father's side. He continued with his relative until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he decided to remove to the west.

It was in 1862 that Mr. Ijams with a company of others with like ambitions undertook the journey across the plains, and just four months to a day from the time they left Iowa City they reached their destination, Auburn, Ore., after a journey the hardships and dangers of which cannot now be told. It was not accomplished without hardships and great loss of life, however, for they had literally to fight their way among the Snake and Banock Indians, through whose territory their route led. While they were crossing the Snake river on a raft fifteen of their number were killed by the redmen with one fell swoop, and a number of others were killed singly. Mr. Ijams remained in Oregon for about eighteen months and then returned to Iowa City, where during the following winter he recruited another party of emigrants for the west. The train consisted of about one hundred wagons, destined for Boise City, Idaho, which they reached just three months from the time of starting. With five others Mr. Ijams purchased considerable land in that vicinity, he himself owning one hundred and sixty acres near what is now Boise City, and in 1863 he had the town site surveyed and laid out into lots. As he had a half interest in the undertaking it was with considerable pride that he watched the growth of the new town, and during the three years that he remained there he saw the straggling village increase to a population of one thousand, he himself building the first adobe house in the settlement. It was about 1866 that he left Idaho for Montana, where he hoped to find sudden wealth in the mines, but after prospecting for some time with unsuccessful results he finally gave up the search. His time and efforts were not wholly lost, however, for he gained a wonderful insight into the western part of our country and he became noted as a scout and guide to less experienced travelers. During his residence in Montana he made his headquarters in Helena. Before coming further west he went on a visit to Arizona and Utah, making the trip on horseback. After spending the winter in Fort Mojave he retraced his steps westward, continuing on to Los Angeles. From there he went to the mines of Kern county, later going to San Diego county, and still later to Mexico, during all of this time being interested in mining. After spending one year in Mexico he again went to San Diego county, and during the year he was there was married. His identification with California in reality dates from the year 1885, at which time he located a government claim of two hundred acres in Los Angeles county not far from Toluca, which has been his home ever since. As he took the land from the government not a furrow had been turned when it came into his possession and he has literally carved out his own fortune, for today he has one of the finest ranches in this part of Los Angeles county. In 1899 he added to his acreage by the purchase of one hundred and five acres of partially improved land. Besides building a commodious residence and ample barns he has erected a windmill, this latter however being more for ornament than service, for his ranch is so located that irrigation is unnecessary. He has about sixty acres set out to walnuts and fruits, including peaches, pears, apples and prunes, besides which he raises some stock, having about twenty head of work horses and fifteen head of cattle.

Mr. Ijams' marriage united him with Miss Edith Shaw, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Sikes) Shaw, and of their marriage four children were born. The eldest, Isaac Edwin, resides with his father on the ranch; Nettie Cornelia grew to young womanhood and died in Los Angeles county at the age of twenty years; Katie May became the wife of John Haas, and with her husband lives in Calabasas, Los Angeles county; and William Frederick, who with his older brother lives on the home ranch and assists in its management.

While Mr. Ijams is the pioneer of Calabasas he is also called the father of Toluca, a name to which he is honestly entitled, for he was one of the originial settlers in this part of the country, which owes so much to his fostering care and valuable hints along agricultural lines. It would be hard to find anyone who has experienced more thrilling adventures in this western country than has Mr. Ijams. He has met face to face all of the wild animals of the plains, and has partaken of the flesh of all edible kinds. Many and hazardous have been the trips which he has made across the plains, and while he has been called upon to bury many a comrade whose ready aim the redskins has laid low, yet through it all he has been mercifully spared, and there is probably no one in this part of the country who can depict more graphically than can he the life of the frontiersmen, that vanguard of civilization whose lives must inspire their followers with gratitude and reverence for the conditions that have been brought about. Besides his election to minor offices within the gift of his fellow-citizens he has twice been elected justice of the peace, and is now filling that office. Independent in politics and as generous in all other matters he gives his religious affiliations to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOHN R. ABBOTT. Living retired from active business at his pleasant home in Long Beach is John R. Abbott, who during his long and useful life has labored wisely and well, and is now enjoying a well-deserved reward. As a young man, he was industrious, courageous and progressive, and the success with which he met during his working career was brought about by persistent energy, well-directed toil and exceptional business ability. Since coming to this country he has shown himself a man of honest purpose and sterling integrity, well worthy of the esteem and respect of the community. A native of New York, he was born, February 23, 1829, in Saratoga county, a son of John C. and Lydea (Hudson) Abbott. His father was a life-long resident of New York state, while his mother was born and reared in New Jersey, and died in Portland, Mich.

Educated in the common schools, John R. Abbott had as a boy few of the advantages granted to the young of this generation. At an early age he began working for a living, toiling early and late. He subsequently learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed a few years in Ledyard, Cayuga county. Going then across the country to Michigan, he settled in Ionia county, where he resided many years, obtaining a good position among the capable business men of his community. From 1870 until 1880 he was postmaster at Hubbardston. He afterwards removed to St. Johns, in Clinton county, and was there one of the leading citizens for many years. During the time he made many visits to the Pacific coast, coming first on a pleasure trip in 1882. In 1899, having made up his mind that California was the only place for a man to live and thoroughly enjoy himself, he located in Long Beach, and has since made this his home. He purchased a lot and erected a house soon after coming here, and has since dealt to some extent in real estate, having bought and sold a number of city lots.

Mr. Abbott married first, in 1857, in Ledyard, N. Y., Almira E. Deyo, who died at her home in Michigan in 1889. He subsequently married October 3, 1893, in St. Johns, Mich., Louisa Waldron, who was born in Bristol, England, and came with her father, the late William Waldron, to the United States in 1871, locating in Michigan. Mr. Abbott has one daughter, Almira W. Abbott. In his political affiliations Mr. Abbott has been identified with the Republican party since casting his vote for its first presidential candidate, John C. Fremont. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Hubbardston, Mich., about thirty years ago, and since coming to Long Beach has joined the Order of the Eastern Star. While a resident of New York state he was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOHN KUEBLER. The proprietor of the Penny Arcade in Long Beach, John Kuebler is a well known citizen here, and as a pioneer settler in Orange county he has a large acquaintance throughout this section of Southern California. The family is of German origin and the first member to come to this country was the grandfather, George Kuebler, who was a native of Wurtenberg. He first settled in Maryland and plied his trade as a weaver and later removed to Pennsylvania, where he spent the remainder of his life. John Kuebler, who was born April 23, 1859, in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was the son of William and Margaret (Serena) Kuebler, the former a native of western Maryland and the latter of Westmoreland county, Pa. The father was engaged as a weaver in Pennsylvania, and when he removed to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in 1854, superintended the building of the first woolen mill in that city for Nick Brown and conducted the plant for many years. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted as a private in Company G, Twenty-fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and sacrificed his life on the altar of his country's need, his death occurring in service at Helena, Ark., in 1864. His wife lived for many years and died in Anaheim, Cal.

The youngest of a family of four children, three of whom are residents of California, John Kuebler was reared in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he attended the public schools until twelve years of age, then finding it necessary to work for his own support and that of his mother. His first employment was secured on farms and in brickyards and later he engaged in independent farming operations near Cedar Rapids for several years. During the years of 1880 and 1881 he spent seven months in Colorado, after which he returned to Iowa and in 1882 filed on a homestead in Holt county, Neb., near O'Neill, improved the place and the following four years was engaged in agricultural pursuits. His residence in California dates from 1886, when he came to Anaheim and began farming on four acres of land, and also engaged in the manufacture of asphalt pipes for sewers and road crossings. In 1902 he disposed of his interests in Orange county and locating in Long Beach established a confectionery business on the wharf, becoming the pioneer business man there. When the old pavilion was burned his losses amounted to $2,350. After this he bought and sold real estate, meeting with good success, and now has a nice residence at No. 1334 Appleton street. On July 4, 1906, he opened on the wharf the most modern and complete Penny Arcade in this state. It has three entrances from the wharf and pavilion and covers a large space in two rooms with dimensions respectively 20x50 feet and 36x15 feet.

By his marriage in Holt county, Neb., Mr. Kuebler was united with Miss Martha Pickering, a native of Wisconsin. She is a member of the Ladies of the Maccabees Lodge, and Mr. Kuebler is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. In politics he exercises independence in the casting of his ballot, preferring to vote for the men whom he believes will best fill the offices to which they are elected. He is a citizen of progressive ideas, with energy and business ability to carry them out, and in every developing and upbuilding enterprise lends an enthusiastic support.

M. T. OWENS. Although he has been a resident of Long Beach but a few months M. T. Owens has built up a large plumbing and steam and gas fitting business and has a fine establishment located at No. 441 Pine street. Having learned the trade in boyhood and followed it continuously ever since, he has mastered the work in every detail, as is fully proven by the numerous satisfactory contracts he has completed in this city. He was born July 30, 1864, in Liverpool, England, the son of John and Mary (Roberts) Owens, natives respectively of England and Wales, and a grandson of John Owens, who spent a portion of his life in America, but returned to England and Wales, and spent his remaining years on that side of the ocean. Reared in Wales, the father learned the trade of moulder, plying it in Liverpool until the time of his death in that city, his wife having also died there. They became the parents of fifteen children and eleven of them grew to maturity.

Until fifteen years of age Mr. Owens attended the public schools of his native city, then began to learn the plumber's trade and upon the completion of his apprenticeship followed that occupation as a traveling journeyman for several years. In 1887 he came to the United States, locating in Utica, N. Y., and subsequently worked at his trade and traveled throughout the states of New York, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, and again in New York, after which he went to Toronto, Canada, for a season, then to Iowa for a year, and in 1901 came to Los Angeles. He continued to work as a plumber in that city until 1906, in the spring of which year he located in Long Beach and established his present business. His marriage in Indiana united him with Miss Margaret E. Nichol, a native of Toronto, Canada, and they are the parents of one child, Elmer C. In national politics Mr. Owens favors Republican principles. He is a member of the Sons of St. George and Canadian Workman Lodge, and belongs to the Merchant Plumbers' Association of Long Beach. Of high personal integrity, successful in business, and progressive and public spirited as a citizen he is held in high esteem by all who know him.

W. G. Phillips

WILLARD G. PHILLIPS. Having come to Southern California in 1872 Willard G. Phillips is one of the oldest settlers in this part of the state. In all of his business transactions he has met with flattering success and is now a large property holder and money lender. His home ranch, which is located in Valle Vista, comprises forty acres, the larger part of it being devoted to the raising of navel, blood and Valencia oranges. The elevation in this section being about eighteen hundred feet makes it an ideal place for the cultivation of this fruit, and oranges of better quality and flavor cannot be grown anywhere. A stock ranch which Mr. Phillips owns on Smith Mountain, San Diego county, comprises three hundred and eighty acres, and upon this place he has also a sawmill in which he manufactures lumber for his private use. This valuable property has been in his possession since 1891.

The birth of Mr. Phillips occurred in 1850, in the state of Maine, and his parents, Richard and Phoebe (Cowing) Phillips, both of whom are now deceased, came to California in 1850 via Panama, when the gold excitement was attracting so many people to this state from all parts of the country. The father engaged in mining in the Dutch Flat district for eighteen months, after which he returned to his old home in Maine and remained there the rest of his days. The son, whose education was received in the Maine public schools, came to California in the fall of 1872, locating first in Mendocino county, where he engaged in lumbering until 1880, when he came to Southern California and bought his present ranch in the San Jacinto valley, the place being at that time entirely unimproved. He erected all of the buildings now located on the land, set out the trees and has one of the best cultivated groves in this part of the country.

Mr. Phillips is a man who is interested in social and civic matters, the good government of his community and the highest development of the country at large, and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. He was made a member of the Masonic order in Ellsworth, Me.

PROF. HOMER F. PINNELL. Liberally educated, well informed, and a man of exceptionally fine executive ability, Prof. Homer F. Pinnell, supervising principal of the San Pedro schools, and principal of its high school, is ably discharging the duties devolving upon him in his responsible position, giving good satisfaction to all concerned. As a teacher he has had a practical experience in different grades, and has met with eminent success, becoming known as one of the most popular and efficient educators of this part of the state. A son of Dr. Elijah A. Pinnell, he was born, January 26, 1869, in Ladoga, Montgomery county, Ind. His grandfather, George Pinnell, was a pioneer settler of Indiana, where he spent the later years of his life. He comes of French Huguenot extraction, the emigrant ancestor, whose name in France was spelled Pinel, having settled in South Carolina in early colonial days.

Elijah A. Pinnell was born and reared in Kentucky, but when a young man removed to Illinois, and during the Civil war enlisted in an Illinois regiment, taking part in many serious engagements. Preparing himself for a professional career, he subsequently settled as a physician in Ladoga, Ind., from there removing to Bedford, Iowa, where he continued in practice until his death. Dr. Pinnell married Mrs. Elizabeth (Britts) Byrd, who was born in old Virginia, and died in Indiana. She was of German ancestry, her Grandfather Britts having been born in Germany. Of her union with Dr. Pinnell but one child was born, Homer F., the subject of this sketch. By her first marriage she had six children, one of whom, George Byrd, is a successful attorney in Indianapolis, Ind., and a man of prominence and influence, being an ex-state senator, and the grand supreme secretary and treasurer of the Grand Lodge of the Knights and Ladies of Honor.

Brought up in Montgomery county, Ind., Homer F. Pinnell received his elementary education in the public schools. As a boy he was a brilliant scholar, and when but thirteen years of age entered the Normal School at Ladoga. The following year he began teaching in Clay county, Ind., and taught for six consecutive years, each summer pursuing his studies at the Ladoga Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1886. In 1889 he entered DePauw University, which he attended a year, and in 1890 came to California, locating in Los Angeles. The same year he entered the sophomore class of the University of Southern California, where, in addition to doing some junior work, he was tutor in English.

Removing to Redlands in 1891, Mr. Pinnell started a nursery, but as a horticulturist was not particularly successful. Resuming his professional labors, he taught in Calico, San Bernardino county, for a year, and then went to Beaumont, Riverside county, where he taught the ensuing year. In 1894, when the high school was established at San Jacinto, he assumed its charge, and remained as its principal for two years, being very successful in his work. For a year he was afterwards principal of the Hemet high school, and then for the same length of time had charge of the grammar school at Rialto. From 1898 until 1901, he taught in the Pomona high school, as an instructor proving very efficient. Resigning the position, he served as principal of the high school at Santa Maria for two years, when, on account of the ill health of his wife, he went to Anaheim, where he had charge of the high school for a year. In 1904 he accepted his present position of principal of the San Pedro high school, which was organized in 1903, and in addition to having charge of this school is also supervising principal of the grammar schools of the city. In his labors he is meeting with eminent success, and is widely known as one of the leading educators of Southern California. The new high school building just completed cost, furnished, about $55,000, and is one of the best in its appointments and equipments of any in the county.

In Redlands, Cal., Professor Pinnell married Bertha E. Coveney, who was born in Michigan, and was educated at the Northern Indiana Normal School, at Valparaiso. Professor and Mrs. Pinnell have three children, Vivian, Marion and Muriel. Politically the professor is a Republican in national affairs, but in local matters casts his ballot for the men best suited for the positions. He is a member of the Southern California Teachers' Association, and both he and his wife are valued members of the Methodist Episcopal Church

---

EVAN MOSHER. Significant testimony concerning the attractions of Long Beach as a residence city is offered by the thousands of men and women who have come hither from all parts of the United States and have established permanent homes within its limits. In the midst of an environment rendered picturesque by the proximity of the mountains and the ocean, and surrounded by evidences of a cultured people and a progressive citizenship, Mr. Mosher has selected the place where he hopes to pass the remaining years of his life and where, blessed with the comforts rendered possible by long business activity, he is enabled to retire from the strenuous labors of the past. Of eastern birth and parentage, descended from a long line of eastern ancestry, he believes the east to be surpassed by the west in climate and fully equaled in point of business opportunities.

A native of Jefferson county, N. Y., born August 4, 1840, Mr. Mosher is a son of Leonard and Margaret (Strickland) Mosher, also natives of that state, where the father died in 1884, at seventy-five years of age, and the mother passed away in 1891, also aged seventy-five years. During all of their active years they resided upon a farm and maintained agricultural interests. Their son, Evan, was the recipient of such advantages as country schools afforded, in addition to which he had the privilege of attending the Wesleyan College at Gouverneur, N. Y., for about nine months. While he was yet making his home with his parents the Civil war began and from the first he was an ardent believer in Union principles. Offering his services to the country, he was enrolled September 7, 1863, as a private in Company C, Tenth New York Heavy Artillery, and at once accompanied his regiment to the front. Among his engagements were those of the Shenandoah valley and Petersburg, where he served under the gallant General Sheridan. At the expiration of his time he was honorably discharged June 23, 1865, at Sacket Harbor, and from there returned to the home farm.

The first experience which Mr. Mosher gained in business affairs was as a business man of Gouverneur, N. Y., where he engaged in the sale of books, stationery and wall paper. After a brief connection with that line of activity he embarked in the furniture and undertaking business in the same town, and for twenty-five years he remained proprietor of the same store, meanwhile winning the confidence of the people through his reliable methods of transacting business and his strict conformity to the highest rules of honor. On retiring from business in that city he closed out his interests in the east and removed to California, arriving June 1, 1891, in the city of Pasadena, where he made his home for a few years. From there in 1895 he moved to Long Beach and for fourteen months engaged in the furniture business, but at the expiration of that time disposed of his interest in the business to his partner, W. P. Wilson, since which time he has had no business interests except the buying and selling of real estate.

While living in New York Mr. Mosher was united in marriage, March 20, 1867, with Miss Katherine Ormiston, a native of that state. Three children were born to their union, and the heaviest bereavement of the married lives came in the loss of the two eldest. The son, William L., died in 1877, when a boy of ten years, and Anna M. died in 1884, at the age of eleven years. The younger daughter, Katherine A., was spared to bless their home with her cheerful presence. The family are identified with the Presbyterian Church, with which Mr. Mosher has been connected as an active member since attaining the age of sixteen years. When the Grand Army of the Republic came into existence he affiliated with the post at Gouverneur, N. Y., and is now associated with the Long Beach Post. Fraternally he was made a Master Mason in March, 1869, and three months later took the chapter degree, at this writing being connected with Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M. (of which he is secretary), Long Beach Chapter No. 84, R. A. M., and Long Beach Commandery No. 40, K. T. He is also secretary of the Masonic Temple Association. In politics he supports Republican principles. For years he has been a firm believer in temperance work and by his influence has done much to bring to the attention of public-spirited citizens the evils wrought by the liquor traffic.

EDGAR R. REEL. Conspicuous in the present generation of the active and enterprising citizens of Long Beach is Edgar R. Reel, a young man of mark and of recognized worth, his business ability being unquestioned and his character above reproach. A son of James B. Reel, he was born, February 26, 1879, in Maryland, where the first two years of his life were spent.

A native of Maryland, James B. Reel lived there until 1881, when he migrated with his family to Page county, Iowa, where he followed general farming for a few years. In 1887 he came to the Pacific coast, locating first in Pasadena, from there going subsequently to Los Angeles, where he lived retired from active business. He married Josephine B. Reel, who was also born and reared in Maryland.

Beginning his school life in Page county, Iowa, Edgar B. Reel completed his studies in the public schools of Pasadena, Cal. At the age of sixteen years he began to be self-supporting, as a farm laborer working in Hynes for ten years. Industrious, ambitious and thirfty, he saved his money, and in 1902 established himself in his present business in Long Beach, becoming proprietor of the Crown dairy, and as a dairy and butter commissioner has an extensive and profitable trade throughout Southern California, the products of his dairy being widely and favorably known.

In 1903 Mr. Reel married Bessie A. Anderson who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and came with the family to the United States in 1895. Her father, John Anderson, a farmer by occupation, lived for nearly eleven years on a ranch in Hynes, Los Angeles county, but is now a resident of Long Beach, being retired from active pursuits. He married Janet Alston, who is the mother of four living children. Mr. and Mrs. Reel have one child, Dorothy Reel. Politically Mr. Reel is a stanch Republican. He has met with excellent success in business, and has built for himself and family a nice home at No. 645 Pacific avenue.

EDWIN L. BARNARD. Occupying a position of prominence among the foremost agriculturists of Southern California is Edwin L. Barnard, of Ocean Park, who, as head of the firm of Barnard & Oreb, is one of the founders and proprietors of the Santa Monica pepper ranch, the largest ranch of the kind in the United States. Progressive, practical and enterprising, he uses excellent judgment in his operations, and never allows anything to escape his observation which may improve his methods of farming or advance his business opportunities. A son of A. D. Barnard, he was born in Corvallis, Ore., November 23, 1862, coming from substantial New England stock.

Born and reared in Maine, A. D. Barnard came as a young man to California, journeying by the Panama route, and for a time was successfully employed in mining. Going thence to Corvallis, Ore., he remained there several years, carrying on an extensive and remunerative trade as a merchant. Returning to California in 1868, he located in Ventura, where he was prosperously engaged in the lumber and real-estate business until his death, at the age of sixty-four years, in 1895. Left an orphan when a boy, he made his own way in the world, carving out his own fortune. He was a Republican in politics, and as a man and a citizen was honored and respected by all. He married Sarah E. Lehman, a native of Ohio, who now resides in Ventura, Cal., at the age of sixty-six years.

But six years of age when he came with his parents from Oregon to California, Edwin L. Barnard was educated in Ventura, attending the public schools and the commercial college. Remaining at home until attaining his majority, he assisted his father on the ranch and later began farming on his own account in Ventura, his father giving him financial assistance, and in that county made quite a success of raising chili peppers. In 1901, forming a partnership with Frank Oreb, of whom a brief sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume, he came down to Los Angeles county, locating not far from Santa Monica, where he purchased the ranch now owned by himself and Mr. Oreb, with whom he had previously been associated in Ventura county. Here these gentlemen are carrying on a substantial business, raising lima beans and chili peppers, making a specialty of the latter industry. They have every convenience for successfully carrying on their work, having erected dryers, and having all other modern appliances. Their land is rich and fertile, and being well improved and well cultivated is worth, at a conservative estimate, $1,000 per acre, making their ranch of one hundred and eighty-five acres one of the most valuable estates in this part of the state.

In February, 1890, Mr. Barnard married Hattie Mandeville, a native of Chico, Cal., and they have one child, Austin Mandeville Barnard. Politically Mr. Barnard is a Republican, and religiously he was reared in the Presbyterian faith, but is not a member of any church. He resides in Ocean Park.

CHARLES A. FREEMAN. Very early in the history of American colonization the Freeman family became established in New England and several successive generations lived and died in that region. John, Jr., son of John Freeman, Sr., was a native of Maine and spent his entire active life as a farmer in that state, where he passed away at the age of four score years. Interested in public matters and political affairs, he was a local leader of the Whigs and accomplished much in the interests of his party in the home neighborhood. In early manhood he married Sarah Doe, who was born and reared in Maine and died there at the age of eighty-four years. The genealogy of the Doe family is traced to Scotland, whence Mrs. Freeman's grandfather migrated to the new world. Little is known of his history, but the family records state that he was a man six feet and eight inches tall, a giant in stature, and physically well proportioned.

On the home farm in Kennebec county, Me., Charles A. Freeman was born August 10, 1841, being a son of John and Sarah (Doe) Freeman. After having completed common-school and seminary studies he gave his help to his father, whom he aided in paying for the homestead and in securing a competency. Then, starting out for himself with $200 of borrowed money, he went to Montana, where he worked in the mines for several years. On his return to Maine he became interested in dealing in horses and in cultivating the home farm, but after seven years he again came to the western regions, this time settling in Washington. For four years he engaged in freighting from The Dalles, Ore., to what is now Ellensburg, and in that work he utilized six horses which he owned. At the expiration of four years he gave up the business and in 1880 came to California, hoping that a change of climate might prove of benefit to his wife's health. Settling in Santa Monica, he carried on a lumber yard for two years, and then engaged in the transfer business for twenty years, meeting with fair success in the enterprise. In 1901, his health preventing further continuance in business, he removed to a ranch for which in 1881 he had paid about $35 an acre, and which is now valued at $500 per acre. This property comprises fifty acres and is situated near Palms, Los Angeles county.

The marriage of Mr. Freeman took place October 18, 1864, and united him with Laura B. Bean, who was born in Maine and received her education in the schools of that state. The children born of their union are as follows: John W., who is employed in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Annie and Frederick, who died respectively at nineteen and twenty years; Elliott, who died aged eight months; Edward, who owns the transfer business at Santa Monica established by his father; Margaret, Mrs. C. Olsen, a resident of Santa Monica; Marian, wife of Thomas Peterson, of Santa Monica; William V. and Dwight, both of whom are living in Santa Monica; and Frank, who resides with his parents near Palms. In addition to the home place Mr. Freeman owns a residence and several unimproved lots in Santa Monica. While living in Maine, he was initiated into the blue lodge of Masonry at Vassalboro, Kennebec county, but has not been active in the order since coming to the Pacific coast. In politics he has been a warm adherent of the Republican party, which he supports with his ballot and his influence.

THOMAS F. McLOUGHLIN. Prominent among the younger generation of agriculturists in Ventura county is Thomas F. McLoughlin, who had wisely chosen to follow the occupation to which he was reared, and is now actively and prosperously employed in general farming. The representative of one of the old and respected pioneer families of the El Cajon valley, he is also distinguished as a native-born son of California, his birth having occurred, December 9, 1873, in Ventura county, on the ranch owned by his father, Mark McLoughlin. Further parental and ancestral history may be found elsewhere in this volume, on connection with the sketch of Mark McLoughlin.

P. F. Schaniel

Thomas F. McLoughlin received excellent educational advantages when young, attending first the public schools of his native county, after which he entered the commercial department of St. Vincent's College, at Los Angeles, where he was graduated in 1892. Returning home, he has since devoted his time and attention to general ranching, and has proved himself a master of his calling, being skilful, practical and progressive, in every way capable of managing his business affairs.

November 8, 1899, Mr McLoughlin married Anna Leidel, a daughter of Michael Leidel, and they have four children, namely: Mark, Margaret, Frances and Anna. Politically Mr. McLoughlin is a democrat, and religiously he and his wife are members of the Catholic Church at Oxnard.

Michael Leidel and his wife, Monica (Miller) Leidel, were born, reared and married in Germany. Immigrating to the United States, they settled first in Iowa, from there coming, to Los Angeles county in 1883. Taking up land near Palms, Mr. Leidel has since been prosperously employed in cultivating the soil, and is now living on the ranch which he improved, being now seventy-eight years old. His wife died on the home farm, December 17, 1905, aged sixty-seven years. She was a faithful member of the Catholic Church, to which Mr. Leidel also belongs, and towards the support of which he contributes generously.

PETER F. SCHANIEL. As a member of the board of public works and as president of the Master Carpenters' Association, Mr. Schaniel for years has been intimately associated with the material development of his home city of San Diego and through his able service in both capacities, as well as through his skill as a carpenter and builder, he has been of the greatest assistance to the building interests of the place. His residence in San Diego he dates from October 7, 1887, and during much of the intervening period he has engaged in taking contracts for the erection of private residences and buildings of a public nature for commercial, religious and other purposes. For three years he engaged in business with Thomas Jobbitt as a partner and after they had dissolved their connection he and his brother, Nicholas, formed the firm of Schaniel Brothers, still engaged in the building business. Among their contracts may be mentioned those for the San Diego Congregational Church, the Keating and Cole blocks, the Los Banos baths, and a large number of residences.

The Schaniel family originated in Germany, whence Peter Schaniel, Sr., immigrated to the United States at the age of eighteen years and settled in Wisconsin. Later he engaged in farming in Effingham county, Ill., and from there removed to Champaign and thence to Decatur, same state, but in 1888 he removed to California to spend his last days in the mild climate and attractive surroundings of the coast. While still making his home in Illinois, in 1878 his wife died at Decatur, she was a native of Germany and bore the maiden name of Annie Willcome. Ten children were born of their union and seven survive them, namely: Mary, living in San Diego; Anna, who remains in Illinois; Susie, of San Diego; Charles, who makes his home at Trinidad, Colo., and Theresa and Peter F., and Nicholas, all residents of San Diego.

While the family were living at Eden, Fond du Lac county, Wis., Peter F. Schaniel was born December 4, 1855, and from there he accompanied his parents to Illinois at the age of eight years, settling in Effingham county. The following year he went with the family to Champaign, Ill., and there completed the studies of the grammar schools. When he was sixteen he removed to Decatur and there served an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade, which he followed in that town as a journeyman. A trip to Florida in 1881 gave him an opportunity to follow his trade in the south, but in 1882 he returned to Decatur and resumed his trade in that city, remaining there until he removed to California during the fall of 1887. In the spring of the following year he formed a partnership with Thomas Jobbitt in contracting and three years later, on dissolving that connection, he became interested in the building business with his younger brother. He has built a number of houses for himself and has sold them as opportunity offered, and now owns and occupies the property at No. 2358 Columbia street. With his brother in 1901 he became interested in the Imperial country, where he owns three hundred and twenty acres of land. While he manages the building business his brother manages the ranch, making his home there and superintending its improvement.

Under appointment by Mayor Sehon in the fall of 1905 Mr. Schaniel became a member of the board of public works and has since rendered efficient service in that position. In national politics he votes with the Democratic party. On the organization of the Master Carpenters' Association he became a charter member and during the greater part of the time since then he has held the office of president. Fraternally he holds membership with the Sons of Herman and the Woodmen of the World, and is a member of the board of managers of the latter order in San Diego, besides which he is an honorary member of the Women of Woodcraft.

FRANK OREB. In no country are greater opportunities afforded the poor man than in our own free land, where many a foreign-born citizen of industry, frugality and enterprise has accumulated wealth and attained a position of influence and affluence in the community in which he settles permanently. Prominent among this number is Frank Oreb, one of the owners of the noted Santa Monica pepper ranch, and a partner of Edwin L. Barnard, whose sketch appears on another page of this work. Coming to this country poor in pocket, but rich in ambitions, he has made diligent use of his faculties, and is rapidly making his way to the top of the ladder of attainments. A native of Europe, he was born, August 31, 1841, in Austria, where he grew to manhood, married, and lived for many years.

Immigrating with his family to the United States, Mr. Oreb settled in Ventura, Cal., on June 20, 1891, and for some time thereafter ran a lodging house and a restaurant in that city. Having acquired a good knowledge of agriculture in his native land, he subsequently formed a partnership with E. L. Barnard, and in Ventura county began the business of raising chili peppers. Succeeding beyond their expectations in their venture, Messrs. Barnard & Oreb purchased their present ranch of one hundred and eighty-five acres, lying near Santa Monica, and have since continued their profitable business. Their ranch is the largest of the kind in the United States, and with its many improvements of value is yielding large crops of chili peppers, and also of lima beans.

January 7, 1878, Mr. Oreb married Antonia Marcovich, also an Austrian by birth and breeding, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Frank, of Los Angeles; and Peter and Antonio, of San Francisco. Politically Mr. Oreb is a Republican, and religiously he is a Catholic.

FREDERICK E. SCHUEDDIG. The family represented by this well-known manufacturer and leading citizen of Los Angeles county comes of German ancestry, and he himself is of Prussian birth, born February 19, 1849. His father, Frederick, a native of the same country, and a confectioner by trade, served for twelve years in the Prussian army and during a part of that time he filled the office of orderly sergeant. Accompanied by his family, in 1851 he came to the United States and settled in St. Louis, Mo., where he followed the confectioner's business. Immediately after the outbreak of the Civil war he assisted in organizing the Fourth Missouri Volunteers and was chosen captain of Company C, with which he served until the expiration of his time, three months. Later he enlisted in the Sixteenth Illinois Cavalry and was chosen first lieutenant of Company I, with which he served through the period of his service. Exposure while in the army injured his vision and eventually caused the loss of his sight. The blind old soldier is passing his last days in East Los Angeles, and is now (1906) eighty-eight years of age. For a time after the war he worked in the quatermaster's department at Oak Hall under the government employ, but the work proved too trying for his eyes and he was obliged to resign. In 1880 he came to California and since has made Los Angeles his home. Fond of military affairs, he enjoys in his old age recounting the experiences of the past, when in the United States army and also when serving in the army of his native land.

The earliest recollections of the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch are associated with St. Louis, for he was only two years of age when the family located in that city. He well remembers the excitement occasioned by the outbreak of the Civil war and recalls the fact that his father was one of the "Black Hunters," who contributed their own arms, ammunition and clothing, and wore uniforms distinguished by a skull and cross-bones as an emblem and with hats adorned with waving ostrich plumes. Later the lad worked in the United States arsenal in St. Louis, where he was the first to operate the bullet gauge invented by a Mr. Ingalls. After completing his education in the Jones Commercial College of St. Louis he went to Franklin county, Mo., with the home guards and for several months engaged in helping to guard the railroad bridges, his associates in the work being men who were either too old or too young to enlist in the army. Emulating the example of his father in business as well as in military affairs, he began to learn the trade of a confectioner with one of the leading firms of that line in St. Louis. The owner was a personal friend of the youth and not only taught him the business and helped him in acquiring his first knowledge of chemistry, but also encouraged him to endeavor to develop his talents. However, on account of trouble with his eyes he could not follow the trade and later he took up frescoing and paper-hanging in his home city.

Coming to Los Angeles in 1882, Mr. Schueddig followed his trade until 1893, when he became deeply interested in the eucalyptus oil. After special and long-continued study he produced a quality of oil that has never been surpassed, and this he manufactured in Los Angeles until 1901, when he removed to Palms and built a new plant for the manufacture of the product. The sales of the oil have extended all over the country as far north as Canada, as far south as New Orleans, and as far east as New York, and even to Europe, and without doubt the business will have a steadily increasing development, both in our own land and in foreign countries. As an authority of eucalyptus trees and oil, Mr. Schueddig has been called upon frequently to prepare articles for magazines and to lecture before chemical and medical associations. When he first embarked in the business, it was necessary for him to plan all of the machinery to be used, for no one was able to tell him how the machinery should be constructed and he was obliged to depend upon his own ingenuity and talents.

As is generally known, there are many adulterated oils on the market and some of these have no medicinal value whatever. Often Mr. Schueddig has been approached with solicitations to adulterate his oil, the claim being made that sales would be much larger if the oil were cheaper, but he has insisted upon manufacturing pure oil only, and has no difficulty in disposing of the same, although obliged to ask higher prices than the oils are sold for which contain adulterations of alcohol, turpentine, petroleum, etc. The oil has many uses. In cases of burns, cuts and bruises, it heals immediately. As an antiseptic some claim that it is superior to carbolic acid. Externally it is applied for chronic skin affections. It has even been known to be successfully used in cases of tapeworm. Many other diseases yield readily to treatment with the pure, unadulterated oil, hence in the development of the oil industry and in his rigid enforcement of his decision regarding the manufacture of pure oil only, Mr. Schueddig has been a benefactor to the human race. In order to keep up the source of supply he is making every effort to induce holders of acreage to plant the trees.

The marriage of Mr. Schueddig took place April 25, 1872, and united him with Miss Barbara Zepp, who was born in St. Louis, Mo. Her father, Philip Zepp, came from Bavaria to the United States in 1830 and engaged in gardening and dairying on the present site of Concordia College in St. Louis, later serving in the Civil war as a private in a company of artillery. The two sons of Mr. and Mrs. Schueddig are Frederick L. and William H., the former of whom is employed as chemist with the Los Angeles Ice and Cold Storage Company. The sons inherit a love for military affairs and during the war with Spain they enlisted in the Seventh Regiment, but after they had been stationed for some time in San Francisco, it developed that no more troops would be needed in the Philippines, so they were honorably discharged without seeing active service. In politics Mr. Schueddig is a Republican and votes that ticket in national elections, but in local affairs considers the man rather than the party. Fraternally he is identified with the Maccabees and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has been an officeholder in the latter lodge.

When it is considered that Mr. Schueddig lost his mother when he was only nine years of age and that he started out for himself when little more than eleven years old, credit is due him for the success he has gained and the high standing he has achieved. Self-educated and self-disciplined, he was prepared for success in life by the development of those self-reliant traits which make toward a man's highest achievements, and the fact that he now stands as a recognized authority in his chosen occupation proves that the active years of his life have been busily and worthily passed.

HERMAN C. SCHMIDT, LL. B. A man of fine education and thorough business methods is Herman C. Schmidt, who is engaged in a mercantile business at Hemet, Cal. He was born December 5, 1873, in New Ulm, Minn., the son of Carl M. and Sophie (Pankow) Schmidt, both of whom were natives of Mecklenburg, Germany, the father's birth having occurred in 1835. Following the calling of his ancestors for many generations back, he was a flour-miller by trade, having a mill in Strelitz. He immigrated to America in 1857, when a young man, and settled at New Ulm, Minn., following his trade, and later building a mill of his own in New Ulm, installing both burr and roller machinery. The full roller process was ultimately adopted, however, and having formed a partnership with a brother and two other men, business was conducted under the name of the Empire Roller Mill Company, Mr. Schmidt being the manager until the time of his death in 1887. The plant had a capacity of but fifty barrels daily when first established, but grew to be a mill of two hundred and fifty barrels capacity. In those early days when the Schmidt family first became residents of New Ulm the country was infested with Indians and they were in the famous Sioux Indian massacre which occurred in 1862. The town was besieged for several days and the settlers who were barricaded in the brick buildings fought off the savages until assistance arrived from Mankato and St. Peter, one-half of the town having been burned before help arrived. Mr. Schmidt served in a militia company under Capt. John Belm, which pursued the Indians until they were captured. Mrs. Schmidt resides at Hemet with her son Herman C., who is the only one of her family now living.

The boyhood days of Mr. Schmidt were spent in New Ulm, where he was educated in the public schools and after completing the common branches he entered the Shattuck Military School at Faribault, attending that institution four years in pursuing a general course. He also graduated from the Curtiss Business College at St. Paul in 1892. Following his graduation he clerked in a store at New Ulm for a time, and later, returning to St. Paul, he secured a position as bookkeeper for a fire insurance agency, remaining there until 1895, then came to Los Angeles to spend the succeeding winter. Returning to Minnesota he took up the study of law and in 1897 went to Chicago, spending a few months with a law firm. In the fall he went to Minneapolis, where he entered the law department of the University of Minnesota, graduating in 1900 with the degree of LL. B. Immediately afterwards he came to California and was employed for a time in Senator Flint's office, later going into the office of Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke, then the attorneys for the Los Angeles Board of Trade, remaining there until 1903, at the same time practicing to some extent for himself. In October of 1903 he located in Hemet and engaged in business with V. E. Peterson, and subsequently with R. F. McKesson. In March, 1906, he became sole proprietor of the merchandising business and has since been conducting it. He carries a full line of dry goods, notions, clothing, shoes, etc., and his store is the largest of its kind in Hemet and vicinity.

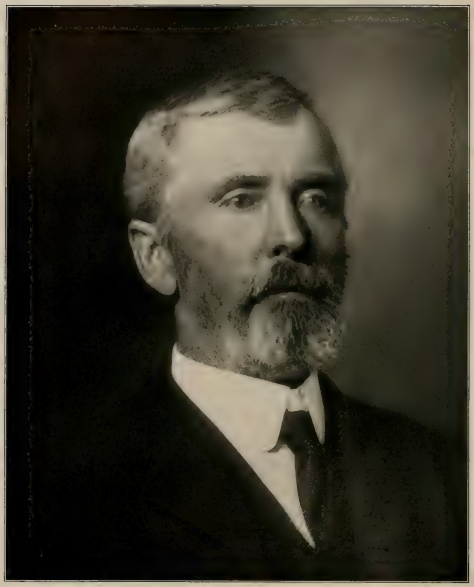
Fraternally Mr. Schmidt is a member of East Gate Lodge No. 290, F. & A. M., at Los Angeles; of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Hemet; Riverside Lodge No. 643, B. P. O. E.; and also of the Knights of Pythias lodge of Los Angeles. Politically he affiliates with the Republican party, but is independent in casting his ballot in local affairs.

JOHN C. McMILLIN. Among the well-known citizens of Long Beach is John C. McMillin, who, as a member of the police force, has been for a number of years in the employ of the city, and in this capacity has been an important factor in enforcing the municipal laws and in maintaining peace and order on the streets and public highways. A son of the late J. B. McMillin, he was born, September 13, 1862, in Overton county, Ky., but was reared and educated in Illinois.



Coming from thrifty Scotch ancestors, J. B. McMillin was born in Kentucky, where he lived until after his marriage with Rebecca Peterson, also a Kentuckian. He learned the carpenter's trade when young, and followed it for a number of years, although he was especially interested in cabinet-making. Moving with his family to Macoupin county, Ill., in 1864, he bought land in Girard, and was there prosperously employed in general farming until his death, in 1889, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife survived him, passing away in May, 1904, at Marion Center, Kans., at the advanced age of ninety-two years.

At the age of nineteen years, having acquired a practical education in the public schools of Girard, Ill., John C. McMillin began an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade, at which he subsequently worked eight years. Going to Peabody, Kans., in 1889, he was there engaged in the restaurant business for about eight months, but not with sufficient success to continue long. Coming to California in 1890, he located in Antelope Valley, where, on account of his wife's health, he remained for a year and a half. Settling then in Los Angeles county, he became a resident of Long Beach, and in 1898 accepted a position on the police force, with which, with the exception of about four years, he has since been connected. A man of strong personality, honest, resolute and determined, he has proved himself very efficient, and has rendered the city most acceptable service in this capacity.

March 24, 1900, Mr. McMillin married, in Santa Ana, Carrie Green, a native of Pennsylvania. Politically Mr. McMillin is a zealous adherent of the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 390, I. O. O. F., and of Aerie Lodge No. 791, Order of Eagles, of Long Beach.

H. GEORGE COOLEY. The community of Long Beach and vicinity has in H. George Cooley a citizen of worth and ability, and one who has always made his personal effort lie parallel with that for the advancement of the general welfare. He is the junior member of the firm of Paine & Cooley, one of the leading real-estate firms in Long Beach. A native of Waverly, N. Y., he was born January 12, 1862, and in the vicinity of his birth remained until the year 1880, attending the public schools in pursuit of a primary education. In the last-named year he became a resident of Illinois, and in Jacksonville entered Illinois College, where he continued his studies for some years. Desiring to take up the study of the ministry, he became a student in the Chicago Theological Seminary, from which institution he was graduated in 1891, having worked his way through the course of four years. As a minister of the Congregational Church he accepted a pastorate in Minnesota, where he remained for five years, and following this spent a like period in the state of Iowa. On account of his health he was compelled to give up his labors in the states of the middle west and seek a milder climate, and accordingly came to California, reaching the state December 24, 1900.

After his removal to the west Mr. Cooley took up work at the carpenter's trade, following this for fifteen months at Ontario, Los Angeles county, later in Los Angeles for a year, after which he became a resident of Long Beach, where he has since made his home. For a time he engaged in contracting independently, later becoming associated with Mr. Thompson, under the firm name of Cooley & Thompson, and still later the firm name was changed to Paine & Cooley, its present title. They are meeting with good success in their work and are among the material upbuilders of the city. Mr. Cooley has purchased and sold considerable real-estate in and about the city of Long Beach, his home being located at No. 1357 East Ocean avenue. In 1905 he purchased the Rogers ranch at Laguna, which he intends to subdivide, and besides this owns other valuable property in that vicinity.

W. D. Robinson

Mr. Cooley's wife was formerly Margaret A. Thompson, a native of Minnesota and the descendant of Scotch ancestry. He is an active member of Plymouth Congregational Church of Long Beach, and politically casts his ballot for the principles of the Republican party. He takes an active interest in all movements which have for their end the advancement of the best interests of the city and community, being a member of the Board of Trade, and has been a stanch supporter of all benevolent enterprises for the upbuilding of the city.

NATHANIEL D. ROBINSON. A successful rancher of Los Angeles county, Nathaniel D. Robinson is located in the vicinity of Artesia and engaged in the management of his property. He was born in Summit county, Ohio, July 17, 1840, a son of Leonard and Irene (Moody) Robinson, natives of New York. They located in Ohio at an early date and engaged in farming, eventually removing to Wisconsin where the mother died, and thence to Minnesota, where the father died. They were the parents of five children, of whom all but Nathaniel D. are living in the east.

Taken to Wisconsin when only five years old, Nathaniel D. Robinson received his education in the public schools and Mt. Pleasant College, Henry county, Iowa. His studies were interrupted by the call to arms in the cause of his country, enlisting July 11, 1862, in Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment Iowa Infantry, and following participated in many important engagements during a service lasting three years and six days. He was later transferred to the Reserve Corps. In the siege of Vicksburg his company participated for forty-six days. After the close of his service Mr. Robinson returned to Iowa, remaining until the fall of 1866 when he came to California and in San Joaquin county taught school and later followed a similar occupation in Amador county. After a few years he returned to Iowa via the Isthmus of Panama and New York City and May 26, 1868, he was united in marriage with Miss Amanda Allen, a native of that state, and a daughter of George and Nancy (Neal) Allen, both natives of Pennsylvania. They became pioneers of Iowa in 1846, where her father engaged as a hotel keeper and farmer until his death, which occurred at the age of seventy-five years, the mother died at the age of eighty-four. They had four children, of whom one sister is living in Iowa.

After his marriage Mr. Robinson attended Grinnell College about forty miles from Fort Des Moines, graduating therefrom in 1871 in the regular civil engineering and scientific course. Coming to California in 1873 he located in Los Angeles county in the vicinity of Artesia, where he taught the first school in this vicinity. His hearing being impaired he took up farming and has since continued this occupation, spending five years in Los Angeles for the sake of educational advantages for his children. He has a family of three children, namely: George Hershell, who married Emma Stones, and has four children, their home being at Watts; Thomas Shilling, who married Esther Hineman, has one child, and is now living in Oregon; and Lucy Mabel, who married S. T. Arkills, an engineer for the Southern Pacific Railroad in Arizona. Mr. Robinson is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, belonging to Stanton Post, of Los Angeles. Politically he reserves the right to cast his ballot for the candidate he considers best qualified for official position. In religion Mrs. Robinson is a member of the Seventh Day Adventists Church. Mr. Robinson is one of the best informed men of this section, taking a keen interest in all contemporary affairs, and although in the evening of his days he is ever a student, reading with avidity everything he can obtain in classic and scientific literature, having a fine library in his home. He stands high in the estimation of his fellow citizens, who appreciate the sterling traits of character he has displayed during his long residence in this section.

JOHN MILTON FRAZIER. A prominent horticulturist of Riverside county is John Milton Frazier of Hemet, who has been a resident of California since 1886. He was born December 27, 1864, near Rockville, Ind., the son of Eli and grandson of John Frazier, both of whom were natives of North Carolina, the family removing later to Parke county, Ind., where they engaged in agricultural pursuits. The father subsequently went still further west and settled at Lawrence, Kans., where he remained until 1886, when he came to El Modena, Cal., where his death occurred the same year. His wife, who was Martha Durham before her marriage, was born in Indiana, of Quaker parents, and she died a few years ago in Whittier. Of their seven children only three are now living. John Milton was next to the oldest and lived until his sixteenth year in Indiana, where he received his education through the medium of the public schools. In 1880 he went with the family to Kansas and assisted his father on the farm there until the removal of the family to California. After his father's death he took up the carpenter's trade and followed it for three years at El Modena, and at Santa Ana for two years. From the latter place he moved to Redlands and engaged in contracting and building there and at Los Angeles for a time, after which he settled at Whittier and continued the same employment for nine years, erecting both business blocks and residences. He next worked a year at Long Beach on the Salt Lake depot, and following that went to Pasadena, where he erected buildings and sold them and also did general contract work. In 1905 he came to Hemet, purchased a twenty-five acre ranch and has since been engaged in horticultural pursuits. Eighteen acres are in peaches, three acres are planted to alfalfa, and the remainder of the ground is given over to the raising of potatoes. He built a new residence upon the place and otherwise improved it and has now one of the most attractive homes in this section of the country.

The marriage of Mr. Frazier took place in Whittier, uniting him with Lena Jackson, who was born in Ohio. The union has been blessed by the birth of three children, Josephine, Alonzo and Leota. Both parents are active members of the Society of Friends and are supporters of all influences tending to elevate the community in which they reside. Fraternally Mr. Frazier is a member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Whittier and of the Modern Woodmen of America at Pasadena. Politically he is a stanch believer in the principles advocated by the Socialist party. A man of energy, enterprise and liberalty he is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

PIERRE AGOURE. A successful farmer and stockman, Pierre Agoure is named among the representative citizens who have made Southern California the great section that it is today in the state of California. As the name would indicate he is of French birth and ancestry, Basses-Pyrenees being the scene of his nativity, and there he first saw the light of day May 15, 1853. His parents, Francisco and Marie (Mondotte) Agoure, were both born in that section, and there spent their entire lives, the father engaged as a prosperous farmer and stockman. They were the parents of the following children: Pierre, of this review; Jean, who died in Bakersfield, Cal.; J. P., who died in Los Angeles four years ago, leaving a widow who is now the wife of J. Apiou; Joseph, in Wyoming; Francisco, in France; Anna, wife of Joseph Luquette, of Los Angeles; and Marie, wife of A. Luquette, also of Los Angeles.

Pierre Agoure was reared on the paternal farm and received his education in the common schools, and was but seventeen years old when he set out for that mecca of all fortune hunters —California. It was in 1871 that he arrived in San Francisco, and two months later he came to Southern California, landing at San Pedro, and thence went to Los Angeles. Here he entered the employ of a Mr. Rivierra, who owned a sixty-acre farm on Western avenue, where he conducted a dairy and for assistance in this line of work Mr. Agoure received as compensation $25 per month. Later he herded sheep on the Conejo. In 1873 he began sheep raising on his own account, first owning four hundred head which he herded with the herds belonging to Dr. Griffith on the Newhall ranch, and continuing to add to his own band until he would have from twenty to twenty-five thousand at a time. He purchased twelve thousand head at one time from Bard and Perkins. During the dry year of 1898 he lost about eight thousand head. He later combined with sheep the raising of cattle, and continued to add to his purchases of land until to-day he owns a fifteen thousand acre ranch at Calabasas, a part of the Simi ranch, well improved, a part being cultivated to grain and hay and the balance devoted to the raising of Herefords and Shorthorns; he also owns a fifteen hundred acre ranch near Moorpark, which he leases; a sixty acre ranch on Western avenue, this being the first place he worked in Southern California; and three hundred and eighty acres near Calabasas.

The home of Mr. Agoure is located on a ninety foot lot at No. 723 South Olive street, Los Angeles, one of the valuable pieces of property in this section of the city. This is presided over by his wife, whom he married in Los Angeles, January, 1, 1883. She was formerly Miss Kate Smith, a native of California, having been born September 26, 1856, in Coloma, just across the river from Sutter's Mill. Her father, Dr. David Steward Smith, was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, educated in the Royal College of Surgeons, in Edinburgh. He was one of the pioneer physicians in California, having come to San Francisco in 1848, eating his Christmas dinner that year in the San Francisco harbor. He first practiced his profession in San Francisco, then in Coloma, and later in different parts of California, acquiring a wide reputation because of the skill he manifested in his work. He was a man of fine physique, being six feet, one and a half inches tall, and weighing three hundred pounds, and was said to be the largest man in the state. He was a prominent Mason fraternally and interested in the workings of the organization. He inherited considerable wealth as he was an only child, owning five schooners that were engaged in East Indian and China trade, which he later disposed of. His death occurred in San Francisco in 1875. His wife was formerly Amelia Crofton, who was born in London, England, an only child of Major Crofton, an officer in the English army. She spent her last days with Mr. Agoure and family, her death occurring in 1891. She was the mother of four children, of whom two are living: Mrs. Amy Foster of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Agoure, being second in order of birth. She received her education in the public schools of California, coming to the southern part of the state in 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Agoure are the parents of the following children: Juliette, wife of Leo DeCelis, of Los Angeles; Angele; Bijou; Beatrice; Lester Pierre, and Vivian. Mr. Agoure and his family are members of the Cathedral of Los Angeles and devoted to the support of its charities. Politically he is a true-blue Republican, and although never desirous of personal recognition has nevertheless given time and energy to the advancement of the principles he endorses. He is a worthy and esteemed citizen in every particular, appreciated for the high qualities of character he has displayed during his long residence in Southern California.

WILLIAM BENJAMIN TRIPP is a native son of California, his birth having occurred in San Bernardino February 15, 1861. His education was received through the medium of the public schools in San Jacinto and Temecula, where he was reared to young manhood. He drove the stage from Julian to Colton for three years (from 1879 to 1882), running from Julian to Warner's ranch, thence to Oak Grove and Bergman, and on to Temecula and San Jacinto, and thence to Colton, a distance of one hundred and twenty miles. Just about this time he took a position in a store at Julian, remaining seventeen months, then took the position occupied by Mrs. Tickner as teacher in the Indian schools, discharging the duties in this capacity until June, 1884, a period of six months. In the meantime, in 1883, he had married Alice M. Hopkins, who was born on a vessel in the Gulf of Mexico, a daughter of F. M. Hopkins, an early settler of Julian, and later a merchant in the country. After giving up mercantile affairs he lived retired in Hemet until his death, which occurred in November, 1906.

Following his resignation as teacher Mr. Tripp prepared to establish a home near the Cahuilla Indian village, where he took up seven hundred and twenty acres in partnership with his brother, S. A., the property becoming known as the Tripp valley ranch. Here they engaged in the raising of cattle on a large scale, having several hundred head, for which they had three brands, Mr. Tripp's being a small letter "H" turned back, his brother's the same with a bar above it, and the company's an "O" with a half circle joining it on the top of the letter. In 1886 Mr. Tripp engaged in the meat business with his brother, O. C., but later sold out his interest, and with Mr. Hopkins established a similar enterprise in San Jacinto, which is still a leading business in that city. He opened a meat market in Hemet in 1902 and conducted it successfully for a year and seven months, then giving it over to his son, who, after having it in charge for two years, turned it over to the care of his father. In 1905 Mr. Tripp bought out his brother, O. C. Tripp, who was conducting a meat market, and with his partner, Mr. Hopkins, established an extensive business, having a cold storage plant, a slaughter house in the vicinity of San Jacinto and a large refrigerator at each market, with every appurtenance for conducting a successful business. At the same time he has remained actively identified with the raising of cattle, which enterprise is looked after by his oldest son and carried on in the San Jacinto mountains. He has met with unusual success in his work, has acquired a competence, and has at the same time built up for himself a place in the esteem and confidence of those who have known him throughout his entire business career, which has been passed in this section. He is respected for the qualities noticeable in both his business and private life and no citizen more deserves the esteem in which he is held.

In 1902 Mr. Tripp established his home in Hemet, where he has built a comfortable house. Twelve children were born to himself and wife and ten are living: Edith R.; Arthur, engaged in the cattle business with his father; Rose E.; Roy M.; Alberta D.; Hester A.; Annie L.; Xava; Iris Deveda; and Naomi.

Mr. Tripp was school trustee in Cahuilla for sixteen years and has held other positions of trust and responsibility, being an ex-member of the county central committee for the Democratic party, of which tenets he is a stanch adherent. Fraternally he belongs to the Odd Fellows' Lodge at Hemet and the Rebekahs at San Jacinto; the Knights of the Maccabees of Hemet; and the Fraternal Aid of the same place. He takes a strong interest in all movements tending toward the advancement of his home town, but is not narrow in his public interests, supporting state and national issues in a loyal and hearty manner.

W. CLIFFORD SMITH. As a merchant of Long Beach W. Clifford Smith is active in the upbuilding of the place, being located at Nos. 810-822 East Fourth street, where he carries on a feed and fuel business. A native of Clarke county, Ohio, born July 3, 1873, he is a son of Oliver Smith, the latter a pioneer of Clarke county and a farmer until compelled to seek a milder climate on account of his health, when he came to Long Beach, Cal., and spent the remainder of his days. His wife, Margaret B. (Negus) Smith, survives him and is now residing in Long Beach at the age of seventy-two years.

W. Clifford Smith was reared in his native state, his preliminary education being received in the public schools of Springfield. Subsequently his parents located in Emporia, Kans., where he attended and graduated from the high school. After farming in Kansas for a time, the father located in Denver, Colo., and engaged in the insurance business. In that city W. C. Smith attended and graduated from the Central Business College in 1895, after which the family came to Long Beach, Cal., on account of the father's health. Here he purchased the feed business owned and conducted by John Wilson, located at that time at No. 121 Pine street. As the town grew the business was moved to First and Locust streets, a lot being purchased in that location and the old buildings moved upon it. After three years he came to his present location. For three years he was associated in business with F. N. Lewis, during which time he took a commercial course in the College of Commerce of the State University at Berkeley. His business has continued to grow in extent and he has recently established a second office and warehouse at Fourth and Alamitos streets. He has taken an active part in the upbuilding of Long Beach, himself putting up two residences, one of which, at No. 344 East Sixth street, he makes his home and the other he rents.

In Springhill, Kans., in 1901, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Gladys L. Phillips, and they have one son, W. Clifford, Jr. In his fraternal relations Mr. Smith is a prominent Mason, being a member of the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery, Scottish Rite and Shrine, all of Long Beach. Politically he is a Republican and a stanch advocate of the principles of this party, although personally he has never cared for official recognition, and in religion is a birthright member of the Friends Church. He has been active in the growth of Long Beach, being a stockholder in the new hotel, a member of the Board of Trade, and a member and one of the organizers of the Cosmopolitan Club, to which he gave the name. He was also one of the organizers of the city library, its secretary, and for two years its president, and much is owed to his efforts in this line. He has established a place of prominence for himself in this city and is held in high esteem for the many qualities which have distinguished his citizenship.

MARCUS CAMPBELL. The work of Marcus Campbell has contributed materially to the upbuilding of the best interests of Long Beach, for in his business as contractor and builder he gives conscientious effort along architectural lines. A native of Racine Wis., born July 1, 1868, he is a son of Stephen P. and Eliza (Menzies) Campbell, both of whom are living. The father brought the family to California when his son was eight years old and located in Solano county, near Vacaville, where the latter attended the common schools. In young manhood he returned to the middle west, and in Iola, Kans., served an apprenticeship to learn the trade of locksmith and machinist, after which he returned to Vacaville and engaged in running threshers and engines in various places. In 1888 he came to Southern California and began farming, in which he continued for seven years. Not meeting with the desired success he branched out into other operations, one of which was, during the first oil boom, to conduct an oil rig, which he owned. This he later sold to the Actonia Oil Company.

In 1901 Mr. Campbell came to Long Beach to follow the carpenter's trade, which he understood and which he had followed in Los Angeles prior to his removal to this city. In 1903 he began contracting and in the meantime has put up about one hundred buildings in Long Beach and vicinity. Employing from eight to ten men in his successful and constantly growing business. He has bought a number of lots and put up twelve houses, six of which he has sold, still owning the remainder. His residence is located at No. 434 West Eighth street, and is presided over by his wife, formerly Katie A. Spencer, with whom he was united in marriage in Los Angeles county. They are the parents of two children, Edith V. and Edwin Marcus.

W. F. Sechrest.

Fraternally Mr. Campbell is a member of the Masonic organization and is associated with both the blue lodge and the chapter of Long Beach. In religion he attends and supports the Plymouth Congregational Church, and politically is a stanch Republican. He takes an active interest in the upbuilding of his home city, being a stockholder in the Peoples' Bank of Long Beach, and a member of the Board of Trade. In the line of his work he is treasurer of the Carpenters' Union. He has an abiding faith in the future prosperity of this section of the country and has invested his means in real estate.

W. F. SECHREST. A man of more than average business capacity, and an authority on all questions connected with the raising of fruit in Southern California, W. F. Sechrest, of Escondido, is well and favorably known as the owner and manager of the Limken Lemon Company. Public-spirited and enterprising, he is an able factor in advancing the interests of Escondido valley, encouraging and supporting the establishment of all beneficial projects. A son of Joshua Sechrest, now living in Oceanside, he was born April 5, 1875, in Kansas City, Mo., where he lived until seven years of age.

Born and reared in Kentucky, Joshua Sechrest spent several years in Missouri, after which he resided for a time in Kansas. At the breaking out of the Civil war he offered his services as a soldier, enlisting in the Union army and taking part in many battles. At the engagement at Lonejack, Mo., he was wounded and subsequently in another engagement was captured, and thereafter confined until the close of the war. In his political affiliations he is a strong Democrat. He married Sarah Miles, who was born in Indiana, and is now residing in Redlands, Cal., where the family settled when coming to this state in 1889.

Moving from Kansas City, Mo., to Kansas when seven years of age, W. F. Sechrest obtained the rudiments of his education in that state. Completing his school life in Redlands, Cal., he immediately began the study of fruit growing and in working for different fruit firms along the southern coast, became familiar with the details of the business, and since, with the exception of five years spent in the mill of the De LaMar Mining Company, has been connected with this industry. Coming to Escondido in 1902, he was engaged in ranching and fruit growing on his own account for two years, renting a ranch. The following year he was secretary for the Limken Lemon Company, in May, 1905, accepting the position of manager. In the care of its ranch, which, aside from its fruit orchards, contained five hundred acres of land, part being devoted to grain and part to grazing, he made many excellent improvements, among others of note being the planning of the large, fourteen-room residence which is of modern construction. Eight or nine years ago he planted fifty acres of lemons, and from this magnificent grove he gathered immense crops of fruit, shipping by the carload to the principal markets of the United States. In the care of this ranch, he employed from fifteen to twenty men, and from year to year steadily added to its productive value. March 1, 1906, he gave up the management of the ranch and purchased the packing business of which he is now the owner.

In 1900 Mr. Sechrest married Fannie Troutman, who was born in Arkansas, a daughter of J. W. Troutman, now a resident of Colton, Cal., and they are the parents of two children: Malissa and Ralph. Politically Mr. Sechrest is identified with the Repubican party as one of its strongest adherents, and while at Doble served as postmaster, and in Gold Mountain was notary public. He was reared in the religious faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has not departed from the teachings of his youth.

ABEL ADAMS. Numbered among the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Ramona is Abel Adams, who, as proprietor of the Adams house, is popular with the traveling public, his genial courtesy and evident desire to please and accommodate his numerous guests winning him a large and lucrative patronage. An ambitious, energetic man, he is also identified with other business interests, besides which he owns a ranch and has the care of considerable land. A son of the late Elihu Adams, he was born October 25, 1853, near Kempville, Canada, coming on the parental side from substantial English stock, and on the material side from Holland-Dutch ancestry.

Elihu Adams was born in Canada, and was there engaged in general farming during his active life. On retiring from business, being then a widower, he came to California, and here spent his last days, making his home in Ramona with his son, Abel Adams. He was a man of strong mental and physical vigor, and, with the exception of being nearly blind, was in robust health until about twelve days before his death, which occurred at the venerable age of eighty-six years, in 1903. He was a man of deep religious faith, and a member of the Episcopal Church. He married Diana Depencier, who spent her entire life in Canada, and they became the parents of seven children, three of whom, two sons and a daughter, have passed to the life beyond.

After his graduation from the Kempville high school, Abel Adams learned the trade of a shoe and harness maker, and for six years was in business in his native town. Coming to California in 1880, he was similarly employed in Sonoma county for two years. Locating in San Diego in 1882, he was employed as clerk in a shoe store for six years. Starting in business for himself in Ramona in 1888, he opened a shoe and harness shop, and very soon afterward embarked in the hotel business, buying the property which he now owns. During the eighteen years that he has been engaged as "mine host" he has met with unquestioned success, his care and attention to the wants and comforts of his many patrons gaining for him a substantial business.

In San Diego, January 31, 1884, Mr. Adams married Carrie Rogers, a native of Philadelphia, and they became the parents of five children, namely: Carrie Belle, who died at the age of two years and four months; Pearl Irene; Hazel Dell, wife of Doc Wilson, of San Diego; Hubert Abel; and Harold W. Politically Mr. Adams is a steadfast Republican, and fraternally he is a member of San Diego Lodge No. 28, K. P., and of the Ancient Order of Foresters. The family are members of the Episcopal Church.

PETER TRAUB. In 1877 the property now owned by the widow was purchased by Peter Traub, one of the early and substantial settlers of the vicinity of Long Beach, Los Angeles county, and a pioneer of that state, and since that time the family have remained residents of this section. Peter Traub was a native of Wittenberg, Germany, born January 2, 1841, his parents, Peter and Mary Traub, also being natives of the same locality. He was reared among the scenes of his childhood and after receiving an education in the common schools of the country became apprenticed to learn the trade of miller. His apprenticeship completed, he remained in his native country until 1866, when he decided to emigrate, and accordingly cast in his lot with those of his countrymen who were seeking homes and broader opportunities in the western world. He located in the city of Chicago upon his debarkation and there worked in a sash and door factory. Later in White county, Ill., he engaged in general farming, in which occupation he continued until 1874. Taking up his residence in California at that time, he was located in Ventura county for three years, when he came to Los Angeles county, and here purchased a farm of forty-five acres upon which he made his home until his death, which occurred December 20, 1896. He was a successful farmer and acquired a competency and a place among the early citizens of this community.

In Ventura county, Cal., April 15, 1877, Mr. Traub was united in marriage with Margaret Burkley, a daughter of Christ and Mary Burkley, both natives of Germany. They became the parents of the following children: Peter C., who, October 12, 1904, married Emma Manger, a native of Indiana; Mary, wife of John Shiesel, of Los Angeles; John G.; Louise, who died at the age of nine months and sixteen days; August; Charles H.; Albert A.; and George B.

JOSEPH I. KELLOGG. Industrious, energetic and practical, Joseph I. Kellogg has for a number of years been engaged in agricultural pursuits in Fallbrook, San Diego county, and is here carrying on general farming with excellent results, year by year adding to his wealth and to the value of his estate. A native of Iowa, he was born, June 2, 1856, in Clinton county, a son of Luther and Deborah E. (Sherer) Kellogg, the former of whom was born in Ohio, and the latter in Pennsylvania. His parents are now living in Santa Ana, Cal., being highly respected residents of that place, and members of the United Presbyterian Church. The father was employed in ranching and cabinet-making during his years of activity, and was a stanch worker in the Republican ranks.

One of a family of nine children, five of whom are living, Joseph I. Kellogg was brought up on the home farm, acquiring his early knowledge of books in the district schools of his native county. Taking upon himself the cares and responsibilities of a married man soon after attaining his majority, he embarked in farming on his own account, raising grain, cattle and hogs on his farm of eighty acres. In March, 1891, he made a change of residence, going to Missouri, where for one and one-half years he was identified with the agricultural interests of that state. Not entirely pleased with his prospects, however, he sold his farm and stock, and in the spring of 1893 came to Fallbrook to make a permanent settlement. Buying one hundred and sixty acres of land, he has since been busily employed in general ranching, including the raising of hay, grain, bees and chickens, profitable industries, which yield him a good income. A judicious worker and a good manager, prosperity has seemingly smiled on his every effort, and now, while yet in the prime of life, he has secured a comfortable competence and occupies an assured position among the thrifty farmers of the community in which he resides.

In Iowa, in 1878, Mr. Kellogg married Fanny D. Whitaker, who was born in that state, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Edna Lillian, twenty-six years of age; and Rollo M., seventeen years old. In former years Mr. Kellogg was identified with the Republican party, but he is now a Socialist. Religiously both Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg are consistent members of the United Presbyterian Church, towards the support of which they contribute liberally.

JEROME T. LAMB. One of the many worthy citizens and capable and industrious agriculturists of Los Angeles county, Jerome T. Lamb is the owner of a valuable little ranch, pleasantly located near Palms. Here he is successfully engaged in general ranching, exercising great skill and excellent judgment in this pursuit. A son of the late James O. Lamb, he was born, December 17, 1854, at Waukesha, Wis.

A native of Wethersfield, N. Y., James Owen Lamb was born August 19, 1825, and was left an orphan when a child. Subsequently he was bound out to a neighbor who proved very unkind to him, abusing him shamefully, overworking him, and giving him such educational advantages only as could be obtained in the short terms of night schools. At the age of fourteen years he ran away from his master, and with the assistance of an uncle shipped as cabin boy on a whaler, in New Bedford, Mass. He served in that capacity and as deck hand for four years, subsequently following the seas as second mate for seven years. Returning home at the end of that time, he visited first his mother, and then his brother, who was living in Wisconsin. Remaining in that state, he took up a tract of wild land and settled there as a householder, for two years being engaged in general farming. In 1862 he started with a company of miners for Oregon, taking the overland trail, and after getting in Echo Canyon all of the stock belonging to the little band of emigrants was stolen. He therefore decided to remain where he was, and for six years resided in Utah, being engaged in freighting across the mountains. In the fall of 1866, with five companions, he came to California, settling at San Bernardino, where he had charge of a dairy for two years. The following six years he was engaged in farming on his own account, renting a tract of land near Los Angeles. Coming then to Palms, he rented a ranch, and in addition to managing it successfully was road overseer of his district for twelve years. Removing to Fallbrook, San Diego county, in 1900, he there lived retired until his death, June 17, 1905, at the advanced age of four score years. He was a stanch Republican in politics, active in county and state conventions, and when young was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. February 21, 1854, he married Mary Jane Fillmore, who was born in New York state, and is now living at Fallbrook, Cal. She was a second cousin of Millard Fillmore, once president of the United States, and her mother was an own cousin of President Ulysses S. Grant.

The oldest of a family of eight children, Jerome T. Lamb remained at home until about twenty-two years old, when he began working out, giving his wages to his parents. Three years later he bought a small ranch at Lincoln Park, near Pasadena, where he lived four years, carrying on his own farm and working by the day in addition. Selling out, he came to Palms, purchasing twenty-five acres of land, and has since been prosperously employed in ranching, carrying on his own farm and renting other land in this vicinity. He pays some attention to fruit growing, having set out four acres of walnuts. He has made many excellent improvements on his place, which has increased in value ten fold under his management, he having paid but $50 per acre for it, while now it is worth over $500 per acre.

November 13, 1879, Mr. Lamb married Clara E. Short, who was born in Illinois, and came to the Pacific coast in 1878. Two children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lamb, namely: Mary Edella, wife of E. W. Jonnas, of Los Angeles, and the mother of two children, Helen Irene and Thelma; and Walter T., a well-known surveyor. Politically Mr. Lamb is an unswerving Republican, and a strong temperance man.

LORIN S. WARNER. During his ten years of residence on his ranch, one mile north of Valle Vista, Lorin S. Warner has taken an active interest in the life of his community and made many friends who hold him in the highest esteem. He was born October 23, 1853, in Wayne county, Ohio, the son of Joshua and Rebecca (Baker) Warner, both of whom were natives of the same state. The father resided on a farm in Ohio until 1879, when he went to Jefferson county, Kansas, remaining there until his death, in 1881, at the age of fifty-four years. The mother removed from Kansas to California in 1902, remained a short time, returned to Kansas for a period, and in 1904 went to San Diego to live, her death taking place in that city October 4, 1905, at the age of seventy-four years.

The public schools of Ohio were the medium through which Mr. Warner received his education, and after the removal of the family to Kansas in 1879, he engaged in farming in that state for a number of years, being also occupied at the carpenter's trade a part of the time. Coming to California in 1897 he located immediately on the ranch where he now lives, the tract of ten acres being devoted to apricots, peaches, pears, etc. In 1904 he got another tract of ten acres, which is devoted to alfalfa. By his marriage in Ohio, October 12, 1876, Mr. Warner was united with Sarah Shutt, a native of that state, and they became the parents of four children, one of whom died in infancy. The oldest son, George E., came with the family to California, and his death occurred December 10, 1899, at twenty-two years of age; L. L. is engaged in the real estate business in Los Angeles, and Ossian R., who is married and living at home, is engaged in teaming. The family are adherents of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally Mr. Warner is a member of the Knights and Ladies of Security of Los Angeles, and takes an independent stand in political matters, preferring to vote for men rather than measures when casting his ballot. That he takes an enthusiastic interest in educational matters is evidenced by his election to a trusteeship on the high school board of Hemet, a position which he filled for three years, and he has also served on the school board of Valle Vista.

JUAN JOSE CHAPMAN. A substantial and a highly respected resident of Palms, Juan Jose Chapman is specially deserving of mention in this volume, being a direct descendant of one of the first American settlers in this section of California. A son of the late Jose Juan Chapman, he was born February 11, 1855, in Los Angeles. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Chapman, an Englishman by birth, emigrated from his native land to the United States when young coming over in a vessel that was wrecked on the Pacific coast, near the present port of San Pedro. He was picked up on the beach by Andreas Machado, who took him to the home of his father, Ignacio Machado, owner of La Ballona rancho. Joseph Chapman could speak no Spanish, and his rescuers could not understand English. He remained with the Machados for some time, and being handy with tools subsequently built several houses in Los Angeles, and also erected the first flouring mill in the county, where the Capitol now stands. It was in Los Angeles that he became acquainted with and married Guadalupe Ortega. She was born in Santa Barbara, the descendant of an old and prominent Spanish family, and her father owned a large grant of land, which included the site of present city of Santa Barbara. Through his wife Joseph Chapman inherited much valuable land. He died in the prime of life, leaving eight children.

Born in Santa Barabara, Cal., Jose Juan Chapman inherited a portion of his parents' estate, but, in common with many other descendants of the early Spanish settlers of Southern California, lost title to his landed possessions. Moving then to Los Angeles he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, at the early age of forty-five years. His wife, whose maiden name was Josefa Villa, was born in San Jose, Cal., where her father, a Spaniard by descent, was living. In the early days he moved to Los Angeles county and became owner of a large ranch, now known as the Hamlin & Denker ranch, which the heirs lost, being forced to give up on account of faulty title. His wife, Mrs. Villa, owned at one time land in the heart of the city of Los Angeles, where the old postoffice stood, and this was sold, many years ago, for a barrel of whiskey. She also owned the land on which St. Charles hotel, in Los Angeles, now stands. She died in that city in 1862. Mrs. Jose J. Chapman died at the Palms in 1881 leaving four children, of whom Juan Jose, the subject of this sketch, is the youngest child, and the only son.

Eleven years old when his father died, Juan Jose Chapman remained with his mother until her death, during the later years of her life supporting her. At the age of seventeen years he began his agricultural career, working for others at first and subsequently locating at Inglewood, where he rented a large tract of land, four hundred or five hundred acres, from Daniel Freeman. While there he became active in public matters, through the influence of Mr. Freeman being appointed road overseer of La Ballona district, a position in which he served seven years. Coming from Inglewood to Palms, he has served here as road overseer for an equal length of time, and for four years was deputy sheriff of the county, during which time he also had charge of the farm of his father-in-law.

In 1882 Mr Chapman married Maria C. Higuera, who was born in Los Angeles county, near Palms, a daughter of Francisco Higuera, who owned about fifteen hundred acres of land in this vicinity, his farm being called the Ranch of the Oxen, or in Spanish, Rancho Rincon de los Buyes. Of his estate his daughter, Mrs. Chapman, inherited about one hundred acres in the Palms district, and this Mr. Chapman carried on successfully. They now own and manage about seventy acres of land, forty acres of which are valued at $1,000 per acre, while the remaining thirty acres are worth at least $300 per acre. In 1900 Mr. Chapman was appointed game warden by the county board of supervisors, being the only Democrat to receive an appointment by the board, and was afterwards appointed deputy game warden of the state, a position in which he served faithfully for two years. For three terms he was trustee of La Ballona school district, rendering efficient service. In politics he is an Independent Democrat, voting for the best men and measures. Socially he is a member of Pomona Parlor No. 109, N. S. G. W., of Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Chapman have four children, namely: Jose D., Juanita E., Eva C. and Frank J.

W. D. Sharp

WILLIAM F. SHARP. To be designated as one of the best-posted men on the subject of orange culture in a section in which there are located as many experts engaged in citrus fruit growing as there are in the country surrounding Colton is indeed an honor. This distinction belongs to William F. Sharp, manager of the Colton Fruit Exchange, which handles an average of four hundred carloads of fruit in a season, fifteen to twenty cars being lemons. A native of England, Mr. Sharp was born March 3, 1872, in Portsmouth, where he lived until eighteen years of age. His parents, Charles and Sarah (Rowe) Sharp, were also natives of England, and now make their home at North Havant, near Portsmouth. The father was educated in the naval engineering school on H. M. S. Marlborough at Portsmouth and served in the English navy for about forty years, acting as chief engineer in the Sheerness and Portsmouth government dock yards, a part of his duties being to examine the ships built by contractors for government service. He is now retired from active life and enjoying the fruits of a well-spent life. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp became the parents of thirteen children, eight of whom are living, only one being in America. Two of the sons are engineers in the employ of the English government. The parents are members of the Wesleyan Methodist Episcopal Church of England, and have always exerted an elevating influence upon the community in which they resided.

The early education of William F. Sharp was received in private schools in England, where he finished with a special college course, and after his graduation came to the American continent, spending the first four years on a cattle ranch in the Northwest Territory, Canada. From there he went to Corinne, Utah, where he became foreman of a three thousand acre ranch owned by the Bear River Water & Land Company, remaining in that position for sixteen months. In 1895 he came to Colton and immediately began to learn the orange business. Determined to become thoroughly familiar with all branches of the work from the growing of the fruit to its marketing he first secured employment on a ranch in San Bernardino county and when he accepted a position with the company with which he is now connected he started at the bottom and worked up to the managership and has during the busy season as high as forty-two women and fifteen men working under him, the fruit being sorted and graded as standard, choice and fancy quality. In his ten years of service for the Colton Fruit Exchange he has proven his worth to the firm and they regard him as one of their most valuable men.

In 1899 occurred the marriage of Mr. Sharp and Miss Minnie O. Robinson, who was born in Texas. Her father died there several years ago and her mother is at present living in Los Angeles. Three children have blessed this union, Charles, Winifred and Herbert. The parents belong to the Christian Advent Church, liberally supporting its various charitable and benevolent enterprises, and Mr. Sharp is an adherent of Republican principles. He is a member of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, and is also secretary of the Colton Automatic Rotary Engine Company. He has always devoted a large share of his time to matters of public import and is regarded as one of the most progressive citizens of his community.

B. F. HUBBERT. Among the enterprising and progressive men who have assisted in developing the agricultural resources of San Diego county B. F. Hubbert holds a noteworthy position. Owning and occupying one of the largest and best ranches in the vicinity of Oceanside, he is carrying on general farming and stock-raising with satisfactory results, giving excellent care and attention to his extensive interests. A man of sterling integrity and upright principles, he has won the confidence of the community in which he resides, his word being universally recognized as good as his bond, and is well worthy of the esteem and respect so heartily accorded him. A native of Texas, he was born, June 16, 1860, in San Saba county, where he spent his childhood days. A brief sketch of his parents may be found on another page of this work, in connection with that of his brother, Presley T. Hubbert.

At the age of thirteen years, B. F. Hubbert came with his parents to California, locating in San Diego county, where he completed his early education, attending the district schools. He subsequently assisted his father to some extent in his mining operations at the Banner gold mines, and was likewise interested in agricultural pursuits. Deciding to confine his attention entirely to the tilling of the soil, he located near Oceanside, buying land that was in its virginal condition. By dint of judicious labor and good management he has since converted this tract into a well-cultivated and highly productive farm, and is now proprietor of a valuable ranch of six hundred and four acres, which in its appointments and improvements compares favorably with any in the neighborhood. Public-spirited and energetic, he takes great interest in the welfare of his adopted county, assisting the many enterprises tending towards the advancement of its interests, and for the past sixteen years has held an official position in the community, serving as constable of Oceanside.

May 6, 1886, Mr. Hubbert married Mary Hicks, who was born in California, a daughter of H. B. and M. J. Hicks, early pioneers of this state. Her parents were both born and reared in Texas, living there until after their marriage. Starting subsequently for the Pacific coast, they had a hard trip across the plains, and after taking up their residence in California had a full share of troubles and hardships to endure. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hubbert two children have been born, namely: Murray, now eighteen years of age, and Ethel, attending school Politically Mr. Hubbert is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and religiously Mrs. Hubbert is a member of the Baptist Church.

GEORGE F. ALLEN. Whatever of success has come into the life of George F. Allen, a citizen of Somis, Ventura county, has been the result entirely of his own efforts, as he was early thrown upon his own resources with nothing but courage and industry to presage the worth of his future. Born in Madison county, Ill., January 4, 1872, he was a son of George W. and Jane (Renfrow) Allen, the latter of whom died when her son was an infant. The father was a farmer by occupation, following agricultural pursuits in Missouri until his enlistment for service in the Civil war, participating in the engagements of three years. His death occurred at Mt. Moriah, Mo., April 1, 1898.

George F. Allen received his education in the public schools of Missouri, in which state his boyhood and young manhood were passed, at the age of nineteen years becoming dependent upon his own resources. The opportunities of the west attracted him to the Pacific coast and in the vicinity of Portland, Ore., he found employment on a ranch for a time. Following this, he was located in the Willamette valley, after which he came to California and in Hueneme worked for Senator Bard for the period of seven years. He then engaged independently in ranching, at the present writing renting one hundred acres and cultivating thirty acres to beans, twenty acres to apricots, the remainder of the land being in general farm products. He has been successful in his work and has accumulated some property, owning a residence in Hueneme, while his yearly crops bring him substantial financial returns. In Hueneme, January 25, 1898, he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Susanna Dewar, a native of Canada, and born of this union was one child, now deceased. Mr. Allen is a member of the Baptist Church and a man of sound principles, as a public spirited citizen seeking to advance the best interests of the community.

GEORGE J. WEIGLE. One of the popular and successful German-American merchants of Pomona is George J. Weigle, who was born in Wurtemberg, near Stuttgart, February 6, 1865, and is a son of Michael and Christina (Myers) Weigle, also natives of Wurtemberg. In 1872 the family immigrated to the United States and settled on a farm in Lenawee county, Mich., six miles from Adrian, which was the family home for many years, or until the father disposed of the property and removed to Pomona, Cal., where he and his wife are still living.

Among the eight children born to his parents seven are living and George J. Weigle is the oldest of the number. As he was only about seven years of age when he left his native land the greater part of his education was received in the school of Palmyra, Mich. When his school life was over he took up farming in the vicinity of his home, and in fact remained with his parents until he was twenty-two years old, when, in 1887, he came to California. As yet he had no experience outside of agriculture and on coming to the west he very naturally sought employment along that line. During the same year, 1887, he secured employment on the Chino ranch in San Bernardino county, working as a butcher on this large stock ranch for three years. Upon giving up this position in 1891 he came to Pomona and bought out the stock and good will of the proprietor of the West Second street market. Under his management the business grew to such proportions that larger quarters were necessary and in 1894 he came to his present location, No. 240 South Main street, purchasing the property and opening his new business under the name of the Central market. However, he still owns and manages the original market on Second street. In connection with his markets Mr. Weigle has erected a large cold storage plant and refrigerator, in which his meats are carefully preserved until required to supply either his wholesale or retail trade. His markets are supplied from stock which he buys and feeds on his twenty-acre ranch two miles south of Pomona. Here also he is erecting a modern cold-storage plant to further facilitate his business. This will have a capacity of about a carload of dressed beef, also pork and mutton in proportion.

The home of Mr. Weigle at the corner of Seventh and Main streets was erected according to his own plans, and is considered one of the most home-like residences in the city. His wife was before her marriage Emma Hensler, who was born in Niles, Mich., but was married in Pomona. Three children have brightened their home life, Hazel, Leola and Anita. Fraternally he holds membership in the Knights of Pythias, Foresters, the Fraternal Aid and the Elks.

ROBERT LEE BRAND. The owner and proprietor of the Seaside market, R. L. Brand is one of the ablest men in his line not only in San Pedro, but in this part of the county, having acquired a success since his connection with this business in 1895 which has placed him among the prominent business men of this section. A native of West Virginia, he was born August 2, 1863, and is a son of Joseph L. and Delia (Furby) Brand, the former being a physician by profession. Giving up a lucrative practice in West Virginia in 1869 he located the same year in Balltown, Vernon county, Mo., and from that time until a few years ago followed his profession in that town and vicinity. Upon relinquishing his practice he removed to the adjoining county on the north, Bates county, where he owned a farm, and there followed an agricultural life until called to his reward, August 14, 1905, at which time he was in his eighty-sixth year. For twenty-five years he was deprived of the love and companionship of his wife, her death having occurred in 1880.

Up to the time he was six years old Robert L. Brand made his home in the locality of his birthplace, and vividly recalls the scenes and incidents connected with the removal of the family from West Virginia to Balltown, Mo., in 1869. His youth and early manhood were spent in the latter state, first attending the common schools in Balltown and later becoming interested in agricultural pursuits in that vicinity. Farming, however, was not the occupation which destiny had planned for his life work, for upon his removal to Visalia, Tulare county, Cal., in 1886, he turned his attention to learning the butcher's trade, a business which he has followed for nearly twenty years. During this time, however, he spent two years in Montana, where he was engaged in the lumber business, but upon giving this up he returned to Visalia and resumed work at his trade. Another interruption occurred in 1894, at which time he returned to the old family home in Bates county, Mo., and after managing its affairs for one year again came to the Golden state, locating this time in San Pedro. Once more resuming work at the butcher's trade he clerked in the shop of George Hinds for a short time and subsequently worked in the same capacity for J. L. Griffin for one year, at the end of which time he bought out his employer, thus establishing himself in the business life of San Pedro. Under his ownership and supervision the sales of the Seaside market have increased to such an extent that three clerks and a cashier are in constant service. Although Mr. Brand commands a large local trade, he makes a specialty of furnishing supplies in his line for out-going ships, his location being especially convenient to the docks.

After coming to San Pedro, in May, 1900, Mr. Brand was united in marriage with Clara L. Hansen, and one child, Clarence L., has blessed their union. While Mr. Brand is deeply interested in the prosecution of his private affairs he is not so absorbed as to neglect his duties as a citizen, but on the other hand is alive to the well-being of his adopted home town and casts his ballot for Democratic candidates. His fraternal connections include membership in the Masonic order, Eagles, Modern Woodmen of America and Eastern Star, all of San Pedro, and in all of which organizations he is known as a helpful, agreeable member. Personally Mr. Brand is a man of excellent character and genial manners and one of the most prominent and successful merchants of San Pedro.

CHARLES H. RUTLEDGE. The scenic wonders, the luscious fruits and brilliant flowers, and the genial climate of Southern California have made this section of the state the mecca for thousands of tourists and health-seekers every year, the number of visitors increasing each season. The lodging and entertaining of these strangers has become an art and a science in which many men of enterprise and progression have become proficient, prominent among the number being Charles H. Rutledge, widely and favorably known as proprietor of the Casa Del-Mar, at Ocean Park, Los Angeles county. A son of Lewis Rutledge, he was born at Kenton, Hardin county, Ohio, where his ancestors on both sides of the house settled in pioneer days.

Born and reared to agricultural pursuits, Lewis Rutledge continued as a tiller of the soil during his entire life of fifty-six years, dying in Hardin county, Ohio. He married Jane Tidd, who had the distinction of being the first white child born in Hardin county, where she was a life-long resident, her death occurring when she was about fifty-six years of age. Her brother Charles, after whom the subject of this sketch was named, still resides in that county, a venerable and respected man of ninety-three years, and during the sixty-one years that he and his wife have lived together they have occupied the same house.

Having completed his studies in the normal school at Ada, Ohio, Charles H. Rutledge secured a position and for seven years served as deputy county auditor. Subsequently, his wife's health demanding a change of climate, he came to California, settling first in Los Angeles, where, as a member of the De Van & Rutledge Company, he carried on a very successful brokerage business for a few years. Removing then to Riverside county, he embarked in the hotel business, being first manager for two years of a hotel in Idyllwild, and afterwards occupying a similar position at Hemet for two years. Returning then to Los Angeles, he owned and managed the Beacon hotel for about two years. Since that time he has devoted his time and energies to the management of his present hotel, the Casa Del-Mar, and has met with excellent success, his patronage being large and lucrative. Genial, courteous and accommodating, he makes his house attractive to all, and is popular with his guests.

In Ohio, Mr. Rutledge married Laura Hubble, a daughter of R. G. Hubble, and into their home two children have been born, namely: Jessie, wife of L. L. Warner, manager of the Smith Realty Company; and Harold Kenton. Politically Mr. Rutledge is a stanch supporter of the principles promulgated by the Republican party, and fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias and a member of the Independent Order of Foresters.

HANNA SCOTT TURNER, M. D. A half a century in the world's progress has witnessed vast changes in customs, and whereas at one time the association of women with any of the professions would have been looked upon as an intrusion, and, in many cases, perhaps, as unfeminine, so general has her appearance become in the professional and business life of the world that she is now esteemed an essential element in public life. The medical profession claims a goodly share of the gentler persuasion and among the number mention belongs to Dr. Turner, who since November of 1895 has been engaged in the practice of her profession in Pomona, with office in the Hansler-Rutan building, at the corner of Garey and Second streets. In addition to caring for her large private practice, in which she makes a specialty of obstetrics, she is also on the staff of Dr. Welbourn's hospital in Los Angeles.

Hanna Scott was born in Glasgow, Scotland, the daughter of Alexander Scott, a graduate of Dublin College. Immigrating to the new world with his family in 1853, he established his home in New Philadelphia, Ohio, but did not long survive to enjoy the benefits which awaited him, for his death occurred three years later. His wife, formerly Cecelia Sweeney, survived him many years, her death occurring in Bowerston, Ohio, in 1903. She became the mother of four children, only two of whom are now living. Miss Scott was reared principally in Leesville, Carroll county, Ohio, having been brought to the United States when quite a small child. Her common-school training was supplemented by a course in Hagerstown Academy, going from there to the normal at Lebanon. From Lebanon she went to Mattoon, Ill., where she was principal of schools for three years, leaving this position at the end of that time to become an instructor in the high school of Des Moines, Iowa. It was during her incumbency of this position, in 1875, that she took up the study of medicine under Dr. Dickinson, of the homeopathic school of medicine. Three years later the failure of her health made further study impossible at that time and in 1878 she came to the west, settling in Salinas, Cal., where for a time she followed teaching. In 1879 she became the wife of George Madison Turner, now a well-known horticulturist of Pomona, Cal. In the meantime, in 1878 and 1879, she had resumed her medical studies, entering the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Pacific, and in 1885 and 1886 she took an eclectic course in the California Medical College, graduating therefrom in 1887 with the degree of M. D. Immediately afterward she commenced the practice of her profession in Oakland, and eight years later, in November, 1895, she established her office in Pomona, a change which from a material standpoint to herself has been a wise one, for she has a large, lucrative practice and on the other hand Pomona has gained one more thoroughgoing citizen. Professionally she is identified with the National Eclectic Medical Association, State Eclectic Medical Association (of which she was at one time vice-president), Southern California Eclectic Medical Association (of which she was president in 1904), and the County Eclectic Medical Society. Socially she is a well-known member of the Ebell Club and the Pomona Woman's Club, and is associated with the following secret orders: Order of the Eastern Star, Fraternal Aid, Fraternal Brotherhood, Pendo,

MR. AND MRS. E. S. SHORT

Ladies of the Maccabees and the order of Washington. Her religious affiliation is with the Presbyterian Church.

George Madison Turner, a native of Greensburg, Ky., was a young lad when taken to Iowa, and in that state he was reared and educated. On attaining maturity he became identified with commercial affairs, dealing in wholesale produce in Burlington, Iowa. Later years found him interested in mining in Montana, and still later he was interested in the canning business with the J. Lusk Canning Company, at Oakland, and subsequently he was identified with a similar business in Sacramento. In 1890 he located in Chino, San Bernardino county, purchasing a ranch in that county not far from Ontario upon which he is successfully engaged as a horticulturist, although he makes his home in Pomona. Politically Mr. Turner is a Democrat, and his fraternal associations include membership in Pomona Lodge No. 246, F. & A. M., Pomona Chapter No. 76, R. A. M., Southern California Commandery No. 37, K. T., and the Woodmen of the World.

JAMES SHORT. A native Californian, James Short was born in San Bernardino January 7, 1865, a son of Elemelech S. and Sarah Ann (McGirr) Short. The father was the representative of an old Virginia family, his birth occurring in Howard county, Mo., June 28, 1826; the paternal grandfather, Zachariah Morgan, was born in Kentucky and became an early settler in Missouri, where he engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, finally going to Texas at the time of the war for independence and serving under General Fanning they were cut off by the Mexicans and eventually all were taken prisoners, but two escaping death, these a Mr. Hudson and Mr. White, returning and relating the story of the massacre. His wife was in maidenhood Mary Swearingen, a native of Kentucky and a daughter of Samuel who was born in Holland, a member of the Van Swerin family whose name was later changed to Swearingen. He served in the Revolutionary war and was a factor in the upbuilding of the community in which he made his home. Mrs. Short died in Missouri, leaving a family of five children, of whom E. S. is the only one living. E. S. Short was reared in Missouri and in 1848 when just past his eighteenth birthday he enlisted for service in the Mexican war. He served in the Howard county volunteers under General Donothaus, and participated in the battle of Hornada, San Jacinto, Guadeloupe and the City of Mexico. After his honorable discharge in Santa Fe in 1848 he returned to Missouri and remained in that state until 1852, when he outfitted with ox-teams and crossed the plains to California, via the Carson route to the mines of the El Dorado state. He followed mining for a time and then farming in Sacramento and San Joaquin counties, after which, in 1857, he made a trip to Tucson, Ariz. There he was placed in charge of the stage station at Butterfield, sixty miles west of Tucson, and there he remained for the period of two years. He had many exciting adventures, one of which was an attempt of the Indians one night to steal his horses from the corral, and although they were not successful they killed eight of the animals. In 1859 Mr. Short came to San Bernardino county and engaged in farming on the Base line, remaining in that location for several years, when he took up a ranch on Yucaipe Bench, where he has since resided engaged in general farming. He was married in San Joaquin county, January 16, 1857, to Miss Sarah Ann McGirr, a native of Rhode Island and a daughter of James and Ann (Dougherty) McGirr, who came from Ireland to America, locating first in Rhode Island and later in Clay county, Mo., whence in 1852 they crossed the plains to California by means of ox-teams and located in San Joaquin county. Later they came to San Bernardino county. Mr. and Mrs. Short became the parents of ten children, seven living, namely: John, a contractor of Kern county; James, of this review; Sylvester, of Yucaipe; Anna, Mrs. Merrilees, of San Bernardino; Rodolphus, of Kern county; Susan Belle, wife of Ed Burns, of Yucaipe Bench; and Theodore, in Kern county. Mr. Short is identified with the Odd Fellows fraternally, and both himself and wife are members of the Pioneer Society of San Bernardino. He is an entertaining companion, his retentive memory bringing to mind forcibly many interesting events of by-gone years, his recollection remaining vivid of the crowning of Queen Victoria, while he also remembers having personally met General Jackson.

James Short was reared on the home farm and educated in the public schools of San Bernardino, and when sixteen years old went out on the desert on a stock ranch, where he remained for three years. He then sold out his interests and engaged in teaming, hauling lumber for the San Bernardino mills. In 1886 he started farming on the Yucaipe homestead, now owning one hundred and forty-nine acres here, upon which he has built many improvements, and also owns one hundred and seventy-two acres, upon which are running springs from which water is piped to his homestead. He leases land to enlarge his farming operations, and carries on an extensive raising of grain and hay. He was married in San Bernardino county to Miss Susan Warren, a native of that section of Southern California, and born of this union are three children, Bertha, Sylvia Valentine and Sarah Eleanor. Fraternally Mr. Short is identified with the Redlands Lodge No. 341, I. O. O. F., and also the Woodmen of the World, of that city. Politically he casts his ballot in the interests of the Democratic party. He purchased a place on Stillman avenue and in 1907 erected a comfortable residence, where he has located his family in order that his children should have the advantages of a graded school.

WILLIAM SHUGG. As a prominent and successful walnut grower, William Shugg holds rank among the enterprising citizens of the Mountain View district, his finely improved ranch of nineteen acres being located within a mile and a half of El Monte. Mr. Shugg is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in Alhambra November 26, 1863. His father, James Shugg, was born in Kelston, England, and was there reared to young manhood, when he engaged as a miner. He immigrated to America and in Michigan worked in the copper mines in the Lake Superior region, and while thus engaged the great gold discovery of California turned his attention toward the Pacific coast. He immediately outfitted and set out across the plains taking the extreme southern route which led him through New Mexico and Sonora, Mexico, whence he made his way to Los Angeles, then only a pueblo. Deciding to remain in this section he secured for his first employment work with Nathan Kelley. Later he became foreman for B. D. Wilson at Alhambra and there helped set out orchards. With the thrift characteristic of his countrymen he saved his earnings and was thus able to finally purchase land, locating in the vicinty of Rivera, where in 1869, he set out the first walnut orchard of the section. From that time until his death, which occurred in 1882, he added to his property both as to acres and improvements, his sixty-acre ranch taking rank among the finest of this section of Los Angeles county. Up to the time of his death, at the age of sixty-four years, he was hale and hearty, retaining his interests in all public matters, and voting the Democratic ticket. He was survived by his wife, formerly Esther Graham, who was born in Crawford county, and crossed the plains with her father in 1852. She now resides in Rivera. They were the parents of six children, namely: Alyda, wife of Thomas Gooch, of Rivera; Mary, wife of Joseph Stanley, of Los Angeles; Joanna, wife of William Story, of Rivera; Thomas, who died in El Monte in 1902; Martha, wife of Justice Allison of Los Angeles, and William, of this review.

The boyhood days of William Shugg were passed on his father's farm near Alhambra, his education being received in the public schools in the vicinity of his home. He remained with his father until the latter's death, after which he and his brother Thomas engaged in the management of the home farm until 1886. At that date he purchased his present property and two years later set out a walnut orchard, now owning nineteen acres upon which he has built a fine residence, substantial outbuildings, etc., making of it one of the best ranches in this section. His brother Thomas also engaged as a walnut grower until his death in 1902.

In Alhambra, November 2, 1892, Mr. Shugg married Miss Alice McCaig, who was born in Downey, a daughter of George McCaig, who was brought by his father, John, from Arkansas in 1877. George McCaig engaged as a farmer in Downey for several years, and now resides in Puente following the same occupation. His wife formerly Janey Hurst, was born in Arkansas and died in Los Nietos in 1882. They had three children, of whom Mrs. Shugg is the oldest. Mr. and Mrs. Shugg are the parents of two children, Mabel and Emery. Mr. Shugg takes a deep interest in educational work, and is now serving as president of the school board. Fraternally he is associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which he is past master workman, and both himself and wife are members of the Degree of Honor, his wife being past chief. He also belongs to the Modern Brotherhood. Politically he is a stanch Democrat. He is a charter member of the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association, and is serving as a director and vice-president.

EDSON A. BENEDICT. A man of enterprise, ability and strong personality, the late Edson A. Benedict held a position of prominence and influence among the early pioneers of Los Angeles county, being one of the original settlers and his the first white family in Benedict's canyon. A man of keen discernment and excellent business tact, he took an important part in advancing the mercantile and agricultural prosperity of this part of the state, and throughout the community was held in high esteem. A native of New York, he was born October 8, 1819, in Elba, Genesee county, where he received a public school and college education. He subsequently read law, and was admitted to the bar of New York state, but never practiced his profession to any extent.

Ambitious to enter upon a business career when a young man, Mr. Benedict went to Boonville, Mo., where he was prosperously employed as a general merchant for a number of years, acquiring considerable wealth. In November, 1862, sailing from New York City on the Ariel, he started for the Pacific coast, and while en route the vessel was captured by the Alabama, near Kingston, and he and all on board were held as prisoners for twenty-four hours. Continuing the journey at the end of that time, Mr. Benedict came to California, and for four years thereafter was engaged in mercantile pursuits in Los Angeles. During the war, in which he took no active part, although his sympathies were with the south, his goods were confiscated, and he was left comparatively poor, having but $10,000 when he came here. His health failing, he then located in the canyon, near Sherman, taking up a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres, on which he made substantial improvements, by good management enhancing its value each season. He cultivated a part of the land himself, renting the remainder of his ranch on shares until his death, which occurred at his home, March 30, 1886.

On December 5, 1855, Mr. Benedict married Josephine Pierce, who was born June 3, 1832, in Virginia, where she lived for five years. Her father subsequently removed as a pioneer to Missouri, there becoming an extensive landholder and the owner of many slaves, the greater number of whom refused to accept their freedom, pleading to remain with their old master. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Benedict three children were born, all sons, namely: Edson Pierce, engaged in agricultural pursuits near Sherman; Frank Lee, of Los Angeles; and Angelo E., an oil well driller. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Benedict leased the home ranch until very recently, when she sold it for $10,000, reserving the house and a half acre of land. She also has property in Santa Monica, owning a lot in the residence part of the city. She is a woman of great intelligence and Christian virtues, and a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church.

JOHN KENNEDY. As a business man John Kennedy has been located in Santa Monica for a number of years, having established himself as a butcher, at first in a very small way, but gradually increasing his operations with his increase of trade until to-day he is named among the successful men of this community. Like the great majority of the men who have been prime movers in the development of this section of California, Mr. Kennedy is not a native of the state, his birth having occurred in Cleveland, Ohio, where his parents, James and Mary J. (Thornton) Kennedy, removed after their marriage. His father is a native of Ireland, who in youth was brought by his parents to Canada, where he was reared and educated, while his mother is of English birth. They are both living and are residents of California, where they located when their son was still a boy in years.

John Kennedy was educated principally in the schools of California. Upon leaving school he learned the trade of butcher in Santa Monica (where his home was located, his father being a rancher at that time, now retired), and in July, 1903, he opened a shop on his own responsibility. He necessarily began business on a limited scale, but it was not long before he was compelled to increase his capacity to supply the demands made upon his enterprise. He is now named among the successful business men of this city and bids fair to acquire financial returns which shall adequately compensate him for his efforts.

In 1895 Mr. Kennedy established home ties by his marriage in Los Angeles to Nettie Marshall Leeper, a native of Kansas, in which state she attained womanhood. Mr. Kennedy is identified fraternally with the Masonic organization, being a member of the lodge of Santa Monica, while in his political convictions he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is a man of energy and ability, takes an active interest in public affairs, and can be counted upon to further any plan for the advancement of the city's welfare.

ALBERT E. MEIGS. Noteworthy among the men of prominence in Los Angeles county is Albert E. Meigs, who, as the pioneer real estate dealer at Ocean Park, has taken an active part in the upbuilding of this section of the county and has been a promoter of its industrial and business prosperity. He evinces a deep interest in public affairs, and as postmaster at Ocean Park is giving able and satisfactory service. A son of William and Julia (Austin) Meigs, he was born in 1831, near Deposit, Broome county, N. Y.

Attending first the district schools of his native district, Albert E. Meigs completed his early education at the village academy in Deposit. He afterwards learned the carpenter's trade in Broome county and there followed it until his removal with the family to Wisconsin in 1852. In Dodge county he worked at both farming and carpentering for a number of years, in the meantime obtaining a good knowledge of bridge building. In 1864 he enlisted in Company E, Fiftieth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served as quartermaster sergeant until his honorable discharge, in the spring of 1866. Returning home, he soon afterwards removed to Mower county, Minn., where he bought land and engaged in agricultural pursuits for a time. Being subsequently appointed postmaster at Austin, the county seat, he served two terms under the administration of President Grant. Moving from there to Tennessee in 1877, he resumed his mechanical labors, and for nine years was in the employ of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company as a bridge builder.

Coming to California in 1886, Mr. Meigs engaged in bridge building in Los Angeles county, and when the boom was on in Los Angeles carried on an extensive and lucrative business in real estate, buying and selling freely. He subsequently engaged in the nursery business there for a few years, and at the same time was prominent in public affairs, serving a number of terms as deputy county and city assessor. In 1899 he established himself in Ocean Park, becoming the pioneer real estate dealer of this place, as such being active and prominent in its development. In 1902 he was appointed postmaster by President Roosevelt, and has served in this capacity since November of that year.

In Fond du Lac, Wis., Mr. Meigs married Mary P. Davis, and into their household four children have been born, namely: Nellie A.; Bert H.; Julia, wife of Linn McKinstry, of Minneapolis, Minn.; and Ernest. Politically, Mr. Meigs cast his first presidential vote for John C. Fremont, and has since been an earnest supporter of the Republican party. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow, and belongs to Kenesaw Post, G. A. R., of Los Angeles.

HENRY F. FRYER. When Mr. Fryer purchased the ten-acre ranch on which he now lives near Pomona he set it out to apricot trees, but these were later replaced by walnut trees. A native son of the state, he was born January 4, 1855, at El Monte, Los Angeles county, and is a son of Rev. R. C. and Caroline (Veazey) Fryer. The father was born in Alabama in 1821. When he was eighteen years old he made his first removal toward the west, at that time going to Conway county, Ark., and settling on a farm. It was about this time, too, that he formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Caroline Veazey, the ceremony being performed in Alabama in 1839. Thirteen years later Mr. Fryer continued his westward journey, coming over the plains behind slow-plodding ox-teams, having taken the southern route, which brought him to Los Angeles county. Pleased with the appearance of the country he purchased a ranch in the vicinity of what is now El Monte and settled down to the life which he had always followed. He had from early years been a man of deep religious convictions, and it was while on his ranch near El Monte that he received the call to prepare for special service in the Master's vineyard. In 1854 he was ordained a minister in the Baptist faith, he being the first minister of this denomination ordained in Southern California. For many years he devoted his time exclusively to the missionary field in the southern part of the state, and in fact the remainder of his life was spent here. In 1867 he purchased two hundred and fifty acres of land near Spadra, upon which he made his home until 1888, when he removed to Los Angeles, his death occurring in that city the following year, when he was in his sixty-ninth year. Some time after the death of his first wife Mr. Fryer was united in marriage with Mrs. Mattie Maston, and since the death of her husband Mrs. Fryer has continued to make her home in Los Angeles. Fraternally Mr. Fryer was a member of the Masonic Lodge, and was at one time master of El Monte Lodge and also of Pomona Lodge. After removing to Spadra, in 1870, he was elected on the Democratic ticket to represent his constituents in the state assembly, besides which he filled many lesser offices within the gift of his fellow-citizens, among them school trustee. A man of considerable ability and prominence, he wielded a broad influence for good wherever he was placed and all who were associated with him in the pioneer days revere his memory. Born of his first marriage were eleven children, but of this number only six are now living.

It was after the removal of the family to California that Henry F. Fryer was born, his birth occurring in El Monte, Los Angeles county, January 4, 1855. Such educational advantages as the schools of that locality had to offer were his, and of these he made the most, thus giving him a foundation upon which to build in later years by reading and observation. Until twenty-three years he remained at home with his parents, and then started out on his own behalf by renting a ranch near El Monte. Some time later he gave this up and went to Spadra, same county, where he was married to Miss Ella M. Arnett, a native of Mendocino county and a daughter of Robert S. Arnett, the latter coming of a family well known in the south. (For a more detailed account of the family, refer to the sketch of Robert S. Arnett, found elsewhere in this volume.) Soon after his marriage Mr. Fryer returned to El Monte and resumed agricultural life, renting a ranch upon which he lived for about three years. It was in 1882 that he came to the vicinity of Pomona and took up ranching, and since 1892 he had made his home on the ranch which he now occupies, comprising ten acres of as fine land as is to be found in the county. When it came into his possession it was bare land, but he set out apricots and for a time continued to raise this commodity, but believing better returns would be forthcoming if the land was planted to walnuts he had the apricot trees taken up and walnuts set out in their place.

Geo. D. Stevens.

One son blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Fryer, Wallace F., who married Miss Grace Bottsford, who was born in Pomona. Both Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Fryer are members of the Baptist Church. Politically Mr. Fryer is a believer in Democratic principles, and fraternally he holds membership in the Fraternal Aid.

REV. GEORGE D. STEVENS. As an instructor of youth in his early manhood and as a minister of the Gospel in his mature years, Rev. Mr. Stevens filled a sphere of distinct usefulness in the localities whither duty called him, and as he looks back over the past he may gather encouragement and happiness from the thought that the days of his greatest physical and mental activity were given to the spiritual and educational upbuilding of the race. In the quiet routine of his self-sacrificing labors, helping the needy, encouraging the despondent, uplifting the fallen, teaching the erring and ignorant, he passed from the morning of life to its evening twilight calm, yet he has not allowed his activities to be diminished, having merely changed their form of service. Since coming to California on his retirement from the ministry he has made his home in San Diego county, and is now a leading citizen of Bonsall, where he has officiated as postmaster, has served as notary public, has acted as telephone agent and during the entire period since 1893 has been proprietor of a general mercantile store.

Early in the colonization of Massachusetts the Stevens family became identified with its pioneers and some of that name moved to Maine while it was still a district of the old Bay state. Thomas and Mahala (Bartlett) Stevens were natives of Maine, the latter being a descendant of a noble and wealthy family of England. In addition to engaging in agricultural pursuits, Thomas Stevens followed the trades of carpenter and harness-maker. Prominent in local affairs, he filled practically all of the offices of his township. In early life he was a believer in Democratic principles as enunciated by Andrew Jackson, but when the slavery question became the most serious problem confronting the nation he changed his affiliations to the Republican party, for he was a thorough-going abolitionist in sentiment. His father, Daniel, was a Revolutionary soldier and he himself possessed the military instincts, but the age limit prevented him from enlisting in the Civil war. In religious faith both he and his wife were Baptists and devoted to the progress of that denomination. After his death, which occurred in Maine at the age of sixty-four years, his widow went to Wisconsin and there died when sixty-eight years old.

In the family of Thomas Stevens there were seven children, and of these four sons are now living, among them being George D., who was born at South Paris, Oxford county, Me., September 5, 1836, and received excellent educational advantages in the schools of the state. After a preparatory course of study in Hebron Academy he matriculated in Waterville College and remained a student in that institution until he was graduated with the class of 1863. Immediately after completing his college course he took up the work of teaching, spending a few months in that occupation in New York, after which he removed to Wisconsin and for seven years acted as principal of the Richland Center public schools. In addition he was honored with the office of county superintendent of schools of Richland county, to which position he was elected on the Republican ticket. The work of an educator was relinquished for the duties attendant upon a minister of the Gospel, and for twenty-six years he was a patient, resourceful and faithful preacher in the Baptist denomination, holding a number of important pastorates in Wisconsin and accomplishing much for the upbuilding of the denomination and the cause of Christianity. Shortly after he had started out to make his own way in the world he established domestic ties, being united with Miss Helen Wing in 1865 and some years after her death he married again, in 1894 being united with Mrs. Linda (Wing) Stevens, a native of Somerset county, Me., and like himself a faithful member of the Baptist Church.

THOMAS SCHULYER INGHAM. Although far removed from the scene of his birth and early training Mr. Ingham is, to all intents and purposes, a native Californian, his residence in the state dating from the year 1870, December of that years witnessing the removal of his parents from the more thickly settled east to the broad and promising west. Born December 12, 1855, he is a son of Warren R. and Sarah Louise (Schuyler) Ingham, the latter still living at the age of seventy-nine years. The death of the father, May 19, 1905, closed a long and useful career of eighty-three years. Upon coming to the west in 1870 he first located in Santa Barbara county, but the following year he came to San Bernardino county, and shortly afterward took up land from the government in section 33, the same now being the site of the thriving village of Highland. His waving fields of barley, to which his land was first planted, in time gave place to the cultivation of oranges, a decided innovation in this locality, for to him is credited the planting of the first orange grove in the vicinity of Highland.

While still an infant Thomas S. Ingham was taken by his parents to Lockport, Niagara county, N. Y., where he was educated and where he received his initiation into the world of business. Some time after coming to the west with his parents he engaged in the nursery business on land which is now included in the corporate limits of Highland. After making his home in Los Angeles for several years he returned in 1900 and purchased the property upon which he now resides, consisting of fifty acres, thirty acres in wine grapes, eight in oranges and four in alfalfa, the remainder being in other fruits. The previous owner had not been especially successful in his ranching efforts, as was evidenced in the dilapidated condition of the ranch when Mr. Ingham assumed its control. His pioneer efforts in the matter of irrigation have practically been the making of the town, and as the father of irrigation he bears the esteem of its grateful citizens. His first attempt dates back to the year 1887, before the panic, and as early as 1884 he raised grain on ground where now stands the depot and business portion of the town. While in the nursery business during this time he sold over $200,000 worth of orange trees in one year, but as has been previously stated a turn in the tide followed and resulted in the loss of his business. Once more, however, he is on the high road to success, and is conceded to be one of the most prosperous ranchers in San Bernardino county.

LEWIS NATHANIEL SMITH. Very early in the colonial history of America the Smith family came from England and established the name in New England, and the records state that the great-great-grandfather of L. N. Smith, Caleb Smith, was born in Needham, Mass., and followed farming in that state throughout his active years. Among his children was a son Barak, who was born in Dedham, Mass., in 1755. The next in line of descent was Jabez, who was born in Dover, Mass., was subsequently in Connecticut for a time, and still later established the family in Vermont, which was then practically a new country, and he made his way to his destination in Windham county by means of ox-teams, blazing a path through the forests. It was while the family were residing in Connecticut that Reuel Smith was born near Ashford, that state, and he was still quite young when his parents established the family home in the Vermont wilderness. Near Wilmington, that state, he improved a fine farm from the heavy forest covered land and made his home thereon the remainder of his life. He died at the age of seventy-one years, cheered and upheld by his faith in the Christian religion, having been a prominent member of the Congregational Church for many years. During his young manhood he chose as his life companion Lucinda Adams, who was born in Vermont, the daughter of Nathaniel Adams, the latter being a native of Ashburnham, Mass., and a pioneer farmer in Vermont. The mother also died on the Vermont homestead, and of the four children born to her two are now living, Lewis N. and F. R., the latter a farmer near Wilmington, Vt. One son, William H., participated in the Civil war as a member of the Eighth Vermont Regiment, being made captain of his company. He was wounded a number of times during Sheridan's raid and the battle of New Orleans, and as a result his death occurred soon afterward in Chicago, Ill.

The youngest of the four children in the parental family was Lewis Nathaniel Smith, who was born on the family homestead near Wilmington, Windham county, Vt., October 10, 1840. Brought up to an intimate knowledge of farm duties, until nineteen years of age he was an invaluable assistant to his father, and in the meantime he had attended the district school and also taken a course in Leland Gray Academy, in Townshend, Vt. His experience thus far had taught him that his tastes did not lie in the direction of agriculture and when nineteen years old he took a position in a general store in Newfane, Vt., with the idea of learning the business. After remaining six months with his employer in that place he went to Chicopee, Mass., and later to Springfield, that state, in both of which places he continued his interest in the dry goods business. An interruption came into his life during 1862-63, during which time he had enlisted in the army, but he was rejected on account of his height. Thereafter he removed to Troy, N. Y., where, from 1864 until 1873, he engaged in the dry goods business, in the latter year removing to Worcester, Mass., and continuing in the same line of business for one year. For eight years thereafter he carried on a grocery business in the same location, and at the same time handled and improved considerable real estate, finally disposing of his grocery in order to devote his entire time to the real estate business.

It was in 1898 that Lewis N. Smith severed his connection with the east, so long his own home as well as many generations of the family, and established himself in California, in November of the same year locating in Pomona. He purchased a ranch on San Antonio and Central avenues, upon which he made a specialty of raising oranges for about three years, selling his ranch at the end of that time and purchasing his present property in Claremont, on Central avenue. Here he owns fifteen acres, twelve of which are in oranges and three in lemons, and in 1902 he erected the family residence on the corner of College avenue and Seventh street. The ranch has an excellent location, being a part of the Loop tract, and is irrigated from the San Antonio cañon. The organization of the Citizens' Light and Water Company of Claremont, in 1903, was largely the work of Mr. Smith, who from the first was a director in the company. From 1904 until January, 1907, he was its president and manager, and since that date has been its secretary and manager. He is also a member of the Southern California Fruit Exchange, and is president of Claremont Citrus Union, which is a branch of the former organization. Other enterprises in the town outside of horticultural interests also benefit by his broad knowledge and keen insight, among which are the Claremont Lumber Company, of which he is president, and the State Bank of Claremont, of which he was one of the organizers and is now a director. He is also a member of the board of selectmen of Claremont. He finds his religious home in the Congregational Church, in which he is an active worker as he is in everything else to which he lends his name and influence. Since 1903 he has served as treasurer of the church. He was made a Mason in Chicopee (Mass.) Lodge, and subsequently transferred his membership to Athelstan Lodge, Worcester, that state, and also belongs to the chapter in that city. Politically he is a stanch supporter of Republican principles.

Mr. Smith's marriage, March 14, 1866, united him with Miss Elizabeth W. Wood, the ceremony being performed in Worcester, Mass. The Wood family is one whose history can be traced to the early settlement of New England, the immigrant of the family, Thomas Wood, leaving his native England in 1654, at the age of twenty, and establishing the family in Massachusetts. Great-grandfather Dexter Wood was a native of Uxbridge, Mass., and from there enlisted his services in the Revolutionary war. His son Samuel was also born in Uxbridge, and throughout his active years carried on farming in that vicinity; his wife, before her marriage, was Rachel Albee. Among the children born to Samuel and Rachel Wood was Amos Wood, he too being a native of Uxbridge, where he followed the builder's trade throughout his active years. His marriage to Miss Rozetta Storrs united two old colonial families, and Mrs. Smith's maternal great-grandfather, Major Joseph Storrs, fought valiantly in the Revolutionary war. He also donated one hundred and ten acres to Dartmouth College, in Hanover, N. H. Mrs. Smith's maternal grandfather, Rev. William Storrs, a native of Connecticut, was a graduate of Dartmouth College, receiving his diploma in 1788. As a minister in the Congregational denomination he served as pastor of the congregation at Westford, Conn., for about thirty years and for a time was also chaplain in the Revolutionary war. His wife was formerly Abigail Hovey. Two children were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis N. Smith. The son, William Lewis Smith, who is a graduate of Worcester Polytechnic Institute, is now assistant city engineer in Worcester; and the daughter, Mary E., died in infancy.

CHESTER B. LOOMIS. When a man with mechanical talents secures not only a thorough general education, but all of the scientific training available at the best engineering schools in the United States, he is in a position to make rapid strides in his profession when he pursues it on practical lines. Chester B. Loomis, who is superintending engineer of the Abbot Kinney Company at Venice, Cal., was born at Three Rivers, Mich., a son of Elisha and Lucy (Brown) Loomis, the former a native of New York and the latter of Ohio. The father went to Ypsilanti when a young man and studied under some of the best railroad engineers, and followed that occupation for many years. Later he became a merchant in Ypsilanti, where he and his wife are now living.

The preliminary education of Chester B. Loomis was received in the Ypsilanti public schools and after completing his work there he entered the engineering department of the University of Michigan, graduating with the degree of B. S. As he had previously had some years of practical work in engineering lines he made rapid strides in his profession after his graduation from college. His first position was with the Western Electric Company of Chicago, then he became a draughtsman and made estimates for the Brooks Locomotive Works at Dunkirk, N. Y., after which he went to Sparrows Point, Md., being employed as erecting engineer and assistant chief engineer for the Maryland Steel Company. Following this he accepted the position as chief engineer for the Rockhill Furnace Company at Rockhill Furnace, Pa. Resigning from this place Mr. Loomis came to San Francisco and became draughtsman and estimate man at the Union Iron Works of that city. His first position in Los Angeles was with the Edison Electric Company, which place he continued to occupy as their engineer until he became superintending engineer for the Short Line Beach Company. After finishing their construction work he accepted his present position.

Mr. Loomis is a thoroughly educated man and an expert engineer, and in all of his business undertakings he has met with remarkable success. His devotion to his work does not prevent him from taking an active interest in matters of public import and he is recognized as a public spirited citizen, who is ready to lend a hand in every progressive enterprise. His marriage to Miss B. L. Burck, a native of Texas, occurred in Los Angeles.

HOWARD L. SEYMOUR. The planing mill industry of Southern California has had in Mr. Seymour one of its most enterprising advocates, his thorough knowledge of the business and his splendid mechanical ability having materially augmented his success in this line. With his brother, J. E., he is located in Redlands and under the firm name of Seymour Brothers is conducting an extensive enterprise, which in its employment of men and its output of product has proven one of the upbuilding factors of the city and surrounding country. A native of Oneonta, Otsego county, N. Y., he was born January 26, 1849, being a son of Elias Chidsey and Lucy (Loveland) Seymour, both natives of Delaware county, same state. The father was born in February, 1815, and in young manhood learned the trade of cabinet maker. In 1852 he removed to Pennsylvania, following a similar enterprise, and finally locating in Bradford county, in the town of Troy, he combined with it the work of undertaker and also established a planing mill. He is now a resident of Athens, Pa., being in his ninety-second year. His wife died in Pennsylvania some years since. They had six children, namely: J. E., who served in the First New York Veteran Cavalry during the Civil war, and is now engaged with his brother in Redlands; Frances N., Mrs. Mettler, of Washington; E. C., who served in the Civil war and is now located in Highland, Cal.; H. L., of this review; Lucy, Mrs. Newman of Athens, Pa.; and Josephine, Mrs. Baker, of Canton, Pa.

Howard L. Seymour was reared in Bradford county, Pa., from three years of age, and educated in its common schools and the Troy Academy. He learned the trade of cabinet maker and the planing mill business, working as engineer from young manhood, having been in the shops from the age of fourteen years. He remained with his father until he was twenty-six, when he went to Elmira, N. Y., spent five years there and then came to Southern California and in San Bernardino valley engaged in the planing mill business for Lenville & Son, and J. J. Whitney, and also established an independent enterprise under the firm name of Pratt & Seymour. Upon the founding of Redlands he established the first planing mill in partnership with Al Pratt, the firm being Pratt & Seymour. They engaged in the manufacture of lumber for six months when Mr. Pratt purchased the entire interest, and six months later Mr. Seymour established another enterprise in partnership with his brother, J. E. Seymour. The latter was born in Bainbridge, N. Y., and in that place learned the trade of cabinet maker. His work was interrupted by the call to arms in 1861, when he enlisted as a musician in the Twenty-seventh Regiment New York Infantry, and served in the Civil war until the mustering out of all musicians. In 1863 he served in the Twenty-sixth Pennsylvania Emergency Regiment; in the fall of that year he entered the First New York Veteran Cavalry as quartermaster sergeant, and was located in the Shenandoah valley until the close of the war. He received a wound at Woodstock, Va., but was not long from the field. After returning to civic life he engaged in the milling business in the east until 1887, when he came to California, locating first in San Bernardino and a year later in Redlands, where he has since been engaged with his brother in the planing mill business. His marriage occurred in Canton, Pa., and united him with Miss Martha Newman, who was born in the Wyoming valley, Pa., and they have two children, Carl, of Redlands, and Emma, wife of F. Cryor, of Los Angeles.

The Seymour Brothers built the second planing mill in Redlands in 1888, it being then a very small affair about 16x20 feet in dimensions, and since that time they have enlarged the enterprise, putting up a building 80x100 feet, two stories in height, and fully equipped with all modern methods—electric and steam power, etc.,—the greater part of the wooden machinery being their own inventions. They have carried on the greater part of the business of the city for many years and are named among the strongest upbuilding factors of the industries of the section. Mr. Seymour was married in Elmira, New York, to Miss Olive Merrill, a native of Rockford, Ill., and they became the parents of the following children: Sylva, Mrs. Everett, of San Bernardino; Nellie, Mrs. Rulin, of San Pedro; Grace, Mrs. Kinzel, of East San Pedro; Olive, Mrs. Rulin, of Kansas City, Mo.; Etta, Ruby, Pearl and Byron at home. Their home is in San Bernardino. Mrs. Seymour is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, and their support is liberally given to its charities. In politics Mr. Seymour is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party.

John D. Stone

JOHN D. STONE. Southern lineage reaching back to the early settlement of our country is represented in the genealogy of the Stone family, whose members were intimately associated with the development of Kentucky during the nineteenth century. Coleman D. Stone, who was born and reared in the Blue Grass state, became an early settler of Missouri, moving there at a period when land was cheap, settlers few and the surroundings those of the frontier. After establishing his home in the midst of such environments he met and married Louise Keithly, a native of that state, and they continued to reside there during the remainder of their lives. Her death occurred in 1878, at the age of sixty and two years later he passed away at the age of seventy-four. While they were living in Monroe county, Mo., their son, John D., was born in 1841, and in that section of the state he passed the years of youth. The first experience he had of the world outside of his home locality was gained by the journey across the plains to California in 1863, when he traveled via team and wagon with a party of emigrants, bringing four hundred head of mules and fifty head of horses.

After a tedious but uneventful journey of sixty-one days the party landed at Sacramento in June of 1863, and soon afterward Mr. Stone secured employment as a farm hand. During the same year he went to Nevada and began to operate a stage line, which he continued for six years, and then worked in the quartz mills on the Carson river. Returning to Missouri in 1869, he visited old friends for a time, and then spent a few years in the Indian Territory and Texas. It was not until 1882 that he returned to California, at which time he settled in San Diego, being led to come hither in the hope that the equable climate might prove beneficial to his failing health. Not only was this hope gratified in the realization of restored health, but in addition he has prosperously engaged in ranch pursuits and has acquired a fine ranch of four hundred and one acres near Mesa Grande. Almost ever since coming to this locality he has officiated as school trustee and his services have been helpful in the development of a satisfactory free-school system.

After his return from California to his old Missouri home Mr. Stone married Miss Lucy H. Leach, who was born and educated in Missouri and with whom he had been acquainted prior to his first trip to the west. It was in 1870 that they established a home of their own and twelve years later they became residents of California, buying the ranch they now occupy. They are the parents of four children, namely: Carrie Belle, wife of Cleason Ambler, who resides in Mesa Grande; James H., also living in Mesa Grande; Imogene, a student in the San Diego Normal School; and Arthur G., the youngest of the family, who is yet at home with his parents on the ranch and assists in the supervision and care of the place. Habits of close observation, wide travels and much reading have given Mr. Stone a broad fund of information upon all subjects of general importance and he has formed decided opinions upon questions pertaining to the general welfare, being politically an adherent of the Socialistic party and a firm believer in the doctrines of socialism.

SHASTA AUGUSTUS TRIPP. A romantic interest centers about the name and fortunes of the Tripp family of Riverside county, for it was on the ranch owned by a member of the family that the scene for the famous novel of Helen Hunt Jackson was laid, the goats mentioned in the story belonging to the subject of this review, whose father figured as Judge Wells in the book. The name was established in Southern California at an early date in the history of the state, the father of the present generation, S. V. Tripp, having located here in 1860 and ever afterward proved himself an important factor in the upbuilding and development of this section of the country. For full particulars concerning his life refer to his biography, which appears on another page of this volume.

Shasta Augustus Tripp, the subject of this review, was born in the city of Los Angeles, December 22, 1857; the family fortunes being located in San Bernardino county three years later, his education was received in the common schools of that place. In young manhood he was apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith, and this occupation, combined with bricklaying (which he learned with his father), has continued his principal employment up to the present time. He has been successful in his work and has built up a reputation for excellence in his line, both in Riverside and San Diego counties, having spent considerable time in the latter section. His home is now located in San Jacinto and is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Viola Covington; they are the parents of eight children, namely: May Etna, who married W. E. Simpson and has one son, Joseph Augustus; William C. and Charles H., twins; Lillie, Maude, Effie, Jesse H. and Frederick J. Mr. Tripp is held in high esteem for the qualities of manhood which have been demonstrated throughout his long residence in this section, appreciated for his helpful characteristics in both private and public life, for he is a citizen who may always be depended upon to support the best interests of the community, state or nation.

CHESTER G. ARNOLD. One of the most successful young men in the Santa Clara valley is Chester G. Arnold, of Ventura county, who farms his father's ranch of four hundred acres, which is one of the best and most highly improved properties in the state. He was born September 29, 1881, on the place where he now lives, the son of Mathew H. Arnold, a native of Illinois, whose parents, Cutler and Emily (Hough) Arnold, came to California in 1852 by the Panama route. They ranched in the northern part of the state for sixteen years before settling in Ventura county. The father of Chester G. bought this ranch in 1868 and now lives on a farm near Ventura. He is sixty-three years old, has led an active life, taking an interest in all matters of public interest, and at one time served on the board of supervisors of Ventura county. The mother, who was Eliza Jane Perkins before her marriage, is a native of Maine and is also living.

Of the four children in the family, Chester G. Arnold is next to the oldest. He received a preliminary education in the public schools of Ventura county, then graduated from the Ventura Business College, after which he completed a course in the Woodbury Business College of Los Angeles. When his education was finished in 1901 he returned to his home and took charge of the ranch which he now conducts. His crops are principally beets, beans and alfalfa. He is interested in the raising of fine stock and has on the place some fine hogs of the Poland-China and Berkshire breeds, while his standard-bred horses, especially the G. W. McKinney and Silver Coin colts, are his pride, for he is a great admirer and good judge of horse flesh. The ranch has on it a splendid twelve-inch flowing well, and is provided with all kinds of necessary buildings and other modern improvements.

Mr. Arnold is a Republican politically, and fraternally he affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America and Royal Neighbor lodges of Hueneme. His marriage to Miss Daisy Emma Korts, a native of Hueneme, occurred at Ocean View. As a liberal and enterprising citizen he takes a leading interest in all public matters of social and economic interest and is now doing his share in developing this section of the state.

CHARLES ENGEBRETSON. During the period of his residence in San Diego Mr. Engebretson has shared the city's experiences of mingled adversity and prosperity, for not only has his builder's trade proved more profitable in times of local prosperity, but in addition his real estate investments have brought him more satisfactory returns. When he came to San Diego in the fall of 1886 he found conditions favorable for a carpenter, hence decided to remain and work at his chosen occupation. With his earnings he made investments in property, but when the financial depression depreciated land values throughout all of Southern California he found himself $1,000 in debt with the passing of the boom. Since then, however, he has not only repaid all that he owed, but also has accumulated a competency through unwearied application to his business affairs.

Near the rock-bound shores of Norway, where Bohus bay juts into the mainland, lies the village of Skien, and there for years a carpenter, Engebret, and his wife, Karen Jensen, made their home and reared their family. Of their eight children three sons and four daughters are now living, and the youngest of these, Charles, who was born at Skien, April 21, 1864, is the only one who settled in California. When he was yet a small boy he learned every detail of carpentering under his father's oversight and at sixteen he began to work for wages, soon gaining a local reputation for skilled work and devotion to duty. On coming to the United States in 1883 he secured employment in Chicago and remained there for three years, but in the spring of 1886 came to the Pacific coast to establish his home. After six months in San Francisco he settled in San Diego, where he has since engaged at his trade. With the exception of three weeks during 1889, when he prospected with little luck in Lower California, he has continued uninterruptedly at carpentering and contracting, having taken up the latter work in 1892. In addition he draws plans for buildings, when so desired. Among his contracts may be mentioned those for the Sefton block, Fox & Heller block, Williams building, Coronado pavilion, the residences of Mrs. Garrettson, Rev. Mr. Mills, Messrs. Hawley, Herbert, Nason, Carroll, Heffelman, etc., besides a number of the buildings at Fort Rosecrans. At various times he has built ten houses on his own lots and seven of these he still owns, including his family residence at No. 1120 Twenty-first street.

The first marriage of Mr. Engebretson took place in Chicago and united him with Miss Dora Gundersen, who was born in Christiansand, in the southern part of Norway, and died at San Diego, leaving three children, Esther, Francis and Paul. In San Diego, December 6, 1894, occurred the marriage of Mr. Engebretson and Miss Ida Carlson, who was born in Smaland, Sweden. Two children bless this union, Ralph and Carl. The father of Mrs. Engebretson is Carl Carlson, a railroad inspector, who with his wife still survives, as do all of their seven children. One of the sons, Axel, resides in New York, while two of the family, Mrs. Engebretson and Gustav Carlson, are making San Diego their home. The family are identified with the Lutheran Church and interested in its progress.

After coming to San Diego Mr. Engebretson was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and further has been actively connected with the Woodmen of the World, in addition to being a charter member of the Scandinavian Society, of which he now acts as treasurer. The San Diego Chamber of Commerce numbers him among its members. On the organization of the Master Carpenters' Association he became one of its charter members and now is serving upon its board of directors. Loyal to his adopted country, a voter in the Republican party, a contributor to local enterprises as his ability permits, solicitous for the development of his home town and county, he represents that class of foreign-born residents who have added so materially to the progress and present standing of California and have proved their progressive spirit by their practical management of affairs.

CHARLES P. LITTLEPAGE. Occupying a picturesque location on a mountain in San Diego county and affording a splendid view of the surrounding country, the ranch home of Mr. Littlepage possesses unusual attractions by reason of its unique environment. The property has been in the possession of the family for a long term of years, their patent coming to them from the government. At the time it was acquired by its present owner the homestead comprised only one hundred and twenty acres, but he has added to the original tract from time to time until now his possessions aggregate seven hundred and sixty acres. Owing to the mountainous character of the farm it is well adapted to stock-raising, and the owner's specialty is the raising of grade cattle and the carrying on of a dairy business with about twenty cows in the dairy.

The Littlepage family is of Virginian extraction, and William W. Littlepage left the Old Dominion to seek a home in the then frontier regions of Missouri, later going south to Texas and eventually crossing the desert and mountains to California. While making his home in Blanco county, Tex., a son, Charles P., was born February 4, 1864, and at the time of coming west this son was only four years of age; hence his early recollections cluster around the county of San Diego, where the family were pioneer ranchers in Ballena district. One of his childhood's recollections is that of the building of a house of hewed logs in 1870, and he recalls how the logs were hewed by the older members of the family and then hauled by ox-teams to the site of the home. The building was constructed in a substantial manner and its roof is as good to-day as when put on nearly thirty-seven years ago. For some years the house has been used for the colonies of bees kept by the owner.

When a boy Charles P. Littlepage was sent to the Ballena school and acquired a knowledge of the "three R's," but at the age of fourteen years he was obliged to stop school and take up the serious responsibilities of life. This step was rendered necessary on account of an accident to his father, who had fallen from a scaffold and broken a leg. The fourteen-year-old son was given charge of the farm in order to meet the emergency, and bravely he set himself about the task, which he discharged with devotion, energy and wise judgment. At the age of nineteen years he bought out his father and acquired the property, which forms the nucleus of his present possessions. While working with arduous and unflagging zeal in the care of his place he has neglected none of his duties of citizenship, but on the other hand he has proved himself to be public-spirited, prompt to aid all worthy movements, interested in enterprises for the benefit of the community, and ardent in his devotion to the Democratic party, in whose faith he was reared from childhood. Educational matters command his ready sympathy and generous aid, and since 1897 he has rendered efficient service as a member of the board of school trustees of his district.

The marriage of Mr. Littlepage was solemnized January 20, 1887, and united him with Mary Blanche Bergman. Though a native of California, Mrs. Littlepage is of German parentage, her father, Jacob Bergman, having been born in that country. When a small boy he came to the United States and aided the American cause at the time of the Mexican war, serving as a private in the ranks. Later he became one of the pioneer settlers in the American occupancy of California, where at an advanced age he died in Riverside county. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Littlepage consists of the following children: Frank E., Arthur M., Ethel Blanche, Eli S. and Omar L., all of whom yet remain beneath the home roof.

HERMAN SETH PHILBROOK, farmer and apiarist of Ocean View district, Ventura county, was born in Normal, Ill., January 5, 1869, a son of Ignatius Philbrook. The latter was a native of Ohio, whence he located in McLean county, Ill., and there conducted the Normal shoe store. He came to California in 1878 and settled at Duarte, Los Angeles county, where he set out an orange orchard; four years later he disposed of this interest and in the Big Simi valley engaged in bee culture, which occupied his attention for the ensuing ten years. He was next located in Conejo in the management of a hotel, after a period of five years coming to Ventura county and in Ocean View district purchased a farm upon which he made his home for four years. In Mariposa county, engaged as a farmer, he spent his last days, his death occurring in 1903. He is survived by his wife, formerly America Morgan, a native of Indiana, whose home is now in Ventura.

Of the eight children born to his parents, four sons and three daughters now surviving, Herman Seth Philbrook was the sixth in order of birth. From the age of nine years he was reared in California, obtaining his education through an attendance of the public schools of the state. In Simi he secured his first knowledge of bee culture and since his location, in Ocean View district, Ventura county, about fifteen years ago, he has combined that work with general ranching pursuits. He owns a productive ranch five miles east of Hueneme, consisting of one hundred and fifty-seven acres devoted to the raising of beets, barley and alfalfa, stock, and has two hundred stands of bees in Bee cañon, at the foot of the old long grade on the Conejo road. He has met with gratifying success in all his operations and is accounted one of the most progressive citizens of this section of Ventura county. In spite of his engrossing personal interests he has still found time to ally himself with fraternal and social orders, being a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of Hueneme, while politically he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Mr. Philbrook is best appreciated where best known, for he is both a man of ability and integrity, and stands high among the citizens of this section of Ventura county.

EUGENE THEODORE ARNOLD. One of the most interesting men of this state is Eugene Theodore Arnold, of Ventura county, whose life has been spent amid the stirring scenes of western life since the early fifties. He was born April 3, 1848, in DeKalb county, Ill., and when a child of five years was brought by his mother via Panama to Marysville, Cal., where his father was then located, he having crossed the plains in 1849. The father engaged in various enterprises the first few years of his residence in this state, including mining, storekeeping and in conducting pack trains between Laporte and Goodyear Bar. Later he went to Contra Costa county, located eight miles from Martinez, and engaged in farming for a time, after which he removed to Sacramento and became proprietor of the Old Eagle hotel. From there he went to Marysville, where he had a pack train, later going to Rabbit creek to conduct a hotel and store. In 1857 he settled in Lassen county, at Susanville, where he erected the third house in that town and engaged in merchandising and the hotel business until 1868. He then came to Southern California and located successively near Hueneme, in Santa Barbara county, and then in Ventura county. He became a large land owner, having eleven hundred and sixty acres three miles east of Hueneme, upon which he engaged in grain growing and stock-raising. He had some of the best standard and thoroughbred horses in that section and owned the fastest trotter in the country at that time. About fifteen years ago he also owned a large ranch in Conejo. Mr. Arnold's mother was Emily Hough in maidenhood, a native of New York; she died in California at the age of seventy-three years. There were eight children in the family, namely: Henry, deceased, formerly postmaster at Hueneme; Leroy, who died at Ocean View; Mathew H., residing near Ventura; Edward F., a merchant in Hueneme; Emma, the wife of Charles F. Pitcher of Ocean View; George G., a farmer in the San Fernando Valley; Fannie, the wife of Joseph Baxter, of Los Angeles; and Eugene T., the subject of this sketch.

The education of Mr. Arnold was received in the public schools at Marysville and Susanville, and during the winter of 1862 he attended Professor Brighton's college. From 1864 until 1868 he engaged with his father in freighting in Idaho and Nevada, after which he came to what is now Ventura county and became a farmer and stock raiser locating on a farm in Ocean View. In 1878 he removed to Orange county and continued to farm for a time before going to Nevada and engaging in stock ranching. In 1890 he returned to California, locating on a homestead in Los Angeles county near Calabasas, and resided there for nine years before he received his patent from the government. He improved it with a residence and other buildings and rents the land for a hay ranch. A natural spring located on the place adds materially to its value.

J M Stuart

MRS. J. M. STUART

Mr. Arnold has various property interests, among them being some stock in mines located near Prescott, Ariz. Politically he is a firm believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party and he served as a juror on the first grand jury held in Southern California. While the place which he calls home is Ventura county he spends the greater part of his time traveling and has seen much of the world. He is a man of pleasing address and makes friends with all with whom he comes in contact, either socially or in a business way.

JOSEPH M. STUART. When reflecting concerning the changes wrought in the aspect of Ventura county since he first identified himself with the ranching interests of this part of California, Mr. Stuart is reminded of the marvelous transformation the years have brought to his locality. It was not until 1884, twenty-two years after he came to the Pacific coast, that he took up a tract of government land in Fairview valley forming his present homestead. His intention was to devote himself to the management of an apiary and with that object in view he brought with him to the new place sixty-four stands of bees, which he has increased to the present number of nearly five hundred stands. The surroundings were uninviting when he arrived here. The land was covered with brush and to a casual observer seemed worthless except for a sheep range, the only purpose to which it had been previously devoted. With only one exception he had no neighbor nearer than the hamlet of Somis, seven miles away, and the nearest school being there his children walked all that distance during the school terms, while all of his water also was hauled from that place. His postoffice town was Santa Paula, twelve miles from his ranch, while he did his trading at Ventura, a distance of twenty-seven miles. Only those familiar with the difficulties attendant upon isolation from water, schools, mail facilities and stores can realize the hardships of his lot in those pioneer days, yet he and his family worked happily and contentedly, and few complaints were heard from old or young. While many of the early settlers have passed from the scene of their toils, it has been his privilege to survive to witness the development, prosperity and civilization of the twentieth century, and to him together with all of the other pioneers belongs much of the credit for laying the foundation that rendered possible the present fortunate condition.

From the far-away shores of Maine Mr. Stuart came to California ere yet he had attained his majority. Born at Exeter, Penobscot county, that state, September 30, 1844, he was a son of Solomon and Sarah (McOrison) Stuart, also natives of Maine. Both parents were lifelong residents of that state. The father passed away in 1881 at seventy years of age, having long survived his wife, who died in 1855, at the age of fifty-six years. Their son, Joseph M., was only about eleven years of age when death deprived him of a mother's affectionate oversight. Afterward he remained with his father and attended the public schools of Medford, Me., from which place in 1862 he started for California. The journey by the Isthmus of Panama was made without special event and he landed safely at San Francisco in due course of time. From there he proceeded to Solano county. During 1864-65 he mined at Copperopolis, Calaveras county, and at Eldorado. From 1870 until 1880 he was a resident of Lake county, and during the latter year removed to Ventura, whence in 1881 he went to Santa Paula, and from there came to his ranch in the Fairview valley during 1884. Shortly after his arrival he set out twenty acres in prunes, thirty acres in olives and thirty acres in apricots, almonds, apples and other fruits. Besides making these improvements he erected a neat house and such other buildings as the needs of the place demanded. At this writing he has two hundred and twelve acres in apricots, olives, and blackeye and lima beans, and gives his attention to the care of these crops and to the management of his apiary.

A few years after his arrival in California Mr. Stuart established a home of his own. His marriage was solemnized in Solano county on Christmas Eve of 1866 and united him with Miss Lottie V. Campbell, who like himself was born and educated in Maine. They became the parents of six children, namely: William H., who follows the carpenter's trade and makes his home at Nordhoff, Ventura county; Solomon F., also a carpenter by trade, and now living at Buckhorn, Ventura county; Victor C., who died in 1900, at the age of twenty-five years; Joseph E., who is carrying on a blacksmith's shop at Ventura; Roy, who died at four years of age; and May, who resides on the ranch with her parents and is one of the popular young ladies of the neighborhood. The family hold membership in the Presbyterian Church and contribute to its missionary and charitable work. While Mr. Stuart has at no time consented to occupy positions of a political nature his interest in school work led him to accept the office of trustee of the Fairview school, in which capacity he proved himself to be progressive and intelligent, always alert to promote the interests of the school and the welfare of the pupils.

ALBERT L. PFEILER was born in Oxnard, Cal., January 7, 1877, a son of Louis and Caroline (Kaufman) Pfeiler, both of whom are still living and make their home on a ranch near Oxnard. After completing his education in the public schools of Ventura county he took a three-year course in Throop Polytechnic Institute of Pasadena, making a specialtyy of cabinet work. He remained at home with his parents until his marriage in 1905 to Lydia Fricken, a native of this county, his father at this time starting him in business on the ranch he now occupies. Since making his home on the ranch Mr. Pfeiler has made many improvements to render it adequate for his needs. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Pfeiler, a daughter, to whom they have given the name of Florence. Politically Mr. Pfeiler adheres to the principles of the Republican party, belongs to the Knights of Columbus, and is a communicant of the Catholic Church.

One of the most interesting men the visitor meets at Oxnard is Albert L. Pfeiler, who is farming a hundred acre ranch devoted to the cultivation of beets and beans, and the possessor of one of the most scientific and up-to-date poultry ranches in the west. The poultry business is conducted in connection with his other affairs and for the pleasure it gives to one who loves poultry and has studied their characteristics and habits so closely as to be able to appreciate to a nicety the fine points of each individual fowl. An intelligent consideration of the good points of the various breeds has convinced Mr. Pfeiler that the Black Orpington is the best all-purpose class of poultry to be found, and on this ranch one finds some of the finest specimens of that variety. It is not as a fancier alone that he considers poultry, but he recognizes that the commercial capabilities are very important to the poultry grower and the Black Orpington besides being one of the heaviest in weight of the various breeds (single birds weighing as high as twelve pounds) is also a very large egg producer. Mr. Pfeiler has brought to his flock some expensive birds purchased in the east and has as near a perfect foundation stock as it is possible to get and with these birds to work with, is by careful breeding succeeding in creating a strain of egg producers that it will be hard for anyone to beat, as he proposes to get all out of his fowls that it is possible for fowls to produce. His methods are highly scientific and while it would require considerable space to fully explain every detail in regard to the breeding of poultry to eliminate from the stock all weak and objectionable points and enhance all strong and desirable ones, some of the more important points will be of interest.

The Black Orpington is an original combination of the Plymouth Rock, Black Langshange and Black Minorcas, inheriting from them qualities of superior merit, unexcelled beauty and a strong constitution which enables them to endure the strain of heavy egg production for which the breed is noted. The one objection which some raise against the Black Orpington is its black pin feathers, but in Mr. Pfeiler's opinion this is really an advantage, for since pin feathers are not easy to see when white there is no excuse for the black ones being found on the properly dressed fowl. As to egg production he believes that in this variety will be ultimately secured the three-hundred-egg per year hen for which poultry breeders are now striving. And this is what Mr. Pfeiler is working for with his strain, and, by adopting the trapnests and carefully marking each hen and keeping track of her record, he knows that he is advancing toward that mark rapidly, some of his hens having already passed the two hundred mark. In Mr. Pfeiler's estimation it does not pay to raise mongrel fowls, for it costs much to keep them and the money value of their production is only about a third as much as that of the pure-bred fowl.

On his twentieth century poultry ranch every convenience is found to facilitate the handling of the mated fowls, and upon this one point of intelligent selection of hen and cock, and the most careful consideration of the records of the families from which each springs is hinged the success of producing a "bred-to-lay" pullet. The painstaking care is sure to bring its reward, however, as Mr. Pfeiler has proven with entire satisfaction to himself and to the admiration of the numberless people who delight to visit his plant and have explained to them the methods employed, for the owner takes just pride in the plant and is always willing to pass on to those who may be interested the valuable information which he has gained in his years of poultry breeding. But heavy egg producing qualities are not the only thing to take into consideration; the show room must not be forgotten, and in requiring of the ancestors of both male and female birds egg records, the standard marks must also be in evidence. Shape and color are important points and also the vigor of the fowl; for the latter reason too close inbreeding must be avoided, so the practice of line breeding is adopted. This is a system of inbreeding, but brothers and sisters are never mated, and in mating mother and son the greatest care is taken to have the male bird of strong constitution, for the female bird being bred on her record as an egg producer must receive vigor from the male in her offspring. When the necessity for the introduction of absolutely new blood into the flock is apparent it is the best policy to secure male birds from other flocks which are of the same strain.

Like all up-to-date poultry raisers Mr. Pfeiler uses incubators for hatching purposes and the separating and marking of the chicks is in itself no inconsiderable task. Heretofore he has not entered his birds in the show room, for it is his ambition to win blue ribbons with them from the first exhibition he enters, and so he has patiently waited until his flock has been brought up to the very highest standard before entering them in competition. Anyone who has noticed the beautiful carriage and color and perfect markings of his Black Orpingtons knows that other exhibitors will find them hard to beat. Free alfalfa range is given to the poultry on this ranch, and while every beneficial contrivance in the equipment of a modern poultry ranch that could be found on the market has been purchased, Mr. Pfeiler has found it to his advantage to invent his own improvements on many of them and so one observes here many contrivances which no other establishment of a like nature could show. Mr. Pfeiler is an affable gentleman to meet and while he is very apt to "talk chickens" when one is viewing his poultry and plant, he is fully informed on all subjects of public interest and fills an important place in the community in which he lives.

JAMES DOUD. In Southern California are many extensive and prosperous agriculturists who bring to their calling rare business skill and excellent judgment. Some of the most progressive and enterprising of this class of men may be found in Ventura county, and ranking high among these is James Doud, whose fine and well-cultivated ranch lies near Oxnard. He is a self-made man in the highest sense implied by the term, has ever made the best of his opportunities, keeping his eyes open to what was going on around him in the world, and these qualities, in connection with his natural industry and perseverance, have been dominant factors in winning for him success in life and placing him among the substantial citizens of this valley. A native of Ireland, he was born March 24, 1873, in Longford, where he spent his boyhood days. His father, Michael Doud, is still living in Ireland, and there his mother, whose maiden name was Ann Cloyne, spent her entire life, dying in 1878.

When fourteen years of age James Doud immigrated to the United States, an active, energetic boy, full of ambition and enthusiasm. Arriving in New York city he made his way straight across the country to Los Angeles, where he subsequently completed his education, attending Woodbury College. Entering then the employ of Donlon Brothers he worked near Oxnard for a number of seasons. Thrifty and economical, he accumulated considerable money, and in 1902 purchased his present home ranch and built the residence which he now occupies. He has two hundred acres of good land, and is raising beets and beans on an extensive scale, having one hundred acres of each.

In Oxnard, April 29, 1903, Mr. Doud married Josephine McGrath, a daughter of Dominick McGrath, of whom a brief sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Doud have two bright and interesting little children, Robert and Genevieve. Fraternally Mr. Doud is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and religiously both he and his wife are members of the Catholic Church.

PETER BURFEINDT. Energetic, industrious and persevering, well equipped both mentally and physically, Peter Burfeindt is a fine representative of the rising young agriculturists of Pleasant valley, being prosperously employed in his chosen vocation near Camarillo. Thrown upon his own resources early in life, he began his battle with the world at the foot of the ladder of attainments, and by sturdy toil and praiseworthy perseverance has steadily climbed upward, by his own efforts earning an assured position among the successful men of his community. He was born December 18, 1863, in Germany, and in its common schools acquired his early education. His parents, Claus and Catherine (Wiebusch) Burfeindt, were lifelong residents of Germany, and there reared a family of thirteen children, of whom Peter, the subject of this sketch, and one daughter, are residents of California.

Becoming familiar with the many branches of general farming in the Fatherland, Peter Burfeindt made up his mind while yet a lad that his native country afforded but meagre opportunities for a poor man, and that in America only could he rise to a position of affluence and comfort solely by his own efforts. Having arrived at his conclusion, he left home at the age of seventeen years, crossing the Atlantic to New York City, where he was for a short time employed as clerk in a grocery store. Coming from there to Los Angeles he was for a number of years associated with the N. W. Stowell Company, working on cement pipe. Receiving good wages, he accumulated money, and in 1896, determining to make a change of occupation, he came to Ventura county, where he has since been actively and profitably employed in ranching. He now operates two hundred and eighty-five acres of leased land, one hundred and twenty acres being planted to beans, one hundred acres to beets and sixty acres to barley. In the management of his farm he has all the requisite machinery and appliances, and keeps busily employed fourteen head of work horses.

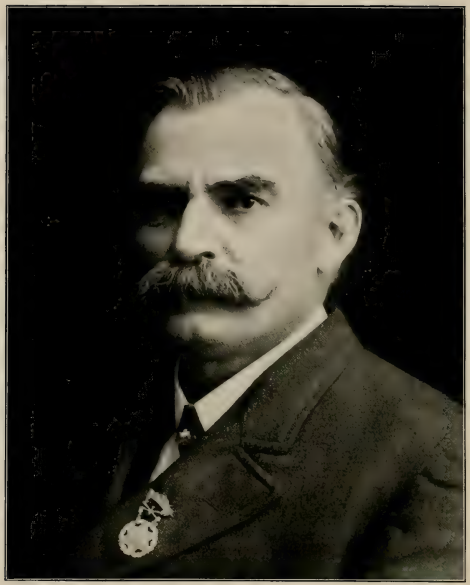
In 1888 Mr. Burfeindt married Lena Otte, who was born in Germany, and they have one child, Fritz, four years of age. In politics Mr. Burfeindt earnestly supports the principles of the Republican party, and in religion both he and his good wife are faithful members of the German Lutheran Church.



CHARLES H. JOHNSON. Conspicuous among the industrious and enterprising men who have been active and prominent in developing and advancing the agricultural resources of Ventura county is Charles H. Johnson, of Oxnard. Purchasing a tract of land that was in its pristine wildness, he has labored persistently and wisely, bring it to a condition of excellent cultivation, and it stands today a monument to his good management and business qualifications. Besides his home ranch of fifty acres he owns fifty acres of land lying one mile southward, which he has acquired by the investment of his surplus capital, and in addition to successfully operating these two farms he rents another tract of fifty acres, which he cultivates. A son of the late Henry B. Johnson, he was born, April 9, 1850, in Onondaga county, N. Y., where the first two years of his life were passed.

About 1852 Henry B. Johnson removed with his family to Wisconsin, locating at Rural, Waupaca county, where he was a pioneer farmer. Going from there to Minnesota in 1863, he continued there as a farmer for about twenty years, when, in 1883, he came to Ventura county, locating on the ranch now conducted by his son, Charles, and here resided until his death, at the age of sixty-six years, in 1889. He married Harriet H. Walker, who was born eighty years ago, in New York state, and now makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Johnson.

Educated in the public schools of Wisconsin and Minnesota, Charles H. Johnson early became inured to the hardships of pioneer life, his boyhood days being full of incident and danger. In the new townships in which his parents settled the families were widely scattered, and the Indians were plenty and oftentimes troublesome. He assisted his father in improving a ranch from the forest covered land, remaining at home until 1876. Coming then to California, he worked by the month for five years, after which he began farming on rented land. Meeting with encouraging success in his undertakings, in 1889, he bought the farm which he now owns and occupies. It was then a raw, uncultivated tract, with no improvements. He has since brought the land to an excellent state of tillage, erected a substantial house and barn, and as a general rancher is exceedingly prosperous. As time has passed he has bought additional land, and with the fifty acres that he rents is carrying on an extensive business in the raising of lima beans and beets, an industry that is proving quite remunerative.

November 24, 1881, Mr. Johnson married Minnie Alexander, who was born on California soil, a daughter of the late Thomas Alexander. A native of Ohio, Mr. Alexander was there born in 1819. At an early age he followed the trail of the emigrant westward to Iowa, where he engaged in the pioneer labor of improving a farm. In April, 1853, he came with his family to California, journeying with ox-teams across the dreary plains. Arriving in Nevada county the last of August, he located at Grass Valley, and for some time was engaged in freighting from San Francisco and Sacramento through northern California and into Nevada. He subsequently built a sawmill just north of Nevada City, where he was engaged for a number of years in the manufacture of lumber. Removing to Ventura county in 1870, Mr. Alexander located north and west of Oxnard, buying land on the Colona grant. Subsequently selling out, he removed to near Compton, Los Angeles county, still later selling his ranch and buying a home in Garvanza, where he resided until his death, at the age of sixty-nine years, in 1888. Mr. Alexander married Sarah Shockley, who was born in Ohio, in April, 1824, and is now living in Los Angeles with her youngest daughter, Mrs. Cline. Fifteen children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander, nine of whom grew to years of maturity, and seven are now living, namely: Mary, wife of John Conrad, of the Santa Clara valley; William L., engaged in the real-estate business at Los Angeles; Celia I., wife of John H. Thompson, living near San Luis Obispo; Minnie, wife of Charles Johnson; Robert, engaged in farming near Downey; Effie, wife of William Rodgers, of Garvanza; and Edna, wife of William Cline, of the Los Angeles Pioneer Carpet works.

Four children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and of these but two, the oldest child, Charles E., and the youngest, Lawrence, are living. The death of the other two children was a particularly sad incident in the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, who have borne their affliction bravely. It occurred in 1890, while they were crossing the Santa Clara river. The wagon containing Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and their three children was accidentally upset, throwing all of the occupants into the stream. Mr. Johnson succeeded in saving his wife and eldest child, but the two little ones, Archie, two years of age, and Ira, a babe of three months, were drowned. In his political affiliations Mr. Johnson is independent, voting for the best men and measures, and religiously he is a member and a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Mrs. Johnson also belongs.

F. A. J. Shaffer

F. A. J. SHAFFER. The real estate interests of Norwalk, Los Angeles county, have in Mr. Shaffer one of their most earnest advocates, whose efforts have been largely instrumental in bringing the notice of people to this section of the county and adding to its material upbuilding and development. He was born in St. Louis, Mo., February 27, 1855, a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Fouts) Shaffer, both natives of Pennsylvania; they are now residents of Iowa, aged respectively seventy-four and seventy-three years. The father served in Company H, Eighty-third Regiment Illinois Infantry, then being transferred to Company J, Sixty-first Regiment Illinois Infantry, during the Civil war. He is now identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has officiated as steward and class leader. They had six children, all of whom are living, three being located in Iowa, two in Washington and one in California.

F. A. J. Shaffer was taken to Illinois when three months old, living in Fulton and Hancock counties where he received his education through the medium of the common schools. He also took a brief college course, which further fitted him for business life. He began to farm in Illinois after leaving school, and continued there until he was of age, when he went to Iowa, and from there to Kansas, farming in both states, being principally occupied in grain raising in the latter state. He was located for a short time in Nebraska, then after returning to Kansas he went to Oklahoma. A part of this time he had worked as a carpenter and also in excavating. After coming to California November 2, 1902, he worked on ranches for a time, and also conducted the hotel in Norwalk. For the past three years he has been established in his present enterprise, operating in both Norwalk and Artesia, handling city lots and acreage. He has been very successful and has accumulated means since coming to the state, and he has also taken a strong interest in the development of his adopted home.

Mr. Shaffer has traveled extensively and has visited every state in the Union excepting three, namely: Georgia, South Carolina and Florida, and in comparison with all the places that he has seen likes his present location best of all. He is keenly interested in all measures for the promotion of the community's welfare. Straightforward in business, he strives to make every transaction promotive of his customer's good as well as a benefit to the locality. He is active in the Woodmen, admires the principles of that organization. A lover of good horses, he was associated with the A. H. T. A., a law and order fraternal order, and for one year was organizer, seeing its membership increase from a few individuals to thousands. He takes pride and pleasure in telling of the capture and punishing of thieves, and enforcing the law.

In 1876, Mr. Shaffer's first marriage, united him with Miss Mattie Stoneking, daughter of James Stoneking; in 1881 he married Miss Emma Guss, a native of Illinois. They are the parents of the following children: Charles, Bessie and Willie. Mr. Shaffer is prominently identified with the Woodmen of the World, to which the entire family also belong. He is a Republican politically and through the influence of his party has served as road overseer and school trustee.

SAMUEL NAUMANN. Few men are more deserving of representation in a work of this character than the late Samuel Naumann, of Oxnard, an industrious, hard-working man, who, during the later years of his life, was actively identified with the agricultural interests of this part of Ventura county. He had a comparatively long and busy career, rich with experiences, and possessed in an eminent degree those sterling qualities of character that greatly endeared him to his family and gained for him the esteem of the community and the confidence and good will of all who knew him. He was born in February, 1836, in Magdeburg, Germany, and died in Oxnard township, on the home farm, March 16, 1905.

Educated in the public schools of his native land, Samuel Naumann subsequently learned the trade of bricklayer in Magdeburg, and there followed it for awhile. In 1873 he married Rosine Wilke, and three years later he came across the Atlantic with his family, locating first in New York City, from there going by boat to Galveston, Tex., where he was engaged in farming for several years. Coming to California in 1893, he purchased land in Chino, San Bernardino county, began the improvement of a ranch, and lived there three years. Selling out in 1896 he rented land in Santa Clara county for five years, and then came to Ventura county, settling on the ranch now owned and occupied by his widow and children. He bought two hundred and forty acres of land, and with the energy and thrift characteristic of his countrymen, at once began its improvement, in his labors meeting with well-merited success. Since his death his sons have continued the improvements previously inaugurated, and are managing the home estate with great ability, each year adding to its value and productiveness.

Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Naumann seven children were born: Herman, born in Germany in 1874, is single and lives at home; Mrs. Louisa Young, is a resident of Oxnard; Emma is at home; Paul and Otto, twins, born November 4, 1879, are both at home; Gustavus, born May 12, 1884, is living at home, and Martha is also at home. The family are all members of the Lutheran Church at Oxnard, in the building of which Mr. Naumann took an active part, and of which he served as a trustee until his death, when he was succeeded by his son Herman. He was a Republican, and his sons are all loyal to the political faith in which they were reared.

CARL LUNDQUIST. That the Scandinavian element forms a most desirable acquisition to American citizenship is everywhere conceded, and nowhere more than in San Diego, some of whose most enterprising and resourceful residents trace their lineage to long lines of Scandinavian ancestry. Belonging to this class is Carl Lundquist, who ranks among the pioneer business men of San Diego and whose residence in this city dates from October of 1887. A native of Sweden, he was born in Goteborg, February 11, 1849, and was the youngest child of John and Anna Lundquist, the former at one time a property owner of Goteborg, but now deceased. Surviving him are seven of his eight children, two being in California, namely: Carl, of San Diego; and Lorenz, a contracting painter of Los Angeles.

After having received common-school advantages Carl Lundquist was apprenticed to the painter's trade at the age of fourteen and two years later he crossed the ocean to America, in 1866 settling in Chicago, where he completed his trade and later followed the occupation. For a considerable period he worked in the employ of others, but in 1878 he took up contract painting and opened a store on Halsted street, where he carried a line of wall-paper, paints, oils, glass, etc. At length he decided to remove to a more desirable climate and in 1887 he disposed of his interests in Chicago, from which city he crossed the continent to San Diego. Shortly after his arrival he purchased a lot on the corner of State and B streets and erected a two-story building, 50x70 feet in dimensions. At this location he has since carried a full line of paints and paper. Without exception he has the oldest business of the kind in San Diego, there being no other paint store which has remained in the hands of the same proprietor for eighteen years or more. While carrying on the store he has taken contracts for painting and has had charge of the painting of many of the finest residences of San Diego, also the Leland block, St. Joseph's sanitarium, Pierce & Morse block, and other structures. In addition he has been interested in buying and selling real estate and has erected cottages on a number of lots, later selling the same.

During the period of his residence in Chicago Mr. Lundquist married Miss Mary Johnson, who was born in Alvistad, Sweden, and from there removed to Chicago in 1867. They are the parents of three children, namely: Helma, wife of A. G. Edwards, of San Diego; Elenora, who married Henry G. Jones, also of San Diego; and Carl Edward. The family hold membership in the Lutheran Church and Mr. Lundquist has been a generous contributor to religious work and charitable movements. While living in Chicago he joined both the lodge and encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and on his removal to the west he transferred his membership to Sunset Lodge in San Diego, with which since then he has been connected. A study of the political issues of his adopted country led him to ally himself with the Republican party, whose candidates and principles he supports at all general elections.

SANFORD C. WING. One of the prominent and highly esteemed citizens of Highland Park is Sanford C. Wing, who was born at Glens Falls, Warren county, N. Y., January 1, 1867. The father was a native of the same place and as a young man became a clerk in a general merchandise store, but soon established an independent business of his own in Glens Falls, where he lived his entire lifetime. The mother was also a native of Glens Falls, and at the time of her death, January 23, 1906, was eighty-one years old. Of their family of seven children one died in infancy and the rest are still living. The oldest daughter, Minnie D., has never married and is now living at Minneapolis, Minn.; Lucy W. DeForest lives at Fort Edward, N. Y.; Fred is purchasing agent for the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad Company at Minneapolis; William H. is a traveling salesman for the St. Joseph (Mo.) Wholesale Millinery Company, and resides at St. Joseph; George B. is manager of the Security Warehouse Company of New York City.

Sanford C. Wing is the youngest child and the only member of the family living in California. He received his early education in the common schools and at Glens Falls Academy and after the completion of school work went to Kansas City, Mo., where he secured a position as collector for the city water works company. In a short time he was promoted to the office of cashier and remained with the company in that capacity for ten years. He then decided to come to California to locate and organized the Foster-Wing Typewriter & Supply Company, of Los Angeles. Subsequently he sold his interest in the business and became a bookkeeper in the Union Bank of Savings, continuing as such for two years. Following this he was general manager of the United Typewriter Supply Company for a like period, and then formed a partnership with W. F. Poor in the real-estate business. This was in 1902, and in the short period since then they have established a large and profitable business at Highland Park and are considered one of the most reliable firms in the business. The company is now incorporated with a paid up capital of $25,000.

Before her marriage Mrs. Wing was Lila B. Colby, a native of Cambridge, Mass. Two children have been born to them: Harold, thirteen years of age, and Dorothy, nine, both of whom are attending school. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wing are members of the Presbyterian Church of Highland Park, of which Mr. Wing is an elder, and Mrs. Wing is active in social and church matters, being a member of the Ebell Club and treasurer of the Ladies' Aid Society. Fraternally Mr. Wing is a member of the Royal Arcanum, and politically he affiliates with the Republican party, in the principles of which he is a firm believer.

L. A. LORBEER. Pomona is one of the most active and enterprising towns of its size in Southern California, its prosperity and growth being due to the energy and ability of its early settlers, who proved to be men of good judgment and wise forethought. Prominent among these early settlers were O. W. and J. B. Lorbeer, who about 1888 came to Pomona and started the nucleus of what in later years has become one of the largest laundry enterprises in the Pomona valley. It was in 1895 that L. A. Lorbeer added his name and co-operation to the enterprise, and ten years later, in 1905, the business was incorporated as the Lorbeer Brothers Company, O. W. being president, L. A. vice-president, and J. B. secretary and treasurer. The Lorbeer family is of German origin and the grandfather, J. G. Lorbeer, was the first to represent the name in the new world. Among his children was another J. G., who accompanied his father to the United States, and like his father he too was a farmer by occupation. For many years the father made his home in Iowa, owning a large farm in Humboldt county, but he is now living retired in Pomona, Cal. By his marriage with Emma M. Wickes six sons and two daughters were born, of whom four sons and the two daughters are living, and with one exception all of the sons are included in the firm of Lorbeer Brothers. T. L. Lorbeer is a physician of Hemet, Cal.

L. A. Lorbeer was born on the parental homestead in Humboldt county, Iowa, March 24, 1867, and his entire early life was associated with that locality. His education in the public schools was supplemented by a course in Humboldt Academy, and thereafter he put his knowledge to use by teaching school for two years. His identification with the west and with Pomona in particular dates from the year 1890, at which time he established himself in the feed and fuel business on Main street. Misfortune overtook him twice by way of disastrous fires, but each time he rebuilt upon the ashes, having as his partner in the enterprise George A. Carter, the firm being known as Lorbeer & Carter. Finally, in 1895, he sold his interest to his partner, and as has been previously stated, during the same year associated himself with his brothers, who were proprietors of a thriving laundry industry in this town. Fire had destroyed the plant in 1894, but it was immediately rebuilt and new machinery installed. In point of equipment it is unexcelled by any like enterprise in this part of the country, and occupies two floors 50x165 feet. Power is furnished by two seventy-five horse power boilers and one seventy-five horse power engine, and electric irons are used entirely. All of the water used in the business is furnished by the company's water plant. A better idea of the scope of the business carried on from the central office, which is located at the corner of Palomares and Bertie streets, may perhaps be gained when it is said that eight teams are in constant service and that a portion of their patronage comes from Monrovia and Etiwanda. The firm also have established laundries in Ocean Park, in Santa Monica, Ontario, and are interested in the San Bernardino Steam Laundry Company. In connection with their plant in Pomona they have established a steam roller mill for the grinding of barley, an innovation which is greatly appreciated by neighboring ranchers, for whom the enterprise was established, as they handle no grain of their own.

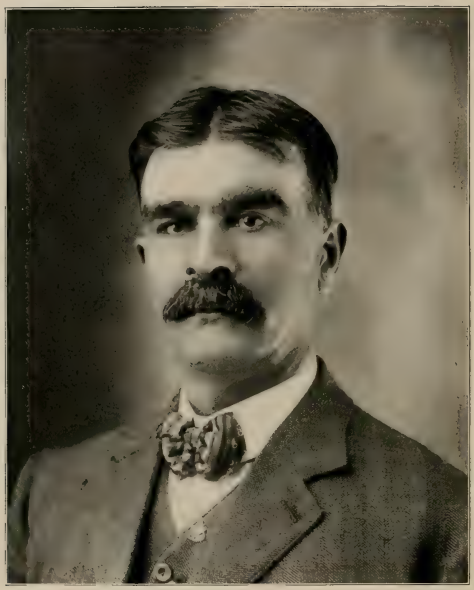
In Pomona L. A. Lorbeer was married to Miss May Snow, who was born in Illinois. She is a devoted member of the Congregational Church and one of its active workers, and toward the support of its various benevolences her husband contributes. Mr. Lorbeer is interested in a ranch near Chino which is planted to alfalfa, and is also superintendent of a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres near San Dimas, which is owned by the Laurlette Park Company, and conducted as a pleasure resort. It is beautifully located in the foothills, about eight miles from Pomona, and has an abundant supply of the purest mountain water. Mr. Lorbeer is also a director in the Pomona Building and Loan Association and holds the same position in the Home Telephone Company. He is a member of the Board of Trade and politically is a Republican, and belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

FREMONT LOVELAND. Among the thriving, well-to-do agriculturists of Bonsall, Fremont Loveland occupies a good position, and as an enterprising and faithful citizen is performing his full share in advancing the highest interests of town and county. The son of an early pioneer of California, he is a native and to the manner born, his birth having occurred November 19, 1853, in Santa Clara county. Like the majority of the business people of this state, he comes of eastern stock, his father, Cyrus C. Loveland, having been born, reared and educated in the Empire state, in Cooperstown, Otsego county.



When old enough to choose a trade, Cyrus C. Loveland was bound out to William M. Tweed, later known in political circles as "Boss" Tweed, and under his instructions learned, in New York City, the trades of a painter and cabinet-maker. He subsequently enlisted in Company K, First New York Regiment, and during the progress of the Mexican war came with his commander, Colonel Stevenson, to California, sailing around the Horn, and landing at San Francisco March 4, 1847. After serving as a soldier for two years he was honorably discharged in 1849, and immediately started for the mines, where he was fortunate enough to strike a paying claim. Returning east then by way of the Isthmus of Panama, he disembarked at New Orleans, from there proceeding up the Mississippi river to Missouri. Buying there a bunch of cattle and horses, he came with his cattle across the plains in 1850 and settled in Santa Clara county, where he was afterwards for many years extensively engaged in stock breeding and raising. Going east on a visit in 1885, he died in New York. He was a man of high character, honest and just in his dealings, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a Republican in politics. He married Catherine Davis, a native of Chillicothe, Ohio, and they became the parents of six children, all of whom are living in California. The mother died in May, 1905, in this state.

After leaving the grammar school, Fremont Loveland received an excellent training in the various branches of agriculture on the home farm, thus becoming well fitted for his future occupation. Starting in life on his own account before attaining his majority, he continued in the independent calling of his ancestors, and in 1877 bought a ranch in the San Luis Rey valley. Subsequently selling that, he entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land near Bonsall, and has since been here profitably engaged in ranching and dairying. At the present time he keeps but six cows, although he has at times a very much larger dairy. He raises hay and grain, and as a general farmer is meeting with marked success. He also runs the Bonsall creamery, which was purchased in 1902, handling now, in the dull season, about six hundred pounds of milk daily, an amount which is increased to two thousand pounds a day in busy times, shipping the cream to San Diego.

In 1881 Mr. Loveland married Lottie Sanderson, who died April 18, 1901. Of their union seven children were born, one of whom died in infancy, and six are living, namely: Ralph W., Ethel V., Arthur S., Florence R., Floyd F. and Roswell P. Mrs. Loveland was a woman of fine character, highly esteemed by all, and a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Loveland is a steadfast Republican, and fraternally was identified with the Masonic order in by-gone days.

EDMUND C. ROBINSON. Probably one of the most productive fruit belts in Southern California is in the vicinity of Pomona, and those who have bought land here and cultivated orchards are counted fortunate indeed. Since 1892 Mr. Robinson has been engaged in fruit raising on his twenty-acre ranch in this vicinity and has recently purchased another ranch of like size which he expects to set out exclusively to oranges, to which the greater part of his present ranch is devoted.

Mr. Robinson is a descendant of good old New England ancestry, and on both sides of the house his forefathers can be traced to the historical Mayflower. During the residence of his parents in Washington, D. C., Edmund C. Robinson was born September 8, 1875.

ANTONIO J. SOUZA

When he was about four years old the family removed to Texas, remaining there about six and a half years at that time, thence going to Fort Union, N. Mex. In the latter place Edmund C. gained his first knowledge of books at the post school, which was presided over by a soldier teacher, and upon returning to Texas two years later he attended the public school at El Paso. Further training was received in the schools of Oakland, Cal., whither his parents removed, later attended Throop Polytechnic Institute at Pasadena, and completed his school life in the high schools of Pomona and Denver. Since 1896 he has been a permanent resident of Pomona and in the years which have since passed marvelous changes have taken place both in the town and upon the ranch of which he is the proprietor. As one of the live and progressive ranchers of the Pomona valley he has done considerable to promote the cause of horticulture in this section of country, and judging from his past success much still is in store for him, for he is a young man, with life as yet before him. For the past eight years he has been a director in the Indian Hill Citrus Union and since 1905 he has been vice-president. He is also a director in the San Antonio Fruit Exchange of the Pomona Valley.

In 1902 Mr. Robinson was married to Miss Myrtle Deck, a native of Kansas, and one child, Margaret Estelle, has been born to them. Politically he is a Republican, and fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to the blue lodge and chapter of Pomona.

ANTONIO J. SOUZA. As one who is maintaining a high standard of agricultural success and among pleasant surroundings pursuing his chosen calling, A. J. Souza represents the stable and promising element in Santa Barbara county, where his valuable ranch of three hundred and fifty acres is located in the vicinity of Santa Maria. In his prosperous neighborhood Mr. Souza exerts an influence in common with men who have risen from lowly conditions, and who, in consequence, possess rational, practical and useful ideas. He is especially prominent among the Portuguese citizens, who place unquestioned reliance upon his judgment and business sagacity.

Mr. Souza was born in Flores, the westernmost of the Azores or Western Islands, June 10, 1862, a son of M. J. and Mary (Urcela) Souza, natives of the mother country of Portugal. His mother died when he was five years old, and his father lived to be seventy-two years old. Five of the eight children in the family are living, and two are residents of California. A. J. received a grammar-school education in Flores, and at the age of seventeen marked out his future career as a landowner and agriculturist of California. With him to plan was to accomplish, and upon arriving on the Pacific slope he began to save money and store up experience as an employe of ranchers in the Santa Maria valley. Eight years later he invested his money in his present ranch, which he has occupied for the past ten years, and which has enabled him to realize in large measure the ambition which led him from the Azores. Two hundred and seventy acres of his ranch are under cultivation and of these two hundred acres are under beans, and seventy acres under hay, corn and general produce. A variety of stock graze upon the eighty acres of pasture. In adding to the improvement of his ranch Mr. Souza has shown marked consideration for the comfort of the dumb creatures under his care, as well as practical forethought for the protection and economic disposal of his crops. He has introduced the finest labor saving devices of the times, and on every hand are indicated thrift and regard for the comforts and refinements of existence.

The wife of Mr. Souza formerly was Mary Concicao, a native also of the Azores, and their marriage, which occurred November 29, 1888, has resulted in the birth of eight children: Mary, Joe, Manuel, Annie, Isabella, Ida, Tony and Angelo. Mr. Souza has done much to foster purity in local politics, and while professing no partisanship, ranges his forces on the side of the Republicans. As a member and clerk of the school board he has helped to secure the best possible instruction for the rising generation, and to place every practical advantage at the disposal of both teachers and pupils. His pronounced social inclinations find an outlet in various fraternal and other organizations, among them the Portuguese Lodge, I. D. E. S., of which he has served as master and secretary. He also is identified with the Santa Maria Lodge, I. O. O. F., the Guadaloupe Lodge No. 237, F. & A. M., and Santa Maria Chapter, R. A. M., and the Eastern Star. His wife is a member of the Catholic Church. Mr. Souza is an exponent of the most progressive and substantial element of this community and enjoys the respect and good will of all who know him.

JOHN C. LYON. The prime of his young manhood was given by John C. Lyon to the service of his country when her need arose in the war between the North and South, but in spite of the fact that these years were those in which he would naturally have made a good start in his business life, and when the war was over he came back to a devastated country, Mr.

Lyon has made a success that many other men who have started earlier have not equalled. He now owns a ranch of twenty-one acres, planted to beans, vegetables, strawberries and other small fruit, and makes a very satisfactory income from the sale of these crops. His parents, John and Sarah (Canfield) Lyon, were born in New York state, but removed to Iowa, where the father died at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, and the mother at sixty.

A member of a family of five children, John C. Lyon was born May 4, 1849, in Van Buren county, Iowa, where he received his education through the medium of the common schools. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted in Company A, First Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and served two years, he having seen active service at Little Rock, Ark., Perry Grove and at other points. The greater part of the time he was under the command of Gen. A. J. Smith, but at the close of the war was under Gen. George A. Custer as his private orderly. When his military duties were over Mr. Lyon went back to Iowa and engaged in farming. In 1870 he moved to Cowley county, Kans., and took up a claim on the Osage Indian reserve, where he remained two years. He then sold out and went back to Iowa, bought a farm, sold it and again removed to Kansas, buying three hundred and twenty-eight acres of land there. After five years he sold this ranch, went to Hebron, Neb., and there engaged in the livery business. While there he was appointed deputy sheriff, a position which he held for four years, and he also served for two terms as constable. His identification with California dates from the year 1887, when he located in Nipomo. Subsequently he made his home for two years in Santa Maria, and since 1901 he has been the owner of his present ranch of twenty-one acres lying one mile and a half north of Arroyo Grande.

